

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

September 5, 2003

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

inside

Volume 132, Number 1

Opinions:

Is the Board of Trustees actually concerned with the input of students and the faculty on the Presidential Search?

See page B6

Rogers announces retirement

After four years as University President, Rogers' term will end in June

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

President Rogers announced to the campus his plan to retire through e-mail this summer. This is his fourth year as President.

BY SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

University President Steffen H. Rogers announced his retirement effective June 30, 2004 in a campus-wide e-mail early this summer.

"I find that my professional life has been both fulfilling and fulfilled and that I am once again looking forward to new and exciting changes and challenges in my future," Rogers said in the e-mail.

Despite his limited time left at the University, Rogers has a full agenda for the academic year including renewing the University's Middle States accreditation, resolving budgetary issues, developing compensation and classification study for the staff, and providing the groundwork necessary for the next University President to be successful.

"We cannot place the University on hold and wait for the transition to be over," Rogers said. "We must keep the University moving forward and my intent is to leave as level a playing field as possible for the new president so that they can look to the future of the University without impediment."

Rogers and his wife Athena decided that after 34 years in higher education and their increasing enjoyment of time spent at their second home near the Finger Lakes, the timing was right for retirement.

"It became more and more difficult to leave that place behind us and we thought it was time," Rogers said.

Rogers' announcement came as a surprise to those who work closely with him.

I was very disappointed and surprised," said Marilyn Vargo, Administrative Assistant to the President. "He has been a delight to work with—very considerate and always a gentleman, but I am happy for him because he is ecstatic and looking forward to the future."

According to Rogers, the first six months of his retirement will be spent relaxing and doing "whatever he wants." After these six months, he will evaluate which of his many interests he will pursue.

"He has so many interests it is not going to be a retirement," Vargo said. "he has done so many things for the University and I suspect he will do many things once he leaves."

Since his arrival on campus Rogers has piloted many successful projects, including the Capital Campaign which raised over $188 million for the University, the implementation

See ROGERS, page A2

Good Luck John passes away at 73

BY ALYSON WALKER
News Editor

John Throssel, better known to students as "Good Luck John," died July 23 in an area hospital at the age of 73. Services were held on July 25 at Rooke Chapel, led by Andrew R. Morgan, Pastor, St. Paul's United Methodist Church in Lewisburg which Throssel attended. Other remarks were made by MacKenzie Scott, Pastor, First Baptist Church; Ian Oliver, University Chaplain, and Brian Vasey, Pastor, Beaver Memorial United Methodist Church.

Throssel had been a well-known member of both the University and Lewisburg communities. Generations of students have had long discussions with Throssel, who was once referred to as "Bag Man," due to his ever-present paper bags, often filled with reading material. Others remember his smiling face as he wished them a good day, and his mantra "Good luck to you," evolved into his moniker, "Good Luck John."

Oliver stated that although new students were at first put off by Throssel, they would soon see his kindness and be drawn to him.

"He told me that he decided to say 'good luck' because it was a greeting everyone could accept, regardless of religion or culture."

—Ian Oliver,
University chaplain

"He told me that he decided to say 'good luck' because it was a greeting everyone could accept, regardless of religion or

See THROSSEL page A3

Open forum to be held to aid in selection of University President

BY SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

Members of the University community will have their first opportunity to publicly voice their opinions on the selection of the 16th president of the University to members of the Presidential Search Committee at an open forum on Sept. 11 from 2-4 p.m. in the Vaughan Literature auditorium.

"We are providing a range of opportunities for the members of the community to voice their opinions on the qualities they would like to see in the next presidents," said Jerry Rackoff, Director of Institutional Research & Assessment and On-campus Coordinator for the Presidential Search.

In addition to the forum, an e-mail address (pres_search@bucknell.edu), a campus mail address (Presidential Search, c/o Office of Institutional Research, Marts Hall Post Office, Bucknell University, Lewisburg, PA 17837) and a Web site (www.bucknell.edu/Presidential_Search) have been dedicated to encouraging communication and providing up-to-date information throughout the course of the selection process.

The forum will be led by Search Committee Chair Norman E. Garrity '63, Board of Trustees Chair Susan J. Crawford '69, John Thornburgh '79, a consultant to the Search Committee on leadership transition and Rackoff.

Rackoff encourages those who cannot attend the forum to attend a planned public viewing of the taped forum, which has not as of yet been scheduled, or to borrow the videotape, which will be placed on reserve at Bertrand Library.

"It is always helpful to hear other perspectives because it may trigger some of your thoughts and concerns," Rackoff said.

Organization of a Presidential Search Committee began after University President Steffen H. Rogers announced his June 30, 2004 retirement in late May.

The members of the search committee, announced last week, include: Garrity; Crawford; Joseph A. Cifolillo '61; William D. Dearstyne, Jr. '62; Bently T. Elliott '66; Linda G. Greenberg '63; J. Randall MacDonald '02; Glenn D. Steele, Jr.; Vice President for Enrollment Management Kurt Thiede; Associate Vice President, Information Services and Resources Gene L. Spencer '76; Faculty Chair and Professor of English Michael D. Payne; Chair and Associate Professor of Geology Mary Beth Gray '84; Bucknell Student Government President Katy Timer '04; Alumni Association Board President Scott R. Singer '87; and Rackoff.

According to Rackoff, the first in-person meeting of this team will occur after the forum, since the trustees present on the committee will be on-campus for their annual Fall retreat weekend.

Currently the search committee is interviewing several national firms to assist in the recruitment of candidates. According to

See PRESIDENT, page A3

University places 27th in national rankings

BY KAREN GRABOWSKI
Writer

While prospective students perfect applications and study for tests, universities nationwide anticipate their own scores in two influential college issues, the "U.S. News and World Report" and the "Princeton Review."

In this year's edition of the U.S. News and World Report, the University is ranked 27th in the "Liberal Arts Colleges-Bachelor's (Nationally) Top Schools" category.

"Twenty-seven is a good rating, but not nearly good enough," University President Steffen Rogers said. "Our rank increased from last year when we were number 29, but the methodology changes so much that we are not sure what it means to go up two points. We really need to think top 20."

The rank is based on "U.S. News and World Report's" judgment of peer assessment, retention, faculty resources, student selectivity, financial resources, graduation rate performance and alumni giving rate.

According to Rogers and Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, the methods used by U.S. News and World Report are questionable.

"Being 27 is a good result, however the methods are not entirely scientific," Ferraro said.

President Rogers realizes the popularity of the "U.S. News and World Report."

"The report is read widely and the readership increases

See RANKINGS, page A3

SUSAN CRAWFORD '69 NAMED FIRST WOMAN CHAIR OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Courtesy of Bucknell World

Crawford (center) was named as the first woman chair of the Board of Trustees. She is also the first female chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Services.

Three students arrested on alcohol-related charges

BY ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

Three students were arrested for disorderly conduct and for the possession of open containers of alcohol during what police considered to be a student riot on St. Catherine's Street last Monday night. Litter covered the street Tuesday morning and the students who rent the property were left with the responsibility of cleanup.

"I know nothing about a riot that night. I think it was just a lot of people in a narrow space. When I went down there the next day I saw nothing that would indicate that there was a riot, but there was a lot of unsightly litter like plastic cups and beer bottles," said Richard Ferraro, Dean of Students.

Lewisburg Police Chief William Knights was not at the scene and so could not comment on what took place that night.

"There has always been strict enforcement downtown," Knights said. "In 1999 and 2000 there were ordinances about strict enforcement and residents will not tolerate this type of conduct."

According to Knights, the fine for being involved in a disorderly gathering downtown can be $1,000 per person.

In 1998, a riot broke out in the downtown area between University students and local police enforcement.

"When there are a lot of people in a confined space, it makes people worried because of the riot of '98. ... We want to try to maintain good relations between the residents who live downtown and the students," Ferraro said.

Kevin Lang '04, who was present at the scene last Monday, said he thinks student partying and congestion in the downtown area has increased since he

See RIOT, page A3

Briski to lead 2004

After last May's 2004 Bucknell Student Government (BSG) Presidential elections resulted in a tie, BSG congress elected Jessica Briski '04.

See page A10

Video Music Awards

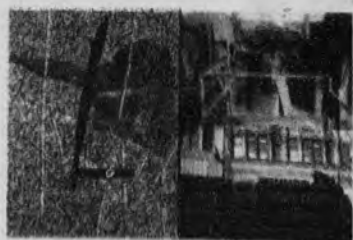

Britney and Madonna bridge the generation gap with a kiss

Just as in past years, MTV's VMAs shocked viewers. This year, the biggest surprise may have been the "performance" by Britney, Madonna and Christina.

See page B10

Gallery welcomes new exhibits

The Samek Art Gallery welcomes the work of Nanne Meer and Richard Cramer.

See page B10

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Aug. 24

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had taken his unlocked bicycle and helmet from the Harris Hall bike rack. The incident is under investigation.

Monday, Aug. 25

ASSIST POLICE/UNDER-AGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to South 6th and St. George Streets to assist Lewisburg Police Department with an intoxicated, underage student. The individual was cited for underage consumption and an open container violation. The student was returned to his Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity room.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION /PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for an underage student who was highly intoxicated. The female was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus. Citations issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed a sofa and two stuffed chairs from Hunt Hall. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) entered his room at Swartz Hall and removed a Sony Playstation II. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/FAILURE TO COMPLY—Public Safety responded to Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity for the report of loud music. Upon arrival, Public Safety observed a male and female attempting to conceal an alcoholic beverage. When questioned, both falsified their identity. Upon investigation, both were identified as students who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations issued for underage consumption and failure to comply.

Tuesday, Aug. 26

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to an intrusion alarm at Chi Phi Fraternity. Upon arrival, Public Safety observed a male outside the house. Upon questioning the individual, he was identified as a student, under the age of 21, who admitted to consuming alcohol. He was cited for underage consumption. A search was conducted of the building. No suspects or witnesses could be located to determine the cause of the alarm.

DRUG VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Bucknell West for the report of someone using marijuana. Upon arrival, Public Safety observed a strong smell of marijuana. Upon investigation, two students were identified and admitted to smoking marijuana. A large amount of marijuana, four marijuana pipes and a cup of marijuana seeds were confiscated by East Buffalo Township Police Department. Citations were issued for possession of drug paraphernalia.

Wednesday, Aug. 27

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—PSO responded to Rooke Chemistry for the report of an ill student. The female was transported to Student Health Services for treatment.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—PSO responded to the Physical Plant garage for the report of a motor vehicle accident. An employee backed a university vehicle into another university vehicle that was parked in the Physical Plant lot. No one was injured and there was only minor damage to the vehicles. The insurance office was notified.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT/OFF CAMPUS—An employee reported to Public Safety that while making a delivery off campus, he backed a University vehicle into another vehicle. The operators exchanged insurance information. No one was injured and the vehicles sustained only minor damage. The insurance office was notified.

Thursday, Aug. 28

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC INTOXICATION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of an ill student who had been consuming alcohol. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified the female as a student, who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Citation issued for underage consumption and public intoxication.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC INTOXICATION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of an ill student who had been consuming alcohol. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified the male student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Citation issued for underage consumption and public intoxication.

INFORMATION/FUEL LEAK—Public Safety responded to the area near Lambda Chi Fraternity for the report of a vehicle leaking fluid. The vehicle was gone when Public Safety arrived but there was diesel fuel on the ground. The vehicle was located near Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity and the driver was advised about the leak. Absorbent material was placed on the diesel fuel on the ground at both locations.

INFORMATION/MOTORIST ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Cooley Hall for the report of students who needed assistance to relocate a mini-bus. The individuals were unable to park the bus due to bees on the interior that had stung three students. Public Safety removed the personal belongings and placed the bus in the parking lot where it was checked by facilities staff.

Friday, Aug. 29

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed three University logo gift umbrellas and consumed a partial bag of candies located in an unlocked storage closet in Maris Hall. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL ASSIST—A student reported to Public Safety that he had fallen outside the Langone Center and injured his wrist while walking on the grass. The male was advised to go to Student Health Services for treatment.

INFORMATION/ACT 64/DRUG VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. The exact source of the odor could not be located and no action was taken.

INFORMATION/MISSING CELL PHONES—A student reported to Public Safety that she lost her cell phone in the Bucknell West area. A report was filed for insurance purposes.

Saturday, Aug. 30

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke an entry door window at Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to the rear of Smith Hall for the report of two intoxicated students. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the students were under the age of 21. Citations issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION /PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to the front of Harris Hall for a report from the Lewisburg Police Department on an intoxicated student. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the student was intoxicated and under the age of 21. Citations issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

ASSIST POLICE—Public Safety responded to Seventh Street at Fraternity Road to assist East Buffalo Township Police Department at the scene of a vehicle stop. East Buffalo Township Police Department advised that the student had been operating the vehicle without headlights. The individual admitted to consuming alcohol but passed a field sobriety test. Citation issued for failure to utilize vehicle lighting.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of blood on a restroom door. No additional blood could be located in the building and no one had reported any injuries. An employee was contacted to clean the restroom door.

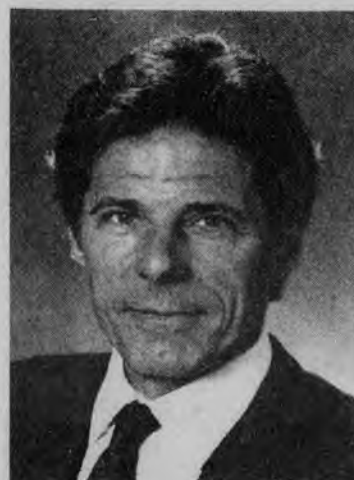

INFORMATION/FAILURE TO EVACUATE DURING A FIRE ALARM—Public Safety responded to Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity for a fire alarm and found a student who had not vacated the building. Citation issued for failure to vacate a room during a fire alarm.

HIT & RUN—A student reported to PSO that unknown person(s) denied the right side door of her vehicle while parked in the Orchard parking lot. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

VEHICLE DAMAGE—A student reported to Public Safety that she had backed her vehicle into a parked car in the Trax Parking Lot. Lewisburg Police Department was contacted to identify the owner of the parked car.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Taylor Street House for the report of a broken window. A witness identified the student who broke the window by tapping on it as a practical joke.

Ammon's widow dies of cancer

Former University Trustee Ted Ammon (above) pledged $15 million to University scholarship funds.

By ALYSON WALKER
News Editor

Generosa Ammon Pelosi, widow of former University trustee Ted Ammon, died of breast cancer on Sept. 22 in a Manhattan hospital at the age of 47. Ammon Pelosi leaves behind two children and a highly controversial will.

Ammon Pelosi left almost the entirety of her estate to her two children and a charity started by Ammon, an estate valued at approximately $34 million, according to The New York Times. The children were left in the legal guardianship of their nanny, Kathryn Ann Mayne, who will receive $1 million and lifetime use of the East Hampton home. Ammon Pelosi, who was cremated, also requested that Mayne be responsible for her ashes, which have since then been taken by her estranged husband, Daniel Pelosi. Ammon Pelosi's lawyers will act as the executors of the will until her children, now 13, are 50 years old, reported The New York Times.

"Many of my clients do trusts that last for lifetimes. Money in trusts is protected from predators or an unhappy marriage," said Carolyn McCaffrey, co-head of the trust and estates department at Weil, Gotshal & Manges to The New York Times.

Ammon Pelosi was legally separated from Pelosi at the time of her death and had moved out of their home eight weeks prior, reported The New York Times. She and Pelosi had signed a postnuptial agreement in July, which granted him $2 million dollars and their home in Center Moriches, N.Y. At the same time, she rewrote her will, cutting Pelosi completely, who had been the sole beneficiary, The New York Times.

A grand jury has been gathered this summer, and its focus appears to be Pelosi, who had to serve four months in prison for a driving under the influence felony conviction and was arrested for stealing $40,000 of electricity, reported Time. The grand jury is also interested in a laptop computer which belonged to Ammon Pelosi that would have been capable of deactivating the East Hampton security system, according to The New York Times.

according to Time. Ammon Pelosi left her mother-in-law, Janet Pelosi, $250,000, and a contractor on one of her homes received the same amount in addition to a Porsche Carrera.

Ammon had been the main contributor to the University's Capital Campaign, which ended in 2000. The Ammon Challenge promised one dollar for every three dollars pledged for scholarship money. Ted Ammon's challenge to donors raised $78 million dollars for scholarship gifts.

According to Mark Elliott, Director of Planned Giving, the Ammon Challenge had a great effect on the Capital Campaign and the University.

"In a very real sense, the Ammon Challenge became the driving force for the campaign," Elliott said. "By increasing the amount of aid available, the Ammon Challenge made the University more accessible to more of the better students who might have gone elsewhere because of financial issues."

At the kickoff of the capital campaign, Ammon pledged $15 million to be given by Dec. 2005, and at the time of his death, his pledge was $2.7 million from completion. According to Elliott, this long-term pledge is common among lead donors to campaigns and that Ammon had been matching scholarship gifts as they were paid. Elliott also said there is a good chance that the $2.7 million dollars will be given to the University by the estate.

Ammon Pelosi inherited Ammon's fortune after he was found bludgeoned to death in his East Hampton home in October 2002. At the time of Ammon's death, the two were involved in a divorce settlement and custody battle over their two adopted children. Ammon Pelosi had been dating Pelosi, who had been the electrician in charge of wiring the security system at the East Hampton home, according to Time. Three months after Ammon's murder, Pelosi and Ammon Pelosi were married.

A grand jury has been gathered this summer, and its focus appears to be Pelosi, who had to serve four months in prison for a driving under the influence felony conviction and was arrested for stealing $40,000 of electricity, reported Time. The grand jury is also interested in a laptop computer which belonged to Ammon Pelosi that would have been capable of deactivating the East Hampton security system, according to The New York Times.

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro

Come see what's new and exciting.
Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator
and
Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts

August 24th
11:00 AM to 2:00 PM

Wednesday-Saturday Bakery 10-12,
Lunch 11-30, 2, Dinner 5-9
www.elizabethsbistro.com

412 Market St. Lewisburg
570-523-8088

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemm
Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

U.S. seeks greater U.N. role in Iraq

In a turning point in U.S. President George W. Bush's willingness to share responsibility for Iraq's future, U.S. officials began seeking support for a U.N. resolution that would encourage countries to contribute troops and money to the effort to rebuild the war-torn country. Secretary of State Colin Powell said the United States would continue to play "a dominant role" in Iraq under the resolution, but added, "There are many roles to play."

Marines hand duties to Polish troops

BABYLON, Iraq—The top U.S. commander in Iraq on Wednesday symbolically marked the transfer of control over the south-central part of the country to an international force led by Poland, hailing the handover as a sign of the international community's commitment to Iraq.

Schwarzenegger skips recall debate

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif.—As the state's most popular politician came to the defense of Gov. Gray Davis, the leading candidates to replace him—minus Arnold Schwarzenegger—prepared to take each other on in the recall election's first scheduled debate on Wednesday.

Toyota's eco-car now parks itself

Toyota's redesigned hybrid sedan offers fuel-conscious drivers 55 miles to the gallon and one heck of a cool gadget: a sensor-based system that parks the car in tight spots. Unfortunately, while Toyota is launching the new gas-electric Prius in the United States next month, the self-parking system will only be available in Japan for now. On the plus side, the U.S. model will have several new features, including the ability to drive using electricity only.

'Great Wall' of natural gas for U.S.?

Thanks to the Blackout of 2003, the long, winding road of congressional politics might finally lead to a national energy bill. If it does, there's a good chance that final stretch of road will pass through Alaska. The state is home to the most divisive, but most bipartisan, energy projects out there.

Worm suspect says case against him exaggerated

Before the early morning raid on his house, before the press conference a thousand miles away, before the death threats on his family's phone and the TV crews outside his high school, Jeffrey Lee Parson thought he was helping the government to catch the author of the Blaster worm. But last week, the 18-year-old from Hopkins, Minn., was arrested for distributing a Blaster variant that, according to the federal complaint, infected about 7,000 computers. And with the author of the main worm (which infected more than 1 million computers) still at large, Parson has become the only face associated with the recent Internet attacks that shut down computers nationwide.

Faithful 'log on' to U.K. church

LONDON—With a mission to increase the dwindling numbers of British church-goers and create a multicultural family of Anglicans, an English minister is using the Internet to bring God to the people.

House panel holds blackout hearings

WASHINGTON—Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham promised a focused investigation Wednesday into the cause of the nation's worst blackout and told a congressional hearing that a U.S.-Canadian task force "will follow the facts where they lead us."

Anti-abortion killer willing 'martyr'

STARKE, Fla.—Barring an unlikely stay, Paul Hill, a 49-year-old former Presbyterian minister who gunned down an abortion doctor, will be put to death by lethal injection Wednesday evening, making him the first person executed in the United States for anti-abortion violence. Security was boosted outside the prison Wednesday, with extra sheriff's deputies, guard dogs and a sheriff's helicopter to prevent any protests from getting out of control.

Court cancels 100 death sentences

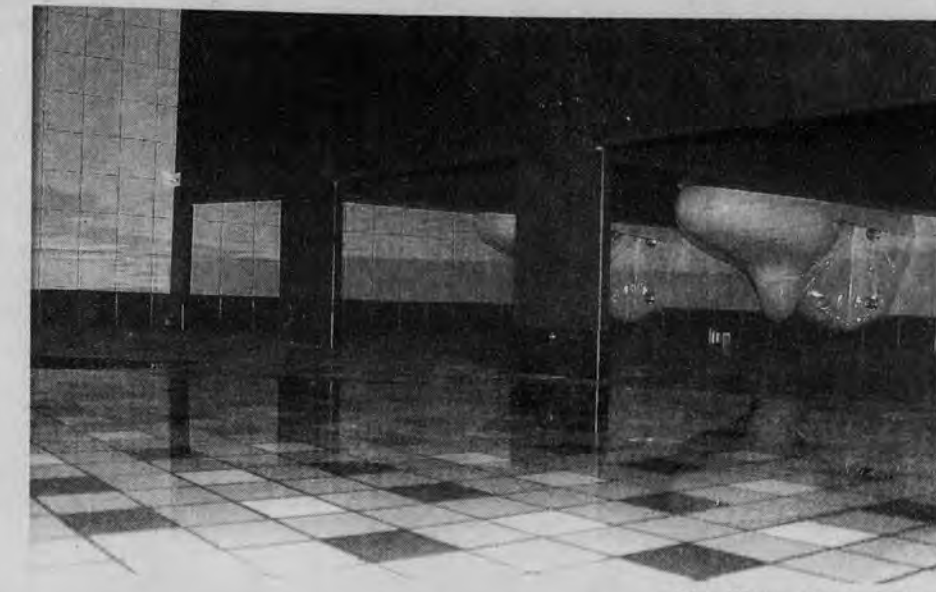

SAN FRANCISCO—A federal appeals court overturned an estimated 100 death sentences in Arizona and elsewhere on Tuesday because the inmates were sent to death row by judges instead of juries.

Security weakened at US entries

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3 — A $20 million budget shortfall is forcing cuts at U.S. ports of entry that could impact security, MSNBC.com has learned. The deficit has led officials to make a series of security compromises that include replacing INS inspectors with their less-qualified, lower-paid Customs counterparts on heavily trafficked Sundays and holidays. U.S. officials, who announced Tuesday a plan to merge these inspector jobs into a single position, denied that the current cost-saving measures weaken security in any way.

News

CONSTRUCTION WOES CAUSE VEDDER FLOWS

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Clogged pipes in Vedder Hall's bathrooms caused by summer construction errors resulted in major flooding. Alternate bathrooms have been available for use by Vedder residents.

THROSSEL From page A1

Throssel's service.

Throssel was a spiritual and peace-loving man. He played the organ at St. Paul's United Methodist Church, and many of his talks were to encourage religion and peace. He often spoke to students and community members about wanting to minister in Israel.

"John longed for and prayed for peace, not just peace in the Middle East but peace in our own community. John loved this community and he loved the people of this community. His love was seen in so many simple ways, like standing on the corner and offering an encouraging word or 'Good Luck' to people as they walked by," Morgan said at the memorial.

"His love was seen in how he joined so many different people in so many different places for worship and praise. But John's love and concern for us went much deeper. John was interested in seeing people come together. He wanted to see people in our community and in our world genuinely liking one another and working with one another to serve God and each other."

Throssel had to depend on the support of the community. When he was residing in Millinburg, townspeople would give him rides to and from Lewisburg and, later, it was the townspeople who noticed Throssel's failing health, according to Morgan.

Art Moser, Mail Services Supervisor, took Throssel into his home until health problems made it necessary for Throssel to enter a nursing home.

Morgan said that Throssel always wanted a home of his own; housing had always been an issue for him.

"John never stopped dreaming of and longing for a place to call his own... a place where no one told him what to do and where he could gather together resources for his ministry in Israel and his orphanages and schools," Morgan said at the memorial service. "John has this permanent home. It's not in Lewisburg, and it's not even in the nation of Israel—it's even better than that for it is in the kingdom of God."

Moser agreed with Morgan. "John now is doing what he loved doing and that is being in the presence of God. It is what every believer longs for when life as we know it here ends," Moser said.

Monetary donations can be made to assist with the expenses of Throssel's service, and checks should be made payable to St. Paul's United Methodist Church on 4th Street of Lewisburg.

As the campus starts another academic year, a friendly face by Vaughan Literature Building is missing, and we wish him "good luck."

PRESIDENT From page A1

Rackoff, the committee plans to hire one of these firms by next week.

Additionally, the committee is in the process of completing a Presidential Leadership Statement describing the University and the leadership position.

"Our goal is to find an exceptional leader who will continue the positive momentum that Bucknell has enjoyed over the years and take the University to new levels of success and achievement," Garrity said, in a letter to the campus community.

Although Rogers is not actively involved in the search for his successor, he has dedicated himself to facilitating a smooth transition from his presidency to the next by committing his efforts to the University's upcoming Middle States accreditation, developing compensation and classification study for the staff and resolving some budgetary issues.

"The search committee is well-qualified," Rogers said. "It looks to me like the search is progressing beautifully, and I will stand back and observe."

RANKINGS

From page A1

dramatically when the college issue comes out," President Rogers said. "We need to take these rankings seriously."

In order to excel, Rogers said he emphasizes the need to change the University's marketing strategy.

"We need to select one to three categories [to market]. Examples might be the freshman experience, undergraduate research and the writing programs," Rogers said.

"U.S. News and World Report" is not the only college issue in the hands of prospective students, as the "Princeton Review" college issue also hit the stands this month. The University made the top 20 in five different categories. It is number 13 for "Major Frat and Sorority Scene," number 15 for "Homogeneous Student Population," 17 for "Great College Library," number 18 for "Beautiful Campus," number and number 20 for "Lots of Hard Liquor."

"The Princeton Review's rankings are based on opinion polls taken by interviewing students, so the methodology is not particularly scientific or quantifiable," Rogers said. "[Addressing alcohol] statistics show we made dramatic improvement in the last two years with alcohol issues. The numbers of incidents, problems, run-ins with public safety and police are way down."

A second goal, according to Dean Ferraro, influenced by the rankings, is to not be on the "Lots of Hard Liquor" list at all next year.

"It's great to see Bucknell ranked in the top 30 nationally, but it would be nice to see us move up, because we are even better than people think we are," Rogers said.

RIOT From page A1

came to the University as a first-year student.

"When I was a freshman it wasn't as easy to get into parties. A lot more people can wander around the streets and get into parties, so I think the dynamic has changed since then. The more people in the street, the more problems the police will have," Lang said.

Lang said he believed what took place Monday was not normal downtown activity.

"I think it was pretty bad on Monday. I don't know if I'd call it a riot, but an exception to the normal year's activities," Lang said.

Ferraro said many students have indicated to him that they would like to retain the ability to live off campus.

"Students can get together to help clean up and that can help to maintain good relations with the people who live downtown," Ferraro said.

HARVEST HOUSE
CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

GO Vertical

310 Market St.
Downtown Lewisburg
Under CVS

Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Travel Operator

CANCUN
ACAPULCO
JAMAICA
BARBADOS
FLORIDA

Call Today, Save Cash!
Go Travel Now! Starting
Call for group discounts
and more services
1-800-848-4247 www.ststravel.com

ROGERS From page A1

of a merit aid program, the completion of the O'Leary Psychology and Geology Building and the Kenneth Langone Athletics and Recreation Center, the completion of major renovation projects to its future success of his plan once his successor makes the amendments reflecting the goals of the next presidency.

"Because we do not want to try to impose something on an incoming president we have eliminated the large umbrella component of Vision 2010, but a lot of time and effort went into the divisional plans, so we want to continue to develop those plans and leave whatever new thoughts the new president will have to bring the parts together," Rogers said.

Despite his many accomplishments, Rogers feels his greatest strength as President has been his dedication to the students.

"The students have been my whole reason for being at Bucknell," Rogers said. "Athena and I had never gotten the opportunity to truly get to know the students at the larger Universities where we worked, so that is what we truly wanted to do here. We are really going to miss that daily interaction."

According to Athena Rogers, she and the President are looking at each day as a new exciting moment of their lives, but she agrees that the hardest part of their departure will be leaving the students of the University.

"The students add to the spirit and the tone of the University," Athena Rogers said. "I feel like they are my children."

Students confirm the Rogers' have been successful in welcoming them as members of their family.

"One of my earliest memories was meeting President and Mrs. Rogers as I was walking across campus," Matt Gabler '06 said. "I was impressed with the way that they really took an interest in me and made me feel welcome. I could tell that they really do care about the students."

These are the memories Rogers hopes will become his legacy at the University.

"I am a student-oriented president," Rogers said. "That what I have strived to achieve and I hope that is how I'll be remembered."

"The students have been my whole reason for being at Bucknell. Athena and I had never gotten the opportunity to truly get to know the students at the larger Universities where we worked, so that is what we truly wanted to do here. We are really going to miss that daily interaction."

—Stephen Rogers, university president

Coleman Hall, Hunt Hall and the Elaine Langone Center, and the drafting of a strategic plan for the future of the University called Vision 2010.

Although Vision 2010 has yet to reach its full potential, Rogers is confident in

News

CALENDAR OF EVENTS

September 5	September 6	September 7	September 8	September 9	September 10	September 11
FRI	SAT	SUN	MON	TUE	WED	THU
Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Dance Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Shabbat Service Berelson Center for Jewish Life 104 (Chapel) 5:30 p.m. Susquehanna Valley Mall Shuttle CAP Center 7th Street Parking Lot 6 p.m. Hilltop Film Series Vaughn Lit 100 (Auditorium) 8 p.m. Mentalist: Alain Nu Langone Center 15 (Bison) 9 p.m. Goldrush Uptown 9:30 p.m. Film: Just Married Langone Center 272 (Forum) 10:30 p.m. Outdoor Movie Rooke Chapel Lawn 10:30 p.m. Carl & Ethan 7th Street Cafe 11 p.m.	Baltimore Inner Harbor Trip Meet downhill LC $20 8 a.m. Matt Nathanson Uptown 9:30 a.m. Wal-Mart Shuttles CAP Center 7th Street Cafe Free 1, 2, 3 p.m. Jelani's Interest Meeting Langone Center 256 (Center Room) 2 p.m. Choice Volleyball Tournament The Grove 2 p.m. Hilltop Film Series Vaughn Lit 100 (Auditorium) 3 p.m. Choice Volleyball Tournament Harris Hall 17 (Lounge) 3 p.m. Susquehanna Valley Mall Shuttle CAP Center 7th Street Parking Lot 3 & 6 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 5:30 p.m. Comedian: Elvira Kurt Langone Center 15 (Bison) 9 p.m. Identity ACE Film Vaughn Lit 100 (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Quaker Services Vaughn Lit 125 (Willard Smith Library) 10 a.m. Inter-denominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 11 a.m. Women's Soccer vs Marist College Women's Varsity Soccer Field 1 p.m. ACE Retreat Langone Center 304 (Arches Lounge) 1:30 p.m. Auditions For Bucknell Dance Company Tustin Theatre Dance Studio 2 p.m. JV Football vs. Lackawanna Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium 3:30 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 4 p.m. Nanne Meyer Talk and Reception Langone Center 310 (Samek Art Gallery) 4 p.m. Catholic Mass Hunt Hall Living Room 101 10 p.m.	Swim Conditioning Class Natatorium 7 a.m. Jewelry Sale Bucknell Bookstore 8:45 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Zen Meditation Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 4 p.m. Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Adult Beginning Swim Class Natatorium 7 p.m. Black Experience Lecture: Tricia Rose Langone Center (Forum) 7:30 PM The information on these events is subject to change. Some events are open to members of an organization only.	Golf Lessons Golf Course 8:30 a.m. Jewelry Sale Bucknell Bookstore 8:45 a.m. Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 11 a.m. Low Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Job Search Strategies Langone Center 272 (Forum) 12 p.m. & 5 p.m. Catholic Mass Langone Center 301 (Gallery Theatre Lecture Hall) 12:10 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Men's Soccer vs. St. Peter's College Women's Varsity Soccer Field 4 p.m. Dance Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Tennis Clinic Rt 15 Tennis Courts 6:30 p.m.	Swim Conditioning Class Natatorium 7 a.m. Dance Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Episcopal Services Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 12p.m. AA/UR Meeting Marts Hall 216 (Conference Room) 3 p.m. Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Women's Soccer vs. Cornell University Women's Varsity Soccer Field 4 p.m. Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 6 p.m. Orthodox Vesper Service Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 7 p.m. Poetry Reading: Shara McCallum Bucknell Hall (Recital Hall) 7 p.m. ACE Film Vaughn Lit 100 (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. Golf Lessons Golf Course 8:30 a.m. Low Impact Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Cardio Kicks Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Tennis Clinic Rt 15 Tennis Courts 6:30 p.m.

Send calendar submissions to bucknellian@bucknell.edu with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

Want to tell Mom and Dad what's happening on campus, but don't have the time? Give them the gift of knowledge; give yourself the gift of time—a subscription to The Bucknellian.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail to The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837.

Name _____ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues through May 2004 for $45 (a $15 savings)
 Address _____
 Phone _____ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify _____
 E-mail _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

THIS SPACE FOR RENT

Call 577-1085 or e-mail BucknellianAds@bucknell.edu for more information

DO YOU SEE A RAINFALL?

THEN YOU SEE THE POWER OF COMMUNITY COALITIONS.

They help community groups—like the PTA, your church, clubs, even your employer—organize resources and focus them where they're needed most. Especially fighting to keep kids away from drugs. If you're in a community group, ask if you can do more by teaming up with a community coalition. It's really simple. Just go to www.helpyourcommunity.org or call 1-877-KIDS-313 to contact a community coalition in your area. They'll tell you exactly how your group can help. You'll be surprised at what you have to offer. And how much you can accomplish.

YOU GET MORE WHEN YOU GET TOGETHER

Office of National Drug Control Policy

This bracelet was a gift Amber Apodaca received from the center where she helped teens with drug and alcohol problems. She was wearing it when an underage drunk driver took her life.

Friends Don't Let Friends Drive Drunk.

U.S. Department of Transportation

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 132, Number 1
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor
Michelle Dombeck '05

Business Manager
Stephen Santulli '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sandi Jo Galati '04

News Editors
Elizabeth Salenme '06
Alyson Walker '04
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editor
Josh Fisher '04

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Homan '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Pat Evans '04
Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment
Editor
Josie Cetta '04

Photo Editors
Eric Graham '05
Adam Wilcox '06

Chief Copy Editor
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
John Heekin '05
Davish Malhotra '06

Marketing Directors
Joseph Giordano '05
Alexander Kanaris '05

Circulation Manager
Hassan Sultan '04

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief.

All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian. Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFO

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

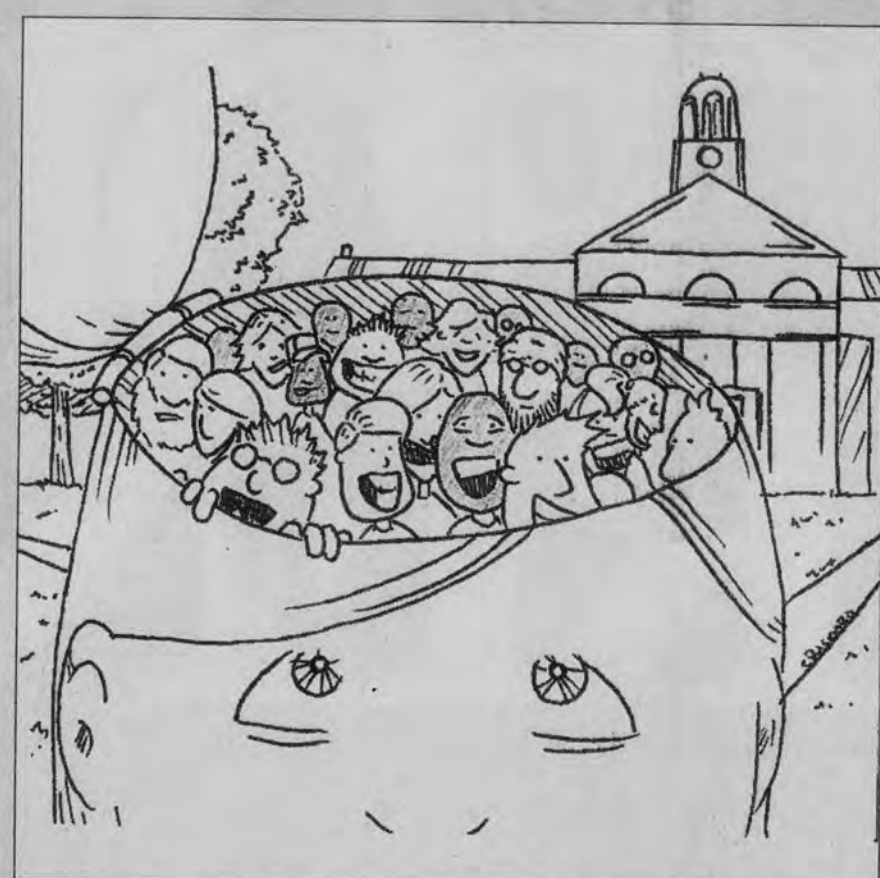

Presidential search slights students

The Presidential Search Committee, which is charged with interviewing candidates and recommending the University's next President, is made up primarily of members of the Board of Trustees with token representation of faculty and students. One student representative, Bucknell Student Government (BSG) President Katy Timer, is supposed to embody the opinion of the entire student body, while the whole faculty is to be represented by two committee members.

Despite the confidence we have in Timer's ability to lead BSG and represent the students to the administration in day to day affairs, it is unreasonable to expect any one student to be able to represent the diversity of opinion and vision for our next President. Timer may feel pressured to refrain from challenging the Trustees over the Presidential search in order to improve the effectiveness of BSG as a whole. She has to consider BSG's future interactions with the Trustees and administration. In short, she has more to lose than the average student and must think twice about fully expressing her opinion.

The solution is to add more students and faculty members to the committee. The students should be asked to vote directly in a simple election or indirectly through a vote of the BSG Congress. The faculty should be allowed to choose additional members from their ranks.

We hope the current make up of the committee is not indicative of the value the Trustees and administration put on student and faculty opinion. Unfortunately, this under representation of the two most important constituencies on campus is neither new nor surprising. Student priorities, like Cable TV in dorm rooms and swipe-card capabilities in laundry rooms, have been studied and proposed by BSG with little effect.

The Trustees should recognize that current students are capable of looking to the future when forming opinions about who would be a good leader of the University. Not only do we have the best view of the current education offered at the University, we have a vested interest in the future reputation and success of our alma mater. Instead of ignoring us as students and then pressuring us for donations as alumni, the school should invest more trust and influence in students before our graduation.

The dismal representation of students and faculty members is made more so by the fact that the final hiring decision is made by the Board of Trustees. This search committee is tasked only with making recommendations. No matter how many students and faculty are on the committee, the Trustees still have complete control over who is chosen. We are not advocating increased control for students and faculty in actually choosing the next President (although one could make that case), we are simply looking for a more reasonable and accurate make up of the committee membership.

Having only one student among the 14 members of the committee is nothing if not a symbolic insult to the most numerous group on this campus. Having only two faculty on the committee seems to send a message to the Presidential candidates that the opinions of the faculty are similarly unimportant. This apparent lack of respect for faculty opinion in the Presidential search process may lead the new President to dismiss the faculty as less relevant than they truly are. The Trustees would do well to allow the students and faculty to add more committee members chosen by their own constituents.

Media may not be as left as you think

By PHIL MARTOMA
Senior Writer

We often hear the term, "liberal media" without questioning where it came from or its implications. However, this term can be very powerful in how we interpret the reality of events we hear about on the news or elsewhere and to disregard any question of its true value would seriously threaten our ability to eliminate biased influences over what we see and think.

While watching the coverage of the War on Iraq, I, along with the rest of America, saw Saddam's statue fall and the people of Baghdad cheer their liberation. At the time, I found the picture to be an eye-opening experience. I did not expect the people to cheer as American soldiers marched into their city because I believed we would be seen to be just another oppressive force in the country and that the people would not be so quick to accept our military's presence there.

Online, I found on NION's (Not In Our Name) Web site a picture of the group cheering as the military pulled down his statue. This picture was slightly zoomed out so that the whole square could be seen, and the people cheering were only in the range of a few hundred. I wondered how this could be considered to be different from the movie "Wag the Dog," if in both cases camera angles were fixed to show to the public what the administration wanted to be shown. When I originally saw CNN's image of what I thought represented much of the city, I had to defend to other people watching the image why I thought it might have been misrepresenting the truth. Everyone at the time was under the impression that the media, if it had any tilt, was tilted to the left, and that therefore a picture such as the one I saw was probably unquestionably true.

If it is true that most people would see something like that and not question the true value of such an image then it calls me to wonder just who it is that benefits from the concept of a "liberal media." While there are a number of books that aim at debunking this myth in a variety of ways, it should suffice to realize that the concept itself, which most people hold to be true, only helps the conservative spin on an event. If we try to take into account that the concept as a whole takes credence from much of what liberals have to say, then we realize that it not a purely subjective phenomena that can't be proven true or false, because it makes everyone think every liberal statement of fact to be suspect. As a friend of mine once said, the media are only as liberal as the corporations that own them.

Summer developments endanger Bush and Blair

By MIKE NIEBAUER
Senior Writer

It was a stormy summer in Lewisburg. The political storms and luck of the White House have worsened since the daily media reports daily of the casualties of war in Iraq. The once triumphant liberators of Baghdad and the Iraqi people have come under increasing fire from an increasingly organized, insurgent force. Our friends, sons and daughters in the military have become targets of opportunity for a guerilla-style enemy. Recently, the death toll surpassed that of Gulf War One.

Our now frustrated troops on duty in the 125 degree heat of the Iraqi summer are sending home requests to family and friends for aid that Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld's seems to have failed to provide. Rumsfeld continues to insist that there are enough troops to fulfill this mission. One would think the U.S. Department of Defense could do better with a $400 billion a year budget. Now, after bashing our allies and the United Nations for months, we are negotiating with them for help handling the reconstruction and occupation of Iraq. How times and needs have changed in a few short weeks is truly shocking.

The Camelback, a water system used by long-distance bikers and hikers to stay hydrated without stopping, is perfect for standing guard on station in occupied Iraq. Imagine doing police work you are not trained for in a country that is apparently full of Iraqis that want you out of the country or dead. Those Army of One commercials look extra troubling now as the deaths happen in ones and twos. The irony is just too painful to express.

Speaking of troubling and ironic, The White House spin doctor Karl Rove is tastelessly using the 9/11 attacks and the once positive war outcome to retain the White House in 2004. The Republican Party, led by the White House has moved the traditional mid-July date of their New York convention to the week that coincides with the anniversary of the 9/11 disaster.

This is typical of Rove and is to be expected since someone had to have handed President George W. Bush that now famous bullhorn only days after the 9/11 disaster just in time to be caught by a diligent video camera-man.

The use of an aircraft carrier as a prop for a photo opportunity to show the President dressed in full military flight suit as the conquering commander seemed to stretch credibility to the limit. The carrier had to be turned for the sole purpose of having the plane landing look like it was in mid-ocean and not within sight of San Diego Harbor. The President declared open hostilities in Iraq over in May, and that now seems pretty shallow, since no wartime president ever tried this obvious stunt before. Presidents Dwight Eisenhower or Franklin Roosevelt would never condone this showboating for even a compliant media.

Then ally Tony Blair was accused of hyping up the intelligence report used by Bush in his State of the Union address. The phrasing was taken by the FBI once and replaced by a deputy in National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice's office. Rice has not been as available to the press since the incident. The British defense expert, Kelly, who disputed the altered words in the speech sent to the American speechwriters, committed suicide. This rose many questions on the truth concerning the text of the speech. Blair's position as Prime Minister is now endangered.

President Bush is reportedly raising money for his first election at a rapid rate. It looks like he will need every penny. I doubt he can count on conditions being right to get elected once again. I don't have room to write of this presidency's pathetic economic performance (3 million lost jobs since he took office and 9 million unemployed). Cheer up: the President has 14 months to turn this economic aircraft carrier around. Never underestimate the ability of President Bush to downplay his own competency. For the market's sake, he should rethink this strategy.

Freshmen orientation, uncut

By AARON HANLON
Senior Writer

Heeyey! If you're a Gemini from New Jersey, run to the thirty-five yard line and talk to a Taurus from Pennsylvania... when I blow the whistle!!! Attention, first-year students, and anyone else who hasn't been paying attention for the last few years: I can't really remember what they told the class of 2004 during orientation because I was in my room playing video games... err... I had practice a lot that week; but I can't even imagine what they've told you. Class of 2007, at this year's extravaganza. Indeed, I heard horror stories from last year's freshmen and those prior. There's certainly a trend for orientation information that descends toward political correctness and thus absurdity, not to mention the scare tactics. According to last year's orientation, one out of every four of us will graduate with two things: a fine degree and a venereal disease. I won't even begin to speculate over what sort of p.c. rhetoric was disseminated this year. I will, however, provide this year's freshmen class with all the orientation information they ought to need in one somewhat-concise column.

First thing's first, first-years: I know they've been calling you "first-year students," but you really are, in terms of your ascension up the academic ladder, freshmen.

First thing's first, first-years: I know they've been calling you "first-year students," but you really are, in terms of your ascension up the academic ladder, freshmen.

every moderately offensive word to a three-word phrase? Who the casual-sexual-intercourse does that?

That brings me to the next point: Bucknell is easier on all of us than the corporate world will be. Still, during your four years here, at least one person will offend you at least once. It's bound to happen. If someone is being an offensive jerk to the extent that you just can't deal with it, tell him off or at least let him hear it. We're all big kids. We can talk out our differences in a peaceful manner. You'll thank me in four years when you can deal with your chauvinist or condescending boss without calling the Dean of Students.

Speaking of differences, you've possibly noticed by now that there is a great deal of people around who are very different from you. If not, then you just haven't had the opportunity to look beyond everyone's clothing and skin color yet. Regardless of what you've been told, I promise you that Bucknell is a very diverse community. If you do one thing here, get to know as many people as possible for who they are, what they like to do, how they think, etc. Don't get caught up in skin color and multiculturalism. Not everyone with the same skin color is the same type of person. Diversity of skin color is meaningless next to diversity of character. We have people from the city to the country, America to Japan, poor to rich, liberal to conservative, etc. Who cares how much pigment they have?

Last, but certainly not least: if you're planning on partying and drinking (and I hope you are) do your best to be respectful. When people get drunk, they have a harder time saying things like "no," "stop" and "don't." If you know someone isn't sober enough to give consent, as it were, don't speculate and don't try anything. At the very least you could get expelled; at the very worst someone could get hurt or killed. Just be careful. Hopefully all of this is helpful, but if not you could always consult your Bucknell Student Handbook. It's really useful.

amazement. "Until we can find someone to carry it for us," Kristin retorted. "We're going low-impact."

Ponder this: why would the National Park Service, with an annual budget of just over 2 billion dollars, and specifically Yosemite National Park, with an annual budget of nearly 200 million dollars, need that much money in order to follow through with their explicit purpose of protecting lands from development? Just how much money does it take to leave everything alone?

If you've ever been to the Grand Canyon, parked next to all the other SUVs and vans and eaten at the restaurant at the top of the vista, then you already know that that money is for marketing.

The truth of the matter is that the National Park Service, with its infinite ecological wisdom, attempts to micromanage every fish, antelope, moose, bison, hawk, tree and mushroom while simultaneously attempting to attract visitors. I have even seen them dig up and replant an elegant evergreen in Rocky Mountain National Park in order to perfect the aesthetics of Glacier Bay, where the ragged mountains creek and strain in the frigid air and their silhouette glows in the incandescent, lake-refracted prisms of light.

And still I find it very disheartening that I seek out these amazing places because I know they might not be around much longer.

According to "Great Smoky Mountains National Park," by Rose Houk, the National Park Service actually has some of a track record at making species go extinct.

Within less than 50 years of the founding of Bryce Canyon National Park in 1923, the park lost seven species of mammals, which is quite an accomplishment when you consider that these creatures existed for hundreds and thousands of years before the Park Service's stewardship.

In 1957, in the Great Smoky Mountain National Park, the Park Service decided that it would repopulate Abrams Creek with rainbow trout (despite the fact that rainbow trout never actually existed there before, but that's beside the point). And what is the best way to protect a fragile river ecosystem? That's right! Dump several hundred gallons of a poison called rotenone into it.

Within hours, 31 species of fish were eradicated, and the Park Service had actually managed to heavenly. "You're going to carry everything you need for a week on your back!" he asked in Elect her? I don't even know her!

By SETH J. ASTORINO
Writer

First-year student elections are set to take place on September 11. In the seven-day span preceding class elections, first-year students must consider campus politics, make decisions about the candidates and finally elect representatives to Bucknell Student Government (BSG). The process is one that allows the voice of the students to echo throughout campus-in theory, that is. At the University, theory and reality seem to differ.

As first-year students, we have been part of the University community for the extended period of 14 days. First-year students should pay attention to this detail and participate in some elementary mathematical equations: Fourteen divided by two is seven. If seven is subtracted from seven, zero remains. How do these mathematical equations apply to student elections?

We have been classmates for 14 days. Fourteen is probably the number of students that can remember our name. Seven is approximately the number of people that know more than our name and place of origin, courtesy of the student directory.

It is absurd to think that it is necessary to possess every intimate detail about our leaders. No sane individual yearns to know everything about the lives of our representatives. But, it is too much to ask that before we elect these individuals that represent us, we can associate with them more than just a catch phrase and a colorful campaign poster?

As college students, we claim to be in the process of becoming educated members of an elite family of college graduates. But what we are saying about ourselves by choosing candidates based on the unique qualities of their names or the free tokens of appreciation we receive for casting a vote in their favor, is that we are part of a community that makes decisions lacking basic information. Most people probably wouldn't elect any political official without taking into consideration the views of the candidate. If we vote irresponsibly, we are abusing our privilege to cast our vote. In the process, we cheapen the entire operation.

How can this situation be rectified? If first-year class elections were held later in the semester, first-year students would have an opportunity to develop opinions regarding University issues and policies as well as opinions of delegates. In addition, if debates and forums were held where delegates could present their ideas, voters would have an opportunity to hear where candidates stand regarding various issues. If a clear picture of each candidate could be viewed, the entire voting process would gain validity.

Of course, with change comes opposition. It could be argued that for a period of time, first-year students would lack representation in Bucknell Student Government. But isn't a political decision based on valid campaign processes more valuable than a governing body based upon ignorance?

One part of the present-ed mathematical equation must still be examined: zero, the number of first-year candidates elected to BSG based on an informed decision.

For statements from the class of 2007 candidates for executive positions, see page A8.

We have been classmates for 14 days. Fourteen is probably the number of students that can remember our name.

Is it too much to ask that before we elect these individuals that represent us, we can associate with them more than just a catch phrase and a colorful campaign poster?

US Government seeks buyer for environment, national parks

By JOSH FISHER
Opinions Editor

This summer I did my usual share of hiking all over the American West and Southwest, witnessing the usual massive forest fires, the usual dumping of massive amounts of fire retardant chemicals on every puff of smoke and the usual rationalization by the president, in his razor-sharp logic, that the best way to combat forest fires is to log more trees! Sure. That makes perfect sense.

While it has never really been a question of me whether or not U.S. President George W. Bush actually holds some deep-seated antipathy toward trees, perhaps as a result of having a bad experience with a tree as a child, the National Forest Service, the National Park Service and now the Environmental Protection Agency (with the recent appointment of Mike Leavitt, former governor of Utah) seem to be following in kind.

The people who are making our environmental decisions are of the type that wouldn't even crack a smile when they refer to clear-cutting old-growth Redwood forests in Oregon (a heartbreaking event that occurred a few years ago) as the "full-sunlight method of forest regeneration."

My friend Kristin and I decided first to try our luck at hiking the long, lost trails of Yosemite National Park in California. Naturally, I was extraordinarily late getting there from my home in Colorado because I was conducting an experiment to determine if I could find her street address in San Francisco by using a city map of San Diego. (You can't).

In any case, it was in Yosemite that I realized it wasn't just the Bush administration whose environmental policies have been led completely astray.

While preparing to hike through the backcountry in search of a glimpse of Yosemite's elusive wolf population, I marveled at the massive number of Californians who had driven their monstrous urban-assault vehicles all the way to Yosemite, just barely leaving sight of the tourist center.

Meanwhile, Kristin was explaining to a man in a very unfortunate striped polo shirt that we actually intended to use our legs to propel us through the wilderness.

"And you're going to carry everything you need for a week on your back!" he asked in amazement.

"Until we can find someone to carry it for us," Kristin retorted. "We're going low-impact."

Ponder this: why would the National Park Service, with an annual budget of just over 2 billion dollars, and specifically Yosemite National Park, with an annual budget of nearly 200 million dollars, need that much money in order to follow through with their explicit purpose of protecting lands from development? Just how much money does it take to leave everything alone?

If you've ever been to the Grand Canyon, parked next to all the other SUVs and vans and eaten at the restaurant at the top of the vista, then you already know that that money is for marketing.

The truth of the matter is that the National Park Service, with its infinite ecological wisdom, attempts to micromanage every fish, antelope, moose, bison, hawk, tree and mushroom while simultaneously attempting to attract visitors. I have even seen them dig up and replant an elegant evergreen in Rocky Mountain National Park in order to perfect the aesthetics of Glacier Bay, where the ragged mountains creek and strain in the frigid air and their silhouette glows in the incandescent, lake-refracted prisms of light.

And still I find it very disheartening that I seek out these amazing places because I know they might not be around much longer.

According to "Great Smoky Mountains National Park," by Rose Houk, the National Park Service actually has some of a track record at making species go extinct.

Within less than 50 years of the founding of Bryce Canyon National Park in 1923, the park lost seven species of mammals, which is quite an accomplishment when you consider that these creatures existed for hundreds and thousands of years before the Park Service's stewardship.

In 1957, in the Great Smoky Mountain National Park, the Park Service decided that it would repopulate Abrams Creek with rainbow trout (despite the fact that rainbow trout never actually existed there before, but that's beside the point). And what is the best way to protect a fragile river ecosystem? That's right! Dump several hundred gallons of a poison called rotenone into it.

Within hours, 31 species of fish were eradicated, and the Park Service had actually managed to discover and eradicate in the same instant a previously unknown species, which they posthumously called the smoky madtom.

According to the National Park Service's budget, which is accessible online through the Department of the Interior, the Park Service spends less than three percent on research of any type, excluding marketing research, which falls under the category of "development."

These national parks, especially ones like Yosemite and the Grand Canyon, are coming under greater stress every day due to increased tourism, and the Park Service, the Bush administration and the EPA are doing very little to help the situation.

The Bush administration has perhaps the worst environmental track record in the history of the United States, which places it high in the running for worst world-wide.

Within the first hundred days of Bush's presidency, he actually managed to dismantle most of Clinton's environmental protection efforts.

On April 11 the Bush administration announced that it will restrict the number of acres that are eligible for wilderness protection, allowing more of this land to be open for development.

On February 3, the budget proposal for fiscal year 2004 cut funding to the EPA, land conservation and renewable energy programs.

On March 23, the decision to phase out polluting snowmobiles in Yellowstone and Grand Teton National Parks was overturned, despite massive public outcry.

And on August 11, President Bush named Utah Governor Mike Leavitt (R) as the head of the EPA. In the usual fashion, Leavitt's nomination was hailed by GOP lawmakers and criticized by Democrats and environmental groups, including the Sierra Club.

Leavitt spoke briefly after he was introduced by Bush. "There is an inherent human responsibility to care for the Earth," Leavitt said. "But there's also an economic imperative that we're dealing with in a global economy to do it less expensively."

Leavitt is wrong for his position. According to a Sierra Club press release, Leavitt, as Governor of Utah, secretly negotiated two controversial deals with the Department of the Interior to open up millions of acres of Utah wilderness to road-building and development.

"As EPA Administrator, Governor Leavitt would not alleviate concerns that the Bush administration is prone to making shady deals" at the expense of a safe and healthy environment," the Sierra Club said.

But with an administration that seems to have little to no regard for environmental matters other than apportioning them to the realm of deregulation and market forces, Leavitt's appointment just reinforces the fact that the Bush administration seems absolutely bent on systematically dismantling the laws designed to ensure the health of the environment.

So why aren't we all gloomily aware of this sad state of affairs?

Well, for one, the American public seems to be more concerned with the state of our economy, whatever the expense to the wilderness, which is perhaps America's most valuable spiritual resource.

Let me remind you, economic indicators are fictional things! Our nation's wildlife is not!

The Bush administration needs to stop rolling back these environmental regulations if we are to have any hope for the future, and it needs to realize the fundamental flaw of capitalism: the world is (gasp!) a finite place.

In the end, when places like Yosemite are no more than a resort township like Lake Tahoe or Steamboat Springs, when Sequoia National Park in California is a Walt Disney amusement park (which the Park Service invited the corporation to build in the 1960s), we will realize that we are the ones who sat idly by and let these amazing vistas and wonderfully diverse wildlife fade in to nothingness.

We will realize, in an explosion of brown dust as dynamite carves a massive fragment from the terrace so that a gravel company can crush it into pieces, haul it off in trucks and unload it on a low-level radioactive waste dump far to the north, that the Arches National Park in Utah has become nothing more than the legacy of Cold War uranium mining. We are mining the oceanic memories of limestone, the calcified remains of millions of marine organisms, to cap the toxic heat of bomb-making debris.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Special Report: Class of 2007 BSG Elections President

By COURTNEY HOMAN
B&P Editor

The chance to vote for the Class of 2007's representation in Bucknell Student Government (BSG) is quickly approaching. The week of campaigning is under way, with candidates for all offices knocking on doors and posting flyers around campus. The competition has begun. As a service to our readers, we have provided a limited preview of the candidates for President, Vice President and Secretary/Treasurer, along with their answers to our questionnaire. Unfortunately, due to space limitations, we are unable to include statements from those running for Class Representative in the election preview. Our questionnaire gave the candidates the opportunity to relate to their classmates their wishes for the future of the Class of 2007 and to articulate what it is about themselves that would allow them to be successful leaders in a student government environment.

First-year students can vote on Thursday from 12:00 a.m. to 11:59 p.m. Each first-year student will get one vote for President, one vote for Vice President, one vote for Secretary/Treasurer and eight votes for Class Representative. The Bucknellian offers this election preview to stress the importance of class representation and to allow first-year students greater access to their candidates.

An officer position comes with both privileges and responsibilities. BSG offers students the opportunity to have a connection to the administration of policy that directly affects the University. Those individuals who win the election will have a unique opportunity to work with the Class Representatives and executives from the Sophomore, Junior and Senior classes of BSG to implement policy change that will benefit their entire class for years to come.

Vice President

Jenna Camann

Lynnfield, MA

Business Management

I am running for office this year because I believe that I can make a positive difference for each member of the University's Class of 2007. I have held class office, been president of various clubs and captain of the tennis team over the past four years. I have proved to those around me that I can provide for both a fun and productive setting!

Dan Maio

Brewster, NY

Accounting

I'm running for office to get to know as many of my classmates as I can and to make sure that everyone's time at Bucknell is as enjoyable and fun as it can be. I was a leader in my high school's student government, and if I'm elected I'll work hard to make this year a year to remember.

Doug Murphy

Chester, PA

Business Management

Good morning. My name is Doug Murphy, and I will be running for Vice President. I was the Vice President for my National Honor Society back home—I'm obviously perfect for the job. Here are the facts. Like President George Washington, I've never told a lie. Like President Abraham Lincoln, I'm against slavery. And like George W. Bush, I'm against terrorism. Vote for Doug, he'll give you a hug!

Angela Gupta

Small Medford, NJ

Undecided

I have an incredible passion for leadership and truly enjoy leadership roles. In running, I have one goal: to fairly represent our class as an approachable and active officer. In my high school I held leadership roles in the class executive council, the school student council, and as the President and Vice President of several school organizations. However, I believe my best qualification is that I would love to represent the fabulous Class of 2007!

Carlo Marchioli

DuBois, PA

Political Science

There's one reason why I'm running for office: to help the Class of 2007 make a difference. If elected I'd be a positive voice for our class, and ensure that our concerns are heard. I was an active four-year member of my high school's student government and served as President my senior year. Experience is important because I've done things like plan dances before, and I'm a proven hard worker.

Laura Bentzen

New Fairfield, CT

Undecided

I think all of us want to be remembered years from now not just for the impressions we made and our accomplishments but because of who we were. Now is the time to express ourselves and bring our own individual gifts to the world. Although I haven't yet participated in a student government, this would be my chance to help others be heard and acknowledged.

Laura Mlynarski

East Lyme, CT

Psychology/Spanish

The past two weeks have been unbelievable. I never imagined that I'd meet and be inspired by so many amazing people. Having been on student government every year in high school, I've remained dedicated and passionate. As the Vice President I'll always voice your opinions and never give up. To begin, I intend to adapt the alcohol 'point system' to include a community service alternative. I already love Bucknell.

Chas Wagner

Business Administration

I am running for office because it would be cool and exciting to represent my freshman class. I want to have the cafeteria and Bison open later. Also, no school on Labor Day.

I was captain of my golf and basketball teams and I think that will translate into me being a great Vice President.

The candidates were asked to respond to the following questions in 75 total words or less:

1. Why are you running for office and what is one thing you'd like to do if elected?

2. What is your previous experience and why ought this cause someone to vote for you?

We also asked the candidates to provide their hometown and expected major. Not all candidates responded.

Ron Tulia

Bethlehem, PA

Biology

I am running for President because I want to do the thankless jobs others don't want. I also want to help our class voice certain problems it may have. At my high school, whenever a volunteer was needed or a problem arose, I was almost always first to sign up.

Adam Weinberg

Voorhees, NJ

Political Science

I'm a proud Bucknellian. I bleed orange and blue. I'll be a great President 'cause I'm honest and true. I promise hard work and tons of dedication. If you vote for me you'll feel the sensation. You like going streaking? Or instead watch a play? I'll do what I can. So you'll have your way. You'll have a great year. That's my guarantee. Vote Adam Weinberg and soon you will see.

Karen Guarino

Mountaintop, PA

Political Science

I am running for President because leadership is something I can confidently say I'm good at. Serving as President of my class for all four years throughout high school, I understand that being elected by your peers is an honor not to be taken for granted. When others place their trust in you, it is a responsibility that has to be taken seriously. My only campaign promise is two words: hard work.

Elizabeth Black

Orinda, CA

Int'l Relations

I'm a motivated person who is dedicated to making a lasting impact on the University. Though our class is still new to campus, as issues arise I will handle them to the best of my ability. I demonstrated these qualities during my junior and senior years of high school when I founded and presided over a Model United Nations club. I committed hours of time and energy to organizing and planning events. Please consider me for class president!

Fritz Konker

Dallas, Texas

Economics

I am running for Freshman Class President. My leadership experience (Spanish club President, 11, 12; Poetry club Chief of Homeland Security, 12) are not reasons that I should be voted President. I learned on the Buckwild pre-orientation camping trip that I am not here to lead hikers or to smell good, but rather to serve Bucknell as a mediator, a friend to all, and as someone to unite this diverse, interesting group of students.

Liz Lorson

Montoursville, PA

Psychology

Since seventh grade, I have been involved with student government. Four years of leadership positions, including president last year, have given me experience that will help me lead the Class of 2007 through a fun-filled year. I love working for other people and will dedicate my time to this job. Throughout this experience I am looking forward to meeting and working with as many of my fellow classmates as possible!

Shira Gasarch

New York, NY

Management

I am running for President most importantly because I love getting to know my class and want to work for them to make this the best freshman year possible. I have always held leadership positions and would bring enthusiasm, dedication, and creative ideas to BSG. If elected, I want to look into finding a way for people to deduct points from the 'point system,' by performing community service during the year. Vote GEM.

Molly Lewis

Pittsford, NY

Elem. Ed./Psychology

To become involved in the Bucknell community, voice my opinion, and enjoy myself, I thought running for office would be a great idea. If elected, I would love to help lead my class. It would be beneficial to take part in this important group on campus. In high school I participated in student government, accepting the positions of Secretary, Vice President, and President. I hope my classmates will think of my experiences when voting.

Flor De Liz Perez

Lewisburg, PA

English/Int'l Relations

"To lead the people, walk behind them."—Lao-Tzu. I am running for the presidency of what many call a highly selective group. I am fully prepared to support our class in future endeavors. Besides great entertainment, I'd like to implement change machines and cable in dorms. In high school I was Vice President of my class for two years and head of many committees.

Secretary/ Treasurer

Jennifer Hrabik

Pittsburgh, PA

Economics/ Biology

Like many of you, the first time I saw Bucknell University I fell in love with it. The campus and people here are beautiful in many ways. Therefore, I'm running for the office of Secretary/Treasurer to bring with me original and inventive ideas. I served as Secretary of my high school class for two years, and for the other two, Secretary of my high school's National Honor Society.

Tae Courtney

Accokeek, MD

Int'l Relations

I am running for the office of Secretary/Treasurer for the Bucknell Student Government. If elected, I would work to make our four years here a fun, memorable experience. In high school, I was chosen to be the Secretary of the National Honor Society and I was a representative for our student government. I was also the captain of my volleyball and softball teams.

Brianna Evans

Bellingham, WA

Int'l Relations

Here at Bucknell, I seek to make a positive impact on people. Being in BSG would give me that opportunity. I would make the wants, needs and desires of our class a reality; for starters, I would seek to modify the alcohol point system through community service incentives. As treasurer in high school, I raised over $2,000 for charity and I'll give the same dedication to Bucknell. Vote G.E.M. for BSG!

Denis Nothorn

Acton, MA

Electrical Engineering

If elected I would like to incorporate the opinions of as many people as possible and bring the class together as a group. My previous experience includes four years as my high school class Treasurer. I also gained leadership experience as an Eagle Scout.

Valerie Gyurko

White Haven, PA

Chemical Engineering

A university is as good as its students. Its student government needs to be filled with individuals who will work to their potentials to assist officials in making a better place for its students. Throughout high school, I served as Secretary within various organizations, helping to inform its members of the upcoming events, as well as serving as an intermediary between the students and the government system. I hope to carry on this tradition here.

Jenna DiPaolo

Buffalo, New York

Int'l Relations

Hello! I'm Jenna and I am running for Treasurer/Secretary because I want to do all I can to make the University the best it can be for us. I hope to unite the Class of 2007 by bringing in activities we want. I was Treasurer of the student body and coordinator of Homecoming in high school. I am energetic and I get things accomplished. My goal is to have everyone's voice heard here at Bucknell!

you accidentally knock
your roommate's
toothbrush into the toilet.
he's not home. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others.
explore what matters
at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Leading the class of 2004

Jessica Briski '04 poses in front of the Class of 2004 crest as the class's newly elected president. She was chosen to serve as president following a controversial election in which she tied for most votes and was declared the winner by a vote of the 2004 congress.

MATTHEW HINSON
Staff Writer

It's midnight on the last day of classes for the 2002-03 school year. Bucknell Student Government (BSG) Vice President of Operations Jack Phillips '04 realizes something out of the ordinary has occurred. The election for 2004 Class President has ended in a tie between Jessica Briski and Garry Thaniel. Phillips immediately called BSG President Katy Timer '04 and Associate Dean of Students Kari Conrad, an advisor to BSG, to determine what to do next. Their main concern? That everything be done as fairly as possible—the by the book.

Looking into the bylaws of BSG with then Parliamentary Laura Day '03, Phillips found two pertinent sections, one stating "in the case of a tie for any one position, the most recently elected congress members shall vote; the resulting winner of this vote shall be placed into the corresponding position; in the case of a tie of the tie breaking vote process, the presiding officer shall cast his or her vote." Another rule stated "if runoff elections are deemed necessary, notice of the election should be posted via email and at least one time in the campus newspaper."

An e-mail was sent out to the campus, declaring the winners of the other races, and asking for people's patience while this strange situation was sorted out.

There was some confusion as to which of the two bylaws should be foremost applied. According to BSG member Meredith Atkinson '04, some were concerned that a rushed runoff election might not be viable, as the last day of classes was close at hand. This would push the election to the following semester, Fall '03, leaving no 2004 Class President over the summer. This was considered to be a potentially large problem; the senior class president must work on seeking out a commencement speaker as well as other duties to be fulfilled the summer prior to senior year. Others were concerned that after a tie in a four-way race, the senior class should be given the opportunity to decide the winner themselves.

The following morning, the last day of classes, the just-elected congress was called in, and a group assembled. The situation was explained to the congress members by Day, Phillips and Timer. Timer said that, having discussed amongst themselves, the sophomore and junior classes' representatives decided to defer to the senior class representatives' judgment about who to vote in as president, as the decision would affect the senior class.

After deliberation, the class representatives decided to forgo a runoff and vote for a winner. Jessica Briski was elected 2004 Class President. Thaniel was advised by friends and associates that if he wanted to challenge the election, he should bring it up before BSG and attempt to get the bylaws changed, so that a different system of selecting a winner in the case of a tie might be written into BSG bylaws.

Briski says she "wasn't worried about who the senior class would elect for president because they had equal trust and faith in Garry and/or I to get the job done well." Thaniel, though admittedly upset initially at the results of the election, offered a humorous view of the situation. "I guess if it [a tie election] can happen in Florida, it can happen at Bucknell." Both are looking forward to a productive and positive senior year.

Texas showdown

Democrats and Republicans lock horns in Texas legislature

LINDSEY GENTEL
Staff Writer

While the California recall vote may be the state imbroglio with the most national attention, Texas is currently confronting its own outlandish political showdown.

In late July, eleven Democratic state senators ran away to New Mexico to block a vote on the matter of Texas redistricting and gridlocked the legislature. On August 26, the Texas Legislature adjourned its second special legislative session without passing a congressional redistricting bill.

Republican Gov. of Texas Rick Perry has indicated he plans to call yet another special session to try to receive approval for new congressional boundaries. He has not said when this session will start.

Republican Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst told CNN.com, "Let me pass on a very clear message to our eleven colleagues out in Albuquerque. The mood in the Senate is changing. We're tired. We're tired of sitting here and waiting. It is in our eleven colleagues' best interests to come back sooner rather than later."

The story began in 2001, when three federal judges drew the state's congressional-districting map which was approved by the U.S. Supreme Court. In 2002, the state elected 17 Democrats and 15 Republicans in the House. But with Texas being a Republican stronghold, GOP leaders have contended that 15 seats are not enough. According to CNN, they've proposed various maps that would create between five and seven more safe GOP districts in the state.

The Democrats have said the current map should not be changed and proposals from the GOP-dominated legislature this year would hurt minority representation.

"It really is sad to see the Texas Legislature so divided and at the same time, we felt validated because we accomplished what we set out to do," Democrat Sen. Judith Zaffirini said to CNN.com.

According to MSNBC.com, Democrats have placed the blame on U.S. House Majority Leader Tom DeLay for orchestrating the redistricting endeavor.

This political face-off began in May when a redistricting bill was to be put forth for a vote by Republicans in the state House. With no chance of voting the bill down, Democrats walked out. This parliamentary elusive tactic is effective because a small number of lawmakers can shut down the legislative process simply by absence, due to the state constitution requiring three-fourths of members to be present in the House or Senate for the chamber to do business. On May 12 when Republicans planned to vote on the redistricting bill, 55 Democratic House members disappeared from Austin.

Upon finding that the Democrats had disappeared, state troopers and Texas Rangers were sent out after them. Most of the missing Democrats turned up in Ardmore, Okla., at a Holiday Inn. In order to kill the redistricting effort, the majority of those members stayed away until after the deadline for introducing new legislation in the regular session had passed.

Perry then called a 30-day special session in late June intended solely for the redistricting effort and a new map was approved in that session by the House. But since chamber rule requires a three-fourths vote, Senate Democrats were able to keep redistricting off the agenda. In another strategic move, GOP Senate leaders decided to end the first special session early and immediately call a second special session in which the three-fourths rule was removed.

In a single summer, Texas had two lawmaker walkouts, closing down the legislature of the country's second most populous state. Some political scientists have said they've never seen the legislature so dramatically separated and that the altercation could cause permanent damage. According to MSNBC.com, John R. Alford, a political scientist at Rice University in Houston, said "It's not in the Texas political lexicon to say, 'We were wrong.' Here, you fight to the death."

Americans skeptical of economic recovery reports

By DAVID LAROSS
Senior Writer

By the technical definition of the term, the United States has been in an economic recovery for almost two years. Gross domestic product is up, the stock market has risen 25 percent as measured by the Dow Jones average in the past six months alone, and manufacturing production is not only increasing, but accelerating.

But the technical signs of economic growth are, so far, not extending to actual employment; whether most Americans are actually feeling the results of growth is another question altogether. Wages are slowly dropping. Nine million workers are classified as unemployed. According to the New York Times, the economy has lost a net total of 2.7 million jobs in the last three years—with a full million of those losses coming after sustained growth began in November 2001.

"[Increased production] is good news for the economy as a whole, as it currently appears as if we can continue to expect further improvements in months to come," said Drew Matus, an economist at Lehman Brothers, to Reuters. "Unfortunately, this is likely to do little for the labor situation in this sector."

A high-level post in the Department of Commerce responsible for supporting "the needs of manufacturers." He noted no specific plans or policies that the new position would be responsible for performing. With or without a new shepherd, the unemployment situation is showing relative improvement. Layoffs for the first eight months of the year have dropped 15 percent from 2002, although the continued existence of layoffs remains a bad sign for workers. Recent inventory figures have hinted at potential advancement there, however. According to the Associated Press, stocks of manufactured goods are low enough that a noticeable increase in demand will require companies to step up production.

"Despite the recovery's better performance, it has yet to become self-sustaining. Growth remains dependent on massive monetary and fiscal stimulus."

—Mark Zandi, economist

Demand is one consistently good part of the current economy. Consumer spending is high, has increased in recent weeks, and will almost certainly go higher as December approaches. It may be tempered by increasingly poor individual credit situations linked consequently to unemployment.

"Despite the welcome positive signs, consumer credit quality remains pressured," said the firm of Fitch Ratings said in a report released on Friday, according to Reuters. "Bankruptcies remain at elevated levels, while late-stage delinquencies are well above [last year's] levels."

According to Mark Zandi, Chief Economist for research firm Economy.com, industry is relying too much on high-spending to stay profitable.

"Despite the recovery's better performance, it has yet to become self-sustaining. Growth remains dependent on massive monetary and fiscal stimulus," he told ABC.

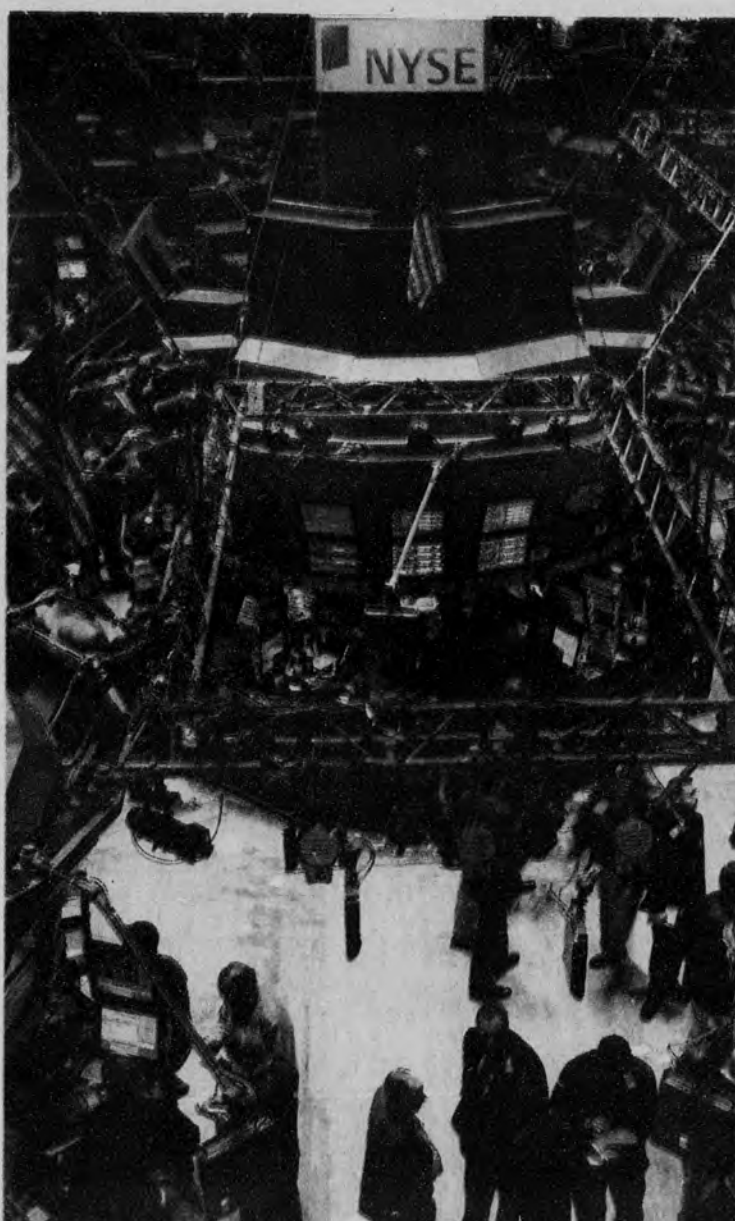

The alternative to consumer spending is capital investment—money loaned directly to companies which they use to significantly increase production capacity. According to the Associated Press, an infusion of capital spending will be a decisive step towards making a recovery self-sustaining, as well as making it possible for companies to begin hiring with force. It can only help that average profits are up, giving companies more room to borrow funds. This September will test that trend; it is the traditional time for companies to issue warnings of lower-than-expected profits.

"I don't sense many companies will be warning that earnings will be below forecasts. Quite to the contrary," said investment strategist Hugh Johnson to Fox News.

The future of the economy is unpredictable as always, but the stock market, traditionally a leading indicator of economic growth, was still rising at press time—early in what is usually a slow month, even during a bull market.

"This is impressive, but the caveat is that this is the day after a holiday and not many people are in," said market analyst Peter Green to CNN. "I think you need to see a few more days of this to determine whether today is a head fake or not."

Essentially, that is the state of the economy as well, and has been for more than a year. Until steady growth extends beyond profit statements and the stock market, an across-the-board recovery will remain uncertain, but still more likely than not.

Reports from economists and positive numbers from the stock market point to economic recovery. Despite reports Americans remain concerned with few tangible results of recovery.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

September 5, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 1

Inside Sports:

Alumni complete coast-to-coast run over the summer.

See page B5

Football wins home opener against Duquesne

Defense forces four turnovers as Bison start season with 28-21 victory

By JOSH HERWITT
Staff Writer

With first-year head coach Tom Landis at the helm for the Bucknell 2003 football season, the Bison opened up with a solid 28-21 win against Duquesne last Saturday night in front of 5,762 spectators at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

With multiple changes in the Bison game plan taking place in the off-season, the game showcased quarterback Daris Wilson '05 leading Landis' new spread option offensive attack while rushing for 62 yards on 21 carries and passing for 61 yards and one touchdown to leading receiver Albert Marquardt '04.

Complementing Wilson's offensive performance was tailback Blamah Sornor '06, who rushed for a career-high 147 yards and a touchdown. Sornor was named this week's Patriot League offensive player of the week for his efforts.

With the Bison rushing attack of Wilson, Sornor, and Raphael

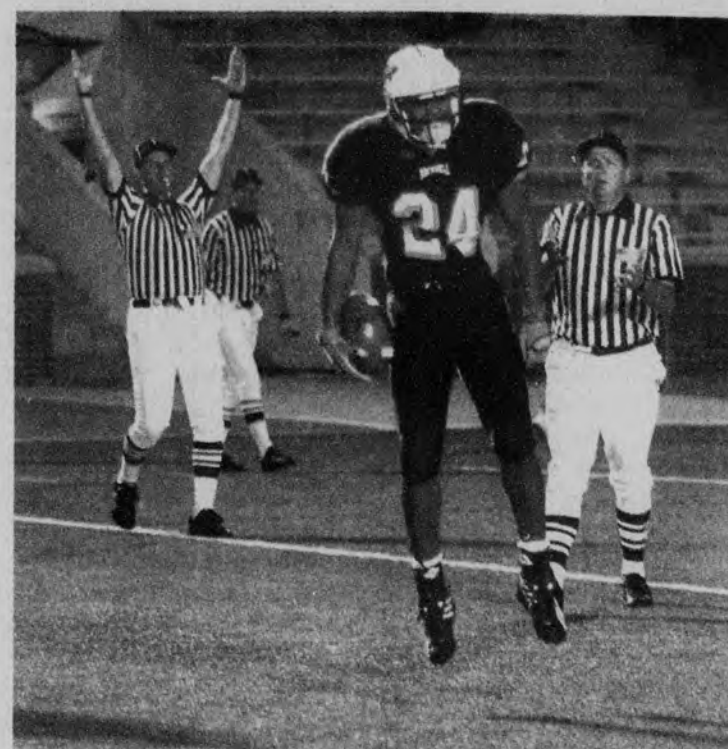

Darrington '05 doing most of the offensive damage with 288 yards Saturday night, Bucknell was able to control the tempo of the game.

Placekicker Ryan Korn '07 also contributed to the offensive production, hitting two field goals from 22 and 39 yards, respectively.

On the other side of ball, the Bison defense, with the help of cornerback Joe Glenn '05, was able to slow down the Dukes' passing attack with timely, pesky defense.

Glenn, who recovered a critical fumble late in the game on fourth down and 3 on the Bison's 10-yard line, also intercepted three passes from Duquesne quarterback Niel Loebig.

Loebig had a strong passing performance, completing 26-50 for 344 yards and two touchdowns, despite throwing three costly interceptions to Glenn. Glenn's stellar defensive play earned him Patriot League defensive player of the week honors.

Raphael Darrington '05 celebrates after scoring the go-ahead touchdown in the fourth quarter. The Bison won 27-21.

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian
It was the Bison's first game under new head coach Tim Landis.

With new offensive and defensive systems operating this season, the Bison played an almost flawless game, committing no turnovers and only three penalties. The victory over Duquesne capped Bucknell's fifteenth straight non-conference victory at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium, dating back to 1996, and pushed the team's all-time season opener record to an impressive 82-35-1.

The Bison will hit the road this week to play at Delaware State in another non-conference contest Saturday. Kickoff is at 1 p.m.

Field hockey defeats Siena 1-0, starts season 1-0

Bison outshoot Siena 27-7 in the first game of a promising season

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell field hockey team opened up its season with a 1-0 shutout of Siena on Saturday. The Bison heavily out-gunned their opponent, firing off 27 shots on goal while the Saints only managed seven.

The win was the first step in what the team hopes will be a promising drive for its first Patriot League crown.

Co-captain Kate Ruda '04 scored the solo goal for the Orange and Blue, an unassisted shot 18 minutes, 7 seconds into the first period. Despite having only one goal to show for it, Bucknell's offense was at the throat of its opponent n't finish on our shots.

all afternoon, while the Between the weather and defense kept Siena's attack under a tight rein through the bulk of the game.

"The score wasn't a good indication of the pace that Bucknell set," co-captain Lindsey Gentel '04 said.

"Unfortunately, we just couldn't finish on our shots. Between the weather and defense kept Siena's attack under a tight rein through the bulk of the game."

"Their true character was revealed and we expect that type of fight to be evident every day we step on the field."

—Heather Lewis, Head Coach

three shots and Cara Turner '05 and Anne Lutz '07 with one shot each.

Only Ruda, a 2002 All-Patriot League defender, managed to capitalize on one of the shots.

The goal was the only scoring the Bison would need to back their stellar defensive effort. Gentel and Stephanie Cabral '05 contributed huge defensive saves, and Liz Jordan '06 had a sparkling outing in the goal with a four-save shutout, including three saves in the second half to hold the Saints at bay.

Jordan takes over in the goal this season after the graduation of All-League mainstay Sonja Wettergreen, and appeared up to the task on Saturday.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Stephanie Cabral '05 drives between a pair of Siena players on Saturday. Cabral contributed to the strong defensive effort.

"I would expect [Jordan] to perform that way all season long," Head Coach Heather Lewis said. "Anytime you can keep a team scoreless, then you've done your job defensively and Liz will be the

See F-HOCK, page B5

GREAT SEASON, GREAT FINISH

The Bison baseball team brought home the Patriot League hardware after ousting Navy in a dramatic three-game series, then hit the road to Austin, Texas, where they represented Bucknell in the NCAA Regional Tournament.

See BASE, page B4

Bison capture gold

Bucknell women's crew earns 2nd place overall Dad Vail regatta

By BRENT BUTLER
Sports Editor

This past spring the Women's Varsity Crew finished their season with an amazing finish on the Schuylkill River in Philadelphia, Pa.

The team finished second out of a field of 111 institutions from throughout the United States and Canada. By finishing second overall, the women accomplished a feat that had never been done in the University's history.

"We have had four years of consistent and unprecedented improvement. Each year we have been able to bring home more medals than the previous year," Head Coach Steve Kish said.

With over 20,000 fans, 500 boats and 3,300 athletes, the Dad Vail regatta is the largest intercollegiate regatta of the year.

The team was led by gold medal performances in the

See CREW, page B5

Courtesy of Women's Crew
Women's varsity lightweight eight practicing on the Susquehanna river.

FEATURES

Lewisburg Freez in Review

Features Editor Ashley Maliken samples some of Lewisburg's finest ice cream and shares her opinion on the Freez's tasty treats.

See page B7

Jason Mraz gets a taste of fame

"The Remedy" artist makes it to the big time after opening for the Dave Matthews Band.

See page B8

MUSIC

FEATURES

Abroad in England

Rachel Gold '04 experiences the night life, culture and academics of Bath, England, and vows to return once again.

See page B6

Sports

Men's soccer suffers 1-0 loss

Defense holds strong, but Hartwick nets goal with eight minutes left

By PAT EVANS
Sports Editor

The Bison men's soccer team dropped its opening game of the season in an aggressive defensive battle against visiting Hartwick 1-0.

but we played much better in the second half as we got used to it." Despite the disadvantage, the Bison held off the opposing attack until Hartwick forward Derek Krasnicki crossed a ball that found the foot of Greg Victor, who hit the back of the outcome of the game, which was not the intention of the rule." The Orange and Blue came out of halftime looking to end the stalemate, taking several shots in the first 15 minutes of the frame. But it

Brian King '04. Both players have made an impact since they first walked on the field and now as leaders will look to keep the defense just as stingy while hopefully inspiring other areas of the team.

"Michael and Brian do a great job in the back," Nash said. "We expect them to play well every game and they do. Now, as the foundations of the team, it's their job to help get the offense going."

Offensively, the Bison return Chris Beekman '04, Patrick Glennon '04, Scott Viscic '06, Eric Brunton '06 and Hemmert who will all have to step up to resolve the biggest question coming into this season: who is going to score the goals?

"The offense is something we're focusing on improving," Nash said. "We need more energy and intensity if we're going to compete with the teams on our schedule this year."

The schedule this year boasts five different teams who enter the year with their names among the national preseason rankings. Perennial powerhouse Maryland, who finished third in the country last year, along with American, Holy Cross, Lehigh and Loyola Marymount, who were all in the 2002 NCAA Championship Tournament, will all be major tests for the Bison.

"Playing a tough schedule like we are is going to help us out a lot when we get to the Patriot League games at the end of the season," Lookingland said. "I expect us to be on top of the League because I don't think other teams will be as well prepared as we will be at that point."

The polls predict Bucknell to finish fourth in the Patriot League; a mark that would better last year's finish and would put the team in the playoffs if it were achieved. But the Bison have their eyes set on a League Championship like they do every season and looking too far down the road would be a mistake. "We're just going to do our best everyday and hopefully eventually compete for the championship," Nash said. "I tell our guys that we have the talent, but if we don't tap into our potential then we won't get it done."

Jen Marsh agreed that the one-point loss was still lingering in their minds. "I think that alone will be a huge motivator to work hard," Marsh said. "We had a great team last year and have lost a lot of great athletes, but with all the talent that our freshmen have, I think that we have the potential to be even better. It's still early to really see how the team will develop, but given that the positive attitudes and hard work continues, the team will be awesome."

Cross country teams are ready for season's start

Women look to avenge one-point PL loss; men set for improvement

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The men's and women's cross country teams kick off their seasons this weekend at the University of Detroit Invitational. Both teams are looking to start the fall campaign well.

The men will be led by an assortment of upperclassmen and fifth-year student-athletes. Greg Costello '03 and Jesse Graylock '03 both return for graduate work with eligibility left from medical redshirts. In 2001, Costello led the team with his appearance at the NCAA meet. Battling back from a femoral stress fracture, Costello looks poised to have another outstanding fall. Stephen Schaefer '04, Aaron Hanlon '04 and Kevin Walsh '04, along with Dan Lounsbury '05 and Doug Crevling '05, all had large breakthroughs in the spring and will be counted on for their impact and their leadership. Nick Moussetis '04, Sean McCarthy '04, Wes Reinhardt '04, Kevin Fortkiewicz '06 and Billy Duffy '06 also look to be threats.

"After last year's upsetting season, I think a lot of people have bounced back really well and are here to play," Moussetis said. "This is the most excited team I've seen over my three years here and I am excited to see the positive energy used to improve our practice and meet times. It will be key for everyone to look to be positive and keep each other focused."

"It seems as if everyone has done their work over summer," Costello said. "This year we hope to be a little more consistent. Last year had its ups and definitely its downs. This year we are going to try to level it out and shoot for a solid season. Our initial goals are stay healthy through the toughest part of the season, and from there, we hope to make a large impact at Patriots."

"The men really reported in good shape and healthy," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "We're going to take our time this year as far as intense workouts go. I want this team really hungry by the time November hits when we run our championship meets." With the Naval Academy recently getting the boot from the Heptagonal (which consisted of Navy and the rest of the Ivy League schools), the Patriot League looks to be considerably tougher this fall. What was once basically a duel meet between Army and Bucknell has turned into an intense battle with the additions of American University and Navy.

"The league will be tougher than ever," Donner said. "Our men will be a darkhorse to win, but that's the way we like it. A top five to six (placing) in the regional would be a nice improvement."

The women's team looks to be in a rebuilding year. Last year's "rebuilding year" resulted in only a one-point loss to American at the league meet and a sixth place finish in the region.

Slightly disappointed in some early season workouts, Donner remains optimistic that a number of women will step up this year.

"Our women are not quite as prepared as we wanted, however it's a long year and it will not take long to have them really ready," Donner said. "Our women should be in contention to win the league, however American, Army and Navy will be good. We would love to finish top five in the region since we were sixth last year."

Overall the women's team is young, but looks for contributors from all classes. Jen Marsh '04, Jen Marsh '05, Katie Pfeifer '05, Rachel Tutmaher '06, Alison Cole '06, Jamie Gow '06, Julie Jakoboski '06 and Kayla Halloran '06 all look to make large impacts. Cole, Gow, Halloran and Pfeifer will be hoping to earn All-League honors again. Two new members of the squad that Donner is hoping will make their presence known are Leanna Nastase '07 and Jenny Stevens '07.

"After losing to American by one point last year, our team is really focusing on team unity," Malcolm said. "Running together and working as a pack will be the key to our success this season. We have a lot of girls who can step up and make that one point difference, but it is really our team work that is going to get us the Patriot League Championship this year."

Jen Marsh agreed that the one-point loss was still lingering in their minds.

"I think that alone will be a huge motivator to work hard," Marsh said. "We had a great team last year and have lost a lot of great athletes, but with all the talent that our freshmen have, I think that we have the potential to be even better. It's still early to really see how the team will develop, but given that the positive attitudes and hard work continues, the team will be awesome."

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Brian King '04 drives the ball down the field against Hartwick last weekend. The Bison defense held strong though most of the game, but the offense couldn't net a goal as the team fell 1-0.

The Orange and Blue's defense withstood intense pressure the entire game, including during the final 30 minutes of the contest when a red card forced the Bison to play a man down, but one mistake with eight minutes left led to a Hartwick goal and the eventual loss.

The first half featured two defenses that prevented either offense from taking control, forcing most of the play to be in the midfield. It was not until 12 minutes into the contest that the first shot was taken when Bison forward Scott Viscic '06 almost put one in past the Hartwick keeper.

The back and forth nature continued through the first 45 minutes which ended in a 0-0 tie with both squads taking only two shots.

"For the most part I thought our defense played well," co-captain Michael Lookingland '05 said. "It took us awhile to adjust to the pressure because it was our first game, was then that the momentum quickly shifted Hartwick's way when last year's leading scorer for the Bison, Jonathan Hemmert '05, was issued a yellow card for a foul followed by a red card for profanity, resulting in an auto-net at 81:09. "Our defense is one of our strongest areas and they fought off a lot of pressure for a long time," Nash said. "Unfortunately all it took was one mistake to cost us the game."

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
A Bison player kicks the ball around the opponent. The game was scoreless until 81:09.

matic ejection from the game. "The NCAA is making a very conscious effort to crack down on the use of profanity on the field," Head Coach Brendan Nash said. "Unfortunately in this case, the penalty influenced the Last year the Bison defense was ranked fifth in the nation in goals against average, and the team set a school record with 10 shutouts on the season. Returning to anchor the backfield responsible for that effort are co-captains Lookingland and on our side taking a lot of shots on goal we didn't let up," Findlay said. A productive off-season and pre-season clearly helped the young team mature into where it wanted to be starting the season. Findlay had her plan worked out for how to get the team to be more competitive and now it seems that with execution of that strategy this could be the year that the Bison contend for the League title.

"All around the opener was more positive than negative," she said. "We started the preseason with the mindset that we defense together, and League that you never know who's going to win it, so we're just going to take it game by game and focus on one after the other," Findlay said. "Hopefully we'll be where we expect to be at the end, which is at the top."

Women's soccer scrapes out 1-0 win over Towson

By PAT EVANS
Sports Editor

The women's soccer team opened the 2003 season with a thrilling 1-0 win at Towson on Sunday Aug. 31st. With five minutes left to play the Bison had nothing to show for their domination of the game until Meghan Ferris '06 stormed the box and headed Ashley Dincher's '05 corner kick into the back of the net for the win.

"We had been putting in dangerous corners all game long," Dincher said. "Meghan came through really strong and pushed through the entire defense. All of our players did a good job of marking up the goalie and the defense."

The Bison outshot the Tigers 13-5 and had six corner kicks while Towson had none. Still, as the clock ticked down to the final minutes, the Orange and Blue had to be wondering if they would go home with the win they deserved.

"The winning shot was actually set up by Meghan Chipko '05 who brought the ball all the way down to Towson's end line and forced the corner," head coach Chrissy Findlay said. "Dincher had been putting the ball right where we wanted it all game and we had a feeling we would capitalize on one of them."

Ferris is dominant in the box in the air, she's very resilient and she just got in their and did a great job."

After a rocky 2002 season that featured a young group of players, winning the opening game this year was critical for the Bison's momentum beginning the season. The team held off a couple of Towson spurts late in the game, showing that the Bison have come a long way since last year.

"It was a huge win for our confidence and mentality. We just kept battling and never gave up. Even through points where they were down have to get the back four have been pretty solid." One of the reasons for this is Abbey Seaboyer '05 who is a captain of the team for the second year in a row. Seaboyer will look to make the Bison backfield one of the strongest in the conference while keeping the whole team focused and together. "Abbey has been captain for two years. She's been a strong leader since she walked into the program. She's never let us down on or off the field," Findlay said.

The defense will be trying to get the ball to Chipko, last year's leading scorer, who returns on offense. Also looking to put the ball in the net will be Dincher and a quick front line that includes Kerry Fitz-Patrick '06, Michelle Santonacita '05, Allison Cooper '05 and Megan Farrell, who is coming back this season after suffering a foot injury that sidelined her.

This year's League is up for grabs and the Bison feel that if they can put the pieces together for their upcoming Patriot League games that they have as good a chance as any to take the title. "There is so much parity in our League that you never know who's going to win it, so we're just going to take it game by game and focus on one after the other," Findlay said. "Hopefully we'll be where we expect to be at the end, which is at the top."

Write for Sports.

We're the shizzle dizzle.

E-mail: Cecily (ccairns) or Brent (bbutler)

Sports

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

Bleeding Hart in St. Louis? No way—Bo hasn't missed a beat

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

It was a little over four years ago, during the 1999 amateur draft, that major-league baseball's 30 franchises collectively found 1,001 reasons not to stake a claim on Gonzaga University's hypersocially wired, overachieving shortstop. That is to say, at least, that the brass from around the league could think of 1,001 players who had greater upside, who were a better patch for organizational deficiencies, who—for one reason or another—were simply more impressive than Bo Hart.

Hart remained unclaimed property until the 33rd round, when the St. Louis Cardinals—a team with a history of pulling gems off the clearance rack—scooped him up with the draft's 1,002nd pick.

He'd sign with the organization in 1999, receiving on his end of the deal a pittance of cash and, far more importantly, the same Holy Grail afforded to the guys taken in the first round—the chance to play baseball for a living.

And that was opportunity enough for Bo. He spent the ensuing five seasons giving the Cardinals organization 1,001 reasons to be glad they gave him that chance.

That includes, of course, his auspicious entrance into the major-league scene.

Starting on June 19 of this summer, the storyline has been textbook: a team befuddled by the injury bug finds itself in trouble amidst a playoff race, and is forced, in a panic-stricken effort to replenish the obtrusive void at second base, to scour the mystic land of AAA-ball, where they find a bright-eyed 26-year-old career minor-leaguer.

He's not very big, or very powerful, or very highly touted. But he's a scrapper and an over-achiever and a solid fielder, and besides, he's the best thing they can come up with.

So they throw him and his .255 lifetime batting average on a red-eye flight, sew his name on a jersey and plopp him onto the field that night, only to see him smack out a triple and a double in his first three at-bats.

Fans go berserk. Teammates are won over instantly. Opponents are astounded. Sportswriters start using the words "phenom," "meteoric" and "plucky." Cardboard signs with phrases like "You gotta have Hart" start flashing around the stands, and SportsCenter just can't stop showing his highlights.

Great guy, great name, great story. That, along with a .368 average and .916 OPS at the All-Star break, was reason enough to be impressed by Hart.

Now we're two-and-a-half months removed from the beginning of that fairy tale, and some people are starting to adopt a different stance on the Cardinals' mid-season hero.

As these stories tend to go, reality has caught up as of late. The buzz has quieted, the lime-light has dimmed. His average has settled at a far more earthly .274, while Miguel Cairo and Fernando Vina have rolled off the DL and back into the lineup, jockeying Hart to the St. Louis bench.

The Bo Hart comet, FOX Saturday Baseball declared, has flickered out.

Or has it? Perhaps anyone who sees it that way never really understood what made—and still makes—

Hart so fantastic in the first place.

The "Bo Hart comet" is on the same galactic path it was on two months ago, and that is indelibly obvious to anyone whose visionary scope extends beyond the boxscore.

The truth is, there are still plenty of great reasons to stand in awe of Hart. One-thousand reasons, even.

Watch him during batting practice. Watch him in the on-deck circle. Watch him in the field, where his glove still devours potential base hits like a cichlid in a tank of hatchling minnows, or on the basepaths, where he still thunders from bag to bag as though his mortal existence depends on his reaching safely.

Whatever his role, he's operating on all available voltage every single game—his fervor is such that when he's in uniform, the general atmosphere feels as though the Energizer factory exploded on the field. Watching him is aerobic exercise.

That's Bo Hart. That was Hart when he was batting .500; that's Hart now. And even though most of us never noticed, that was Hart in Memphis, in New Haven, in Potomac, in short-season New Jersey.

Flickering out? No. Not this one.

There's still a lot to like. Every day, even when he goes 0-4 with a pair of whiffs, Hart does something to merit appreciation, something to give anyone watching a reason to smile. That doesn't change.

Maybe that's the most important of all the 1,001 great things about Bo.

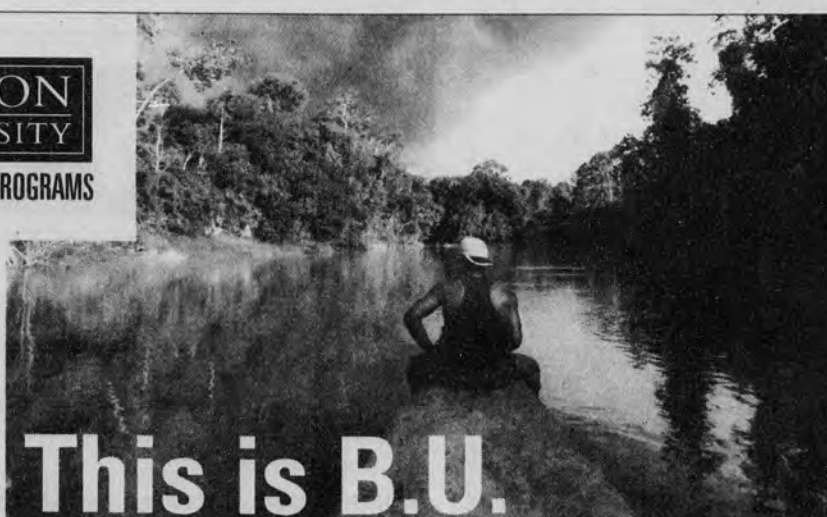

Illustration by Cecily Cairns

Editors NFL Picks Week One	Brent Sports Editor	Cecily Sports Editor	Adam Photo Editor	Michelle Assoc. Editor	Peter E.I.C.
Baltimore at Pittsburgh
Minnesota at Green Bay
Chicago at San Francisco
Oakland at Tennessee
Tampa Bay at Philadelphia
Denver at Cincinnati

Photos courtesy of respective NFL owners

BOSTON
UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

AUSTRALIA
BELIZE
CHINA
ECUADOR ENGLAND FRANCE
GERMANY
IRELAND
ISRAEL
ITALY
NEW ZEALAND
NIGER
RUSSIA
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
U.S.A.

This is B.U.
This could be you.
Come find out how.

Come meet Chris Russell from Boston University International Programs

Tuesday, September 9, 11 a.m. – 1 p.m.
Langone Center

INTERNSHIPS
LANGUAGE
LIBERAL ARTS SCIENCE

www.bu.edu/abroad

BOSTON
UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS
222 Bay State Road
Boston, MA 02215
617-353-9888
Fax: 617-353-5402
Financial aid is available

Come burninate the countryside with us.

Write for Sports.

email ccairns@ or bbutler@

The Junge Watch

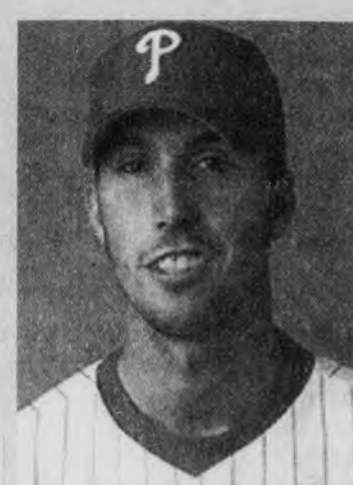

Following Bucknell's major-league alumnus

Eric Junge spent the beginning of the 2003 season bouncing between the Phillies and the AAA Scranton Wilkes-Barre Red Barons, continuing to put up impressive numbers until his season was ended by two injuries. Junge underwent surgery in June to repair a torn labrum and a displaced ligament in his thumb.

Before the injuries, Junge made eight starts for the Red Barons, going 1-0 with a 3.06 ERA and 42 strikeouts. He also made three trips to the Philadelphia roster, appearing in six games in relief for the Phillies with a 3.52 ERA.

Junge's rehab continues through December. "I should be ready for spring training in February, if all goes as planned," Junge said.

2003 statistics (Philadelphia)
W L ERA G GS IP H SO BB
0 0 3.52 6 0 7.2 5 5 1
2003 statistics (Scranton/Wilkes-Barre)
W L ERA G GS IP H SO BB
1 0 3.06 10 8 47 38 42 16

Courtesy of Phillies Archive

—Compiled by Cecily Cairns, Sports Editor

Sports

Baseball closes out season in memorable fashion

BASE from page B1

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

After generating positive headlines all spring, the Bucknell baseball team continued to be newsworthy well after The Bucknellian published its last spring issue. On May 11, the Bison churned over Navy twice en route to the third Patriot League Championship in the program's history, earning an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

The team faced off against Navy in a best-of-three championship series at Depew Field. After an uncharacteristic 16-3 loss on May 10, the Bison found themselves in a 0-1 hole against the Midshipmen, whom they had defeated three out of four times during the regular season.

Unfazed by the do-or-die implications of the next two contests, the Bison wasted no time in turning an unfavorable position into an opportunity to come through in the clutch. The Orange and Blue sent 30 runners across the plate in a double-header the following day, handing Navy back-to-back drubbings of 10-4 and 20-9.

"The Patriot League tournament win was a great accomplishment for our team," Head Coach Gene Depew, who was named the league's Coach of the Year, said. "We were beaten badly in game one on Saturday and were facing elimination in game two. It was a great tribute to the character and positive attitude of our team."

Looking to bounce back from the previous day's loss, the Bison struck first in the second game of the series, scoring on a two-out triple by Pete Wolf '04 and an RBI single by Brian Hirschberg '04 in the first.

Navy struck back with a pair of runs in the second, a run in the fourth and one in the fifth, and rolled into the eighth inning with a 4-2 lead over Bucknell. After a pair of groundouts in the inning, the Bison were only four outs away from elimination.

But what started as a dire situation for the Orange and Blue quickly turned into an offensive explosion that didn't slow down for the rest of the day.

After a pair of Navy errors put Ben Stoll '04 on third, Hirschberg reached on another error that allowed Stoll to score. After consecutive singles by Ben Krentzman '03, Brian Day '05 and Phil Bunting '05 put two more runs on the board, B.J. Batterson '03 smacked a bases-loaded, three-run triple to tear the game wide open. Stoll, who led off the inning, added an insurance run with an RBI single Freshman All-American Kyle Walter '06 scored Wolf and Moss in the first inning, and a double and single by Stoll and Moss, respectively, put two more runs on the board in the second inning.

The Bison piled on another four runs in the next frame, forcing Navy to go through four pitchers before the end of the third inning. The lively Bucknell offense continued to harass the Midshipmen hurlers, driving in solid innings to earn the win, and Cory Nadler '04 pitched 1.1 perfect innings before turning the ball over to Patriot League Rookie of the Year and Freshman All-American Phil Futrick '06, who nailed down the last out to seal the win and the league title for the Bison.

Futrick didn't doubt his team's ability to come up with the clutch victories. "After losing the first game to of Arkansas, a run for its money with a valiant late-inning rally, but ultimately lost the game 10-7.

In the third inning, Hirschberg pulled the Bison to within a run of the Razorbacks with a solo homer to center, but Arkansas scored five unanswered runs to make it 8-2 heading to the bottom of the eighth.

The Bison unleashed another huge inning in the bottom of the frame, beginning when Walter singled and scored on a Krentzman double. Bunting then drilled his second hit of the day, a two-run triple to left center field, and Stoll and Wolf each came up with an RBI single.

The five-run inning tightened the score to 8-7, but the Razorbacks edged away in the top of the ninth to steal the 10-7 victory, eliminating the Bison from the NCAA Tournament.

In spite of the two losses, the opportunity to represent the University in the tournament provided an electrifying experience for the team.

"The whole experience was great despite losing our first two games," Futrick said. "The atmosphere at the stadium the night we played Texas was amazing."

Texas native Bunting, who collected three hits during the tournament, was especially thrilled by the face-off in his home state.

"Being from Texas, it was a dream come true to go down and play the Longhorns," Bunting said.

Depew was pleased with his team's showing.

"Our trip to Texas was a very good experience. We were disappointed to not get a win, but we played very competitively against Texas and Arkansas," Depew said. "The facilities were great and the 7,000 Texas fans were enthusiastic and not derogatory to us. We were within a hit of beating Arkansas, and I think we represented the Patriot League and Bucknell very well."

The Bison finished the season with a 27-16 record—a far cry from the 15-35 mark they posted in 2002—and they hope to build on that tremendous success next spring and earn another showing at Regionals.

"Hopefully we'll be able to make it back again this year," Futrick said, "But we know the work that it's going to take."

Bucknell rebounded quickly to give its next opponent, the University

The newly crowned Patriot League Champions celebrate after sealing the victory in the third game of a drama-packed series with Navy. After a disappointing 16-3 loss in the series' first game on May 10, the Bison plated 30 runs in the doubleheader on May 11.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications to give the Bison a 9-4 lead.

Wolf finished off the game's scoring with a solo home run in the ninth, and Matt Daley '04 pitched his fourth shutout inning of the game to stifle Navy in the bottom of the ninth. The homer capped off a 3-for-5 day for Wolf, who batted .571 with four RBIs over the three-game series.

"Wolf getting hot when he did definitely helped him lead the pack right into Austin," Moss said.

The 10-4 runaway Bucknell victory forced a third game to decide the dramatic championship, and the Bucknell turned the bottom half of the twinbill into an absolute romp.

A two-out double by eventual two runs in the fourth, two more in the fifth, another staggering seven in the sixth and one in the seventh.

Starting in the eighth inning of the day's first game, the Bison scored at least one run in nine consecutive innings, amassing 28 total runs on 29 hits in that span. Seven Bucknell batters collected three or more hits in the final game, including Day, whose four hits, five runs and four RBIs in the game contributed to his selection as the tournament MVP.

The 20 runs in the final game were more than enough to give the Bucknell pitching staff a comfortable lead. Patriot League Pitcher of the Year Kevin Miller '04 pitched 3.1

inches—to be running around on it after so much we all went through in this past year," Boynton said.

The new turf adds appeal to the season, but the team's demeanor is what leaves the players and coaches feeling optimistic about the games to come.

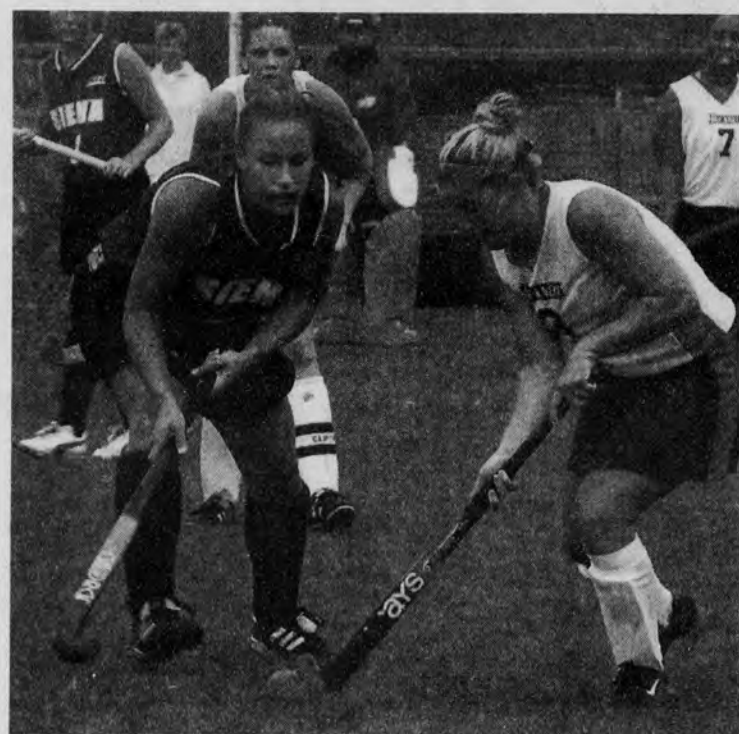

"While we only have two seniors, they are providing tremendous leadership and focus to this group," Lewis said. "In addition, the upperclassmen are setting the tone in regards to work ethic and expectation, and the first-year players have blended quite nicely with this veteran group. I enjoy the personality of this team and so far they've demonstrated their commitment to our season motto of 'team first.'"

Nilsen and Gentel are also optimistic about the character of their teammates.

"We are really blessed this year," Nilsen said. "We have a new assistant coach who is awesome, a brand new turf field and probably the two best captains (Ruda and Gentel) any team could ask for."

"The potential of our team is endless, and I fully believe that we are going to achieve the goals that we have set for ourselves," Gentel said. "I am really proud of every single one of my teammates."

The team will try to improve to 2-0 when they travel to face off against Patriot League rival Colgate on Saturday at 1 p.m.

Carli Cataldo '06 weaves past a Siena player on Saturday. The Bison, who have been temporarily fieldless, are now 1-0.

get a chance to practice on the new turf, an opportunity long-awaited by the Bison players.

"It was such a great feeling for us all—both the players as well as the Construction delays don't slow down gritty Bison

F-HOCK from page B1

anchor of that defense."

Jordan's teammates were also pleased with her stalwart effort in the goal.

"I was especially impressed with the way Liz played," Gentel said. "It was pretty obvious during pre-season that we had tremendous talent in the net this season, and she proved that during the Siena game."

"The team is still awaiting the completion of its new artificial turf facility, and has had to overcome the disadvantage of being bounced around from field to field during pre-season."

"We've been challenged quite a bit with our facility not being ready and having to travel so much for pre-season practices," Lewis said.

Despite the inconvenience, the challenge gave the players a chance to put their fortitude on display.

"I thought the team played hard and showed quite a bit of resolve when their backs were against the wall," Lewis said. "In essence, their true character was revealed early in the season and we, as coaches, expect that type of 'fight' to be evident every day we step on the field."

Gentel agrees that the adversity was not without benefit.

"The constant change of surface from grass to turf can be tough for any team,"

Alumni complete trek across nation

Scott Schon '00 and Dave Bronfenbrenner '00 finish coast-to-coast run

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Last spring, the Bucknellian reported on the tales of Dave Bronfenbrenner and Scott Schon's quest to run across America. Months after we last reported the logging of their 1,000th mile in Illinois, the duo from the class of 2000 has successfully crossed the remaining 2,600 miles and safely reached the beach of the Pacific Ocean.

On August 5, in Florence, Ore., Schon reported the final strides of the journey.

"We calmly jogged to the water, and despite its chilly temp (about 55 degrees F), we never broke stride. The goal had been reached, the dream fulfilled. We gave a huge smile to one another, hugged and called it a day. The shortest day of our trip (two miles) was the sweetest and the last."

From sea to shining sea, the pair certainly endured much while collecting a lifetime's worth of memories that began in Sea Bright, N. J., in late February.

However challenging, the goodwill of human nature seemed to prevail throughout. In addition to the countless hosts that took them into their homes for a home-cooked meal and a place to sleep, they encountered many who were all too happy to help.

For instance, while passing through Bethany, Mo., an employee from Taco Bell saw them passing by and called out to them to come inside and enjoy a meal on the Bell.

While in Wyoming at the Cowboy Café, they actually had to turn down an offer from an elderly couple to buy them a meal; someone else had already picked up the ticket.

One of their more chance encounters occurred on a well-deserved day off in Sisters, Ore. Their hosts for the night had offered the use of their golf clubs so the two could hit the links. At the course they were asked if they minded being paired with another set of golfers.

Unbeknownst to either party, the foursome shared a Bucknell connection. The other half was Bucknell's new offensive coordinator for the football team, Ian Shields, and his father.

While their good fortune and strong support held for much of the journey, there were a few problems. The rural areas and sparse populations of the West often resulted in having to sleep in fields, under picnic tables and in drainage pipes.

They also would sometimes have to cover more than 40 miles in a day for food and water.

A few hosts heard about the trip from stories reported by the evening news on television, while most came from the almost cult-like following that developed as a result of the hugely popular site www.runtheusa.com, maintained by David Ledgerwood '99 and his associates. The website provided pictures and a journal of daily updates.

Although the site attracted throngs of supporters, the promotion of the site on other running Web sites did provide for some unexpectedly harsh critics attacking the manner in which they were undertaking their journey. If they had listened to the call and expectations of society, the critics say, they would both probably still be working at the jobs they left in February for this odyssey.

Dave Bronfenbrenner and Scott Schon, both '00 graduates of Bucknell, documented their journey at runtheusa.com.

"The fact that someone would post an analysis of our run (good or bad) is flattering," Schon said, in response to the criticism. "When we left [New Jersey] in February, we never envisioned the kind of support and response that we've received. We do things our way, because this is our trip. Different strokes for different folks."

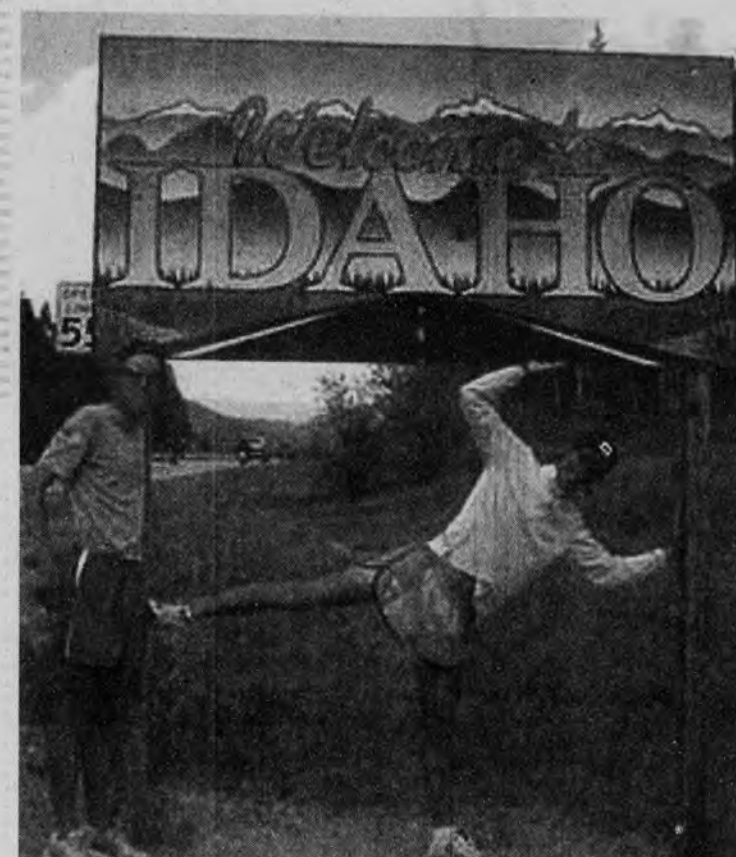

Doing it their way was what allowed the dream to become reality and is what will ultimately shape their memories, some of which proved how small the world is and how great the human spirit can be.

Schon sums it up best. "It was the best experience of my life and I encourage all of you to find your dreams and chase them," Schon said. "You'll never regret it."

Thanks to all of you who supported us in the endeavor, and thanks to all of you naysayers as well; having you made finishing all that much sweeter."

Dave Bronfenbrenner '00 takes a break in the cool waters of Jenny Lake, Wyo.

The duo hangs out on the border of Idaho, one of the many borders they crossed over the summer. The two ran from ocean to ocean with no support vehicle, covering up to 40 miles a day.

Courtesy of runtheusa.com

Women's crew finishes season ranked fourth in nation

CREW from page B1

Varsity Lightweight Eight and the Varsity Pair, and a sixth place finish in the Novice Eight. The novice openweight eight qualified for the grand final for the first time in the programs history.

With the lightweight eight's victory Bucknell captured its first ever Dad Vail gold medal in a varsity event. The Orange and Blue won their first medals at the Dad Vail regatta in 2000, and the team has continued at an unprecedented pace. Seven of Bucknell's eight varsity entries over the past four years have won medals.

Due to their victory at the Dad Vail regatta and their performance throughout the year, the varsity lightweight eight finished the season ranked fourth in the nation by USRowing and the Collegiate Rowing Coaches Association poll on May 15.

This is the highest ranking Bucknell women's crew has received in Bison history. Princeton, Radcliffe and Wisconsin were the only institutions ranked above Bucknell.

"After last year's finish, I think that our lightweight has a chance to be the best in the country this year," Kish said.

The women's varsity openweight pair also contributed to Bucknell's historic second place finish. Julie Engel '04 and Rebecca Newman '04 destroyed the competition with a time of 7:53.9, over ten seconds ahead of the second place Carnegie Mellon University.

The women's varsity crew is now preparing for the 2003-2004 season. Throughout the week the team has been holding try-outs for interested freshman and sophomores. Interested athletes should contact Steve Kish immediately in order to be part of a highly competitive and successful team.

"One of our overall goals is a team for this next year would be to win the Dad Vail team championship. Last year was very successful and this year could be even more," Kish said.

Rachel Trusheim '05 holding the trophy for 1st place in the varsity lightweight eight.

Women's varsity lightweight eight after winning the gold at the Dad Vail regatta. (From left to right) Coach Stephen Kish, Jill Harrington '04, Vi Ngo '04, Joan Wendler '04, Alexis Will '06, Kyra Harris '05, Rachel Trusheim '05, Lauren Ewald '05, Lauren Donnelly '05, and Kara Schroepfer '05.

Courtesy of Women's Crew

Grab a slab

Famous Hickory-Smoked BBQ Baby Back Ribs

At BJ'S we're famous for our own Hickory Smoked BBQ Baby Back Ribs & Chicken, and our Specially Seasoned Chicago Sirloin. For the really serious steak lover try one of our Sizzling Butcher Block Steaks. We also feature a wide selection of fresh seafood, salads, and sandwiches, served anytime. We're open late every night serving our full menu till closing.

Open: Sun - Thurs 11am - 1a
Fri - Sat 11am - 2am

374-9841 275-5110
SEELINGSGROVE, PA DANVILLE, PA

www.bjsribs.com • bjsribs@sunlink.net

Calendar

Football at Delaware State Dover, Del. Sat., Sept. 6 1:00 p.m.	Men's Soccer vs. Saint Peters Tue., Sept. 9 4:00 p.m.	Women's Soccer vs. Marist Sun., Sept. 7 1:00 p.m.	Men's and Women's Cross Country at University of Detroit Inv. Sat., Sept. 6 Detroit, Mich.	Volleyball at St. Francis (Pa.) Sat., Sept. 6 Loretto, Pa. 4:00 p.m.	Women's soccer vs. Cornell Wed., Sept. 10 4:30 p.m.	Field Hockey at Colgate Sat., Sept. 6 Hamilton, N.Y. 1:00 p.m.
---	---	---	--	---	---	---

FEATURES

Abroad perspective: Bath, England

By RACHEL GOLD
Senior Writer

Wide-eyed and clueless, I cautiously entered the office of my advisor, Associate Professor John Rickard, with my hands full of "study abroad" brochures. As the head of the English department at the University, Professor Rickard had one "stellar" English program in mind. He insisted that I look into the Advanced Studies in England (ASE) program, located an hour and a half outside of London in the picturesque city of Bath. After seeing how his face lit up when he mentioned the program, it became clear to me that this was the one he had in mind for me. He was convinced that ASE was a superior program that would offer me intensive literature classes in a beautiful, manageable city. He knew that after I had transferred to Bucknell from a large university, the comforts of a small, intimate academic atmosphere were something I desired while overseas.

Since I had been to Bath years before, I already knew it was a truly gorgeous city. I remembered that it offered a busy, varied atmosphere of a city without the overcrowding and chaos. It didn't take long before I realized that Professor Rickard was right, and that ASE was perfect for me. The program offers several study trips house, I became good friends with a student named Melissa, who goes to Hobart and William Smith Colleges. We immediately realized we had the same interests and were anxious to get acquainted with all that the British University offered. We were especially interested in the university's night life and were curious to discover where British students went to unwind, party and dance. The University of Bath was only a twenty-minute bus ride from where we lived, so on our first Friday night in Bath, we decided to check out the British night life.

As we entered "The Venue," the University of Bath's nightclub and bar, we initially felt right at home. The music blaring from the speakers was all too familiar, students were dancing onstage and on the dance floor while others were dancing on the speakers. I felt like I was still in Lewisburg at one of the University's fraternity parties.

Before long, however, Melissa and I realized that we stood out more than we would have liked. Looking around the bar, we realized that we were missing our low-cut shirts, bunny ears and fishnet stockings.

Unfortunately, we had missed the memo that The Venue at Bath University was hosting a huge Playboy Bunny and Hugh Hefner theme party

Courtesy of Rachel Gold

The Abbey is one of the main historic buildings that Rachel Gold '04 walked on her way to class. The Advanced Studies in England program is located an hour and a half outside London and offers intensive literature courses for students from around the world.

dents. Bath was a wonderful city to both study and party in because it was small enough that we'd always see familiar faces, yet big enough that we were constantly meeting new people as well.

Besides our exciting adventures discovering the night life, (after the Playboy bunny mixer there were toga parties, ghetto parties and dress-up parties), the program did an excellent job integrating us into the heart of Bath. After only a week, I truly felt like a resident and not like a tourist. Despite my complete lack of a sense of direction, I felt like I could navigate around the city easily.

Upon meeting my tutors, Oxford's title for teachers, I realized that I was going to have much independent work to do. In each class I was handed a laundry list of secondary reading sources. The tutors felt that it was imperative for us to have a solid, comprehensive knowledge of the time period, author and nature of the literature we were studying.

I fully enjoyed the books I read and my fascinating classes. I not only got to analyze and interpret the finest literature in the English language with extremely intelligent tutors, but I got to see where the authors got their inspiration for such eloquent and captivating stories. For my Medieval Literature: Romance to Realism class, we took a study trip to Glastonbury and Wells Cathedral. While we were there, my teacher read poetry to us from Arthurian romance novels while we climbed the hill to an ancient medieval tower. Seeing literature in action was not only rewarding but it allowed for a full understanding of the setting and mindset of the author as he wrote his romantic poetry.

Although I have never been a huge fan of Shakespeare, taking a Shakespeare in Performance class definitely held my attention. By the end of the semester, I had even developed an appreciation for some of his plays. As students in the class, we were given the opportunity to watch dramatic literature come to life. We visited the Royal Shakespeare Theater and the Swan Theater in Shakespeare's hometown of Stratford-upon-Avon, and saw four plays as well as a backstage tour.

The Dean of Students, Barbara White, managed to engage even the most conservative of students in our class on the 17th century study of Sin, Sex and Morality. As soon as Barbara opened her mouth she held our full attention. Her lessons included studying the harmful effects of drinking gin (as opposed to the accepted benefits of beer), prostitution, easy women, punishments for ill behavior, death penalty and the benefits of an active sex life.

With her enthusiasm and love for the material, there was never a dull moment. As a future English teacher, I learned from Barbara that the British educational system is far more liberal than the U.S. educational system. The British sense of humor is distinct and certainly has no limits. Barbara's sweet nature linked with her brutally candid sense of humor made every Sin, Sex and Morality discussion interesting and hilarious.

Perhaps my most eye-opening and memorable experience while abroad came from my traveling adventures. With classes Monday-Wednesday, there was plenty of time to explore England and Europe. I took weekend trips to Prague, London and the Cotswold Hills. I saw incredible landscapes and breathtakingly beautiful architecture and art.

On Spring Break, I was lucky enough to have two weeks to travel around Europe. Fortunately, my organized and adventurous best friend from high school was studying abroad in Paris, that same semester. She had the same week of break so we were able to explore Europe together. We started our travels in Vienna, then headed to gorgeous Italy. We ventured through Venice, Rome and Florence, and the second week I met up with my friends from ASE in Moria, Spain.

Upon my returning to the States, many people have asked, "Did studying abroad change you?" The people, places and things I valued before I left are still the same; there are just more people I love, more places to return to and many more articles of clothing, as well as fifteen rolls of film and lots of jewelry accumulated along the way. I do miss running around the Royal Crescent, listening to the water fall while looking over the Putney Bridge, watching the flowers bloom in the Royal Victoria Park and, of course, seeing gorgeous cities, countryside and buildings that even pictures can't describe. My memories of my semester in England will always be with me, and I know that I will return to Bath one day and experience the wonder again.

Courtesy of Rachel Gold

Gold visited Stonehenge both on a class trip and a tour of the English countryside with Zachary Drawbaugh '04. Stonehenge was just one of the enchanting places Gold saw while she was abroad.

Courtesy of Rachel Gold

The Roman Baths, for which Bath is named, are located in the center of town. Gold visited the baths on multiple occasions.

throughout the semester and keeps the classes small, a maximum of 12 people per class, with visiting tutors from Oxford University to teach in an intimate, intensive style.

Each semester, ASE has around sixty U.S. students who come from small, liberal arts colleges around the country. ASE students are first housed in beautiful flats and houses surrounding the city. Halfway through the semester, the program moved to University College, the oldest of the Oxford colleges, for a week of classes. Soon after moving into my for all of the University's athletes. As the evening progressed and the bunnies and Hugh Hefners became more and more intoxicated, they slowly stopped commenting on our lack of costume and "funny" accents. Even though Melissa and I felt overdressed for the occasion, we had a blast. Before long we had made friends with many British students and vowed that next weekend we would come fully prepared for the festivities.

In addition to the packed and lively bars and night clubs, the local pubs and dance clubs were also filled with university stu-

This is your brain on AOL Instant Messenger

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

For those of you who have only been at the University a short while, you may not fully grasp the extent to which we depend upon a certain online communication medium. AOL Instant Messenger (AIM), despite what the administration may tell you, is the true heart and soul of this university.

Upon it hinges the sanity and social skills of the majority of the student body. You may think this is an erroneous belief on my part and that only a sad few actually have an intense addiction, but rest assured that nearly all of us are affected. Wait until the first time the network goes down, and the tell-tale slamming of internet doors will reverberate down the hallway of your dorm. When that day comes, as it inevitably will, the world you've grown to love will crumble around you as the universe is thrown completely off-balance.

Without AIM and its collection of mood-depicting smiley faces, communication across the campus nearly ceases to exist. All the people skills we've spent our adolescent years cultivating wither away in moments, leaving us lost and confused. Because of AIM, walking down the hall to talk to a friend is unheard of, as a few simple key strokes will bring you to their virtual doorstep without the exertions of physical exertion. Friends across campus are entirely lost without AIM, because obviously no friendship is worth the trek from Larison to McDonnell. There are even documented cases of roommates, sitting within the walls of the same 11'x14' cell, preferring to use AIM instead of turning around and straining their precious vocal cords. And if that isn't enough to make you believe AIM has taken control of our minds, bodies and souls, there is more.

It is common knowledge among members of this generation that capital letters, full sentences and even full words are a complete faux-pas when virtually chatting with your friends. Yet allowing these poor grammar habits to seep into your verbal communications, when they actually take place, indicates a true addiction. "J/k", "lol" and

"brb" are not considered words in any language, and use of them only reiterates the strength AIM has over some. There are also the endless hours people spend perfecting their individual profiles, as if those 300 characters are a direct reflection of the person they believe themselves to be. Coloring must be just right, with the quotes incorporating the right amount of humor and creativity to show what a truly unique individual you are.

It's not simply the dependence upon AIM, or the infiltration of Internet slang into real life that reveals the extent of the problem. The effect AIM has upon people's emotions and personalities is another important issue to take into account. When returning to your computer after a few hours away, does your heart leap at the sight of a message someone has left for you? Or, in lieu of doing homework, do you find yourself turning into a stalker and religiously checking the away messages of your friends, loved ones and people whose real names you can't even remember? Stalking is illegal in all 50 states, and yet every day thousands of students here and across the country do just that, making sure they know the whereabouts of absolutely everyone on their buddy lists.

Stealing is another offense highly frowned upon by law-enforcement officials nationwide, yet AIM users are guilty of this crime as well, robbing others of clever away messages and pawn-ing them off as originating from their own ingenious minds.

While all of this may seem a little far-fetched, don't doubt that one day you will fall victim to the curse that is AIM. It's unavoidable for a college student, immersed in a world of AIM addicts. And while there are ways to avoid such this unlucky fate, such as disconnecting yourself from the network or locking yourself in the bowels of the library, these options yield similar antisocial behavior and are therefore even worse. The best way to fight AIM, aside from a costly 12-step program, is to keep alive the thrills of human conversation. Don't avoid your fellow students—embrace them and break the cycle of isolation that is the Internet.

FEATURES

Eric Graham-The Bucknellian

The Lewisburg Freeze is located on Route 15 next to the Citgo station. Many students frequent the Freeze for a refreshing late-summer treat.

Two thumbs and three pounds up

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

There are many reasons to be thrilled about attending school in Lewisburg, Pa. The sweet aroma of cow wafting from every farm in the Central Pennsylvania region is one, as is the periodic sighting of a horse and buggy rolling pleasantly along Rt. 45. Where else is an establishment like Mustang Sally's considered a fine gentlemen's club, or a Perkins a five-star restaurant? If these amenities simply aren't enough for you, there does exist a diamond in the rough, a place a cut above the rest, worthy of both our respect and frequent patronage. That place is the shack of frozen delights lovingly known as The Lewisburg Freeze.

If you have yet to make a journey to The Freeze, put on your walking shoes and head down 7th Street to Rt. 15. There, nestled cozily next to the Citgo and overlooking the majestic Beer Barn, exists a haven of ice cream treats worthy of even the most refined palates.

For your first journey, I recommend its namesake, for the Freeze's top-selling dairy delicacy has been appropriately dubbed a "Freeze." Reminiscent of a Dairy Queen Blizzard, yet far exceeding it in quality and quantity, a Freeze is a blend of a customer's choice of ice cream and topping. Ice cream flavors number in the 20s and toppings include exotic selections such as Hawaiian, chocolate-covered strawberries, and s'mores, as well as your favorite classic candy-bar flavors. Not only is the selection well above par but the prices are reasonable and the portions hearty. A small freeze costs just over $2.00 and literally explodes from the cup.

In the name of accurate reporting I recently made the trek to the Freeze, along with three of my closest confidants, to do a little taste-testing of my own. We each sampled a Freeze, selecting a variety of combinations to expand our sample and generate an accurate opinion of what the Freeze offers. The first selection was an exotic mix of coffee ice cream with Oreo cookie bits, which earned an A+ rating from Carrie Todd '06.

"It's like dipping Oreos in your morning java," said Todd, who decided that this was her absolute favorite Freeze combination.

The next sample was traditional vanilla ice cream mixed with the ever-exotic mint Oreos. This also earned an A+, excelling in flavor and crunch factor. Though the ice cream flavor of the day was mint, this taster decided to avoid overkill by sticking with vanilla. For my selection I opted for a personal favorite, vanilla ice cream with chocolate covered pretzels. With the sweetness and saltiness of the pretzels satisfying the entire tongue, there really is nothing like it out there. My only complaint was the pretzel size; a smaller piece of pretzel would prove easier to chew and succeed in spreading the deliciousness more adequately throughout the ice cream. Yet despite some difficulty in consumption, I still stand by this flavor as the best the Freeze has to offer.

The last flavor of the night, and the only one yielding any measure of disappointment, was vanilla ice cream with Reese's Pieces. Initially the taster, Lauren Amatrudo '06, was dissatisfied with her selection as the number of candy pieces seemed to be lacking. However, upon digging deeper, she discovered a hidden reservoir. Yet even with the candy to ice cream ratio being correct, the pieces did not offer the flavor and fell victim to a little spill as the heat did a number on the consistency of her ice cream.

A Freeze is a delicious treat, thoroughly enjoyed by all consumers. Yet while a Freeze is certainly the best option, it is not the only one. The Freeze offers a full range of sundaes, cone varieties and milkshake flavors to meet the needs of everyone's taste buds. However, there are a few things the Freeze could do to improve business, including staying open later into the fall. Though full day-time hours are not necessary, a few nights a week would certainly be beneficial to both the Freeze, care of the disposable incomes and cravings of many college students, and the Lewisburg community as a whole. Alas, the Freeze will be closing very shortly. So my advice to you, eager readers, is to make your trip today. If you delay it much longer, you'll have to wait through a very long central Pennsylvania winter to experience the pinnacle of ice cream perfection.

F is for friends FLAG & BT welcomes all students

By LEAH CUNNINGHAM
Senior Writer

It is not uncommon for some students on campus to see the rainbow-colored flag magnets and awareness postings for Friends of Lesbians, Gays, Bisexuals and Transgendered (FLAG & BT) and dismiss the group, simply because they would never consider themselves eligible for membership. However, FLAG & BT is a political action group aimed at redefining spaces and generating awareness of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered community within the University, and many of the members have identified themselves as straight.

"People understand that FLAG & BT exists, but people fail to realize that the 'F' in FLAG & BT stands for 'Friends of.' Coming to a meeting to show that you support LGBT rights does not mean that you are 'coming out of the closet,' which I can tell you is a very common perception," said Josh Fisher '04, President of FLAG & BT. "Supporting LGBT rights and being LGBT are two completely different things."

Fran McDaniel, coordinator of the LGBT Awareness Office at the University, said that the FLAG & BT group has increased in membership as more LGBT students feel comfortable being more visible. As other students want to make the campus more friendly and accepting of diversity, including sexual orientation, the group becomes more united.

"The purpose of FLAG & BT is to provide a support network for both LGBT students and their allies (people who work toward combating homophobia and heterosexism). It is a group that plans both educational and social activities for LGBT students/allies and the campus community at large. It is often considered a 'political action' group in the broadest sense because the members and the office try to educate the campus community about the issues that impact LGBT persons and seek to broaden the perspectives of others by exposing myths, rumors and providing more accurate information. FLAG & BT does hall programs, and brings both major speakers and entertainers to campus," McDaniel said.

Students involved in FLAG & BT stress that their goal is to provide a social community where everyone can be open about their sexuality without fearing harassment. FLAG & BT brings in entertainers such as Elvira Kurt, a lesbian comedian coming to the University this weekend. They also hold political discussions to raise campus awareness.

Alyssa Schneebaum '06 joined FLAG & BT because she believes that every non-heterosexual person needs friends who understand, accept and appreciate their sexuality. During her first week at the University, Schneebaum went to the LGBT Awareness office to inquire about the allies at the University, and soon learned many FLAG & BT members aren't gay, but friends who want to show their support.

"I think that the University students have such different opinions about us. Some kids are great; they come to meetings and hang out and have fun. Others are terrified of getting involved. I think, because of the stigma attached that they have to be gay to have gay friends. Some people are indifferent, which is fine, that's obviously so much better than the people who just want to make fun of gay people. We all want more membership, because that means more friends and more fun things to do with people. Maybe if other students didn't consider [bisexuals] or lesbians or gay men such terrible people, more straight people would want to be friends," Schneebaum said.

Although FLAG & BT encourages new membership and promotes itself on campus with speakers and various events, there is still ignorance about and mocking of gays and lesbians. FLAG & BT members encourage students to keep an open mind and watch what they say about others' sexual orientations.

"University students are generally tolerant of FLAG & BT's goals. Many students do not share the same goals, or are still working out what they think about the issue," Fisher said. "I've found that one-on-one students here are very accepting to LGBT peoples, but sometimes that is not enough—there are still great occurrences of homophobia that cannot be ignored. People have to realize that FLAG & BT doesn't exist as a haven for LGBT people on this campus, it exists to open up mainstream ideas about sexual orientation and sexuality to different perspectives."

As the FLAG & BT group gains recognition on campus, current members still encourage students to check it out and learn the group's goals and main objectives. More than a group aiming to raise awareness, FLAG & BT wants students to understand that they are supportive, understanding, and that no student is alone.

Courtesy of Ian Oliver

Students in the Building on Foundations (BOF) program work together to maneuver their way through a ropes course. BOF was one of many pre-orientation programs available this year.

Starting the first-year experience Pre-orientation programs offer the opportunity to get a head start

By CAROLYN WAKULCHIK
Writer

Do not even mention it. Not even in reference. Never, under any circumstance, bring up "BOF" to Loren Fishkind '07.

Actually, you can talk to her about the Building on Foundations Program now, better known as BOF. Fishkind is no longer upset about having missed out. BOF, which ships students and counselors seven miles down Rt. 192 to a prehistoric, University-owned camp known as Cowan, is one of the two pre-orientation programs offered by the University to first-year students. Fishkind, a student from Westchester, N.J., wanted to take part in the pre-orientation program centered around leadership and community service, but did not "put in enough effort" to be chosen as one of the 50 incoming students invited to participate.

However, Fishkind was no different than most of the first-year class. Some first year students chose to acclimate themselves to college life early by taking part in a pre-orientation program like BOF or Buckwild, coming early for the fall sport's pre-season training or participating in a Bison Gathering in their hometowns. Although students' experiences differed, this was especially true when contrasting those who chose to partake in these pre-orientation options with those who decided not to.

The Bucknell Wilderness Experience commonly referred to as "Buckwild" is a pre-orientation program where students travel to Massachusetts, New York and Connecticut for various Outdoor Bound endeavors. Ted Holzman '07, hailing all the way from Pasadena, Calif., participated in Buckwild and thought that it did more than just allow him to develop bonds with new peers.

"At school, I didn't feel like I was in a new place. I felt like I had adapted before all of the pressure of classes started," Holzman said. "I liked knowing I wouldn't get behind in my studies because I would be homesick or worried about making friends."

Katie Dry '07, a goalkeeper for the University's women's soccer team, both visited a Bison Gathering in Rochester and came to school more than a week earlier than most first-year students for pre-season training. According to Dry, both experiences were beneficial.

"Both [programs] helped me because I saw familiar faces around campus. They made me feel comfortable right off of the bat," Dry said. "It's just nice to smile at someone and know that they would smile back."

Yet, not all first-year students knew people when school began. Fishkind and the majority of others did not have the opportunity to participate in a pre-orientation program. According to Fishkind, her experience would have been different if she had taken part, but she managed to complete the transition to college anyway.

"I'm sure it would have been easier if I had done BOF, but it didn't prevent me from having a better or worse time than anyone else," Fishkind said.

Similarly, Kyle Moran '07 of Greenwich, Connecticut, did not join in any pre-orientation activities because he believed that the new student orientation would be enough.

"The regular five-day orientation was fine for most people because it was geared toward meeting other people and getting used to school," Moran said. "I don't think I was at a disadvantage because the majority of people didn't do those things—I was in the same boat as most people here."

Fishkind agreed that a couple days into orientation, circumstances balanced out.

"I was sad that I didn't have the opportunity to meet new friends in a program before school, but I've met them now, and it's okay," Fishkind said. "It's just a week later rather than a week in advance."

THERE'S NOT ENOUGH ART IN OUR SCHOOLS.

NO WONDER PEOPLE SAY

"GESUNDHEIT" WHEN YOU SAY

"TCHAIKOVSKY."

If one were to make a quick list of the world's favorite composers, despite his relatively recent vintage (he's only been dead for a century) Peter Ilyich Tchaikovsky would certainly make the list. After all, he composed Swan Lake, which is perhaps the most famous ballet of all time. And there certainly can't be more than a handful of ballet companies that don't stage a production of The Nutcracker every Christmas.

And why not? Indeed, this great Romantic composer should be so immortalized. As a young man, he quit a secure government job — at enormous risk and against his father's advice — in order to pursue a career in music. His mild temperament combined with his tendency to work too hard left him with terrible insomnia, debilitating headaches and hallucinations. On top of that, Tchaikovsky's composition teacher never liked his work, even after he became world-famous.

Setbacks such as these could have finished a lesser man. Instead, they informed his work, which remains some of the best loved in history.

Among the many setbacks Peter Ilyich Tchaikovsky endured: a disapproving family, a loveless marriage, a blind harborer.

Yet some children still confuse Tchaikovsky with a nasal spasm.

BLESS YOU, MR. T.

No sensible parent would ever say that arts education isn't important to their child's well-being. Quite the opposite, in fact, when asked, a majority of parents believe the arts are an integral part. They know painting and dance and music and drama help foster analytical thinking, improve overall academic performance, promote a healthy sense of individuality and bolster self-confidence. Not to mention, of course, the obvious creative outlet they provide young minds.

Given all of this, what responsible parent would ever think it's a good idea that their kids spend more time waiting in line in the cafeteria each week than they do in arts classes?

IS THIS SWAN LAKE'S SWAN SONG?

If you think the declining standards in schools today are just the price of doing business, then do not think of it as a tragedy. If, on the other hand, you feel this is unacceptable and disadvantageous to your child's welfare, you need to speak up and demand his or her fair share of the arts. To find out how or for more information about all the benefits of arts education, please visit us on the web at AmericansForTheArts.org. Or else the life's work of Peter Ilyich Tchaikovsky may end up seeming like just another casualty of allergy season.

Someone isn't getting their recommended daily allowance of art.

ART. ASK FOR MORE.

For more information about the importance of arts education, please contact www.AmericansForTheArts.org.

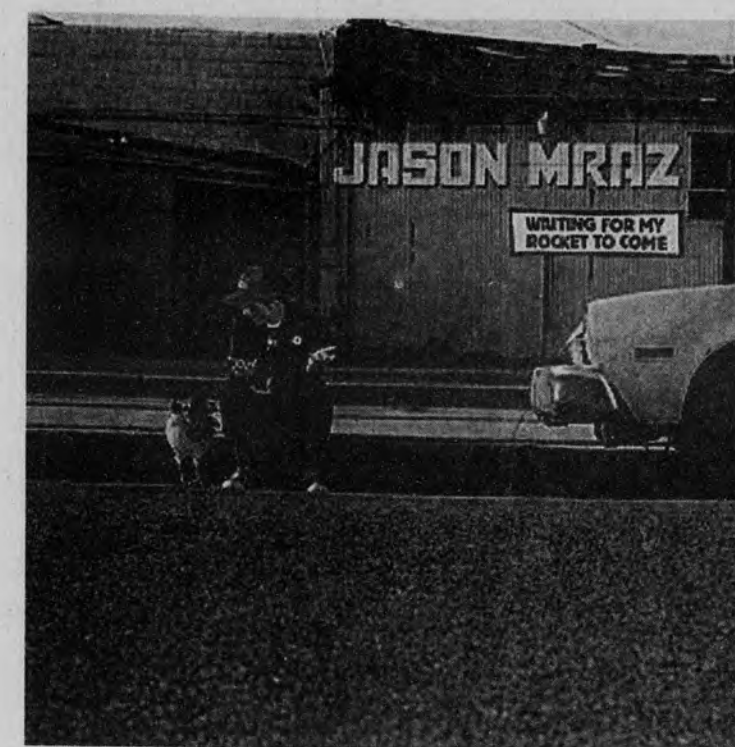

DORIS DUKE CHARITABLE FOUNDATION

Arts & Entertainment

"Remedy" artist catapults into fame

With a unique style, 25-year-old Jason Mraz hits the big time after opening for the Dave Matthews Band

Jason Mraz's CD, "Waiting for My Rocket to Come," features 12 tracks of energetic, catchy songs. His hit single "The Remedy" is one of the most requested radio songs.

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

Being invited by the Dave Matthews Band to play on the side-stage of the final three shows of its huge summer tour would be a dream come true for many artists. To have Matthews show up and play during the set would be unheard of. This is exactly what happened to 25-year-old Jason Mraz last summer and seems to have been the catalyst of his jump-start rise to fame.

At this point, if you are still blanking on the name, try and recall a song from the summer called "The Remedy," a fast-paced, catchy tune that draws on elements of folk, hip-hop, pop, rock, etc. Yes, that was him, and the fun summer song was actually inspired by a close personal friend who survived bone cancer. However, as with most hit songs, "The Remedy" has an entire album's worth of material to go along with it, too.

His unique style draws from so many different genres that to pin him down to a specific style would not only be difficult, but would probably undermine the true talent his playing and lyrics express. As Mraz told MTV in a recent interview, "I know a lot of guys out there who are playing music now and who are doing what I do... if you ask anybody what kind of music they listen to nowadays, they say, 'a little bit of everything, and that's the worst answer in the world. It's boring, but it's true.'"

His point could not be expressed more clearly than on his most recent release, "Waiting for My Rocket to Come," a 12-track medley of catchy riffs, intricate lyrics and music that can only be described as eclectic. Mraz jumps from light-hearted tracks like the reggae-driven "I'll Do Anything," a glorified attempt to get someone into bed, to the more serious and personal "The Boy's Gone," a self-exploratory piece about heading back to his roots in Virginia. Although "Rocket" was released last October, Mraz's recent success began earlier this summer and continues to grow. After his few shows with DMB on the summer tour, the band invited him back as a full opener on their winter tour this past fall. By spring, "The Remedy" was the most requested song on modern-rock radio nationwide and soon after, its video began to climb the MTV and VH1 charts as well.

Now is the time that Mraz has been waiting for—his name has gotten big enough that he can sell out his own shows fairly easily. While opening for huge acts is great, the chance to head-line gigs is the ultimate sign of "making it." As he told Rolling Stone magazine this past spring, "I can really feel the moment now. Last night was our first show of the tour, and I could sense the people who'd never seen me live before. It just feels good to turn these people on." That definitely makes me want to check him out live just as soon as I can.

His unique style draws from so many different genres that to pin him down to a specific style would not only be difficult, but would probably undermine the true talent his playing and lyrics express.

Flying with the birds

By BETH KENGETER
Staff Writer

◆ MOVIE REVIEW

Watching birds migrate is not what I would ordinarily call fun, but Jacques Perrin's Academy Award-nominated documentary, "Winged Migration" was one of the most beautiful films I have ever seen.

When a friend first invited me to attend Winged Migration, the idea of paying eight dollars to see something that I could watch in my backyard was unappealing to say the least. But with his offer to buy me free popcorn and after hearing recommendations about the film from trustworthy sources, I decided to lay down some of my hard-earned money and watch the film.

"Winged Migration" turned out not to be a movie about birds, but about what it is like to be a bird, what it's like to fly and have that driving instinct which forces you to face the unknown in a struggle for survival.

"Winged Migration" captures the natural beauty of both the landscape as well as the flight of the birds. Set to an amazing soundtrack, viewers are taken from Antarctica to the Amazon, from the Eiffel Tower to the Great Wall of China. Director Jacques Perrin narrates the movie, giving brief facts about migration patterns and styles as well as the type of bird on the screen, while managing to avoid sounding like a National Geographic film.

Although some computer animation is used to demonstrate the flight route, none of the shots have been digitally altered or enhanced making for truly breathtaking views.

Five teams of more than 450 people, including 17 pilots and 14 cinematographers, followed a variety of bird migrations through 40 countries and each of the seven continents. Everything from helicopters, hot air balloons, gliders and toy planes were utilized to allow cameras to fly above, under and alongside the birds.

Many times it actually felt as though I was flying with the flock. I have seen birds fly before but have never understood or been able to see how beautiful a thing it is.

Although some may find it boring, what is important to remember is that this is a documentary, not a traditional film with characters and a plot. In fact, this film should be applauded for how close it comes to making some of the birds' actual characters into a unique story.

The motion picture seems to be about 20 minutes too long at the repetitive end. Nevertheless, I highly recommend this movie. It takes a film like "Winged Migration" to really remind you of the beauty and mystery of nature.

"Winged Migration" turned out not to be a movie about birds, but about what it is like to be a bird, what it's like to fly and have that driving instinct which forces you to face the unknown in a struggle for survival.

By MICHAEL NIEBAUER
Senior Writer

◆ MOVIE REVIEW

When you consider how many sequels have popped out of Hollywood this summer, it's refreshing to see new life put into a traditional film style. Kevin Costner, Robert Duvall and Annette Bening turn in great performances with great supporting work from Abraham Benrubi in the throwback western "Open Range."

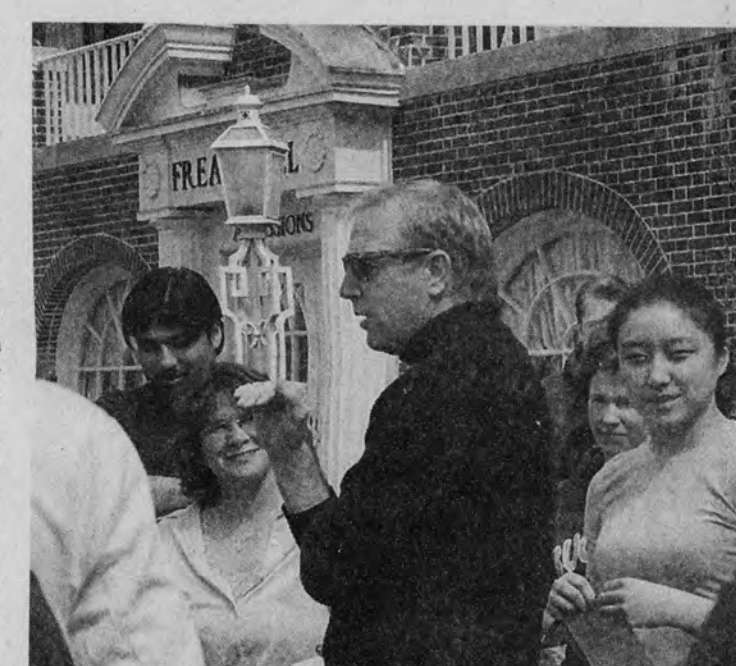

It was easy to be a Kevin Costner fan ten years ago. "Dances with Wolves," "Bull Durham" and "Field of Dreams" were made in an enjoyable style. Costner directed and acted in this film, utilizing that same style that gained him four Oscars in the early '90s. With this film Kevin Costner has turned his career away from his disastrous "The Postman" and "Perfect World" days. "Open Range" is not his best work but has interesting moments, and the sparse language of both main characters seems realistic and strangely inspired. The rugged-individuals-fighting-against-the-near-invincible-landowner-men theme is a refreshing change from this sequel-plagued summer.

The issue in this movie is the "free grazing" of cattle on prime public land. The largest local land baron, Baxter, played by Michael Gambon, Cable Ace Award winner for HBO's "The Path to War," does not approve of other men's cattle consuming the precious grass. Baxter bribes the local sheriff and his men to attempt to steal the horses of Boss, played by Duvall. Baxter is blessed with a fine Irish brogue and seems to have gained his desperation from an experience with the Irish Potato Famine. Baxter has formed a type of feudal situation probably not unlike that of his ancestors' British masters with his family's land back in Ireland. Baxter is determined to never be evicted again. Baxter's overcompensation seems almost corporate by today's standards. His hired lawmen fail to make off with the livestock and the sheriff's men are humiliated and made to strip by Charlie (Costner's character) and Boss, who make use of their skills as trackers.

Baxter then orders his men to beat a man, outraging Boss and Charlie, who then proceed to get justice in the only way possible: the classic, face-to-face gun battle. Costner as the director uses some innovative sound techniques that enhance the track of the film, making the gunfire sound noticeably louder and more real.

"Guns in those days were loud, scary, and dangerous. So I attempted to make the situations of people offering up their lives in a just cause seemed as risky and dangerous as it really was in the 1880's," Costner said

Kevin Costner, who visited the University in April with his daughter, stars in "Open Range." The film embraces many conventional themes of the "old Western" style and may manage to draw audiences who are sick of summer sequels.

In "Entertainment Tonight" interview.

The flooding scene on the main street of the town seems to invoke a time when nature was still clearly in control of the environment and people were simply part of it, fighting to survive.

Annette Bening is impressive in a crucial role as the main female lead and love interest in the film. She is wise in the ways and disappointments of the world but not completely bitter from the experience that it's so well-etched on her aging face.

Gilmore Girls has real characters

By CATHERINE HEVERLING
Writer

◆ TV REVIEW

"Crazy people. Whole town should be medicated and put in a rec room with ping pong tables and hand puppets." This "crazy town" is Stars Hollow, home to the characters of the WB hit series "Gilmore Girls."

"Gilmore Girls" tells the story of Lorelai Gilmore, a thirty-something coffee addict who, after getting pregnant at 17, left the nest with her daughter Rory and migrated to a small Connecticut town. This one-of-a-kind town is filled with quirky neighbors and wacky hangouts. Take, for example, Al's Pancake World. They don't sell pancakes there, but you can get the best Chinese takeout in the area. The most popular hangout to the Gilmore Girls has to be Luke's Diner, which belongs to the plaid-wearing and eternally sarcastic Luke. Luke delivers his sadistic humor with ease, especially when in the presence of Taylor Doose, the sweater-loving mayor of Stars Hollow.

Kirk is another town eccentric. A lifelong resident of Stars Hollow, Kirk is the ultimate show "extra," appearing in every episode, each time with a different task or job. If not the unpredictable plot or the verbal ping-pong match between Lorelai and Rory, Kirk's inconsistent employment and random lines throughout the show will keep you watching every Tuesday night.

Rory Gilmore has attended Chilton, a ritzy prep school in Hartford, for the past three seasons. The school introduced new characters, such as the intolerable Paris, the boy-crazy Madeline and Louise. Outside of school, Rory's best friend is Lane Kim, an overprotected, stealthy Korean girl. Her mother has strict rules, forcing Lane to hide her vast CD collection under her floor boards.

Lorelai Gilmore runs the Independence Inn, a setting for a constant string of trivial problems and quirky characters who try to solve them. Sookie is Lorelai's over-emotional best friend and the cook at the inn. Michel, the so-unlovable-he's-lovable French guy, handles the registration counter. Visitors at the inn include Lorelai's socialite parents, Emily and Richard (portrayed by Edward Herrmann, a University alumnus).

On May 20, the show ended its third season anticipating new beginnings for many of the main characters. Rory, the younger of the title characters, will be attending Yale University. Lorelai and Sookie are planning the long-awaited opening of their own inn, while Sookie awaits the arrival of a new baby. Rory was vice-dictator when she graduated in the finale and will major in journalism at Yale next season.

"Gilmore Girls" is the only program on television that keeps characters on the show, possibly not because they are relied on for major plot lines, but because they add to the credibility of the show. Characters like Kirk, Taylor or even Gypsy, the town mechanic, can be seen briefly in many episodes, as can Lorelai and Rory, who have been backpacking through Europe this summer.

In the meantime, if you haven't watched the show, tune in and get to know everyone in Stars Hollow, because there will be plenty of gossip to catch up on when the show returns September 23.

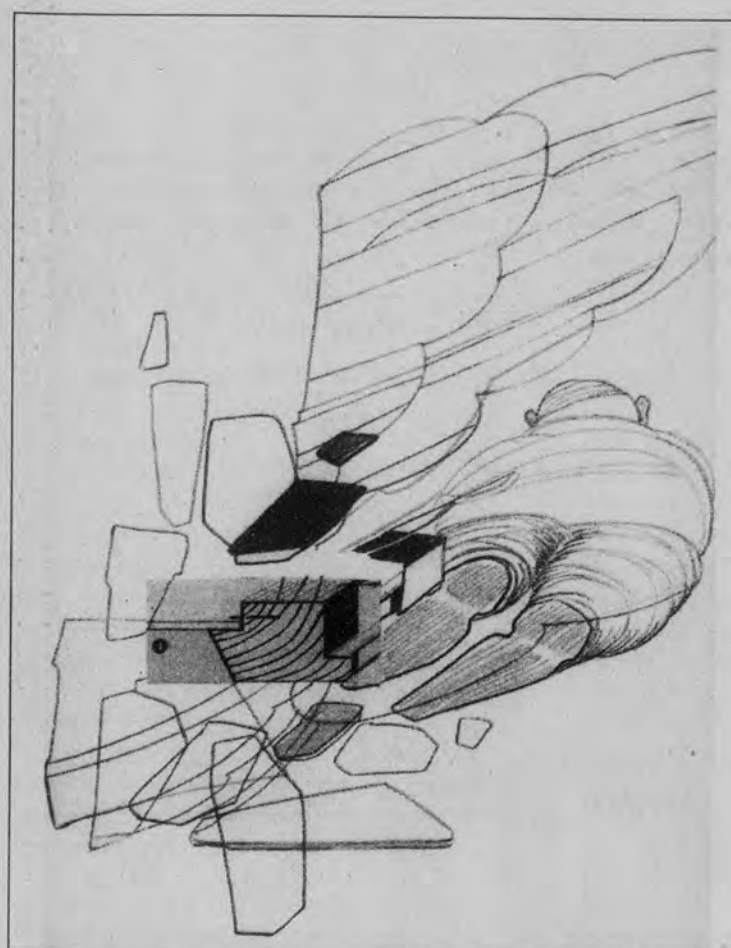

Cinema Center
Sollinsgrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall 274-2048
My Boss's Daughter (PG-13) 1:15, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30	Dickie Roberts (PG-13) 1:15, 3:15, 5:30, 7:45, 9:45
Freaky Friday (PG) 2:30, 4:45, 7:10, 9:15	S.W.A.T. (PG-13) 1:30, 4:15, 6:50, 9:40
Open Range (R) 1:30, 4:30, 6:30, 9:30	The Order (R) 1:15, 4:15, 7:15, 9:45
Jepson's Creepers 2 (R) 1:45, 5:15, 7:20, 9:40	Freddy vs. Jason (PG-13) 2:30, 4:40, 7:20
American Wedding (R) 1:45, 4:30, 6:30, 9:30	Pirates of the Caribbean (PG-13) 2:45, 5:30, 8:30
Medallion (PG-13) 6:50, 9:50	Spy Kids (PG) 1:00, 3:00, 5:00
Finding Nemo (G) 2:15, 4:30	Le Divorce (PG-13) 7:30

Play Dates: September 5-11, 2003

Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

Arts & Entertainment

Art Gallery welcomes new exhibits

Meyer's "Untitled," from the series "Quer zur Faser," illustrates her eloquent use of the most basic component of drawing: the line.

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

The Samek Art Gallery opens its walls to two new exhibits. Nanne Meyer's "against the grain" and Richard Cramer's "Mahanoy Plane," on Sunday.

This will be Meyer's first solo show in the United States, largely thanks to the support of Christiane Andersson, associate professor of Art and Art History at the University.

One interesting aspect of Meyer's work is that she creates art on varied media, and in various forms. Selections from her drawings, paintings, collage and installation art will be showcased in the Main Gallery.

Examples include an installation art piece made of cardboard camembert cheese boxes, and a collage made from postcards that have been painted over selectively to reveal only certain features.

Meyer is primarily concerned with drawing and is known for her eloquent use of lines, which often produce an abstract effect that gradually reveals "more concrete elements."

The line is the basic component of drawing; its possibilities are the "alphabet of the draughtsman," writes Meyer in her artist statement, which is available on the gallery's Website. Meyer normally incorporates word play in the titles of her works, such as the "se(a) pieces" series.

"[Meyer's work] is very much about drawing but also very much about visual language and visual culture," said Dan Mills, Director of the Samek Art Gallery.

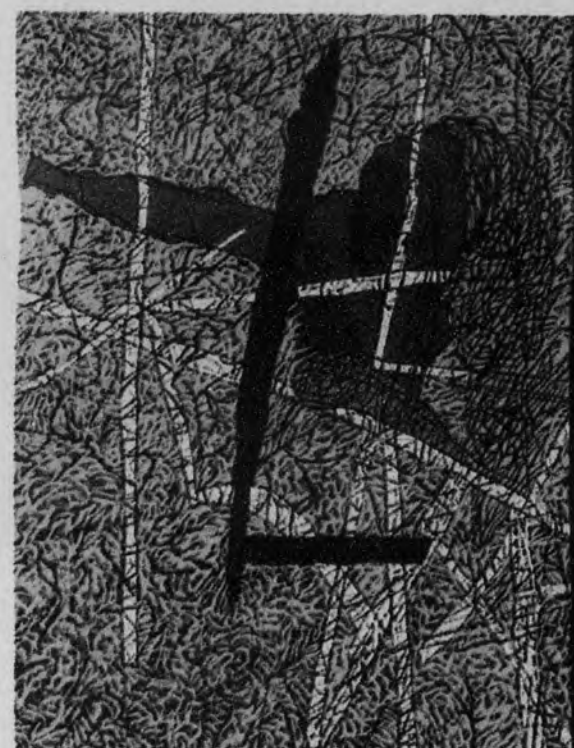

The presentation will also be unique in the methods of displaying her works. For example, two 33-foot paintings will be laid close to the floor instead of being hung on the walls to give the viewers a more interesting perspective.

Works will be shown from Meyer's personal collection as well as from the collection at the Berlinische Galerie—Landesmuseum für Moderne Kunst, Photographie und Architektur.

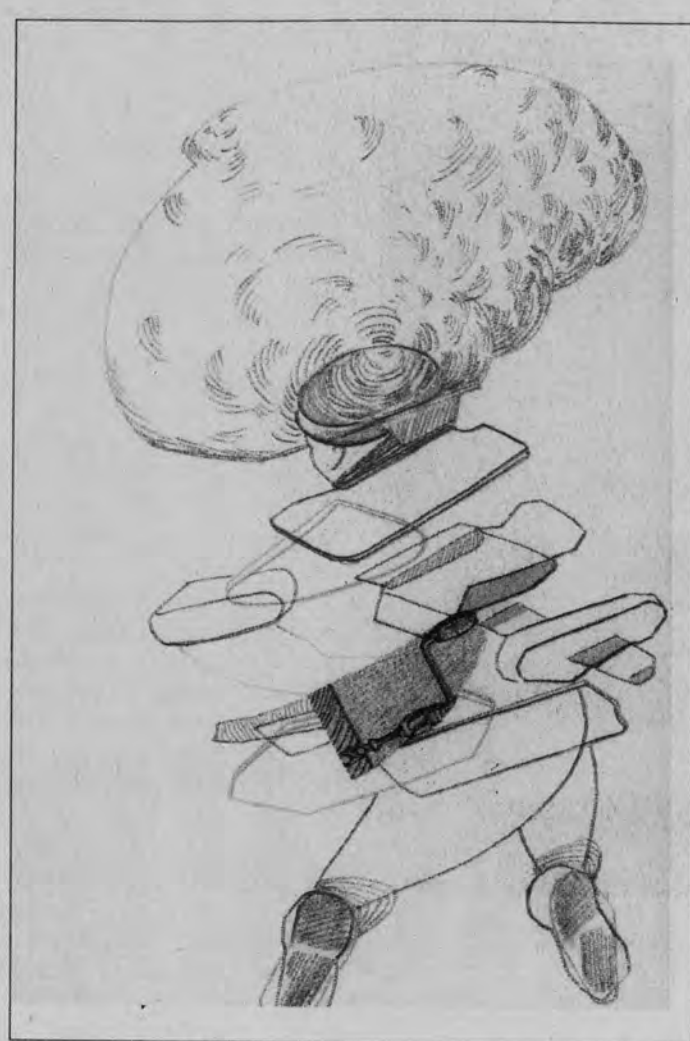

A native of Berlin, Meyer will give a gallery talk at the opening on Sunday at 4 p.m. This lecture is free and open to the public, and refreshments will be served immediately following.

In addition to this talk, Meyer will also be lecturing to several art classes and a German class during her visit to campus.

Joining Meyer's exhibit on Thursday, Richard Cramer's "Mahanoy Plane" will be displayed in the Project Room. He will also give a lecture in Richard Cramer's "Wigland" is just one example of an entire collection donated to the University.

This untitled work of Meyer's, and many more, will be on display in the Samek Art Gallery until October 10.

the Gallery Theatre on the opening day.

Cramer has generously donated an entire collection to the gallery's permanent collection, from which the University has culled this exhibition. Both Meyer and Cramer's works will be available for viewing until October 10.

These two exhibits are only the start of an exciting schedule for the art gallery during the coming school year.

"This year we have a quite extraordinary season," Mills said.

Following Meyer and Cramer's exhibits will be a faculty exhibit in the Main Gallery and a portfolio of nine prints from Shahzia Sikander in the Project Room. An AIDS Quilt will then be shown during the first week in December.

The spring schedule is comprised of an exhibit of Chinese Art curated from both the Far East and the United States, and the Annual Student Show.

Gallery hours are Monday-Friday 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday-Sunday 1-4 p.m. For more information on Nanne Meyer plus a schedule of future exhibits, visit the Samek Art Gallery Website.

Britney Spears and Madonna share a kiss as they open the 2003 MTV Video Music Awards. Just as in past years, this award show was filled with controversy.

and time that night with Dave Navarro on guitar. Perhaps learning her lesson from her first number, Aguilera did not make out with this collaboration partner. Other artists performing included Good Charlotte, Mary J. Blige, 50 Cent, and Coldplay, with the politically charged phrase "Make Trade Fair" painted onto the lead singer's piano.

The show, which lasted three hours, also featured presenters from such varied corners of the pop culture spectrum as Tony Hawk, Pamela Anderson, the cast of Queer Eye for the Straight Guy, and the enigmatic Snoop Doggy Dogg.

Metallica closed the show by playing an intro of riffs from popular rock songs before churning through their own "Frantic."

Reality TV gets a queer eye

By LINDSAY BEITZENDAH
Staff Writer

One can probably brainstorm the next 50 reality shows producers will come up with. The never-ending list of reality TV shows has perhaps gotten slightly out of control. But it is doubtful one would have had a reality show on his or her list about five gay fashion experts whose goal is to rehabilitate a straight guy.

This show, "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy," premiered on Bravo! this summer. Since then, talk about the show has exploded and consequently, so have the ratings.

According to HollywoodReporter.com, the show revolves around a tale of revenge, but the good, ironic kind.

"Straight men have been giving gay men a hard time for eons," the Web site states, and now the tables have turned, at least in the context of this reality show.

"Queer Eye" features five attractive gay men, each a connoisseur of a particularly helpful bit of style knowledge. The Fab Five, as they are called, consist of Carson (fashion expert), Ted (food and wine expert), Kyan (grooming expert), Thom (interior design expert) and Jai (culture expert). Together, their job is to fix the life of one lucky straight guy.

Despite the initial reaction many may have when told about the show, it actually has set new record ratings for Bravo!, CNN.com reports. "Queer Eye" recorded the highest numbers for total viewers, households and audiences aged 18-49 and has attracted 1.64 million total viewers, according to Nielsen Media Research.

"Queer Eye" presumably reveals many tips that men would want to know to revamp their life and also that women would want to know to perhaps tell their men. It is easy to see how so many people end up watching "Queer Eye."

Many students said they hadn't seen the show yet but had heard good reviews and intend on watching it in the future.

"I've never seen the show yet, but I've heard it's great. It's my gay friend's new favorite show. I promised him I'd watch it tonight," Jenny Cardona '04 said.

"Queer Eye" promises to be a worthwhile show to watch if you enjoy reality TV. But only time will tell if this reality show will last or if it will fizzle out like a bad relationship as so many of the others have.

Get in touch with your creative side and write for A&E! E-mail Josie—jcetia@

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

September 12, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 2

Politics:
The Bucknellian talks with presidential candidate John Edwards

See page A10

Mraz to perform fall concert

University Concert Committee still in search for a co-headliner

Jason Mraz (above) performs during his 2003 tour. Mraz, whose hit single "The Remedy" has topped charts for months, will perform in the Gary Sojka Pavilion on Nov. 21.

By ELISABETH SALEMM
News Editor

The University's Concert Committee has announced that Jason Mraz will perform at the fall concert this year in conjunction with another yet-to-be-named artist on Nov. 21 in the Gary Sojka Pavilion.

"The Concert Committee is really excited that we got Jason Mraz to come. He is very hot on MTV right now, and we didn't think he would accept our bid because a lot of other colleges were going very strongly for him," said Kari Conrad, assistant dean of students and director of activities and programs.

According to Concert Committee member Adam Yukelson '05, students who have heard about Mraz's upcoming performance are either "extremely excited, recognize his one hit song or do not know him at all."

Mraz's hit single "The Remedy" appeared on MTV's Top 20 list last week at number 16. The single also spent 20 straight weeks on Billboard's Top 100 list, peaking at number 15.

"His album to back up his single 'The Remedy' is phenomenal," Concert Committee Chair Chad Flood '04 said.

Mraz's debut album, "Waiting for my Rocket to Come," was released in Oct. 2002 by his record company Elektra/Asylum.

According to Mraz's Web site, the artist was born in Virginia and got his start in San Diego, Calif.

"In 2002 Jason set up camp in Los Angeles and partnered with percussionist Toca Rivers playing weekly there

See MRAZ, page A2

Standards raised for acceptance of Class of '07

By MEGHAN BALL
News Editor

With every new school year comes a new class, each with its own personality. This year's first year students have an impressive academic record. When compared to the senior class there are changes, but they have not been drastic.

A larger applicant pool increased selectivity this past year. As a result, 38 percent of students were offered admission as compared to about 41 percent four years ago.

SAT scores and class-rank also improved for the incoming class. In 2000, the middle fifty percent scored 580-660 in Verbal and 620-690 in Math versus the 2003 scores of 600-670 in Verbal and 630-700 in Math. The number of students ranked in the top 10 percent of their class has increased from 58 percent to 69 percent.

"We are very pleased with the outstanding credentials, backgrounds and experiences each and every class brings to Bucknell," said Mark Davies, Dean of Admissions, "but I would be a little careful comparing them too carefully because so much of who they are, what they will accomplish and contribute here is not represented on paper."

The breakdown in majors/foci/focuses for the freshman class, he worked

Commencement speaker selection committee changes

By MICHELLE DOMBECK
Associate Editor

A new subcommittee consisting of members from the student body, faculty and administration has been created to recommend this year's Commencement speaker. Some fear that the emphasis will be taken off the students in this new committee, but members of the committee are confident that the students' voices will be heard.

"The president thought the process needed to be improved, so he asked me to look into it. I did research and found out that in past years, there had been a committee in place to recommend the speaker," said Stephen Bowen, provost and vice president for academic affairs.

This committee, which was in place three years ago, has been reinstated, and is made up of the three senior class officers, three faculty members and three members of the administration.

The three members of the senior class are President Jessica Briski '04, Vice President Bill Anderson '04 and Secretary/Treasurer Caroline Driever '04.

Although Bowen said he was unfamiliar with last year's process, he said that we "can count on this year being better."

Last year, the committee was made up of the President, Vice President and Secretary/Treasurer of the graduating class, the adviser of the senior class, Director of Special Events and the President of the University, according to 2003 Class President Laura Day.

This year, with the inclusion of three faculty members, as well as three administrators, people are hopeful that all campus constituencies will be satisfied.

See COMMENCEMENT, page A6

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

David Van Wagener '06 has returned to campus after suffering from a paralyzing ski accident last winter. Van Wagener's outlook for the future has remained positive.

Van Wagener '06 returns to campus

By MEGHAN FOX
Senior Editor

While lying in his hospital bed last winter, paralyzed from the shoulders down, David Van Wagener '06 was asked by his parents what he wanted to do. The victim of a

"He's an inspiration to us all. It's amazing that he's back at Bucknell."

—Amy Badal, assistant dean of students

Most people do not go right back to school after an injury of this degree, and certainly not to a university so far away from his hometown in Denver, Colo.

Van Wagener was willing to put forth the effort in order to take back his life. He endured hours of strength training, physical therapy and acupuncture, that all contributed to his physical recovery. Though such an aspiration would not have been feasible at that moment, he worked to achieve his goal. On Aug. 19, Van Wagener returned to campus to continue with his studies in Chemical Engineering.

"He's an inspiration to all of us," Assistant Dean of Students Amy Badal said. "It's amazing that he's back at Bucknell."

Van Wagener was determined to return this fall, and adamant about his decision.

"I really wanted to come back. All the people at Craig (Hospital) thought I was crazy for doing it," Van Wagener said.

See VAN WAGENER, page A3

University best in nation

By ALYSON WALKER
Managing Editor

The University recently received the USA TODAY-NCAA Academic Achievement Award for the highest graduation rate of student-athletes in Division I-AA schools.

The 100 percent graduation rate not only placed the University first among Division I-AA schools but also among all NCAA division schools, tying with University of New England, a Division III school.

This marks the third time the University has been number one in the nation for student athlete rates, and it is one of only 15 schools receiving a USA TODAY-NCAA Academic Achievement Award. The University has previously ranked steadily in the NCAA survey, always listed in the top 10 for student-athlete graduation rate.

Twenty-six intercollegiate sports, 14 for women and 12 for men, are offered at the University at the

See GRAD RATE page B1

See 2007, page A6

John Updike selected as Janet Weis fellow

Pulitzer Prize-winning author John Updike will receive his award and give a lecture at the University on Nov. 11.

See page A2

2007 election results

The results from yesterday's 2007 class elections are announced.

See page A7

Remembering Sept. 11

The Bucknellian editorial board reflects on this year's memorials.

See page A8

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Aug. 31

ASSIST POLICE / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to South 7th Street to assist Lewisburg Police Department with an intoxicated, underage student. The male was transported to his 23 University Ave residence. Citation issued for underage consumption.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/FIRE ALARM VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Swartz hall. When Public Safety entered, officers found two open cans of beer in plain view. Upon further investigation, the two male residents of the room were found to be under the age of 21 and admitted to consuming alcohol. Students were cited for underage consumption.

INSTITUTIONAL VANDALISM—A Public Safety security student reported unknown person(s) broke panes of glass out of an exterior door and a hallway window at Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student requested an ambulance to transport her from the exterior of Public Safety to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment for an asthma attack. Public Safety responded to assist with the call. The student later returned to campus.

MISSING PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that a fire extinguisher was missing from Vedder Hall. The individual also reported fire extinguisher dust on her vehicle which she had removed by washing the car. The incident is under investigation.

Monday, Sept. 1

INFORMATION / HARASSMENT—Public Safety responded to University Ave for the report of two males driving their vehicle and making obscene gestures at three students who were driving back to campus. The vehicle drove off campus. The students advised that they did not wish to pursue any formal charges. Lewisburg Police Department was notified.

Tuesday, Sept. 2

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an ill employee. The male was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of chest pains and dizziness. He later returned to work.

INFORMATION / POSSIBLE UNAUTHORIZED ENTRY—An employee reported to Public Safety that the door to the bee storage room was found open. The incident is under investigation.

Wednesday, Sept. 3

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed a Dell laptop computer from his unlocked office in the Dana Engineering building. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

VEHICLE DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to St. George Street outside Larison Cottage for the report of a tree branch on a vehicle belonging to a student. Lewisburg Police Department was notified.

INFORMATION / HARASSMENT / UNFOUNDED—A female contacted Public Safety from an off-campus location and reported that an employee was harassing her by telephone. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the caller has a history of filing unfounded reports with the local police in her area and that no calls had been made from campus to her home. The incident was determined to be unfounded.

Thursday, Sept. 4

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed a Dell laptop computer from his unlocked office at Taylor Hall. Lewisburg Police Department notified. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) scratched graffiti on an exterior door at the Biology Building. No suspects or witnesses were located. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Gateway Silberman for the report of an unconscious female. The student, who was found to be conscious upon arrival of Public Safety, was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital by ambulance for treatment of flu symptoms. She later returned to campus.

Friday, Sept. 5

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / RECKLESS DRIVING / DUI—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a vehicle run a stop sign and almost collide with the patrol car on South 7th Street at Moore Ave. Public Safety followed the vehicle to Delta Upsilon Fraternity where the driver was identified as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol. The individual was cited for reckless driving, failure to obey traffic devices and driving under the influence of alcohol.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—An employee reported to Public Safety that while driving a University vehicle he backed into a dumpster at the Langone Center. The driver received no injuries and the damage to the vehicle was minor.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / UNREGISTERED PARTY—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a loud party. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified 12 students who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and the room occupant was cited for an unregistered party.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / FAILURE TO COMPLY—Public Safety responded to Gateway Kaiman Prosser for the report of a possible party in progress. Upon arrival, a student stated she was concerned about the welfare of a friend who was not answering her cell phone. Public Safety knocked on the room door where she thought her friend was. A male student answered the door and would not allow entry and displayed aggressive behavior. Lewisburg Police Department responded and all students were identified within the room and dispersed without incident. The male was cited for disorderly conduct and failure to comply.

Saturday, Sept. 6

FRATERNITY ALCOHOL POLICY VIOLATION—While responding to a fire alarm at Delta Upsilon Fraternity, Public Safety observed a large funnel with an attached hose in the basement. The device was confiscated and the fraternity cited.

Sunday, Sept. 7

FRATERNITY POLICY VIOLATION—While conducting a routine fraternity party check, Public Safety found nude female entertainers performing in the house. University officials responded and requested that the party be ended. The fraternity was cited.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall for the report of an intoxicated male. Upon arrival, Public Safety observed the male staggering and attempting to urinate outside. The male was identified as a student and was left in the care of an RA. Citations were issued for public drunkenness. Later that night, the same male was found outside Public Safety. Lewisburg Police Department responded and determined that the student was not in need of medical treatment. The individual was turned over to the on call Dean.

OPEN CONTAINER—While on routine patrol on South 7th Street, Public Safety observed a male carrying an open can of beer. He was identified as a student and cited for an open container violation.

ASSIST LPD / PUBLIC URINATION/DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to South 6th Street and St. George Street to assist Lewisburg Police Department with a female student in custody. She was observed urinating by Larison Hall and cited for disorderly conduct.

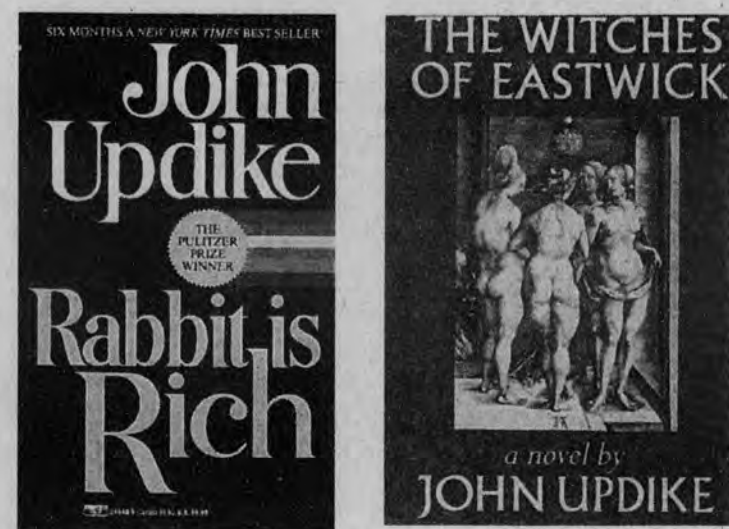

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / SERVING MINORS / FRATERNITY ALCOHOL VIOLATION—While conducting a party check at Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity, Public Safety observed a male consuming alcohol without a wristband. He was identified as a student under the age of 21 and cited for underage consumption. The fraternity was cited for serving minors.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / SERVING MINORS / FRATERNITY ALCOHOL VIOLATION / FIRE ORDINANCE VIOLATION—While conducting a party check at Delta Upsilon Fraternity, Public Safety observed a male and female consuming alcohol without a wristband. Both were identified as students under the age of 21 and cited for underage consumption. Public Safety also observed two styrofoam cups covering smoke detectors in the basement. The fraternity was cited for serving minors and tampering with fire equipment.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / FRATERNITY ALCOHOL VIOLATION—While conducting a party check at Kappa Delta Rho, Public Safety observed a female wearing a fake wristband and another female not wearing a wristband. Both individuals were consuming alcohol. They were identified as students under the age of 21 and citations were issued for underage consumption. The fraternity was cited for serving minors.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / FRATERNITY ALCOHOL VIOLATION—While conducting a party check at Sigma Chi Fraternity, Public Safety observed two females consuming alcohol without a wristband. Both individuals were identified as students under the age of 21. Citations issued for underage consumption. The fraternity was cited for serving minors.

Updike is named Janet Weis Fellow

Courtesy of amazon.com

John Updike, named the Janet Weis fellow for Contemporary Letters, won the Pulitzer Prize for his novel Rabbit is Rich. Updike has authored many other novels, including The Witches of Eastwick.

ALYSON WALKER
Managing Editor

University President Steffen Rogers announced last Friday that Pulitzer Prize-winning author John Updike was the 2003-04 Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters. Updike will receive the award and give a lecture to the campus community on Nov. 11, 8 p.m. at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts, as well as attend a half hour reception afterward.

The Janet Weis Fellowship was founded by the Degenstein Foundation in 2002 to honor Janet Weis, community philanthropist, trustee emerita of the University and wife of Sigfried Weis, the chair of the Board of Trustees from 1982-8. It awards a contemporary author who is highly acclaimed in fiction, non-fiction or biography and has achieved a wide readership.

Updike received Pulitzer Prizes in 1982 and 1991 for "Rabbit is Rich" and "Rabbit at Rest" respectively. He has published approximately 50 books, including 20 novels, collections of short stories, poetry and literary criticism, some of which have been given such awards as the National Book Award, the American Book Award, the National Book Critics Circle Award and the Howells Medal. His most recent work is "Seek My Face," published in 2002.

Originally born in Schillington, PA in 1932, Updike graduated from Harvard College in 1954, and worked for The New Yorker from 1955-7, after spending a year in Oxford at the Ruskin School of Drawing and Fine Art. He then moved to Massachusetts, but Updike claims his Pennsylvania heritage, once writing in a letter, "though it has been some time since I lived in Pennsylvania, it still lives in me."

Rogers was pleased with the selection of Updike. "His writing is finely crafted, and shows his vast knowledge of a wide array of subjects, and yet it is accessible to a wide audience and has earned Updike critical acclaim, many awards, and broad public recognition and appreciation," Rogers said.

The first Janet Weis Fellowship in Contemporary Letters was awarded to Toni Morrison in 2002.

Rogers discusses salary increases at first faculty meeting of the year

By ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

University President Steffen Rogers announced Monday at the first faculty meeting of the year that there was to be a 2.5 percent average salary increase. This increase includes the faculty, the 11-member upper administration, the administration not part of the president's staff and regular University staff including dining services.

Prior to the meeting the faculty composed a series of questions to ask Rogers, which primarily concerned salary increases for University staff members. The faculty questioned Rogers about the number of faculty members that received less than a cost-of-living raise. "We don't use cost-of-living, we use the Consumer Price Index (CPI) and we use a three-year rolling average, and that percentage would have been 2.13 for this particular consideration," Rogers said. The faculty also asked how many staff members received less than a cost-of-living raise. Rogers said he did not know that figure. "One-third of the faculty has been reviewed, and a very small number received less than CPI... the higher-up salaries were more likely to fall below the percentage of 2.13," Rogers said. The last question posed to Rogers regarded the status of

"We don't use the cost-of-living, we use the Consumer Price Index."

—Steffen Rogers, University President

"We do have a menu of items to select from to help balance the budget," Rogers said.

During follow-up questioning by the faculty, questions were raised about faculty health benefits. Vice President for Finance and Administration David Surgala said that during the summer months a Health Benefits Advisory Committee was created. Surgala said the committee met once as a full group, but will have more monthly meetings in the future.

"We will look at all the data we can gather, and see how we can get the most for the amount of dollars," Surgala said.

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme
Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Suicide bomber kills three in Iraq

IRBIL, Iraq—A suicide attacker exploded an SUV outside the U.S. intelligence headquarters in this northern city, killing three Iraqis and wounding dozens, including four Americans, a Kurdish security official said Wednesday. Also on Wednesday, a U.S. soldier was killed while trying to detonate a roadside bomb in west Baghdad, the second death among American forces in Iraq in less than 24 hours.

Jen and Ben to wed in Santa Barbara

NEW YORK—Ben Affleck and Jennifer Lopez will marry on Sunday at the Four Seasons Biltmore Hotel in Santa Barbara, Calif., according to the mother of another woman who's getting married there the same day.

Cuban church challenges Castro

HAVANA—Cuba's Catholic Church has issued a powerful challenge to Fidel Castro to permit more religious freedom, political liberty and economic autonomy.

Edward Teller dies at 95

STANFORD, Calif.—Edward Teller, who played a key role in U.S. defense and energy policies for more than half a century and was dubbed the "father of the H-bomb" for his enthusiastic pursuit of the powerful weapon, died Tuesday, a spokesman for Lawrence Livermore Laboratory said. He was 95.

Democrats clash in 2nd fall debate

BALTIMORE—Two days before the anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks, Democratic presidential contenders tartly criticized President Bush's handling of the war on terrorism Tuesday night in a campaign debate at the same time they sketched out their own differences on foreign policy.

Killer sheep disease is spreading

MANCHESTER, England—A killer sheep disease as dangerous as foot-and-mouth but previously confined to Africa has jumped into Europe and is heading steadily north as the climate warms, a scientist said Tuesday. Bluetongue disease, which is carried by midges, weakens blood vessels causing heavy hemorrhaging and blindness, making it hard for the sheep to feed, see or move.

Sunken canoe linked to Viking era

OSLO, Norway—A dugout canoe that may date from Viking times has been found in Norway, yielding clues to the lives of people who fished a small lake perhaps 1,000 years ago. The pine vessel was dragged from Royraas Lake in southern Norway Monday after a tip from the family of two elderly men who had spotted the boat when they swam in the lake as children in the 1930s.

Food pyramid to get an overhaul

WASHINGTON—The Agriculture Department plans to revise its food guide pyramid to include for the first time consideration of people's age, gender, weight and the amount of exercise they get in helping calculate their dietary needs.

Doctors to separate conjoined twins

NEW YORK—Neurosurgeons in New York are planning a series of operations this fall to separate a set of 17-month-old conjoined Filipino twins.

Hamas leader survives Israeli strike

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip—Israeli warplanes on Wednesday flattened the home of a Hamas leader, Mahmoud Zahar, wounding him and killing his son and a bodyguard, in retaliation for twin suicide bombings that killed 15 Israelis a day earlier. As tension escalated in the region, Palestinian parliament speaker Ahmed Qureia accepted the post of prime minister and planned to establish an emergency Cabinet in the next few days.

One man cleared in pizza man case

Investigators have questioned and cleared one man seen acting suspiciously on the day that a pizza deliveryman died in a bomb blast after robbing a bank but are continuing to seek a second person.

Microsoft warns of new serious flaws

WASHINGTON—Just moments before a top Microsoft executive told Congress about efforts to improve security, the company warned customers Wednesday of serious new flaws that leave its flagship Windows software vulnerable to Internet attacks remarkably similar to the Blaster virus that infected hundreds of millions of computers last month.

Sweden in shock after popular minister slain

STOCKHOLM, Sweden—Swedish Foreign Minister Anna Lindh, touted as a future prime minister, died Thursday from stab wounds, the second Swedish politician to be murdered in the Scandinavian country in 17 years in a rare act of violence.

Habitat sponsors University house

By DREW CALVERT
Writer

The University's chapter of Habitat for Humanity celebrated the groundbreaking for the "Bucknell House," on Sept. 3. This is a house-sponsorship project in Mifflinburg, for which the chapter has been raising money for the past two years, along with its Union-Snyder affiliate.

At the ceremony, University Habitat members were able to meet Kim Engleheart and her two children. Engleheart and her children will be living in the house, after having been selected by Union Snyder, the local Habitat for Humanity group.

Habitat houses are sold to the selected family at no profit and financed with affordable, no-interest loans. The houses are made possible by volunteer labor, monetary donations and building materials.

"The event was a special one," said Michelle Gezo, president of the Bucknell chapter. "Two of us officers were able to say a reading, Father Marty the prayer, and Dean Badal made remarks. She said it was a day to celebrate Bucknell and community members working together as neighbors. She also commended our Bucknell Chapter of Habitat for Humanity for our hard work and dedication toward this house sponsorship."

The building process will begin tomorrow from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., when groups of volunteer students will be transported to the site in Mifflinburg and given tasks by the construction crew. Students will be involved with framing, painting and assisting the construction crew however possible. The foundation for the house has already been laid.

"We want as much of the Bucknell Community to be involved with this house as possible. We want to send students to help build and we also still need help raising the rest of the money for the house," Gezo said.

The University chapter has raised half of the $20,000 required from them in a deal that has Union Snyder offering $30,000 to provide a "simple, decent and affordable house" for the Engleheart family. "I think it is absolutely necessary for the organization, the partner family and the public, not just for exposure to potential donors and volunteers, but to show the community that there are people out there who need help, who aren't as well off as the average Union County resident or Bucknell student. It also shows that there are people who use their skills, free time and position in society to help others," said Ben Hovey, a Habitat officer. Hovey plans to be involved in the building this Saturday.

"I got involved in Habitat so I could build. I enjoy building, being outside, and working together with people who have never built houses. The fact that the end product is a house for someone, that it goes so far in making the partner family's life better, just adds to the sense of satisfaction at the end of the day," Hovey said.

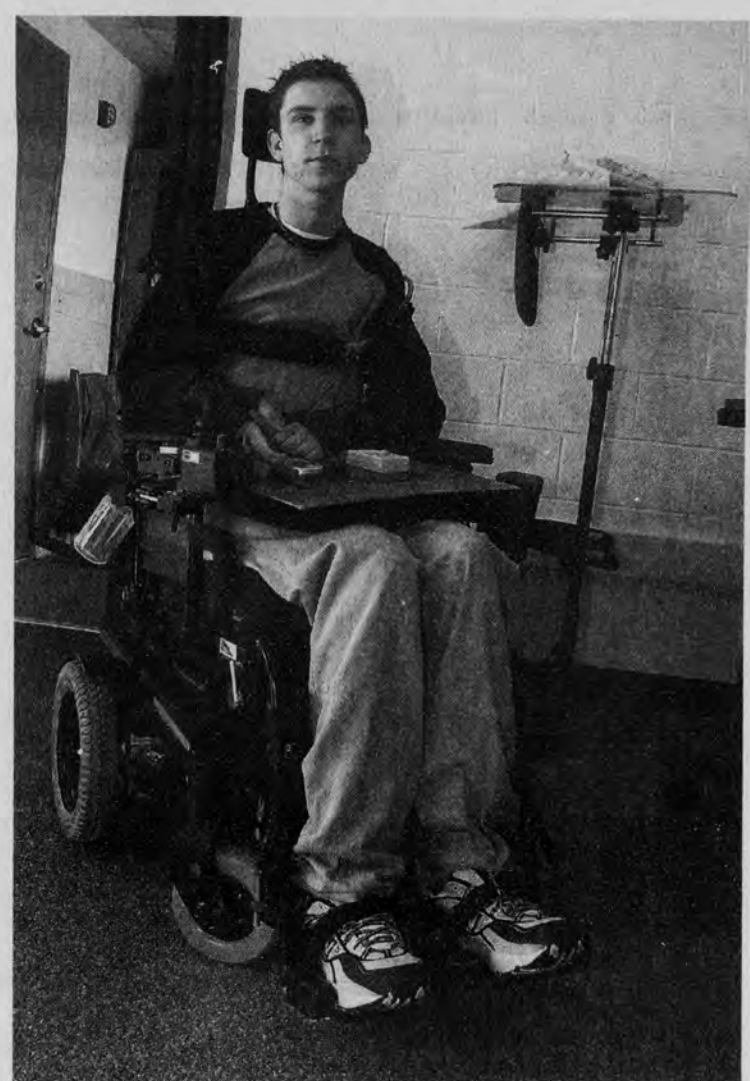

Habitat for Humanity is always looking for more support. Any organization or person who would like to get involved with this house-sponsorship building process should contact jperciba@bucknell.edu and anyone interested in fundraising or donating should contact mgezo@bucknell.edu.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Assistant Dean of Students Amy Badal and the Engleheart family begin groundbreaking for the Engleheart's future home. The University has sponsored a house in Mifflinburg for Habitat for Humanity.

VAN WAGENER From page A1

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

David Van Wagener '06 returned to school this fall after suffering from serious injuries last winter. The University has made special accommodations for Van Wagener.

ery. Van Wagener also attended educational sessions where he learned more about his condition and how to care for his body.

Throughout months of recuperation Van Wagener remained positive and optimistic.

"You've got to make the most of it," Van Wagener said. "Once you start to make progress, you can see the light at the end of the tunnel."

When Van Wagener was first injured he had no mobility below his shoulders. At this point he has regained movement in both arms and is able to sense the entire left side of his body.

"If I don't get it back naturally, I still have a hope that pretty soon they will be able to figure out how to fix the spinal cord," he said.

The Bucknellian wants YOU to write for news! contact Liz esalemme@

MRAZ From page A1

Courtesy of jasonmraz.com

Jason Mraz will perform this year's fall concert in conjunction with another artist who is yet to be determined.

and still in San Diego at the world famous Java Joe's in Ocean Beach," the Web site said. Mraz has appeared on "Craig Kilborn," "Conan O'Brien," "Caroline Rhea," "The Late Show with David Letterman," "Extra," "Live with Regis and Kelly" and "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno."

Conrad said the committee took a different angle this year in its search for performers.

"We used to have older bands, but this time we chose some one up-and-coming. [Mraz] is some one really popular among Bucknellians," Conrad said.

Conrad and the search committee are currently looking for a band to open for or perform with Mraz. Conrad said they are waiting for a call from one band in particular.

"The band we are looking at to perform with Jason is a popular band who has toured with Jason in the past," Conrad said.

Conrad, Flood and Yukelson said that it is difficult to pick a performer whom all potential concert attendees will enjoy.

"We try to appease the Bucknell constituency. That is our first and foremost goal. We are also in the middle of Pennsylvania and we want to please the local people too, because we do get some outside ticket sales," Conrad said.

For this year's fall concert, some things will be done differently in the Sojka Pavilion.

"There will be a lot more space on the floor, so any view is a good view," Flood said.

The concert committee has not yet decided to sell the tickets through Ticket Master or the University.

"We would love to make this a bang-out show with a big name," Conrad said.

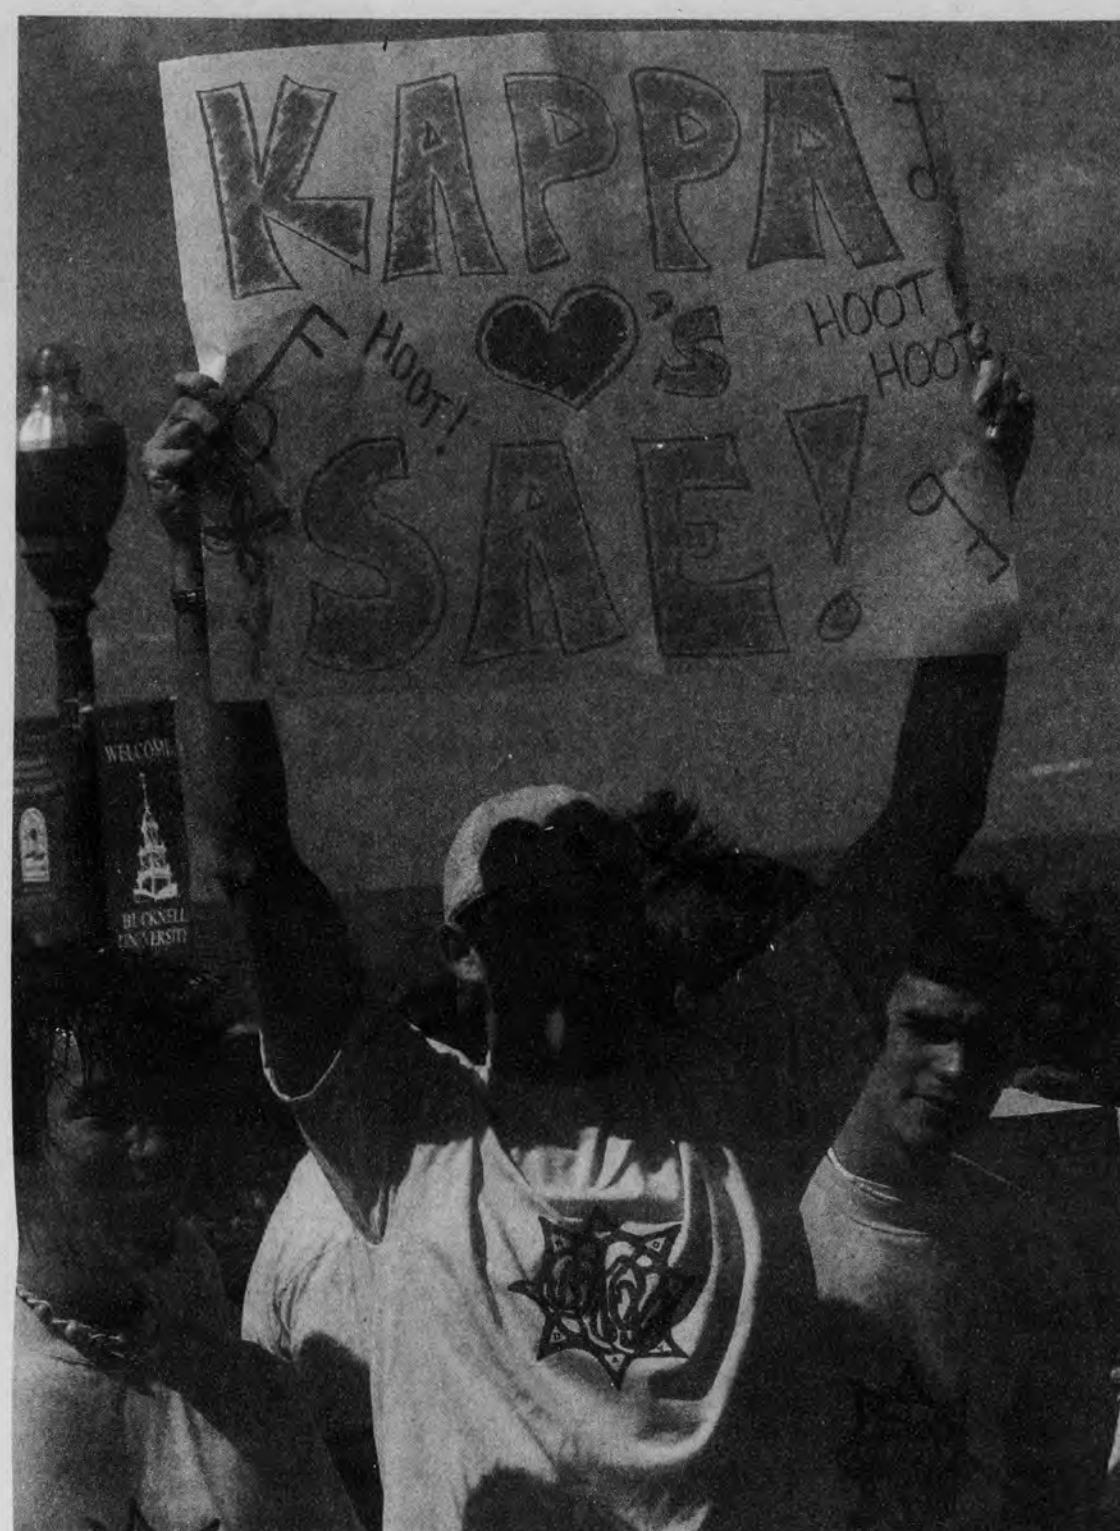

News

RUSH 2003

FRATERNITIES WELCOME NEW MEMBERS

DELTA
UPSILON

THOMAS CASSIDY
JOHN COLEBROOK
SEAN CONLON
JOHN CURRAN
NICHOLAS
ENTHOVEN
MATHEW
EVERSMAN
SAMUEL FLYNN-ALING
SAM GARTLAND
JEFFREY GOODWIN
CONOR IRVINE
JOHN LORD
NICHOLAS
MAURITZ
MATT MCCARTHY
JOHN MIRTLE
ROBERT
NEEDLEMAN
YEHOANATON
PALMOR
RICHARD
PETRONI
MICHAEL RICE-SHESH
CHRIS ROCK
KYLE SCHOENEMAN
BRIAN WALSH
CHARLES WATTLES
SCOTT WILLIS

Members of Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity displayed their pride at the Greek Porch Event on Saturday. The University's 10 Fraternities received new members for their pledge classes.

KAPPA DELTA RHO

PETER GOULD
DAVID ECKELBERGER
CURTIS SACHSE
SEAN TEIRNEY
AARON PLATSHON
SAMUEL SULLIVAN
NICK DENEFRIO
TOM STECKROTH
EDWARD GRUBB
NICK DILORETO
JUSTIN LYON
NICK LOSIER
LELAND ABRAMS
ROBERT DEFINA
BEN FISHER
ELLIOT BENOIST
BRADY BLACKETT
ROBERT MOSS
TROY BOWDEN
JOE MCGILLIAN
NATE POULIN
BRIAN HAWKINS
RALPH ZIRINSKY
BRENT BRAMNICK
BRYAN CHEN
BRADEN SNYDER
MARC ROGERS

LAMBDA CHI
ALPHA

NICHOLAS BAILEY
JOE BALDWIN
NICHOLAS
CAMPBELL
ANDREW
CHAHROUR
MARK CHOI
JOE DEZMIN
PEDRO ECHARTÉ
RYAN FORD
ROBBIE GUEMPEL
DENNIS KERGICK
CHARLES LEISTER
JAMES LIND
DAVAISH SINGH
MALHOTRA
ERIK OVERCHUK
SAMIJ PATEL
BARRY SEXTON
CRAIG RADCLIFFE

PHI GAMMA DELTA

MATTHEW BEYEL
CHRISTOPHER
BREAUX
RYAN CAIRNES
PAULO CASTELO
EDWARD CYWINSKI

RICK FELDENZER
EVAN GEIBEL
ADAM HEPBURN
DANIEL ISRAEL
JOEL JOHNSON
JACE KANDLE
MICHAEL KELLY
ROBIN MISTRETTA-
BRADLEY
DREW O'BRIEN
ROSS OKLEWICZ
RYAN ORBISON
CHRISTOPHER
PRAYLO
MATHEW RAKOFF
DENNIS RESNICK
BENJAMIN RESNICK
JOSH ROMANEO
ROGER
RORABAUGH
DAVID RUSKIN
GEOFF SCHILLING
CHRISTOPHER SHIPPER
CHRISTOPHER
YOUNG
SHEREEF ZAKI
MICHAEL ZITANI

PHI KAPPA PSI

AARON BALDWIN
MIKE DIMARIA
NATE DUMAS
MICHAEL
FARBANIEC

JEFFREY
FERNANDEZ
ANDY FOWLER
MICAH GREGORY
JOSH HERWITT
RYAN KELLEY
TRAVIS LAN
ZACK LEWIS
ERIK
LINSTROMBERG
MASAYOSHI
NAGAYA
BRADNOC CHRISTOPHE
RICHARD
ANDREW POTTS
NICHOLAS
SCHWIENHECK
DAVID SEAL
JARED SMITH
CAMERON STERNER
MICHAEL STONE
CHRIS WATSON
MIKE WEIGLEY
ALEX WELCH
RYAN WISE
BEN YERGEY
DAVID ZYGMUNT
SIGMA ALPHA EPSILON

PATRICK ALLINSON
WILLIAM
BACHELER

NICK BOSSERT
PETER M. BOXX
ERIC BRUNTON
ROBERT CANNATA
JEREMY CHIN
JAMES EGAN
JAMES ERNST
RICHARD
ESKELSEN
TIM FANECK
DAVID GREGORY
WILLIAM
HAIRSTON
BRIAN MATTHEWS
JOSEPH
MCCULLOUGH
COLIN MCLEAN
STEVEN MILLER
JAMES NEKUS
TIMOTHY O'NEILL
MATTHEW PIERCE
BRANDON PIERCE
MIKE PISARCIC
RYAN PRICE
ANDREW ROOKE
GARRET SAMUELS
ANDREW SCHWENK
ADAM SELTZER
ROBERT BAKER
THOMPSON
TAYLOR YEATON
WILL PATTERSON
LOOKINGLAND
CHRIS MALONE
ANDREW
MUSGRAVES
SAMUEL OSTROFF
REECE PACHECO
TURNER PETERS
KEVIN PLOSSER
TIMOTHY REI
ALEX SADOWSKI
TOM SWANSON
JEFF VIDINGHOFF
PAUL YERKES

SIGMA PHI EPSILON

MICHAEL ABOU
JAOUDE
ERIC ANDERSON
ERIC AUGUSTYN
CHRIS BRENGEL
JOEL BUCKMAN
JEFF DAY
DAVID DOBRZYNSKI
JIM DOUGHERTY
JOHN ERNSBERGER
RYAN FISHER
DAN FRIED
MATT GORNEY
JOSH GREELEY
COLIN HAINES
STEVE IGNATOSKY
BEN KEYSER
JORDAN LEISER
KYLE LOBISSER
JARED MANNELLO
WILL MINEHART
GERRIT MOYER
KYLE MUMFORD
CHAD NORTH
KEVIN POWERS
CHRIS RAPACH
MIKE REYNOLDS
WILL SCHILLING
SCOTT SOLOMON
MATT TALBOT
BRIAN TROAST
SAM WECHSLER
PAUL WOLUJEWICZ

SIGMA ALPHA MU

SCOTT BREON
GAGE HODGES
KEVIN KROEPIL
PHILLIP NORTH
BRANDON
SCUFFINS
CARL SOLIS

SIGMA CHI

ERIC BECKER
GRAHAM BIPPART
JON BLACK
MATT CAPECE
IISLEY COLTON
MARC CUSSATT
JIM D'ITRI
ANDY DECKER
BRADLEY DUVAL
BRIAN FINKELSTEIN
PHILLIP FUTRICK
LOUIS GRANDIZIO

JAMES LACHMAN
BRIAN LAUFFER
JACOB MOSS
JEFF ORAZI
ERIC SALZER
CRAIG SWANSON
JORDAN TOROK
MIKE TRESTON
KYLE WALTER
MARK ZIMMERMAN
THOMAS ROOKE

SIGMA PHI EPSILON

MICHAEL ABOU
JAOUDE
ERIC ANDERSON
ERIC AUGUSTYN
CHRIS BRENGEL
JOEL BUCKMAN
JEFF DAY
DAVID DOBRZYNSKI
JIM DOUGHERTY
JOHN ERNSBERGER
RYAN FISHER
DAN FRIED
MATT GORNEY
JOSH GREELEY
COLIN HAINES
STEVE IGNATOSKY
BEN KEYSER
JORDAN LEISER
KYLE LOBISSER
JARED MANNELLO
WILL MINEHART
GERRIT MOYER
KYLE MUMFORD
CHAD NORTH
KEVIN POWERS
CHRIS RAPACH
MIKE REYNOLDS
WILL SCHILLING
SCOTT SOLOMON
MATT TALBOT
BRIAN TROAST
SAM WECHSLER
PAUL WOLUJEWICZ

TAU KAPPA EPSILON

JACOB BASHAW
JON ENG
SCOTT FASENMYER
DUSTIN FRIEDLAND
DANIEL MARTIN
HAYWARD
TOMASZ KOTT
MARC LEWIS
HANSEN LUKMAN
PETER MOSCHBERGER
MICHAEL PIEKNY
GRIFFIN REYNOLDS
JEFF STOLTZFUS
JASON TAM
DONALD WHALEY
JOE YOON
LANCE FINNEFROCK

News

RUSH 2003

SORORITIES WELCOME NEW MEMBERS

ALPHA CHI
OMEGA

AMANDA ROOF
AMY HELLMAN
ANNE WITTMAN
AURORA DELGADO-POUST
BETHANY IERO
CAROLINE
KARLBERG
CHRISTINE KEIL
COREY DOWNES
DOMINIKA
KAMINSKY
JENNIFER
MEITZNER
JESSICA LE
JESSICA MAY JESSICA YOUNG
KAITLIN MCGIRL
KATHERINE
EVERSON
KELLEY INMAN
KELLY FERRONI
KIRSTEN
HIRNEISEN
LAURA SCERBO
LAURA WINTER
LAUREN
O'CONNOR
LAUREN REED
LINDSAY
SILVERSTEIN
LISA CUTRUFELLO
LISA MARKS
MEGAN FULOP
MEGHAN FOX
MOLLY MITCHELL
MORGAN
RAUTZHAN
RACHEL TOOLEY
ROBIN GRIFFITH
SARAH SEGAL
STEPHANIE BACKOF
STEPHANIE
MADISON
VICTORIA FRITZ
CARRIE
LEDGERWOOD
EMILY MILLER
KELLY HOLMES
ASHLEY BAER

Delta Delta Delta sisters celebrated with their pledges at the annual Bid Day porch event. The University's seven sororities announced the acceptance of their new members last Friday.

STEPHANIE
HULLMANN
ELIZABETH
HURLBUT
MICHELLE
JOHNSON
AMBER LILLEY
KYLIE LUIK
ELENA LUMBY
JESSICA KIMMEL
ABBY MACOMBER
KATY O'BRIEN
MARY PANCOAST
JESSICA ROBINSON
LISA ROCKWELL
KRISTEN SANDRI
JULIA SARGEANT
CARRIE TODD
KATIE WALTER
DIANA WEBSTER
JEAN WELLS
JULIE WILLIAMS

DELTA
GAMMA

ABBY ANDERTON
ANGELA ANTONINI
EMILY BURMAN
SUSAN DAMASCHKE
LAURA DEETZ
ALLISON
DEKNIGHT
JEANINE ELBAZ
KERRY FITZ-PATRICK
KASSANDRA
FRENCH
CHRISTINE
GALLAGHER
NICOLE GALLO
AUBREY GROSSER
KIMBERLY
GRUNWALD
CHRISTINE
HOWARD
LIZ JORDAN

CHI OMEGA

MELISSA
AGRIMANAKIS
LAUREN
AMATRUDO
REBECCA CHOI
CHRISTINE
DOUGHERTY
JACKIE FEINBERG
ERIN GLEASON
JESSICA
GROHOWSKI
PRIYA GUPTA
ASHLEY HALL

KRISTIN KHANNA
CAITLIN LANCTOT
KATHRINA LAPORTA
EKATERINA
LUCHANSKAYA
KRISTEN
MCDONNELL
ANDREA MORRIS
JENNIFER OSBORN BRITTANY
REYNOLDS
AMANDA ROWE
ASHLEY SARNECKY
KRISTEN SCHULTES
EMILY SEROTTA
LINDSAY
SHAMBERGER
SARAH SHEPHERD
ALEXIS SHORE
COURTNEY SOFIA
JENNIFER STROUT
MEGAN STUPEK
EMILY TORTORA
KATHERINE
WALKER
AMY WOLLISH
EMILY YODER

DELTA DELTA
DELTA

RACHEL ADAMS
STEFANIE
ANDERSON
JESSICA BEASLEY
ELLIE BROWN
VERONICA BROWN
CC BURKE
LAWRIE BRZEZINSKI
NICOLE
CHAPDELAIN
DEVON CHATLEY
LEAH
CUNNINGHAM
CINDA DAUTRICH
SARA DEATH

DANA DePALMA
ERIN DePEW
MAGGIE DWYER
MEG EMMITT
ALLISON
FITZMAURICE
KATLYN GAUTHIER
TAMARA GRINDROD
LIZ HANHAUSEN
SARAH HARDMAN
JOY HARRISON
SAMANTHA HECHT
LYNN HOLMES
LAUREN
KILMARTEN
MARY KRAKOWSKI
MEGAN MULTACK
JACLYN PIPOSAR
JESSICA ROYSTON
SHAUNA RYAN
KIRSTEN SMITH
AMY TANG
LARYSSA TEMNYCKY
BREE THEOBALD
LISA WATSON
ERICA WILD
LILY WILLIAMSON

KAPPA ALPHA THETA

MARISA ARONSON
ERICA
AUGUSTENBORG
MEGHAN BALL
KAITLIN BARDOE
KATHERINE
BOHNERT
AMY BOSSLER
LAWRIE BRZEZINSKI
AMANDA CLINE
MEGAN FREDERICK
TARA FRY
JENNIFER GIBBONS
CHRISTINA
GILBERT

ANN GRANT
LIANNE HANSEN
VANESSA HARPER
KELLI JARRETT
MELISSA
KARMONDY
LAUREN KOCH
ALEXIS LANG
MALLORY LIDSKY
MEGAN MCGRAW CHELSEA MILLS
LAUREN
MINACAPPELLI
KATHRYN
PANACCIONE
GRETCHEN PERRY
JANIN POLCOVICH
LINDSAY PULIAFICO
MARY QUINTILLIAN
ABIGAIL RADIS
STEPHANIE
ROLLOW
RACHEL SAMSEL
CIJI TIDWELL
STEPHANIE WEISER,
SARAH ZEHNER

KAPPA KAPPA
GAMMA

CHELSEA
ANDERSON
KRISTIN BASSETT
BETSY BLUTENTHAL
AMANDA BRECKER
ABBY BREWSTER
JACQUELINE
BYRNES
CAROLYN
CARMERIS
KRISTIN CASHMAN
ELIZABETH DARBY
LAUREN DAVIS
CHRISTINE DENNY
ELIZABETH ESSIG
ALEXIS FARAH

MEAGHAN FERRIS
VICTORIA FIELD
REBECCA FISHER
EMILY GUYER
EMME HALL
COURTNEY HILL
JULIA IRWIN
KATELYN KLEINERT
VITA LAMBERSON
ADRIA LINEHAN
AINSLEY MALONEY
TRACEY MARREN
LAURA MEITZNER
REBECCA OLSEN
KIMBERLY PALCA
EMILY PETRACK
RACHEL PROWLER
LAUREN RATH
JULIE SCHWAB
CHELSEA SMITH
ALISON SOLANO
KANIKI SRINIVASAN
NICOLE TEITZ
SINDHU
ZACHARIAH
TEAL ZEISLER

PI BETA PHI

RACHEL MARINO
RACHEL ADIKA
SARA OROPESA
SENA WAKABAYASHI
AMY ESKILSEN
MAGGIE
WILLIAMSON
SARAH KOCH
ALYSSA SKALREK
KRISTA KLETT
BLAIR BENTLEY
CRISTINA BEHRENS
TRACY RYAN
MEGAN KIRCHNER
KIM HAUGEN
AMANDA NOGIC
COURTNEY BEERS
MELISSA
CAPPARELL
ASHLEY TOMON
JAMIE FINKELMAN
SARAH SAUNDERS
ALYSON GOULD
MEGAN MINICH
CHRISTINA
WENIGER
KIERA GILHOOLY
VANESSA SHOPIS
KRISTEN STODDARD
LAURA CARPENTER
JENNY SEBERG
MEREDITH DAVIS
JULIE FETTERMAN
SABRINA KAUTZ
MAUREEN CAREY
DIANE SILVERMAN
ALIX AGNEW
MORGAN
GREENSPON

News

2007 From page A1

man class is comparable, although there seems to be a shift toward students interested in the Arts. Engineering enrollment dropped from 21 percent in 2000 to 19 percent in 2003, management from 10 percent to nine percent, education from three percent to two percent and science from 21 percent to 18 percent. Arts, in the other direction, shifted from 45 percent to 52 percent.

"The admissions statistics of the first-year class are extraordinarily good, but qualitatively they impress as well," said Dean of Students Richard Ferraro. "Having worked with a 'Straight Talk' group in Rainey 3 in Swartz Residence Hall and a first-year Foundation Seminar (which draws from Vedder, Smith, Swartz and Larson), I find the first-year students with whom I have come into contact a very bright, thoughtful and lively group."

Geographically, the breakdown differs by a maximum of two percent. While the number of New York and international students increased by two percent, the number of Pennsylvania students decreased by two percent.

"I would be a little careful comparing them too carefully because so much of who they are, what they will accomplish and contribute here is not represented on paper."

— Mark Davies, dean of admissions

The number of early decision enrollments increased by seven students, totaling 316. The final class size is 911, about 10 less than the class of 2004.

COMMENCEMENT From page A1

"The choice of Commencement speaker is important to several segments of the Bucknell community. Faculty may view the commencement address as the last teachable moment in the life of the graduating class. The alumni will want to hear from someone who embodies the best values and ideals of a Bucknell education. Students want a speaker who is engaging, inspiring, and prominent," Bowen wrote in his campus-wide e-mail.

The students on the committee agree with Bowen that Commencement is not just about the students.

"Originally, I was worried about the committee. I really wanted this to be about the students and our day. But I talked to Steve Bowen at the beginning of the summer, and he reminded me that it's also my parents' day and the faculty's day," Briski said.

Laura Day, 2003 senior class president, played an instrumental role on the committee last year. She feels that the current committee should be more of an emphasis on the students.

"I think that the committee should first make a list of people who are appropriate for the entire university, then narrow down your choices by deferring the graduating class representatives. We should give the student representatives greater weight in their opinion after narrowing down the list that the university as a whole would find acceptable," Day said.

Even though students make up only a third of the committee, Briski is optimistic that the students' voices will be heard.

"Hopefully, our voices will be heard. It's not a battle," Briski said. "The members of the committee are really open minded and willing to hear what we have to say."

Anderson echoed Briski's sentiment and feels that it is important to have the faculty and administration on the committee.

"The faculty and administration are important because they guide our education. The administration and faculty realize the impact they have on the students—we're trying to find a balance between the sides," Anderson said. "Originally, I was concerned with the administration and faculty, but they're very open-minded and value our decisions."

The other members of the committee were appointed by the president.

Associate Professor of Religion Maria Antonaccio, Professor of Mechanical Engineering Keith Buffinton and Professor of English John Rickard make up the faculty portion of the committee.

Director of Public Relations and Publications Sharon Poff, Assistant Vice President for Academic Affairs Jim Rice (chair of the speaker selection subcommittee) and Associate Dean of the Faculty for the College of Arts and Sciences Chris Zappe represent the administration.

Briski said that everyone on the committee this year is new.

"The members on the committee have never been on a commencement committee before," Briski said.

Day is also optimistic about the committee, but worries that no one on this year's committee was on last year's.

"I think that's extremely problematic and sort of shocking that they have not asked at least one person from last year to carry over," Day said.

If even one person were to carry over from year to year, many potential problems could be avoided, said Day.

"There should be at least one person on the committee as the year before... so the committee will avoid some of the same mistakes and to have the benefit of some of the things we did correctly and some of the relationships we established with speakers who may have said, 'I can't this year but would like to next year,'" Day said.

Briski stressed that people who are not on the committee can still have input.

"Everyone can be involved as much as they can be. They can send us e-mails [with speaker suggestions], and we'll present them to the committee to be discussed," Briski said.

In the end, the real decision is up University President Steven Rogers. The subcommittee can recommend a speaker or list of speakers, but Rogers gives the final approval, according to Bowen.

The subcommittee hopes to have a recommendation by the end of November.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Economy hinders life after college

Abby Bouzan-Kaloustian '04 (left) and Monica McMurrer '06 (right) examine résumés in the Career Development Center. With high unemployment rates, college students must be adequately prepared to enter an unstable and competitive job market following graduation.

By DAVID LAROSS
Senior Writer

The worst thing about the U.S. economy right now is that it's a bad time to look for a new job. Although the economy in general is improving, the job market is still shrinking, albeit more slowly than during the 2001 recession. Unemployment is up, as is the average length of time it takes to find a job.

This presents an immediate worry for a group of people facing an unavoidable period of unemployment. While most people can hope to avoid unemployment simply by holding onto their current jobs, a graduating college student has two options—enter the job market immediately, dealing with increased competition for less jobs than usual, or go to graduate school (paying tens of thousands of dollars more for the opportunity) and enter the job market later.

Reports from the University's Class of 2002 tend to match with unemployment averages.

A report from the Bureau of Labor Statistics states that manufacturing and other goods-producing jobs are dropping faster than any other type, losing almost 3 percent of its jobs in fiscal 2002.

Meanwhile, the service sector, which includes education, finance, media, legal services and more, actually showed a gain of 0.3 percent—not high on any scale, or even quite enough to keep up with the entry of new workers into the market, but it is

Democrats preparing to do battle

Democrat debate shows candidates poised to fight for the White House

By LINDSEY GENTEL
Staff Writer

Last Thursday, eight of the nine Democratic presidential hopefuls took part in the first of six major debates sponsored by the Democratic National Committee. Held at the University of New Mexico, the Democratic presidential contenders all condemned the president on his handling of the economy, Iraq and immigration policy, with relatively little criticism for one another.

"This administration let down our troops—let me make that clear—in not having a plan to secure the country, in not having international help, in not bringing in the Iraqis quickly enough and in doing so, they exposed American soldiers to more danger than they should have been exposed to. As president, I will never do that."

—Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn.

Rev. Al Sharpton was unable to attend the event due to inclement weather.

Surprisingly, front-runner Howard Dean, former governor of Vermont, received little attack from the six other candidates. Analysts from both MSNBC.com and The Washington Post predicted that Dean, who has surged to the lead in the race for the Democratic nomination, would inevitably face attack.

Dean told The Washington Post before the debate, "I'm putting on my body armor." His advisers believed that several candidates would use the debate to begin their attempt to slow Dean's surge specifically in New Hampshire and Iowa.

Both analysts and Dean's advisers assumed Sen. John Kerry, Mass., the previous front-runner who is now 20 points behind Dean in New Hampshire, as well as former House Minority leader Richard Gephardt, Mo., would be the most vicious candidates. Instead, it was Sen. Joseph Lieberman, Conn., along with Rep. Dennis Kucinich, Ohio, who made light attacks on Dean.

"We were prepared for it," Dean's campaign manager, Joe Trippi, told The Washington Post. "We thought it would happen. I don't know why it didn't."

A recent CNN/USA Today Gallup poll has shown Lieberman, Gephardt, Dean and Kerry as the top candidates in the Democratic field among voters.

In lieu of potential Dean-blasting, the Democratic presidential hopefuls bashed the Bush administration for failing to garner the United Nations' support of its Iraq policy months ago. They said this decision has endangered relations with U.S. allies.

Dean said in response to the first question of the debate that he was glad Bush "is finally better now than they were last year," Denbow said.

Companies are projecting a 12 percent increase in on-campus hiring, which a recent report calls cause "for cautious optimism"—though it goes on to say that a 23 percent increase was predicted for the Class of 2001, a year that saw many employers cut hiring and general recruitment when the economy went into recession.

"Most organizations learned [in the recession] that you can't stop undergraduate recruiting," said Denbow. "It's too important to filling entry-level positions with trained people."

Beyond a simple lack of offers, graduates in recent years have had to deal with a new type of problem—confirmed job offers they received before graduation that are cancelled after the students leave school. While the situation is fairly uncommon—Denbow estimates that the highest recent occurrence was 25-30 instances in one class—it can foul anyone's plans.

When Jim Leahy '03 graduated, he ended up without a job to go to, and had no luck finding one. What he did find, just a few weeks later, was a financial analysis company called Independent Research Group that was hiring for an unpaid internship. He took the position and "beat the odds" by getting hired as a full-time research associate in late August.

"I was dead set against taking an intern position because I was a college graduate, not someone free for the summer," Leahy said. "I almost felt that I deserved better. But taking a summer intern job was a perfect opportunity to get a foot in the door and get on the radar screen with the people doing the hiring—especially in a market that may not look too great. I worked with two other guys this summer who threw away the opportunity to make an impression because this was a 'summer' job."

While the economy seems to be recovering, finding a job still takes determination and a lot of luck. If the upswing continues, the Class of 2004 will graduate into better conditions than what recent alumni have seen, but the old adage of "hope for the best and prepare for the worst" seems like good advice.

Fortunately, Denbow said this appears to be helping University grads.

"Our numbers are looking beginning to see the light," and Bush must "go back to the very people he humiliated."

Gephardt described Bush as a unilateralist who has endangered U.S. relations with countries worldwide. Despite supporting the war in Iraq, he said Bush just "doesn't get it."

Lieberman also discussed Bush's military policies.

"This president is a miserable failure," Gephardt said during the debate, blaming Bush for the loss of American jobs and reputation. "We have a president who has broken up alliances that Democratic and Republican presidents have put together for over 70 years. This president has to lead, and he is not leading. He's a miserable failure on this issue, and he must be replaced in the election."

Kerry said that "the swagger of a president who says 'bring 'em on' does not bring our troops peace or safety."

"This administration let down our troops—let me make that clear—in not having a plan to secure the country, in not bringing in the Iraqis quickly enough, and in doing so, they exposed American soldiers to more danger than they should have been exposed to. As president, I will never do that," Lieberman said.

While the most negative attention was directed toward Bush, given the competitiveness of the Democratic race, analysts from MSNBC.com predict the next event will be all about the question of who will take Howard Dean on, and perhaps most importantly, how will Dean respond?

But the art of the negative campaign is not always clear-cut and noticeable. This could explain the hesitation of the Democratic candidates to challenge Dean. Dean's rivals ultimately must challenge him directly, but choosing the time and place is part of what they and their advisers are now debating.

2007 class election results announced

President Flor De Liz Perez, Vice President Laura Mlynarski and Secretary/Treasurer Brianna Evans elected in a competitive race

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Perez reacts to hearing she has been elected President.

By ALYSON WALKER
Managing Editor

Yesterday, the Class of 2007 elected President Flor De Liz Perez, Vice President Laura Mlynarski and Secretary/Treasurer Brianna Evans to represent them in Bucknell Student Government (BSG). Also elected were Annie Berger, Katie Colgan, JT Dean, Jenna DiPaolo, Loren Fishkind, Shira Gasarch, Liz Lorton and Adam Weinberg to Class of 2007 Congress. Doug Murphy and Sarah Brown are alternates for Congress.

"The election went very smoothly," Vice President of Operations for BSG Jack Phillips '04 said.

The newly elected representatives will take office on Sunday at the BSG retreat.

Perez was ecstatic to hear that she was selected as Class of 2007 President.

"It's amazing. It's kind of surreal. One minute, I'm doing biology; the next minute, these guys come through the door telling me I'm president," Perez said.

Perez has already begun planning for this year.

"First of all, I'm going to run around to all the dorms and say thank you and meet the people I didn't get to meet," Perez said.

She also stated that she is interested in sharing her ideas for the Class of 2007 at the BSG retreat.

Perez, a resident of West Virginia, is formerly from Lewisburg. She feels that this knowledge of Lewisburg may be an advantage to her as Class of 2007 President because she already knows many people in the community that she can contact as needed.

"I'm very happy and very honored—it's fun. I'm so happy, and I know I'm not going to let the class down. It's going to be a great year," Perez said.

Mlynarski is also confident that she can represent the Class of 2007 successfully.

"My first priority is to make sure that my classmates know that they can approach me with anything. I don't want to be the type of person who suddenly becomes unapproachable once elected," Mlynarski said. "My most important goal is to become close with my class, then make the changes they deem necessary."

Mlynarski said that although the campaign was difficult, her door-to-door strategy helped her win.

"It's really hard as a freshman to vote for people you've never met before. I think it was helpful to walk through the dorms and introduce myself to as many people as possible," Mlynarski said. "It's a great feeling to know that my classmates put their trust in me to help lead us through our first year."

Evans also feels excited to have been elected by the Class of 2007, and she recognized the difficult nature of the first-year election.

"I feel privileged to have been elected by my class, considering it must have been very hard to choose a candidate based only on name recognition," Evans said. "It feels good to know that they trust me to do a good job based on what little they do know about me."

In order to make this potential negative into an advantage for her campaign, Evans made sure that she was recognizable to her class.

"I think my campaign was successful because I spent a lot of time meeting as many people as I could face-to-face and talking to them about why I wanted to be in office. I figured that if people could put a face with a name, they would be more inclined to vote. Of course, I put up flyers as well, but I think it was the personal contact that was the most beneficial," Evans said.

Evans also has her own plans for representing the Class of 2007. "My first priority is to listen to the class and do whatever I can to fulfill their wants, needs and desires. But most of all, I hope to do everything in my power to make this the best freshman year possible," Evans said.

Out of 915 first-year students at the University, 582 voted for president (64 percent), 570 voted for vice president (62 percent) and 544 voted for secretary/treasurer (59.5 percent).

There are still many opportunities to get involved with BSG, such as the Appropriations, Lectureship and Concert Committees, as well as the Community Judicial Board.

Write for The Bucknellian!
Contact us:
bucknellian@

Calendar of Events

September 12	September 13	September 14	September 15	September 16	September 17	September 18
FRI	SAT	SUN	MON	TUE	WED	THU
Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Women's Soccer vs Howard Women's Varsity Soccer Field 4 p.m. Dance Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Shabbat Service Berson Center for Jewish Life Rooke Chapel 104 5:30 p.m. "Hideous Kinky" Hilltop Film Series Vaughn Lit Auditorium 8 p.m. Hollywood Squares Smith Hall Quad 9 p.m. Lord of the Rings Langone Center Forum 10:30 p.m. Outdoor Movie Rooke Chapel Lawn 10:30 p.m. Syd 7th Street Cafe 11 p.m.	Jelani Dance Practice Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 2 p.m. Fall Fest: Saves the Day & Taking Back Sunday Rooke Chapel Lawn Frees Hall Lawn, Pent Drive (in front of Freas Hall) 2:30 p.m. Gerhard Fieldhouse 3 p.m. "Hideous Kinky" Hilltop Film Series Vaughn Lit Auditorium 3 p.m. Theatre Showcase: "The Complete Works of William Shakespeare - Abridged" McDonnell Hall Outside Steps 4 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 5:30 p.m. ACE Classic Film Festival EC, Bison 9 p.m.	Quaker Services Vaughan Lit 125 (Willard Smith Library) 10 a.m. Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 11 a.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 4 p.m. Contemporary Worship Rooke Chapel (Mediation Chapel) 7 p.m. Catholic Mass Saint Hall Living Room 101 10 p.m. The information on these events is subject to change. Some events are open to members of an organization only.	Swin Conditioning Class Natorium 7 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Zen Meditation Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 4 p.m. Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Adult Beginning Swin Class Natorium 7 p.m. "Hate.com" Women's Resource Center Video Langone Center 301 (Gallery Theatre Lecture Hall) 7 p.m.	Golf Lessons Golf Course 8 a.m. Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 11 a.m. Red Cross Blood Drive Langone Center 233 (Sculley, Langone Center 241 A, B, C, D (Buttery Room), Langone Center 256 (Center Room)) 12 p.m. Low Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Resumes and Cover Letters Langone Center 272 (Forum) 12 p.m. & 5 p.m. Catholic Mass Langone Center 301 (Gallery Theatre Lecture Hall) 12:10 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Men's Soccer vs. St. LaSalle University Women's Varsity Soccer Field 4 p.m. Dance Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Becket: LGBT Film Series Langone Center 301 (Gallery Theatre Lecture Hall) 7:30 p.m.	Swin Conditioning Class Natorium 7 a.m. Dance Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Episcopal Services Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 12 p.m. Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 6 p.m. Jelani Wednesday Step Practice Harris Hall 17 (Lounge) 7 p.m. Lord of the Rings Vaughn Lit 100 (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. Golf Lessons Golf Course 8:30 a.m. Low Impact Aerobics Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Cardio Kicks Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Chinese Moon Festival Langone Center 213 (Walls Lounge) 8 p.m.

Send calendar submissions to
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

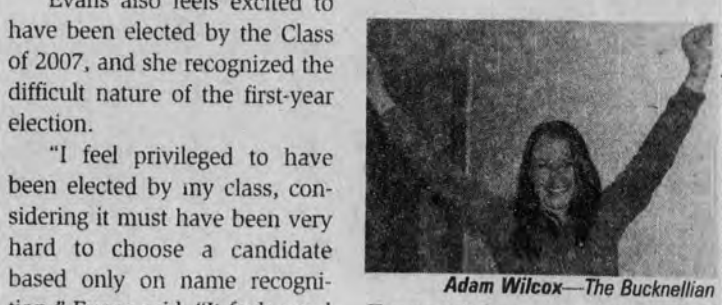

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Perez already has plans for the year and is very excited.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Mlynarski wants to make sure she is available to her class.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Evans rejoices at her victory.

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 132, Number 2
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor
Michelle Dombeck '05

Managing Editor
Allyson Walker '04

Business Manager
Stephen Santulli '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stungl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sandejo Galati '04

News Editors
Elizabeth Salemme '06
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editor
Josh Fisher '04
Seth Astorino '07

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Herman '05
Chris Steyers '05

Sports Editors
Gail Cairns '04
Pat Evans '04
Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editor
Josie Cetta '04
Catherine Hay '07

Photo Editors
Eric Graham '05
Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout
Nick Kopurski '07

Chief Copy Editor
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stancoszek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Enory Strother '04
John Heekin '05
Davish Mallotra '06

Marketing Directors
Joseph Giordano '05
Alexander Kauris '05

Circulation Manager
Hassan Sultan '04

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy
The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the address above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION
The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFO
Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY
The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1065.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Remembering Sept. 11 with grace

One could be pardoned for not wanting to read or hear any more pontification on the Sept. 11 attacks of just over two years ago; with the continuous coverage on cable TV and pervasive articles in most national newspapers, the subject is being used to pump ratings and circulation with little regard for the feelings and emotions of those who barely survived and those whose family members or friends were not as fortunate. We applaud the administration of our University for taking a more tactful and respectful approach to the anniversary.

We have been and continue to be impressed by the ability of our leaders to find the right balance of acknowledgment and sensitivity. On the day of the tragedy, there was a campus meeting on the Academic Quad. We mourned together and found comfort in each other. All aspects of the University reacted to the situation, including those constituents offering counseling and religious services. On that dark and solemn day, we saw the best of our student and university leadership. Much like the rest of the world, we came together. We refused to allow students who were uncertain of the safety of family and friends to suffer alone; we refused to allow our Middle Eastern students to be intimidated or ostracized.

Last year, the events and remembrances were less numerous but no less touching. There was a moment of silence to commemorate the beginning of the tragedy, which was followed by the ringing of the chapel bells. There was also a campus-wide gathering for the Remembrance, Reflection and Renewal ceremony. We all came together one more time to continue to heal.

Last night, there was a candle-lighting ceremony behind Rooke Chapel. Those most affected by the attacks are handling the anniversary differently. A large, public service would only serve to force every student to deal with the complex emotions of the day in public, all at the same time. The administration has rightly decided to offer special counseling and religious services to those who desire them while allowing those who do not to mourn in their own way.

We can think of no better way to respond to the students' needs on this day than what occurred yesterday. In his e-mail this week, University President Steffen Rodgers summed up our thoughts and what we suspect are those of the vast majority of this campus: "... many of those who lost loved ones around the country have expressed the wish that they be allowed to remember and mourn in their own way, and that public ceremonies be limited. The first motto to come out of Sept. 11 was 'United We Stand.' On that day, many of us realized how much we had taken for granted our families, our communities, our safety and our unity in the midst of our diversity. After two years, I am reminded that I can still deliver on the pledges I made that day, not to take these things for granted again."

We too, as students, faculty, administration and staff are reminded that we can still live the lives we should live. Life is precious, short, even for the lucky. Our time on this campus is but a fraction of that life, but we can make it what it deserves to be. Hug your friends and be thankful for the interest and help of your professors; cherish your time here. Slow down and look around today at our university, our campus, our people. Appreciate the things you took for granted. These are some of the best days of our lives; make them the best they can be. Mourn the victims of Sept. 11, 2001, by living a full and honorable life filled with happiness, friendship and courage.

To the editor:

I appreciate the editorial from the Sept. 5 edition of The Bucknellian concerning the sparse representation of students and faculty on the Presidential Search Committee. As the only student on the committee, I have attempted to increase the number of student representatives—to at least match the two allotted to the faculty—and this attempt did not succeed. And even though the Trustees do have the primary responsibility and most experience in selecting the president, I have seen that they value student input and perspectives in this process. I agree that it is nearly impossible for one student to represent the opinions of all students across campus. In order to improve this, I am forming an advisory committee that will meet for the first time on Tuesday, September 16, in Walls Lounge. Anyone is welcome who is interested in knowing more about, and assisting with, the Presidential Search process. Whoever is interested in this committee will provide a lot of encouragement for me; while I may interact with the Trustees due to my BSG affiliation, I will most importantly be representing those students who advise me and seek what they desire for the next great president of Bucknell.

Katy Timer
BSG President

Multiculturalism needs to be tweaked

By JOSH FISHER
Senior Writer

Let's not fool ourselves. The University has had its problems with diversity. Maybe a year ago, I was sent one of those long joke lists that only those enrolled in a college would find humorous. The joke prefaces, "How many students does it take to screw in a light bulb at..."

Princeton? Two—one to mix the martinis and one to call the electrician. Cornell? Two—one to change the light bulb and one to crack under the pressure. Swarthmore? Eight—it's not that one isn't smart enough to do it, it's just that they're all violently twitching from stress. Harvard? One—he holds the bulb and the world revolves around him.

To my own amazement, our university was also on this list. How many does it take here, you ask? "One, but he'll only change it if it is a white light bulb."

Liberal arts colleges and universities in the United States have come under severe criticism these days for failing to recognize or respect the particular cultural identities of their students.

At the University we know this to be true because multiculturalism has evolved into an administrative policy. What is diversity at the University? Diversity is that age-old mantra: race, class, gender and (more recently) sexual orientation.

We have a Race and Gender Resource Center, we have a Multicultural Affairs Center, we have an Office of LGBT Awareness, we have a Women's Resource Center, we have financial aid, we have a Dean of Diversity and we have a Plan for Diversity! Yet we still have the same problem of segmentation of students, the same undercurrents of racism, homophobia and sexism that plagued the University twenty years ago.

Within the last few years, the classical conservatives have entered the debate at the University, combating the philosophy of multiculturalism with the general para-noid suspicion that it is essentially a disguise for the "somebody is trying to screw me."

But where have we gone astray in the philosophy of multiculturalism? Let's start with culture.

What is culture? It is perhaps one of the most complicated words in the English language. It is a matter of ideas, values and more, a collective of cosmology, morality, aesthetics, identity and a general sense of everything about a certain group of people.

The extraordinary efforts of those involved in making the University more diverse and multicultural notwithstanding, there are still better ways to root out the problems of "diversity" here at the University than by carving out the campus into various "cultures." To start, we have to ask some very fundamental questions:

What are these problems we have with diversity?

What sort of University are we trying to create?

One problem is that for an institution whose explicit purpose is to expand students' horizons and educate beyond the confines of one's everyday experiences, we have students that are generally disinterested in doing so, if not passionately against it.

All the "diverse" students enter the University, and by the time that Activities Unlimited comes around in the first week of classes, everyone has filed themselves appropriately into their respective multicultural organizations—Brothers and Sisters Empowered (BASE), Students for Asian Awareness at Bucknell (SAAB), Cumbre, Middle Eastern Association—the list continues. How convenient is it that no one on campus is compelled to interact with anyone remotely different from themselves?

From the point of view of their own members, these minority groups are authentically different. They are what they are, as the philosophy goes, because each group has its own unique "culture," and the ruling group oppresses them by denying equality—or equivalence—to the values of their cultures.

Multiculturalism is the philosophy created to address these problems, echoing earlier discourses of dissent that were fashionable on campuses in the 1960s, calling for cultural empowerment and emancipation.

Far too often, multiculturalism is inward-looking, self-regarding and inflated with pride about the importance of one particular culture. It is too seldom outward-looking or organized to challenge the cultural prejudices of the dominant social class.

And now U.S. conservatives are angry because the celebration of differences undermines common values and threatens national coherence. They worry that multiculturalists are entrenched in positions of power and that in many schools, universities, newspapers and the media outlets, they are strategically placed to foster difference and positive discrimination.

In the November 2002 issue of The Counterweight, Tom Elliott '03 said, "It is becoming increasingly clear that not only is multiculturalism not the saving grace some allege it to be, but it's merely a front for radical leftist politics. And what's more: when left unchecked by opposing field of opinion, multiculturalism can justify be cited as a damaging force upon our nation." Direct from the conservative handbook is a radical leftist plot.

Later in the article he said, "To claim that no culture is superior to another would render the world incoherent, as some societies consistently make great advances in science, technology and art, while others are still eating other human beings for sport."

As if the world weren't incoherent already by its very nature, shattered into a multitude of fragments, speaking incommensurably private languages!

This is an interesting analogy for the type of multiculturalism embraced by campuses—extending the analogy to the logical extreme and absurd is an oft-used tactic of conservatives. The fact remains that people even within the United States assign meaning and value to life in ways that differ from the ways that mainstream Americans do, whether it is in science, technology and art, or in prayer and community action.

We have all come from various paths of life to attend the University, and we all have values that differ from each other as well. And while it is true that identity is found within one's self by cultivating individualism, as U.S. conservatives argue, identity also corresponds to a shared identity with others. A person finds his or her home in the world by participating in the identity of a collective group. The pursuit of an identity, especially at a university, is really a desperate struggle to cobble together a lifestyle that can be sustained for at least a brief moment.

We tend to treat multiculturalism as if cultures are separate, homogenous entities in and of themselves that need to be protected and separated from the masses.

Every culture is fragmented, internally contested; its boundaries are porous. Every culture is multicultural, and all are the result of a mish-mash of cultural borrowings and mixtures that have occurred at different rates since the beginning of time.

Multiculturalists at the University are committed to the value of difference, and cannot do without the ideas of culture and identity. But the problem is that if you are of a "culture," then you become that "culture." This couldn't be further from the truth.

In short, it is a poor strategy to separate out a cultural sphere and treat it on its own terms. We all have multiple identities, and even if I accept that I have a primary cultural identity, I may not want to conform to it.

In a sense, it is what we share that produces the differences between us, which in turn depends on our interrelationships. Diversity is less a function of group isolation than of the relationships which unite them. We need to think about what we're trying to do.

The focus on multiculturalism tends to draw attention away from what we have in common instead of encouraging us to communicate an adventure beyond national, ethnic and religious boundaries.

Opinions

Republican politics, polls and profit

By MIKE NIEBAUER
Senior Writer

There are troubling signs the Republican Party's embrace of the radical, religious right-wingers on many political and social positions is slowly endangering this presidency. With the Zogby Poll just released this weekend, George W. Bush's fledgling dynasty is showing premature signs of inspiration fatigue just as his father's administration did in the early 90s.

Zogby's Poll taken from the Daily Telegraph of London show that Bush's popularity is at the worst level since he took office. This includes the period 9/11, low-expectations period when he proved he was at best a 50 percent president, and many still believed he didn't belong in the position.

The early decisions made by the Republican Party to drift right and embrace the ideologies of the Reagan era and the Southern, Bible Belt Christians is beginning to have negative effects. All one has to do is listen to most of AM radio talk programs to see the entanglement of religious conservatism and monopolistic corporate media.

The sickening result is Rush Limbaugh and his thousands of clones. While denigrating anyone left of Joe Lieberman as stupid, unpatriotic, communistic or worse, they spout their rightist jive. To them liberal thought is a contradiction in terms.

Between the consolidation of media outlets and the even further tightening of ownership rules proposed by the Bush administration, corporations like Clear Channel Communications now own 1,200 local radio stations and many concert venues that have tried to impede the on-stage views of performers ranging from the Dixie Chicks to Ani DiFranco.

Bush's speech Sunday evening illustrated how much the Iraqi foreign occupation has gone wrong for these supposed appointed and anointed heroes of "Gulf War 2: The Search for More Cash." The Presidential speech had actually little that was new, except that we finally have a figure to tie around the neck of the Bush re-election committee: $87 billion dollars.

If you add the current defense budget of $420 billion to the $87 billion just requested, anyone can see that cost shifting must happen soon since the federal tax cuts have been underperforming in the domestic economy.

To this point, the 9/11 disaster, the war on drugs and the war on terror have been great public relations victories for this administration. Kicking an elusive adversary has given Defense Secretary Rusty Rumsfeld endless hours to tell of his wonderful accomplishments, but he has not found Bin Laden, Saddam Hussein or a single weapon of mass destruction.

Vice President Dick Cheney's old firm Halliburton has alienated many fellow Republicans when it strangely got exclusive bids for war reconstruction on Iraq without any competing bids being opened.

Halliburton's corporate family member Brown and Root (B+R) is a military supply specialist. B+R cooks food, delivers military mail, makes the meals ready-to-eat packs and takes care of many other outsourced military needs in the field.

Now that's what I call corporate welfare gone strange. Halliburton has its behind covered in war or peace. So what is its prime loyalty—the bottom line or our troops?

This is just another indication that in the 21st century, the good old boys fresh out of the Texan Bible Belt have a financially bright, if not morally bankrupt, future. And these people in this White House have the gall to ask to be rehired for another term. Nuts to that!

Forced meal plans forces less contribution

By PHIL MARTOMA
Senior Writer

The dawn of realization comes upon every first-year student trying to make use of the meal plan: they are being ripped off. The few upperclassmen that actually continue to use the 19-meal plan are few and far between, while most ultimately choose any plan that will give the school less money and themselves more flexibility when they eat.

I came to the University as a vegan and was told that most of the options available in the cafeteria would suit me, and that I would not have trouble finding food at the many outlets on campus. This was the first of many lies. When I was given the option to voice my concerns to Tim Tenon about why I was dissatisfied with the cafeteria, I jumped at the opportunity. As a vegan I have never wanted to force the people around me to change as I have, and my first thought was that I, like fraternity brothers who live off-campus, should be exempt from being forced to utilize the meal plans in one form or another. I wanted my money back for services not rendered. This was denied, but the option of working with the cafeteria system to try and find options suitable for me was still available.

After I began to test some of the staff about ingredients and how to make some of their recipes simpler, as well as other additions to the cafeteria menu, I realized that they would only be as concerned with the differences that separated me from other students as there were vegans to frequent their cafeteria. I was alone, with no one to support my venture to feed myself. Dining Services would not always be able to offer greener salads and more variety of non-dairy covered foods if I was the only one who would eat them. They would spend more money on new types of meat and other foods that most students would enjoy. Regardless of the fact that what I eat does not exclude the meat-eater, and that what the meat-eater eats excludes me, the cafeteria will not make vegan options more accessible until more students become vegan. I already know many students who have temporarily chosen to become vegetarians while going through college to accommodate the cafeteria but the cafeteria will never learn to accommodate these students. Whereas for some, college is an experience involving the discovery of oneself, for others it is the experience of learning to fit into a mold. This brought me back to the fact that with the services being paid for and not rendered I would again be ripped off. What also upsets me is the fact that when they choose not to serve hummus and instead to serve beef, my forced meal plan will ultimately support the consumption of animal products, which I object, regardless of whether I eat their food or not.

I decided that there were only two ways to stop this injustice, the first was to steal fruit (giving the cafeteria less profit), and the second was to vow never to give money to the University as an alumnus. This does not mean that I will not support some departments of the University. I do plan to give to the Classics Department and to the Office of LGBT Awareness, from which I have benefited. I feel that they have given so much to me. However, I will refuse to support a school institution that chooses to blindly follow the tradition of having its students eat together without considering how to make it more acceptable to its own diversity. While the University of Maryland and other universities have chosen to offer more vegan options in their meal plans, or to simply exempt vegans from forced plans, the University has continued to disappoint me in this respect.

In the dollar we trust? What about God?

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

"In God We Trust." Funny statement, isn't it? We, the promoters of a secular democracy, supporters of separation of church and state, print this on every coin we have. And I think this begs a question: what does this statement really mean?

Today, there are more dollars abroad than in the United States itself. Oil, the lifeblood of the economy, is based on the dollar. The dollarization of the world is at hand. And so all at once, the dollar is omnipotent, omnipresent, creator, destroyer. There is only one god that we trust in: the dollar.

As trust in the dollar is so great and our obsession with it knows no bounds, we are its missionaries. Neo-liberal dogma generates and immortalizes the dollar. We throw open markets under the guise of structural adjustment programs, privatize industry, reduce taxes and break the social safety net—all for the sake of the dollar. U.S. transnationals' mantra is the bottom line. Politicians are guided by it, live by it and are corrupted and crucified by it. I argue that the dollar is our one belief, our one religion and our one savior and globalization is its apostle.

Where else does this tradition mean so much? How far are we willing to go? The Pentagon now considers economic power an invaluable weapon to achieve global supremacy. After all, it was the Pentagon that set up a future market to predict global terrorism. Though it provoked an outcry and was shut down the day after being announced, the truth remains: predicting future terror attacks was predicated upon a free, dollarized market.

It seems then that the dollar is not only omnipotent, not only omnipresent but omniscient as well; it is the almighty.

We need a new tradition where the dollar does not define personal happiness. We need a new structure that does not rely on the blind faith of the free market. We need a new breed of corporation unmarred by scandal, corruption and bribery. We do not need to predict terror based on dollars. We do not want to bet $10,000 that another Sept. 11 will occur. We do not need goon squads running the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and World Bank, mere U.S. puppets that used to stand for so much more than just the dollar—they stood on the hope for global economic stability and well-being.

What we need is a new faith. What we need is to fight poverty, hunger and all worldly ailments, setting aside profit margins and unabashed greed. If we need dollars to do that, fine. But if dollars and free markets are to blindly guide us, trusting profit over human misery, greed over compassion, then God help us all.

In God We Trust? I'd rather trust in humanity.

9/11 remembered

By SETH ASTORINO
Writer

Thursday, September 11, marked the two-year anniversary of the catastrophic terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. After two years of mourning and remembrance, has America learned anything from these horrific events? A fine line exists between patriotism and obsession. As a nation, we crossed this boundary after the event and still continue to do so.

During the weeks following the tragedy, the "Star-Spangled Banner" graced everything from store fronts to homes to car windows. In fact, purchasing an American flag became quite a task for those eager to show their patriotism. The consequences of this burst of nationalism still have not been fully realized. The Stars and Stripes that unite us as a country shone with such a glare that the nation became blinded.

On that fateful day, countless lives were lost. For weeks after the event and again on the first-year anniversary, video clips of the destruction were shown in constant succession. The country became a chain smoker, smoking cigarette after cigarette, knowing full well the consequences that came with each puff. The clips of the destruction became comparable to an addiction.

Did we ever stop to realize the full meaning of the video clips? Each time the planes burrow into the towers, each time a person leaps from a window and each time the towers crumble into rubble, we are witness to the demise of human life. What must this constant replay be like for families and friends of victims? After a year of mourning and partial healing, these people became hostages, forced to relive tragedies, never given the chance to heal.

Along with the video clips of the events, some citizens feel that enough time has passed, paving the way for the dramatization of the events. Showtime aired "DC 9/11: Time of Crisis" on Sept. 7. This show depicts the first 10 days following the World Trade Center and Pentagon attacks. Media critic and Director of Harvard's Shorenstein Center Alex Jones said,

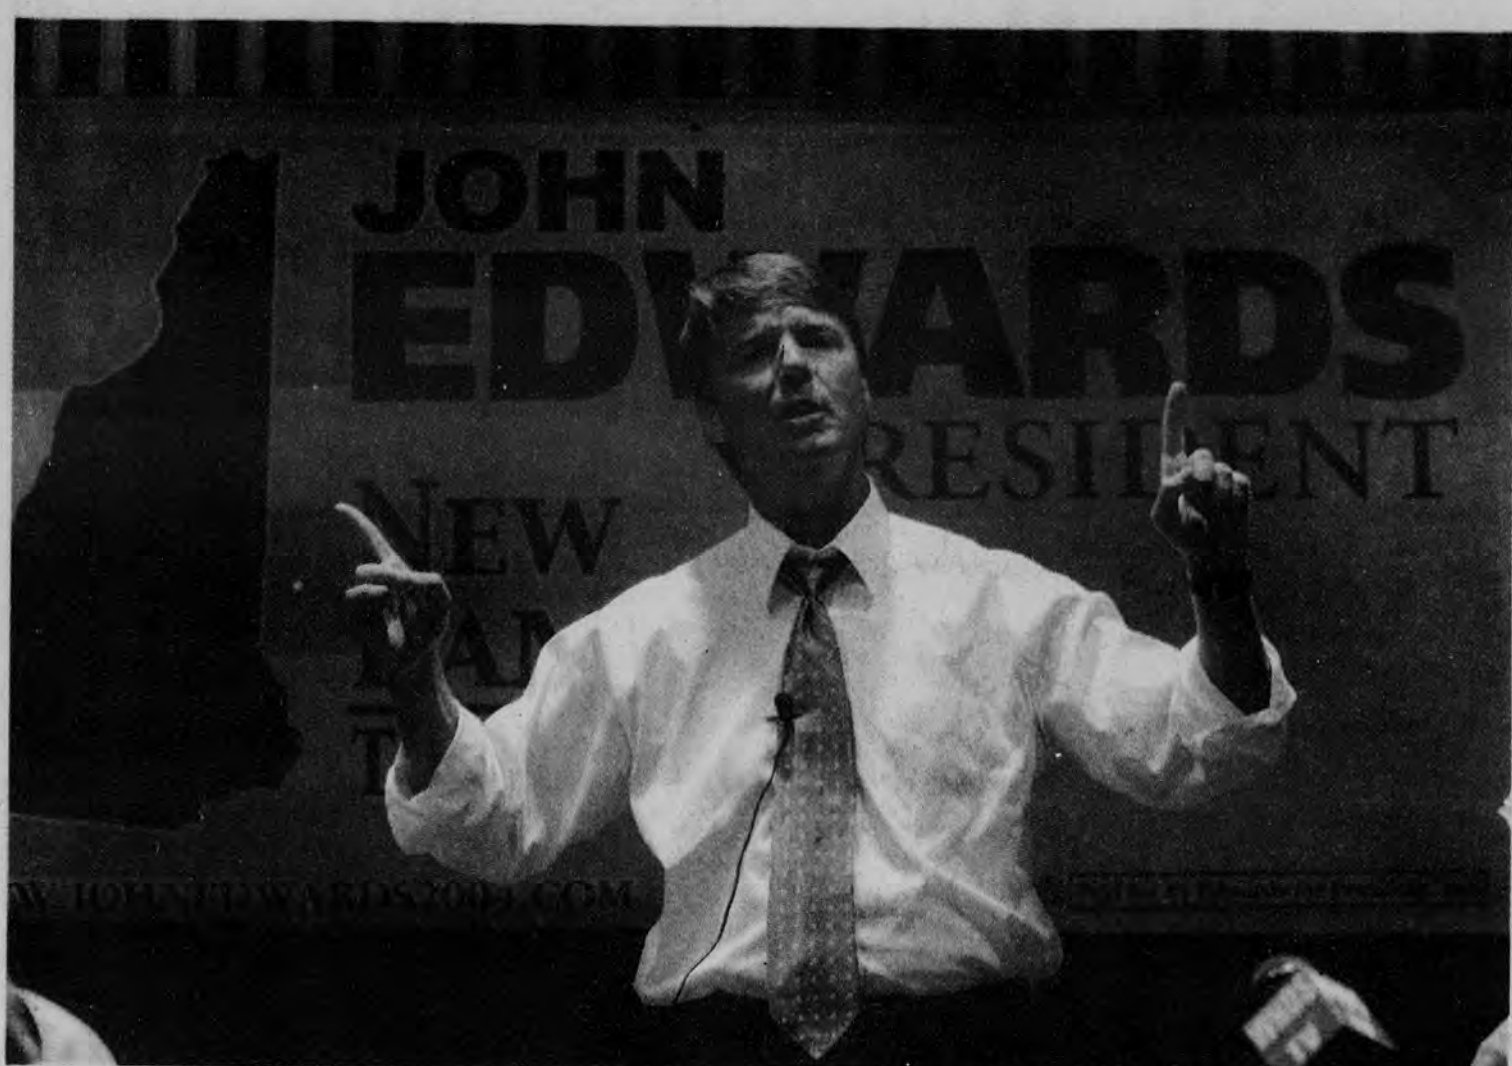

"People are going to believe it is true, which it may or may not be. A documentary about history is a dangerous thing under any circumstance."

Are we ready to fictionalize a tragic event that occurred just two years ago? We have lost something in the commercialization of and fixation on this tragedy: regard for the lives and feelings of other human beings.

Am I suggesting that the events be forgotten? Certainly they should not be. The extreme overkill and media hype should at all costs be avoided. Instead, the day should be observed with a simple moment of reflection. A political cartoon, that appeared in a local newspaper following the one-year anniversary of the tragedy exemplifies the appropriate Sept. 11 remembrance. Placed in the center of the lone storyboard is a single word: silence.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Edwards gives personal interview

Sen. John Edwards (D-NC) stops in New Hampshire on his campaign for the 2004 presidential election. Edwards has expressed his commitment to quality education for American youth and hopes to win the votes of concerned college students across the country.

By COURTNEY HOMAN
B&P Editor

The day after Senator John Edwards, D-NC officially kicked off his campaign for the presidency, he stressed his focus on young Americans. While campaigning in Pennsylvania, he received the endorsement of Ashley Bell, President of College Democrats of America. In a joint interview with the Bucknellian, both men explained the campaign's appeal to college students.

Edwards focused on his upbringing and his plans to help worthy students attend college. Edwards was raised in the small town of Robbins, North Carolina. His campaign emphasizes his working class background, and his wish to be a champion for the "regular man."

According to Edwards, "education is the gateway to opportunity."

Highlighting this belief Edwards has created a college plan.

"If you meet the qualifications to be enrolled in college and you're willing to work at least 10 hours a week the first year your in school then you will receive free tuition at a state university or community college," Edwards said.

When asked about his motivation for proposing such a plan he reiterated his background.

"I was the first person in my family to be able to go to college. I remember the obstacles that I and my family faced," Edwards said.

He does not plan on giving handouts, however.

"I know I worked through college and I know it creates a huge motivation to be engaged in your education and study," Edwards said. "I wanted to make sure everyone had the same chance I had."

Edwards majored in textiles. "I always dreamed of going to law school," said Edwards. As to whether his family considered Bucknell when looking for a college for his eldest daughter, Edwards said, "I don't recall. Cate looked at a number of schools and Elizabeth and I were very supportive of her during the arduous college search process. We're glad that she is happy with her choice to go to Princeton."

He is someone college students can connect with. He is going to put the economy back on track so that those 7 out of 10 college students who can't find a job after graduation will find a job after graduation.

—Ashley Bell,
President of College Democrats of America

Bell finds these particularities of Edwards' upbringing important. "He is someone college students can connect with. He is going to put the economy back on track so that those 7 out of 10 college students who can't find a job after graduation will find a job after graduation," said Bell.

Bell continued by rallying support for the candidate he feels best represents the interests of young America.

"I'm sure that any young person who looks at John will become increasingly more intense as we go forward because I think college students and young people are very natural constituents," Edwards said.

Edwards was asked to suggest how the Democrats should try to offer clearly different campaigns and still stay united as a party.

"We will need to stay focused on the goal, which is to replace George Bush," Edwards said. "We need to focus on the problems in unemployment rate is hovering above six percent, although the economy is growing, bucking usual growth-employment trends.

Issues remain as manufacturing is currently producing at less than 75 percent capacity. If 25 percent is idle, workers are idle. If workers are idle, they get laid off, increasing unemployment and putting further strain on the economy.

Such criticisms have put Bush on the defensive, traveling around the country to try and revive his flagging support, put last week at 59 percent by a USA Today/CNN/Gallup poll. His opponents, the nine Democratic presidential candidates, are seeking to undermine Bush on his economic policies, while standing by him on terrorism. They feel that he, like his father, is most vulnerable in the economic sphere.

RIAA searching for file sharers

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

A bill proposed by Congress on July 16 has the potential to land hundreds of U.S. citizens, especially college students, in prison.

Wired News reported on the Aug. 17 that this bill would mean that uploading a single file of any kind of copyrighted material would be a felony punishable by five years in jail and a $250,000 fine. Proposed by Rep. John Conyers, Jr. D - Mich. and Rep. Howard Berman D - Calif., the bill is intended to strengthen both the domestic and international copyright laws.

The combination of a 25 percent drop in CD sales and a decline in revenues from $14.6 billion to $12.6 billion between 1999 and 2002 led the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) to investigate the growing popularity of peer-to-peer file sharing. According to FoxNews.com, universities all over America have been given subpoenas demanding that they assist the RIAA in any way possible in identifying possible file sharers.

Colleges and universities across the country have responded in various ways. The University of California Berkeley requires students to undergo an orientation on copyright violations before they are even able to get a university Internet account. They also have decided to limit the amount of data that an individual student can download and upload. If the student exceeds the limit twice, he can be kicked off the network.

The University of California Berkeley requires students to undergo an orientation on copyright violations before they are even able to get a university Internet account. They also have decided to limit the amount of data that an individual student can download and upload. If the student exceeds the limit twice, he can be kicked off the network.

However, this limit allows for 4 movies and 200 songs worth of information.

Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston College, Boston University, Northeastern University, and Bentley College have also received subpoenas seeking the names of music traders, according to Wired News.

The Student Computing Services Manager for the University of Wisconsin, Colleen Andrews, said "The majority of students don't realize that what they are doing could get them into legal trouble." She continued to say that she doesn't think the majority of students understand the file sharing process. When files are downloaded, they become available for uploading.

What occurs in a typical downloading session is that users will search for songs or movie files and download them directly from another computer's hard drive, linking the user to the foreign computer's hard drive. Unless users change the settings of their file-sharing program, some file-sharing software can allow data to be relayed to everyone signed on to the network.

Students are some of the major targets in investigations of Internet file sharing. The RIAA has issued over 1300 subpoenas to suspected file sharers across the country.

On Sept. 3 a record-breaking move was made in the direction of defense. A woman, "nycfashiongirl", was subpoenaed for having over 900 songs and over 200 other files including the full-length movie "Pretty Woman." The RIAA has issued over 1300 subpoenas and "nycfashiongirl" is the first person to contest one, according to CNN.com. The RIAA went through "nycfashiongirl" Internet provider, Verizon Internet Services Inc., to find her name and address so that they could file a lawsuit.

"Nycfashiongirl" and her lawyers are claiming that the recording industry does not have the proper status as a law enforcement agency to inspect the files on her personal computer. They see this as a violation of the Fourth Amendment, which protects citizens against unreasonable searches.

Matt Oppenheim, the RIAA's vice president, has called her allegations "shallow" and said that she has no idea about how the Internet works. While "nycfashiongirl" and her lawyers are saying that the RIAA lacks credibility as a law-enforcement agency, Oppenheim responded by saying that the fact that they have no law-enforcement affiliation means that restrictions against unreasonable searches cannot apply.

Women's cross country takes Detroit Invitational

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Bucknell's men's and women's cross country teams kicked off their season at the Titan Cross Country Invitational hosted by University of Detroit this past weekend. The women won while the men ran to a third place finish in the eight team field.

The women were led by the trio of Leanna Natashe '06, Jenny Stevens '06, and Lauren Bricker '06 finishing fourth, fifth and sixth overall. Julie Jacobowski '06, Jen Malcolm '04, Alison Cole '06, and Lauren Kinsey '06 all finished in the top 20 to round out the scoring. The lady Bison's 37 points bested second place Wayne State by seven.

Natashe, the Bison's top finisher was pleased with her first collegiate race and with the efforts of her teammates.

"The team put on a great display of our strength. Our team went out strong, we had a nice pack at the mile, worked together to get through the second mile, and then we really poured it on in the last mile. The key was working as a team and motivating each other," Natashe said.

Head Coach Kevin Donner was pleased with the early season results and especially happy with the efforts from the newcomers to the team.

"Leanna, Jennifer and Lauren really worked well together and they all have a great future ahead of them," Donner said.

The men used the 4-mile race as an early season tune-up, coasting through the first two miles before really starting to race. Wes Reinhardt '04 led the men with his third place finish, running the second half of the race 50 seconds faster than the first. This strategy proved costly in the short run for Bucknell, as Wayne State was able to nip the Bison for second place, but should pay off later in the season. Eastern Michigan University (EMU) ran away with the team title with the efforts of two returning All-Americans.

Greg Costello '03, Dan Lousbury '05, Nick Mousette '04 and Aaron Hanlon '04 were the rest of the Bison's top five, with Doug Crevling '05, and Sean McCarthy '04 displacing.

"As a team we were probably in last place at the first mile, but that was the plan," Reinhardt said. "The hardest part of the race was the first mile when we knew we had to let everyone go. We knew

See XCOUNTRY, page B2

Defense dominates at Delaware State

Bison D forces six turnovers while Lazio leads the way on offense in 33-28 victory

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell football team is off to a perfect 2-0 start after a wild victory last Saturday at Delaware State. Propelled by a strong running game and six turnovers by the defense, the Bison held off the Hornets to secure a 33-28 win.

Highlighting the offensive game was an explosive effort by Frank Lazio '05, who filled in for injured Patriot League Offensive Player of the Week Blamah Sarnor '06. Lazio picked up right where Sarnor left off, compiling 114 yards on 18 carries and scoring three touchdowns in his first career start for the Bison.

"Frank Lazio did a fine job filling in for injured Blamah Sarnor," Head Coach Tim Landis said. "It will be nice having them both in the line-up in future games."

Quarterback Daris Wilson '05 also contributed to the ground game, rushing for 107 yards on 18 carries. The Bison netted 306 rushing yards, while the passing game provided just two yards on two attempts through the entire game.

The Orange and Blue were quick out of the gate, scoring three unanswered touchdowns before Delaware State could get on the board.

Bucknell started its first drive when Corey Mayo '05 recovered a fumble on the Bison's 20-yard line, and Lazio scored the game's first touchdown 10 plays later on a 6-yard run.

On their next possession, the Bison found the endzone again after a huge 79-yard run by Wilson on third-and-seven and a 9-yard touchdown run by Tim Johnson '04. The defense quickly stifled Delaware State's next drive, as Virgil Rush '06 scooped up a fumble and ran it to the Hornets' 22-yard line.

The Orange and Blue scored for the third straight possession as Lazio tallied his second scoring run of the day with a 6-yard touchdown.

With a 20-0 lead, the Bison held strong through the remainder of the first half. Rush picked off a pass in the endzone for his second takeaway of the game and the Hornet's third turnover. Jerome Ay '04 added yet another turnover when he snagged a pass on just the second play of Delaware State's next possession.

Delaware State finally managed to get on the board when a Wilson fumble set up a 33-yard Hornets touchdown with 20 seconds left before halftime, but the Bison headed into the second half with a 20-7 lead.

In the third quarter, the Bison quickly picked up where they left off, driving 66 yards downfield on four plays and finishing with Lazio's third touchdown of the day, making the score 27-7.

Defensive linemen launch into action during an earlier game at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. The Bison defense forced six turnovers during the win over Delaware State last Saturday.

Delaware State retaliated faster than they did in the first half, scoring on a 28-yard fumble return on the first play of the next Bison drive. The Hornets were poised to score again when

Rush almost forced his third turnover of the day when he intercepted a pass and raced to the Bison 30 yard line, but a roughing-the-passer penalty negated the play and Delaware

See FOOTBALL, page B2

Volleyball captures second straight Bison have won two straight after losing first four Chelsea Anderson '06 serves the ball during an earlier game. Anderson led all defenders on Wednesday with 20 digs.

By BRENT BUTLER
Sports Editor

The Bucknell women's volleyball team defeated Loyola College on Wednesday to capture their second straight win of the season. Loyola was able to take game one in the match 30-26, but the Bison fought back and took game two 30-26, game three 30-27 and the final game 30-21 to finish off the Greyhounds.

"We had an excellent game against Loyola. Everyone stepped up and we really came out strong," Breean Trapasso '04 said. "Even though we lost that first game, we came out strong and really meshed as a team."

The Bison were led offensively by outside hitter Jackie Leahy '05. Leahy hit .349 for the match and had 20 kills. Leahy has been the Bison's top offensive producer this year.

Brandi Trapasso '04 had an impressive game with 18 kills and nine defensive digs. Breean Trapasso and Jessica Le '06 each contributed to the winning effort with a .333 hitting percentage.

Jennie Smith '07 recorded five service aces in the Bison victory, while Chelsea Anderson '06 led all defenders with 20 digs.

"We had a positive attitude and a great warm-up," Trapasso said. "Right from the start we played as a team. After the losses at the start of this season, this game really could be a turning point for our season."

Last Saturday, the Bison captured their first victory over St. Francis after a four game losing streak at the start of the season. Bucknell swept the Red Flash in three games 30-25, 30-23 and 30-25. Leahy was an integral part of the Bison victory recording 11 kills in the match.

"In the St. Francis game we didn't play as well as we could have, but we still were able to win. Every game we are just getting better and better," Trapasso

See VBALL, page B4

Economics pose problems for Bush

Proposed $87 billion dollar budget to fund conflicts abroad does little to relieve criticisms on tax cuts enacted by the Bush Administration

By MATTHEW HINSON
Staff Writer

The two rounds of tax cuts enacted under U.S. President George W. Bush's administration have been under fire since their inception. The cuts, designed to lower taxes across the entire economic spectrum, are seen as problematic due to the need for funding the ongoing war on terrorism and problems with infrastructure, as seen last month in the Northeast and Midwest's black-out as well as favoring the rich.

The first round of cuts, in 2000, decreased taxes by $1.6 trillion over 10 years. The second round, a $330 billion tax cut, was implemented in 2003 as an attempt to ignite a faltering economy by speeding up the 2000 cuts.

Fighting a world-wide war is expensive. This week, Bush asked Congress to provide $87 billion to continue to fight the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. $50 billion of this money will be used primarily to finance the war and $20 billion will go to continue the rebuilding of Iraq. The rest of the money will go to Afghanistan for military operations and rebuilding.

This new spending would increase the federal deficit by $50 billion, bringing the total deficit for this year to $475 billion. This is causing concern among Democrats that the weight of the deficit will hamper economic recovery.

A major concern for Bush may be that his tax cuts, combined with other fiscal policies and general economic trends, have led to the beginning of a "jobless recovery." The unemployment rate is hovering above six percent, although the economy is growing, bucking usual growth-employment trends.

Issues remain as manufacturing is currently producing at less than 75 percent capacity. If 25 percent is idle, workers are idle. If workers are idle, they get laid off, increasing unemployment and putting further strain on the economy.

Such criticisms have put Bush on the defensive, traveling around the country to try and revive his flagging support, put last week at 59 percent by a USA Today/CNN/Gallup poll. His opponents, the nine Democratic presidential candidates, are seeking to undermine Bush on his economic policies, while standing by him on terrorism. They feel that he, like his father, is most vulnerable in the economic sphere.

inside Volume 132, Number 2

Inside Features:

Ms. O offers her advice on your love life.

See page B4

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

"Strange as Angels"
A look back at the summer's most entertaining moments from around professional baseball.

See page B3

Fall Fest Preview

"Taking Back Sunday" and "Saves the Day" will play on Saturday from 2:30-5:30 p.m.

See page B6

What to do in the middle of nowhere

Looking for something to do, but don't know where to go? Check out the Crosscutters baseball team in Williamsport!

See page B8

Sports

Bison head into bye-week with undefeated record

FOOTBALL from page B1

State went on to score and tighten the game to 33-21. The Hornets had a chance to make the score even closer after a Wilson fumble put them on the Bucknell 45-yard line, but the Bison defense struck again just three plays later when Mayo forced a fumble and Aoy recovered it at the Bucknell 43-yard line.

The defense made a solid stand with under 6 minutes remaining in the game, as the Hornets reached the Bucknell 11-yard line. The Bison succeeded in pressuring Delaware State, as the drive ended when the Hornets botched a field goal snap on fourth and two.

An 81-yard scoring drive for Delaware State made the final score 33-28, but came too late for the Hornets as the clock ran out on their last play.

Although the Hornets' comeback effort fell short, it was too close for comfort even though the Bison had established such an easy early lead.

"We got off to a fast start and played very well in the first half," Landis said. "That was enough to get us the victory, but we need to play better for the entire 60 minutes."

The win is the second for the Bison under Landis, and broke the Bison's 8-game road losing streak. Landis is one of only nine Bucknell coaches to win his first two games as the team's head coach.

The Bison get an bye-week this Saturday, which will leave them refreshed for their Sept. 20 matchup at Cornell. The team hopes to continue its winning streak and plans to use the time off to prepare for what lies ahead.

"We are excited to be 2-0 heading into the open week," Landis said. "It will give us some time to get better in certain areas and it will also give us more time to prepare for a very good Cornell team."

The Bison defense attacks a Duquesne running back during the team's first game of the season. Bucknell won its second contest of the year Saturday, defeating Delaware State on the road. The 33-28 win broke an eight-game road losing streak for the team.

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

X-Country looks strong again

XCOUNTRY from page B1

that Shane LeBeau from EMU was going to take it out, it was just a matter of us being patient and letting the leaders go. It gave us the opportunity to work as a team for the first half of the race. I think we could have placed higher had we gone out faster in the first mile, but we were patient and stuck to the plan that Coach Donner gave us. Since it's so early in the season Coach Donner thought it was best to be patient and go out conservatively. Overall though, I think it was a good performance by the team, almost everyone negative split in the race, which is a good sign."

Head Coach Kevin Donner who designed the course while coaching at the University of Detroit in the late '80s was optimistic of the results.

"Considering it was our first real test, I was very pleased with the results for both teams," Donner said.

Eastern Michigan placed third in the country last year. "They are very strong. Wayne State finished 11th in Division II in 2001 and red-shirted all their seniors in 2002 to set themselves up for a big year. I had all our men run a very conservative first two miles together as a team. Because of that we fell back a little too much. Although everyone ran much faster the second two miles, Eastern and WSU were tough to catch," Donner said.

Donner is looking ahead to the Iona Meet of Champions on Sept. 27 and hoping for improvements in both squads.

"Our men will obviously be more aggressive ear-er in the race and continue to work with each other during the race. On the women's side we need to get a few more people closer to our top three freshmen. If we can do that, we will be a great team," Donner said.

Jen Malcolm '04 runs during an earlier meet. Malcolm finished 15th in the Detroit Invite.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Take a Deep Breath . . .

. . . and Relax with a Therapeutic Massage

from Rick Hummel, Massage Therapist

Massage has long been an effective method of relaxing tense muscles, improving circulation and promoting an overall sense of peace and well-being ~ By Appointment Only ~

Call Rick today ~ 524-5015 ~

rickhummel@mac.com

~ You Deserve To Feel Great! ~

Scoreboard

Field Hockey (2-0, 1-0)	Football (2-0, 0-0)	Men's Soccer (1-2, 0-0)	Men's Cross Country	Men's Tennis	Women's Golf
Sept. 6 Bucknell 3 Colgate 1	Sept. 6 Bucknell 33 Delaware State 28	Sept. 9 Bucknell 1 St. Peters 0	Sept. 6 Detroit Invitational 3rd	Sept. 6-7 Bloomsburg Invitational Non-team scoring	Sept. 5-7 Bay Tree Classic 33rd of 36
Up next: at Monmouth N.J., Sept. 14, 1 p.m.	Up next: at Cornell, Sept. 20, 1 p.m.	Up next: at Niagara, Sept. 13, 1 p.m.	Up next: at Susquehanna, Sept. 19	Up next: ECAC Championships, Sept. 20-21	Up next: Princeton Invitational, Sept. 26-28
Men's Golf	Volleyball (2-4, 0-0)	Women's Cross Country	Women's Soccer (3-1, 0-0)	Men's Water Polo (0-4, 0-0)	Women's Tennis
Sept. 7 Colgate Invitational 7th of 21	Sept. 10 Bucknell 3 Loyola 1	Sept. 6 Detroit Invitational 1st	Sept. 10 Cornell 2 Bucknell 1	Sept. 7 St. Francis (N.Y.) 12 Bucknell 5	Sept. 6-7 West Virginia Tournament Non-team scoring
Up next: Bucknell Invitational, Sept. 12-13	Up next: Howard, Sept. 12, 6 p.m.	Up next: at Susquehanna, Sept. 19	Up next: Howard, Sept. 12, 4 p.m.	Up next: Bucknell Invitational, Sept. 13-14	Up next: at St. Joseph's, Sept. 14

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Strange as Angels

With less than a month left in the regular season, major-league baseball is quickly rolling down the homestretch. The end of the month will bring the end of several intense divisional and wild-card races—and the end of many teams' seasons. Then the playoffs fly by, and before we know it, the 2003 season is history.

At that point, the media will begin to ramble on—and wax poetic about the season's most memorable moments.

Since I don't have the patience to wait that long before rambling, I consider early September an appropriate time to launch the reminiscence rocket-ship.

Nothing, of course, is more worthy of memory than a classic baseball bizzarrie or a monumental screw-up. And this year had plenty.

Without further introduction, here are a few of the strangest:

ProTECting the plate

Courtesy of QuesTec.com: "The Umpire Evaluation System uses QuesTec's proprietary measurement technology that analyzes video from cameras mounted in the rafters of each ballpark to precisely locate the ball throughout the pitch corridor."

Doesn't that just ring out with the spirit of America's pastime?

An army of disgruntled umpires and finesse pitchers—among them Arizona ace Curt Schilling—took exception to the machine's interpretation of "the pitch corridor." On May 24, much to the joy of practically anyone with any appreciation for the art of the game, Schilling took it upon himself to pummel one of the UES cameras. The league fined Schilling $15,000, some of which covered the damage, some of which was disciplinary in nature.

In related news, Schilling will be replaced by the HAL 9000 following the season.

Base-ically pathetic

Ninety feet can be a pretty tough journey. At least it certainly proved a challenge for some players this season. Just ask Jack Cust or Ruben Rivera.

With his Orioles down a run to the Yankees in the bottom of the 12th on August 16, Cust looked dead in his tracks after slipping around third and getting caught up in a rundown. Luckily for him, the Yankees screwed up the rundown. Luckily for the Yankees, Cust couldn't run 10 feet without falling down again. Boone easily tagged the prone Cust before he could right ship. Game over. Steinbrenner's Evil Empire gets away with another win, and a few chuckles to boot.

While Cust's mishap was pathetically amusing, perhaps the most inspiring basepath gaffe came on May 27 in the ninth inning of a battle between the Giants and Diamondbacks. In a sequence that Jon Miller emphatically described as "the worst baserunning in the history of the game," the Giants' Rivera did his best impression of an inebriated deer crossing a five-lane interstate at rush hour.

Here's a rundown (no pun intended) of Rivera's scatterbrained effort: Rivera, pinch running, took off when Marquis Grissom launched a fly ball to Dave Dellucci. Thinking it would be caught, he headed back for first, retagging second on the way—until Dellucci dropped the ball, at which point Rivera headed back toward third, bypassing second altogether. Realizing his omission, he went back to second, then back to third, where he caught a lucky break as Junior Spivey's throw hopped away from Alex Cintron. But Rivera thought it clever to run home, where he was nailed at the plate. D'oh.

N-Ozzie-ating

Anytime PETA gets involved in anything, it's reason enough to feel queasy. This spring they had the crosshairs planted on Chicago Cubs' pitching prospect Jae-kuk Ryu. The crime? A gory osprey slaying on April 21.

During a sequence that will haunt fowl-kind in the same memory reel that includes nightmarish images of Dave Winfield and Randy Johnson, Ryu decided to polish his accuracy a bit during a pregame warm-up for his Class A Daytona Cubs—using an osprey as his "pitch corridor."

Ozzie the Osprey, beloved stadium fixture and father to a new crop of chicks, was in the wrong place at the wrong time. Five times. At least that's how many throws Ryu dispatched in the bird's direction before clocking him upside the noggin, sending him crashing down from his peaceful perch onto the warning track. Cubs' personnel rushed to Ozzie's aid, but he perished within days.

Ryu was demoted, fined $500 and sentenced to 100 hours of community service, and never did come up with any explanation for his action.

Ozzie will be replaced by a QuesTec computer.

And you thought Jesse Orosco was old . . .

Timeless legend Minnie Minoso broke into the majors in 1949. Fifty-four years later, on July 16 of this year, he added another swing to his resume.

Playing for the St. Paul Saints of the independent Northern League, 77-year-old Minoso became the only player to make a professional plate appearance in seven different decades. Entered in the lineup as a designated hitter, Minoso managed to draw a walk in the first inning.

Hey, digging into the Indies for a roster boost is all the rage in the majors this year—maybe some body ought to point this guy out to the Dodgers.

Now if only they could take the "L" out of "Tigers"

Adam Riggs never noticed anything funny or out of place when he trotted onto the field for his Anaheim Angels on August 16 to face the Detroit Tigers. When he came in from left field after the first inning, he noticed an awful lot of giggling from his comrades—and no, it wasn't just the usual hilarity of seeing the Tigers in action.

The front of Riggs' sleeveless jersey—which he was proudly donning for the second time since being called up from the AAA Salt Lake Stingers earlier in the week—was graced with nice, stately letters spelling out A-N-G-E-L-S.

These people can figure out how to spell "Crutzielnek" and "Mientkiewicz," but "Angels" is outside of their grammatical scope?

I think this ends the mystery as to where Anaheim has been employing that little capuchin monkey in recent months.

Where's Jae-kuk Ryu when you need him?

Note to the Cubs organization: make a concerted effort to avoid anything named Ozzie. At all levels.

Maybe we shouldn't expect everyone to know the verses to "Take Me Out to the Ballgame," but really, is the chorus that hard? Ozzie Osbourne thought so, apparently. Carrying a tune posed an equally vexing challenge for Ozzie, as he belted out the traditional seventh-inning stretch song during an August 17th game at Wrigley Field. The result was a grotesque cacophony that resonated throughout the Friendly Confines, probably inflicted brain damage on several players.

Ozzie Osprey could have done better. From his grave.

Spoiled brat-wurst

July 9, 2003: a night that will forever linger in the annals of giant felt meat-product tragedy. The images remain burned in the memories of all who witnessed the atrocity. The majestic sausages were at one moment cruising around the warning track, gearing up for another gallant stretch drive; then in a flash, the Italian Sausage was toppling downward, felled by the mighty blow of a carelessly wielded bat. The carnage continued as the Hot Dog became entangled with the befallen Sausage and careened to the dirt as well. Oversized congealed-meat replicas lay strewn about the warning track in front of the Pirates' dugout, while their assailant stood over them, still gripping his bat-turned-meat-tenderizer.

The ensuing hours saw an influx of outrage and media coverage. Criminal sausage-whacker Randall Simon was dragged off to prison in handcuffs and slapped with a charge of, oh yes—battery. Fans were disgusted. Mascots shuddered. Lynch mobs were dispatched on Simon's trail.

Thus was born the phenomenon thereafter known as Sausagegate.

In the end, Simon was released back into baseball society, where he recently returned to the scene of the crime with his new team, the Chicago Cubs.

This time, with Simon safely subdued by dutiful Cubs teammates, the sausages charged by bravely en route to an incident-free finish, their graceful tubular figures streaking through the peaceful night sky at Miller Park.

Godspeed, great sausages, godspeed.

Editors' NFL Picks Week Two

Buffalo at Jacksonville

Cleveland at Baltimore

Detroit at Green Bay

Miami at N.Y. Jets

Pittsburgh at Kansas City

San Francisco at St. Louis

Carolina at Tampa Bay

Denver at San Diego

New England at Philadelphia

Dallas at N.Y. Giants

Brent Sports Editor	Cecily Sports Editor	Adam Photo Editor	Michelle Assoc. Editor	Peter E.I.C.	Ally Mng. Editor

Photos courtesy of respective NFL owners

Sports

Field hockey takes win from league rival Colgate

Bison defeat Raiders with strong defense and timely offense, advance to 2-0, 1-0 against Patriot League

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell field hockey team kept its already impressive season rolling with a 3-1 victory over Colgate on Saturday. The Bison's victory boosted their record to a perfect 2-0 overall and 1-0 in the Patriot League.

Powerful defense was once again a strong contributor to the team's success, and its performance was complemented by a solid offensive effort. Liz Jordan '06 and her teammates held the Raiders to a single goal on eight shots, while Carl Cataldo '06, Kirsten Nilsen '06 and Kate Ruda '04 scored a goal apiece to give the Bison the win.

Head Coach Heather Lewis was pleased with her team's effort.

"I thought our defense played solid and really limited the quality shots Colgate got on goal," Lewis said. "We're starting to play a bit more aggressive defensively, and the unit, as a whole, is playing with so much confidence."

The Orange and Blue struck first when Cataldo hit her goal 5 minutes, 50 seconds into the contest, off of an assist from Ruda. Colgate answered with a goal of its own at 19:30, knotting the score at 1-1, but it would be the last goal the Raiders could muster against the stingy Bison defense.

"We started off a little slow in the beginning, but [Cataldo's] goal finally gave us the momentum we needed to get the win," Co-captain Lindsey Gentel

'04 said.

Ruda, who was the only player to score in the team's first game of the season, added another goal to her season tally with a solo shot at 32:09. With the Bison leading 2-1, the next 34 minutes of play were dominated by both defenses, as neither team could drive home a shot.

The Bison finally broke the second-half stalemate with 3:45 left in the game when Nilsen, assisted by Kelly O'Brien '06, nailed the team's third goal.

The team effort from the offense showcased the group's continuous improvement.

"Offensively, we've settled on a nice rotation and they're becoming more comfortable with one another and starting to play real well off one another," Lewis said.

Jordan, in her second week as the squad's starting goalie, put forth another superb effort, thwarting five potential goals while only allowing one to get by. After being outshot 5-3 in the first half, Bucknell turned the tables on Colgate, outshooting the Raiders 8-3.

The win was an especially encouraging one for the Bison since it was against a league competitor and was played on the turf.

"Obviously I'm thrilled to go up to Colgate and win," Lewis said. "It's a big win for our program in the sense it's a Patriot League win and it was on the road. In addition, it proves to this team that they can play competitive, good hockey on turf."

Gentel also recognized the significance of the victory.

"The Colgate game was a great morale booster for us," Gentel said. "Not only did we send a message to other Patriot League teams that Bucknell can play on turf, but more importantly we proved to ourselves what we are capable of when we put our minds to it."

The Bison will look to hold on to their unbeaten status when they head to Monmouth, N.J., on Sunday. That will set them up for their first game on the new turf facility, when they host Patriot League rival Holy Cross on Sept. 20.

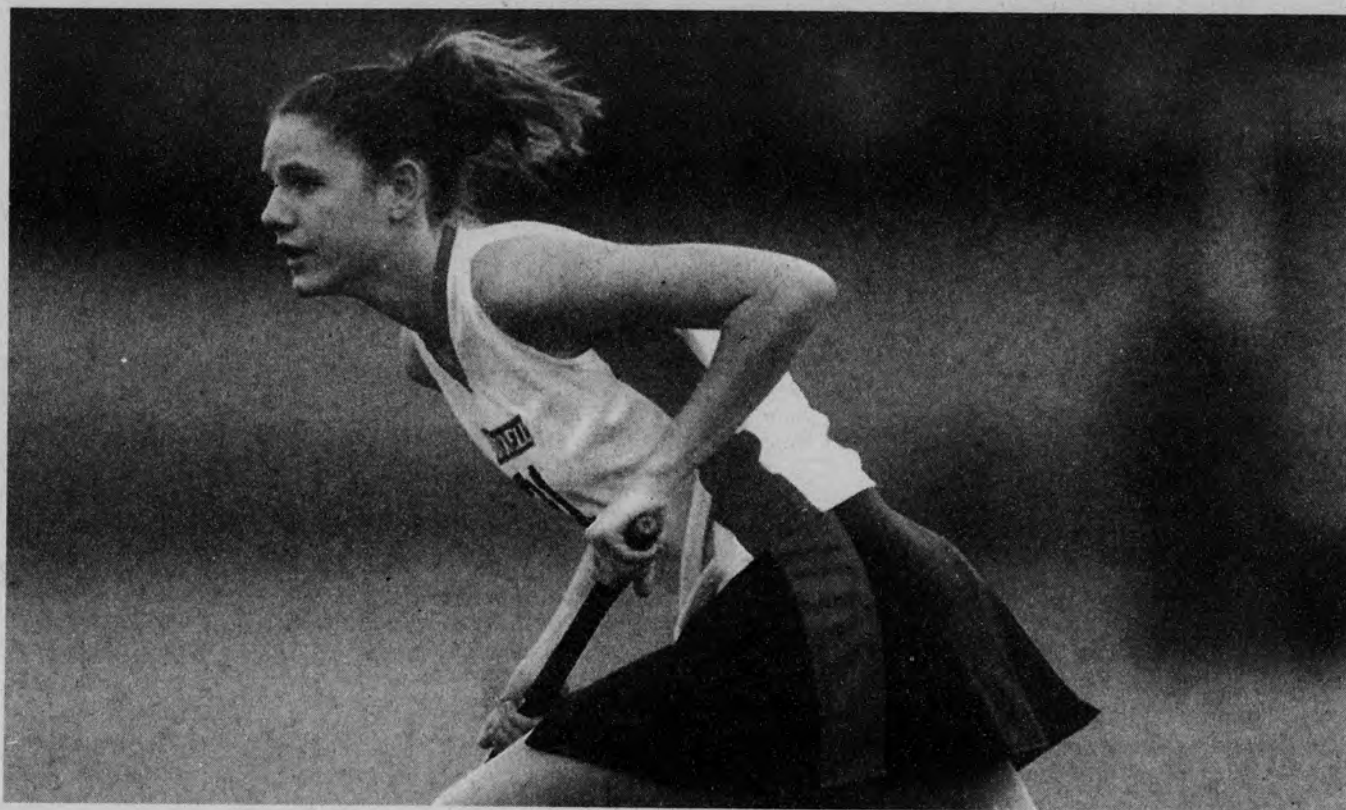

The team is ready to keep rolling along.

"We will continue to work hard every day with the aim of getting a little better each time we step on the field," Lewis said.

Gentel is confident that her team can do just that.

"While we still need to work on our consistency, we are seeing improvement on an individual level and also as a team every single day," Gentel said.

Kate Ruda '04 charges downfield during an earlier game. Ruda scored one of the Bison's three goals in the 3-1 win.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

V-ball turns season around

V-BALL from page B1

Jessica Bissett '05 played a well rounded game by recording eight kills, three blocks and a hitting percentage of .429 for the Bison.

According to a preseason poll of the league's head coaches and sports information directors, the Bison are predicted to place fourth in the Patriot League.

"We don't think that the ranking is accurate at all. Any team can grab that first place spot," Trapasso said. "Our older players are a lot better this year, and we have a lot of really good freshman."

This weekend the Bison host the Bucknell Invitational on Friday and Saturday. Bucknell, Fairleigh Dickinson, Howard and Dartmouth will all be a part of the Invitational. Each of the teams will play three matches over the course of the two days. The Bison's first match is against Howard at 6:30 on Friday evening. On Saturday Bucknell plays Dartmouth at 12:30 p.m. and then plays Fairleigh Dickinson University at 5:30 p.m.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications
Chelsea Anderson '06 bumps in an earlier game. The Bison have now won two in a row.

Brandi Trapasso '04 digs the ball in a recent game at Davis Gym. She had 18 kills against Loyola.

Calendar

Volleyball
vs. Dartmouth
Sat., Sept. 13
12:30 p.m.

Volleyball
vs. Howard
Fri., Sept. 12
6:00 p.m.

Men's Soccer
vs. Niagara University
Sat., Sept. 13
1:00 p.m.

Women's Soccer
vs. Howard
Fri., Sept. 12
4:00 p.m.

Men's Soccer
vs. La Salle
Tue., Sept. 16
4:00 p.m.

Volleyball
vs. Fairleigh
Dickinson
Sat., Sept. 13
5:30 p.m.

Women's Tennis
at St. Joes
Sun., Sept. 14
12:00 p.m.

Field Hockey
at Monmouth
Sat., Sept. 14
1:00 p.m.

Write for Sports

... because God knows
we can't do it all.

E-mail ccairns@ or bbutler@

you were out late with your friends. you sleep through your alarm. your boss asks why you are late. what do you tell him? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2003 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, a Delaware limited liability partnership or, as the context requires, the network of member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Arts & Entertainment

A contagious passion for dance

New dance faculty member off to a good start

Kelly Knox, Visiting Assistant Professor of Theatre and Dance, rests her dancing feet in Harvey M. Powers Theatre. Knox will be a choreographer for the Bucknell Dance Company.

By JOSIE CETTA
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The University's Theatre and Dance department has hired new Visiting Assistant Professor of Theatre and Dance Kelly Knox to take the position of Dana Frangione, who passed away last winter. Knox specializes in dance technique and theory. In addition to teaching several classes, Knox is a choreographer for the Bucknell Dance Company and will be helping with the Choreographers' Showcase this spring.

Showcase this spring.

Dancing since the age of 10, Knox has a sincere love for the passion and expression of the art. Originally from Houston, Texas, Knox has danced professionally in both New York City and San Francisco.

In 1998, Knox's passion for dance reached new heights. Knox received a job offer from a friend working as a choreographer in Istanbul, Turkey. She expected that job to last only six weeks, but ended up continuing for two years. Teaching in Turkey, without knowing much of the language, forced Knox to confront what she called one of the true "challenges of the art form," self-expression. Self-expression became her main source of communication with her students.

"The struggle of being abroad was difficult because I wasn't able to speak Turkish at the comprehensive level that I could in English. I was forced to rediscover my passion and share it with them. I learned if you love something and believe in it, passion becomes contagious," Knox said.

Contagious it was, but after two years, Knox decided she wanted to do more. She returned to America to spend two years at the University of Washington earning her masters of fine arts in dance.

Knox was now ready for a professional teaching job. She came to the University's Dance department, calling it a "solid foundation." She was also awed by the amount of enthusiasm shown by the students and faculty.

"Everyone is incredibly disciplined. They're so involved in so many things, and yet they are still dedicated and great dancers," Knox said.

Er-Dong Hu, Director of the Dance Department, hired Knox and is optimistic about her success.

"Kelly is a wonderful addition to our program. She is very friendly and always makes an effort to reach out and connect with the students. Her positive energy and innovative ideas have given new vitality to our dance community. I am very excited to begin the new semester with her as my colleague," Hu said.

"I have only known Kelly for a couple weeks and she has already become a fantastic addition to Dance Company. For one, she views dance in a way that connects to all people. She teaches thorough and technical classes, while giving constructive criticism to help us improve. Her love for the art is apparent from the second you meet her," Bucknell Dance Company President Sarah Kiser '04 said.

In the upcoming year, Knox hopes to bring her past to the University by inviting dancers she knows as guest artists to her classes. She also plans on having dance performances in alternative places around campus, outside of the theater.

"It's a great department already. I just want to continue to train the diverse group of dancers and show them how terrific dance can be," Knox said.

"I am happy that I get to be who I am. Er-Dong has been very supportive and welcoming of my creative ideas and background. I believe there is a lot of room for growth and that's an exciting place to be."

Art Collective is true to form

Students and community members sketch models.

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

The Art Collective held its first life drawing session on Monday night. This was an open drawing session where students and people from the Lewisburg community can come to draw nude and occasionally clothed human models.

Monday night marked the first session of the semester, which had excellent results. The session was held in a spacious room with the capacity for 16 artists with drawing desks. Nearly two dozen people appeared throughout the evening and filled the available desks encircling the model stage to practice rendering life drawings.

Because the event is free and open to the public, it is also an excellent opportunity for the nearby community to share in the experience with University students.

Graduate Assistants Vita Litvak, Dominic Nurte and Sarah Shebaro are currently running the Art Collective, but it has been in existence for 40 years, having been run by previous graduate assistants.

"One of the great things about [the Art Collective] is that it has been providing a place for people to come and draw for such a long time," Nurte said. "It provides students and people from the community with the opportunity to come in and draw and practice their drawing without critique."

Since they are required to provide their own supplies, participants are not limited to a certain medium.

Paint, drawing and even print-making are just a few of the possibilities.

"You can bring whatever you want," Shebaro said. During the sessions, the model poses for increasing intervals, from 30 seconds to 30 minutes.

"We have one professional model who we particularly trust," Litvak said.

This professional model, Robert, was posing on Monday evening. The Collective is accepting other models to diversify the subject matter during sessions throughout the coming semester.

Campus-wide e-mails have generated a fair amount of interest from students willing to pose, both as clothed and nude models.

Participants are free to enter and leave as they wish, which is another refreshing aspect of the relaxed atmosphere.

The freedom from regimented classroom critique, Litvak hopes, will also encourage more sharing and appreciation of drawing among those who attend the sessions.

"I like to go around and look at people's drawings. It's nice to have them look at each other's works," Litvak said.

The graduate assistants also encourage students to visit because of the laid-back nature of the sessions.

Everyone's welcome to come, all levels, all different types... it would be a great way to blow off steam from classes," Shebaro said.

Sessions of the Art Collective are held from 7-9:30 p.m. on Mondays.

"One of the great things about [the Art Collective] is that it has been providing a place for people to come and draw for such a long time,"

—Dominic Nurte, graduate assistant

Kurt offers knee-slapping humor

By CATHERINE HEVERLINE
Writer

COMEDY REVIEW

We laughed, we "smattered." Good times were had Saturday night at the Bison when comedian Elvira Kurt cracked up the University.

Kurt's hour-long program consisted of quirky life observations and personal college experiences, as well as true-to-life impersonations, including one of her Hungarian mother. She attempted to answer life's little questions, like why it is so important that we have blue bristles in our toothbrushes and why the job of a simple marker is considered to be so "magical." Kurt also mocked the idea of the 24-hour office supply store by impersonating an insomniac suffering from an intense need for Scotch tape.

In addition to the knee-slapping humor invoked by Kurt's prepared material, her witty comments about the audience were also chuckle-worthy. After asking a question to an unresponsive audience, Kurt said, "Do you guys not get out? This isn't

She attempted to answer life's little questions, like why it is so important that we have blue bristles in our toothbrushes and why the job of a simple marker is considered to be so "magical."

TV. I'm actually here."

At one point during her routine, she pretended she was killing a kitten. Some of the audience members whom she pegged

"smatterers," sobbed. "Do you see a kitten here? There are no kittens," Kurt said. Kurt's performance was both hilarious and spontaneous. Students left the Bison with innumerable smiles and cheekaches from laughing so hard.

"I went because I had seen her on Comedy Central before, so I was excited. She was really funny. I had a great time," Erin Fleischer '07 said.

Having performed at over 200 shows, Kurt is a frequent visitor to colleges around the country and has been nominated as both U.S. College Comedian and Entertainer of the Year. Kurt also stars in her own hit series on Canada's Comedy Network, "Elvira Kurt: Adventures in Comedy." She was named the Funniest Female Comic at the Canadian Comedy Awards.

If you missed Kurt's visit to the University, or you just can't get enough, you can view stand-up performances on her Web site, www.elvirakurt.com.

Photo club develops University art lovers

By STEPHANIE MALENICH
Writer

The University's Photo Club is a student-run organization that allows a unique opportunity for students to use the on-campus darkroom and at the same time belong to a group of their peers that shares a passion for and enjoyment of photography and developing their own photos.

The club has no formal meetings that members must attend, but rather provides access to the darkroom and the assistance of an experienced member from 6-10 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. A member receives unlimited film and paper for a small fee of $30 per semester or $50 per year, a price described by members as "amazing" and a "great deal."

The Photo Club has had a short existence at the University, founded in 2000 by Dan Blair '03. The 2003-2004 school year seems to be the year that the club will really take off, as students have shown increased interest. President Diane Hennelly '06 and Vice President/Treasurer Katie Morrell '04 are full of excitement and plans for the upcoming year.

The club had only 12 full-time members last year, so Morrell and Hennelly are thrilled to have had close to 80 students show interest in response to an e-mail they sent out last week. They are especially eager, Morrell said, at the chance to "share the love we have for photography... and to be able to show Bucknell that we are going to do great things."

One way they hope to present the talent and art of the club to the University is by putting together an exhibition in the display case on the second floor of the Langone Center, where photographs produced by members may be showcased for the campus community. This would provide exposure for both the members' talents and for the club itself.

The most refreshing aspect of the Photo Club is the outlet it provides to students on campus who have no other place to practice their love of photography and developing.

"It is really difficult to get into art classes here at Bucknell... [The Photo Club] provides these students with darkroom time and a chance to work with experienced upperclassmen to... develop their artwork and a sense of art," Hennelly said.

The club is also unique in that it allows students the chance to receive input from peers to improve their craft.

The love that Hennelly and Morrell have for photography shone through as they described the Photo Club.

"I feel that my black and white pictures are more than just memories of friends," Hennelly said.

Both expressed real anticipation for the upcoming year and the chance to share this love of the art and process of photography with their peers.

"Black and white photography is so real; you can smell the chemicals, feel the paper... I feel that it is really holding on to tradition," Morrell said.

And indeed, the photo club seems to be a means for others to join in this tradition, to prolong and enhance their enjoyment of it with others just as passionate.

All that the club requires is that members be somewhat familiar with darkroom and developing techniques. Even if a student is a bit rusty, Hennelly said that there will be an experienced member to "offer a refresher course during open darkroom hours" or to help in any way that is needed.

Student interested in photography or in joining the club who have no experience or very little memory of the process of developing can sign up for any of the classes offered at the Craft Center, one of which Hennelly teaches, to familiarize themselves with the basics.

These classes are offered 4-6 p.m. and 7-9 p.m. on Mondays and 4-6 p.m. on Tuesdays beginning Oct. 6 and lasting seven weeks.

"Black and white photography is so real; you can smell the chemicals, feel the paper... I feel that it is really holding on to tradition,"

—Katie Morrell, VP/Treasurer of the photography club

Photography Club President Diane Hennelly '06 (right) and Vice President/Treasurer Katie Morrell '04 are excited about the increased interest of students in the club.

Hail to Radiohead's newest offering

By DAVID ALLEN
Writer

CD REVIEW

"Hail to the Thief," the newest album from the English band Radiohead, is its fifth release since breaking through in the United States in 1993 with their anthem of self-loathing, "Creep."

Since then, Radiohead has been consistently popular in both album and concert-ticket sales, and devoted fans have followed the band through many changes in style and artistic temperament. It had two guitar-based albums in the mid-90s followed by a long break before 1999's "OK Computer," which won rave reviews from critics for its eclectic blend of guitar and electronic-based sounds.

The band's past two albums, "Kid A" and "Amnesiac," have included forays into computer-based experimentation. They completely abandoned modern rock music conventions (verse, chorus, melodic "hooks," guitar solos) in pursuing a different artistic vision. Some critics hailed "Kid A" and "Amnesiac" as "ground-breaking" and "revolutionary." The highest praise that can be given to "Hail to the Thief" is that it rocks.

On this album, guitars make a triumphant return to Radiohead's soundscape. Guitarists Jonny Greenwood and Ed O'Brien do remarkable work on this album. Their energetic playing on the opening track, "2 + 2 = 5," marks a complete shift in the song's sound.

Most notable are the delicate arpeggios rippling through "Sail to the Moon," the acoustic strum and electric noodlings on "Go to Sleep" and the chiming effects and buzzing tone on "There There." Greenwood also credited the liner notes with providing analogue systems, toy piano and glockenspiel, further evidence of Radiohead's creativity in using different sounds in their music.

Singer Thom Yorke's elegant tenor is showcased as well. He has the capacity to sing both gently, as on "Sail to the Moon" and "I Will" and violently, as on "Where I End and You Begin."

He warns, "I will eat you alive/There will be no more lies" and that "we can wipe you out anytime."

Much has been made of the album's alleged political slant (the album's title is a common anti-President Bush slogan), but the lyrics suggest more of an insistent appeal for vigilance than overtly political themes.

Overall, the album is much more approachable from the viewpoint of a general rock music consumer. Lyrics are printed in the album's liner, and the brightly-colored word blocks that fill the cover can be identified as bits of lyrics from the album's songs.

Fans put off by the odd atmospheres and computerized sounds of the previous two albums will find "Hail to the Thief" much more enjoyable at first listen.

Those unfamiliar with the band should pick it up as well to get a taste of one of the most creative bands making music today.

He warns, "I will eat you alive/There will be no more lies" and that "we can wipe you out anytime."

Much has been made of the album's alleged political slant (the album's title is a common anti-President Bush slogan), but the lyrics suggest more of an insistent appeal for vigilance than overtly political themes.

Overall, the album is much more approachable from the viewpoint of a general rock music consumer. Lyrics are printed in the album's liner, and the brightly-colored word blocks that fill the cover can be identified as bits of lyrics from the album's songs.

Fans put off by the odd atmospheres and computerized sounds of the previous two albums will find "Hail to the Thief" much more enjoyable at first listen.

Those unfamiliar with the band should pick it up as well to get a taste of one of the most creative bands making music today.

He warns, "I will eat you alive/There will be no more lies" and that "we can wipe you out anytime."

Much has been made of the album's alleged political slant (the album's title is a common anti-President Bush slogan), but the lyrics suggest more of an insistent appeal for vigilance than overtly political themes.

Overall, the album is much more approachable from the viewpoint of a general rock music consumer. Lyrics are printed in the album's liner, and the brightly-colored word blocks that fill the cover can be identified as bits of lyrics from the album's songs.

Fans put off by the odd atmospheres and computerized sounds of the previous two albums will find "Hail to the Thief" much more enjoyable at first listen.

Those unfamiliar with the band should pick it up as well to get a taste of one of the most creative bands making music today.

He warns, "I will eat you alive/There will be no more lies" and that "we can wipe you out anytime."

Much has been made of the album's alleged political slant (the album's title is a common anti-President Bush slogan), but the lyrics suggest more of an insistent appeal for vigilance than overtly political themes.

Overall, the album is much more approachable from the viewpoint of a general rock music consumer. Lyrics are printed in the album's liner, and the brightly-colored word blocks that fill the cover can be identified as bits of lyrics from the album's songs.

Fans put off by the odd atmospheres and computerized sounds of the previous two albums will find "Hail to the Thief" much more enjoyable at first listen.

Those unfamiliar with the band should pick it up as well to get a taste of one of the most creative bands making music today.

He warns, "I will eat you alive/There will be no more lies" and that "we can wipe you out anytime."

Much has been made of the album's alleged political slant (the album's title is a common anti-President Bush slogan), but the lyrics suggest more of an insistent appeal for vigilance than overtly political themes.

Overall, the album is much more approachable from the viewpoint of a general rock music consumer. Lyrics are printed in the album's liner, and the brightly-colored word blocks that fill the cover can be identified as bits of lyrics from the album's songs.

Fans put off by the odd atmospheres and computerized sounds of the previous two albums will find "Hail to the Thief" much more enjoyable at first listen.

Those unfamiliar with the band should pick it up as well to get a taste of one of the most creative bands making music today.

DMB jams with classic variety

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

I still remember my first Dave Matthews Band (DMB) show—July 25, 1998, up on the lawn at the Tweeter Center in Camden, N.J. I wasn't a fan that day; by night, I was hooked. Sixty shows later, it only seems fitting that this past weekend I returned to the same location to watch DMB play one of the most solid, old-school two-night runs I've seen in years.

I had pretty high expectations for the shows. Earlier in the tour the band had brought back many classic tunes shelved for the past few years. Powerhouse songs like "Minarets" and "The Last Stop" were gracing set-lists on a regular basis and softer, rare tunes like "The Dreaming Tree" and "Spoon" had also made their way into heavy rotation. To hear even one of these scarcely-played pieces would have been more than enough to make the weekend worthwhile. But the killer sets that were to come made it fantastic.

As usual the first show was a kind of feel-out period for the band, coming on stage just before 8:30 p.m. and testing the sold-out crowd of 25,000 with last year's hit single "Grey Street."

It continued to keep the pace, performing older fan favorites like "Rhyme & Reason" and "One Sweet World," while still appealing the casual listener with past radio hits, including "Crash Into Me" and "What Would You Say." A nearly twenty-minute "Two Step" closed the set, but the highlight of the show was "Jimi Thing," a tune in which Dave seemed to be possessed as he spat out a very entertaining adlibbed scat-beat.

In spite of all this, it seemed from the start that while the band was into the show and the crowd was responsive, the band was saving something for another night.

That other night happened to be Saturday, when DMB performed one of the strongest shows of the tour. The set-list was among the most unique in a long time.

Opening the show with four songs from 1998's number-one album "Before These Crowded Streets" (this author's favorite album of all time), the band performed at a frenzied pace, representing tracks from each of its five studio albums, including the rare "Spoon," as well as a few unreleased gems, including a brilliant rendition of Daniel Lanois' "The Maker."

Not surprisingly, as with most DMB shows, a couple of specific moments stand out after the last note has been played. "Bartender," from last year's "Busted Stuff" album (as well as the unreleased "Lillywhite Sessions") was played with more fervor and energy than any other version I have witnessed, climaxing with Dave's passionate howls into the microphone while the band played an intense jam led by Carter Beauford's impeccable drumming.

The night's other treasure came in the form of "Dancing Nancies," a long time fan-favorite from the band's breakthrough album, 1994's "Under the Table and Dreaming," that left those in attendance floored by the raw power of each of the band members.

After over a decade of playing, it is great to know that with all the fleeting pop acts on the radio today, it's still possible to go out and see the Dave Matthews Band and know exactly what to expect—variation, intensity and a love for the stage.

For those interested, be sure to check out "Some Devil," "Matthews' first-ever solo effort (featuring guitar virtuoso Tim Reynolds and Phish's Trey Anastasio), as well as violinist Boyd Tinsley's first solo tour to promote his recently released album, "True Reflections."

"Some Devil," Dave Matthews' first solo album, features talent from Phish's Trey Anastasio and guitar virtuoso Tim Reynolds.

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Grab a slab

Famous Hickory-Smoked BBQ Baby Back Ribs

At BJ's we're famous for our own Hickory Smoked BBQ Baby Back Ribs & Chicken, and our Specially Seasoned Chicago Sirlion. For the really serious steak lover try one of our Sizzling Butcher Block Steaks.

We also feature a wide selection of fresh seafood, salads, and sandwiches, served anytime. We're open late every night serving our full menu till closing.

Steak 'n' Rib House
Open: Sun - Thurs 11am - 1am
Fri - Sat 11am - 2am

374-9841 275-5110
SELINSGROVE, PA DANVILLE, PA

www.bjsribs.com • bjsribs@sunlink.net

Bleu Plate
Café DELIVERS:
BEGINNING MAY 1ST
Tuesday through Saturday
Lunch 11-3 Dinner 5-9
CALL 524-9828

Fall Fest 2003

Fall Fest takes place 2:30-5:30 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 13, at the uphill side of the Langone Center. "Taking Back Sunday" will open for "Saves the Day."

FEATURES

What to do in the middle of nowhere

A Minor League team with Major League dreams: CrossCutters baseball feeds Pittsburgh Pirates

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Staff Writer

You begin to hear it somewhere around your first week here, and it grows to become a phrase both well-known and well-worn during your four years at the University: "There's nothing to do here. We're in the middle of nowhere."

While the accusation that the University is "in the middle of nowhere" is one that could be argued, I've found in the past three years that there is a lot more than nothing to do.

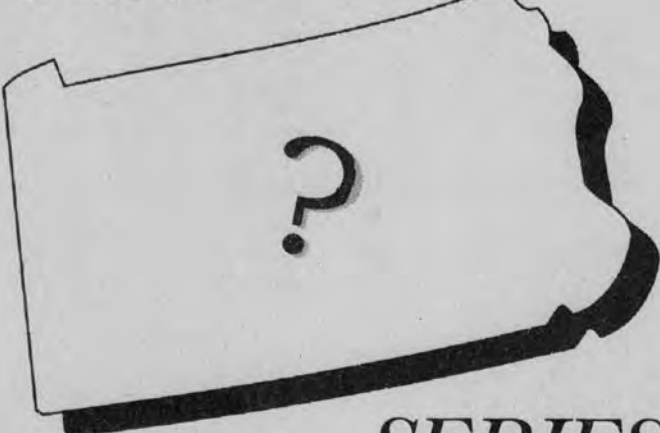

Central Pennsylvania may not have the thriving excitement of the city, or an urban abundance of options, but it does have its own quirky brand of fun and interesting things to do.

This may leave you with the question, "Where do I find these things?" The answer is right here. Check in every week when a new

"We like to put it as fun, affordable, family fun; our most expensive ticket is six dollars, and it's not too far from you guys (at the University)."

—Gabe Sinicropi, director of marketing and public relations for the Crosscutters

NEW

SERIES

local hot spot will be featured.

Yes, believe it or not, there really are enough to highlight one every week. All are within approximately one-hour drive of the little town of Lewisburg, and all promise a break from the campus doldrums.

Our first trip takes us 35 minutes away to the city of Williamsport. The Williamsport Crosscutters is a Minor League baseball team and farm team for the Pittsburgh Pirates. The team travels in the New York-Penn circuit, and this Friday it celebrated a victory at the first game in a series of semi-final playoff games, against the Auburn Doubledays.

Williamsport, which can be reached easily by traveling 28 miles north on Route 15, is home to a variety of baseball activities. It hosts the Little League World Series every year. Williamsport can also boast a huge recruitment rate of its beloved players.

"Over 400 players have gone on from Williamsport [Crosscutters] to major league careers, including Nolan Ryan and many other hall of famers," said Gabe Sinicropi, director of marketing and public relations for the Crosscutters.

The Crosscutters play home games at the historic Bowman Field in Williamsport, built in 1926. Bowman Field is the second oldest operating minor-league stadium in the United States. It can be found by following Route 15 north into Williamsport, crossing the Market Street Bridge and turning left onto West Fourth Street, two lights after the bridge. The ballpark rises from the horizon about four miles down the road on the right-hand side.

Ticket prices seem to be made for the college student's budget; the most expensive seats in the park are $6. My $4.50 bench seat was perfect for viewing and enjoying the game.

"We like to put it as fun, affordable, family fun; our most expensive ticket is six dollars, and it's not too far from you guys (at the University)," Sinicropi said.

Friday night's game held at least six dollars' worth of excitement. The playoff game at Bowman Field had 1,625 people in attendance and lasted about three and a half hours.

The visiting Auburn Doubledays led by two runs until the Crosscutters tied the score in the sixth. The end of the game was picture perfect. With two outs, two strikes and two foul balls in the ninth inning, Justin Harris hit a game-winning double, bringing his teammate home. It was a close call, but Crosscutter Adam Boeve slid to the plate just before being tagged by the Doubledays' catcher.

"It was a great game," spectator Mike Farley said. "You couldn't have asked for a better ending."

Other memorable moments of the evening included a foul ball flying over my head and being caught two rows behind me. The Crosscutters offered prizes for the children in attendance with contests such as the frozen T-shirt contest and bobbing for habanero peppers.

The evening ended with a fireworks display over the stadium. While fireworks are not offered after every game, "they were the fourth fireworks show this year," Sinicropi said.

There's something special about joining a stadium full of people in cheering during those last couple innings of a baseball game. This is made apparent by the numbers of fans who show up week after week at Bowman's Field.

"It's great," Rich Day of Montoursville said. "This is my second game, but my wife comes a lot."

"Our whole family loves baseball; our favorite team is the Phillies. We want [our son Hunter] to play for them some day. This game was so exciting, especially when the ball flew over our heads. And [the players] really are very nice, we like to go stand behind the dug-out where they practice," Deb Day, also of Montoursville, said.

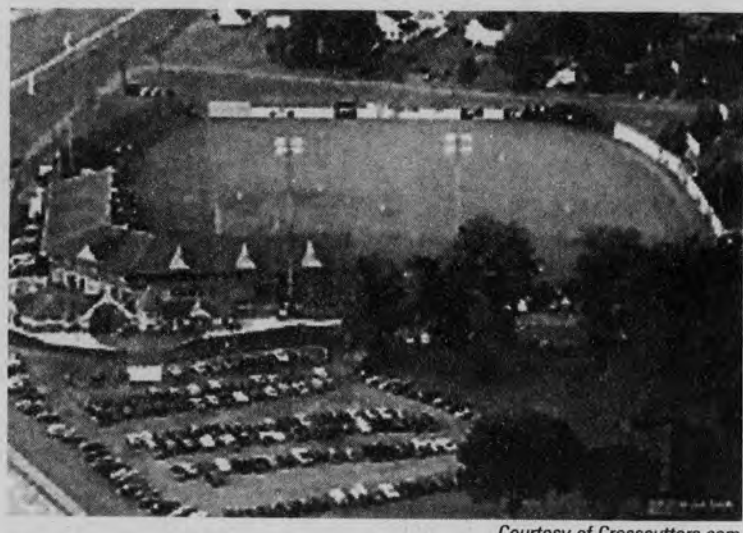

"One time #3 gave me the ball," the Day's three-year-old son Hunter said.

A Williamsport Crosscutters game is something that by students and locals alike can enjoy. It was perhaps best said by their lumberjack mascot, Rusty Roughcut, who told me simply, "The ballpark's just a great place to be."

Crosscutter's baseball can be enjoyed from early June until early September, with playoff games going into next week. For more information on the team, see its official Web site at www.crosscutters.com.

"This game was so exciting, especially when the ball flew over our heads. And [the players] really are very nice, we like to go stand behind the dug-out where they practice,"

—Deb Day,
baseball fan

The Crosscutters' home field, located 28 miles away in Williamsport, offers America's national pastime to all those who attend. With tickets costing a maximum of $6 per seat, it's the perfect substitute for students with minor league budgets.

Courtesy of Crosscutters.com

WANTED: LEADERS/PILOTS
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER IN OUR COMPANY, THIS COULD BE YOUR OFFICE.

For people who will ever set foot in an office like this, but then, few people find what it takes to be a Marine Officer. Officer Candidates School (OCS) is the first step towards preparing you for a future beyond anything you could imagine.

For more information contact us @:
1-800-544-2259
or osomc@usmc.mil

Admitted to PAID INTERNSHIP during the summer in Quantico, VA.
NO OBLIGATION
Dependable LEADERSHIP TRAINING
TUTORIAL ASSISTANCE is available

www.MarineOfficer.com

STUDENT TRAVEL
start packing!

LONDON From $210
EURAIL PASSES From $249
HIP HOTELS From $18
(domestic and international) explore north america

USA • CANADA • HAWAII backpacking, cruises, tours and more don't miss your big BREAK

(800) 554.7547
pick up your complimentary premiere issue of BREAK magazine at your local STA travel branch.

www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL

ONLINE • ON THE PHONE • ON CAMPUS • ON THE STREET

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Travel Operator

CANCUN
ACAPULCO
JAMAICA
BAHAMAS
FLORIDA

Sell Trips, Earn Cash,
Go Travel New Ways!
Call for group discounts
1-800-648-4849 / www.ststravel.com

HARVEST HOUSE
CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

GO Vertical

310 Market St.
Downtown Lewisburg
Under CVS

Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

CALL NOW
Available for 2004/2005

Close to Campus
Heat, washer/dryer, dishwasher included in some Parking provided
1-4 bedroom units available
Professional 24-hour maintenance
Excellent services
Price range $295.00 – $1,200.00

Call:
570/524-2121 x 3

IBRYNWOOD
Rentals

Study
In English
Abroad

The Swedish Program

STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY

Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film
Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies

COME TO AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING
OCTOBER 6, 2003 4:00 P.M. TAYLOR HALL LOUNGE, ROOM 115

If you are unable to attend this meeting, please contact your Study Abroad Advisor or The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323 (315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

FEATURES

Feeding the Herd

Salsa Rico reclaims its home in the Bison: Ole!

By LAUREN MINACAPPELLI
Staff Writer

Located on the lowest level of the Langone Center, the Bison is a popular place for University students to have daily meals. Upperclassmen are known to eat there more often than first-year students, as the atmosphere is less like that of a high school cafeteria and more like a shopping mall food court.

Upperclassmen meal plans often center around declining balance, a popular system that the Bison accepts seven days of the week. With the first-year meal plan consisting of 19 dis-about hours of operation but the actual food that keeps them coming to the Bison and desiring a weekend meal-credit option.

"It's psychological. You get to see the food made right in front of you, and the only place they have that in the caf is at the egg bar," Evan Dore '06 said.

There was a short trial period during the spring of last semester when the Bison was accepting meal credits on the weekend. To the chagrin of many students, the benefits were not enough to convince the administration to extend the weekend meal credit continuously.

"The same number of stu-

In addition to making sure the students have enough to eat, the Dining Services also tries to make sure they are satisfied with the selection and quality of the food.

appearing meals a week, first-year students are rarely seen in the Bison on weekends because the Bison does not accept meal credits on weekends.

"Because there are not classes on weekends, it should not be a problem for students to make meal times here [at the cafeteria]," said Tim Tenon, general manager of Dining Services.

Director of Student Restaurants, Rick Slear, agrees with Tenon's reasoning.

"Students should not have a problem being able to make the times that the cafeteria is open, because they expanded their hours of operation," Slear said. For most students it isn't dents ate, but they were simply spread out more. The trial period just moved students around," Tenon said.

This forced Dining Services to increase staff in the Bison, making the cost of labor more than the profit.

The meal credit dollar value at the Bison is now $4.50 for lunch and dinner, an increase in both since last year.

"Students that were getting meal specials for dinner were not able to get the same thing for lunch," Tenon said.

A price was calculated taking into consideration the cost of a meal as well as the overall cost of a meal plan and overhead, generating the $4.50 dollar value.

In addition to making sure the students have enough to eat, Dining Services also tries to make sure they are satisfied with the selection and quality of the food. The University conducts a survey at all dining locations with comment cards at least once a year. This method is preferred over the popular e-mail survey because they feel the survey would go unnoticed and be casually deleted. Taking a survey in person gives you the chance to receive an occasional bonus, such as a bottle of the University's finest water or a gift certificate.

In the tradition of student satisfaction, the Bison has a number of dining options. They include the Sky Ranch Grill, Pete's Arena, Subversions and the returning Salsa Rico. Many are happy to see the return of this Tex-Mex style establishment. It was temporarily removed from the lineup at the end of last semester.

Dining Services, in an effort to improve dining quality, brought in Sandella's, a wrap and rice bowl establishment, for a test period. Sandella's was met with mixed reviews. Some students and staff enjoyed Sandella's, while others longed for the spice of Salsa Rico to return. The remaining population seemed to have no preference.

"I only eat at Salsa Rico occasionally. Their quesadillas are really good and the lines are not as long as some of the other places in the Bison," Katherine Bohner '06 said.

However for those of you who loved Sandella's, do not fear. While Salsa Rico has reclaimed its home in the Bison, Sandella's has a new home in Larison Dining Hall, open Monday through Friday for your dining pleasure. Though the perks of the Bison may seem innumerable, don't forget about the caf.

Sandella's, which made a brief appearance in the Bison last spring, is now located in Larison Dining Hall (top). The Bison welcomes back Salsa Rico (bottom left), but students should remember that only the Caf (bottom right) accepts meal credits on the weekend.

"It's a much better deal, especially for those with an appetite," Tenon said. There is also a larger selection for health-conscious patrons.

Flip flops: from shower shoes to snow boots

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Feet are a beautiful thing. They take us where we want to go in spite of bunions, corns and blisters. They even provide us with an outlet for our feminine artistic endeavors via toenail polish. Still, most students at the University do not treat their feet with the tender loving care they deserve.

Flip-flops, the almost unanimously preferred footwear of University students, provide very little arch support or protection from the elements. Yet they are versatile, braving everything from dorm showers to Lewisburg snowstorms, which is why there are very few who'd trade their favorite sandals for a confining pair of sneakers or go-go boots.

Of the many purposes they serve, the most important function of flip-flops is unquestionably their capacity to protect our innocent, virgin feet from the dingy dormitory showers. We trudge around barefoot, subjecting our soles to turmoil and strife. Yet to expose them to the infestation that is a University shower is the worst fate that could ever befall a foot. With ringworm, athlete's foot and other unsightly infestations making periodic appearances across campus, 'shower-shoes' are imperative. To be caught without them is not only a collegiate faux pas but also a major health risk.

Shower shoes can be as hip as they are necessary. Wal-Mart has colors and styles enough to match everyone's flair. And they are inexpensive enough to replace periodically, so you don't have to scrub off the soap scum with your favorite toothbrush. If you simply can't grow accustomed to the idea of your feet not being free in the warmth of the shower, think of your social life. A flash of blue on your feet as you head to the bathroom is far more attractive than a green and yellow oozing infection. Flip-flops will help you meet the ladies and pimp the men, while parasitic worms most certainly will not.

Flip-flops provide a versatile and essential accessory to every occasion. Whether wearing them to the shower or to a party, to go without is unthinkable.

Flip-flops are not only a most crucial addition to every showertrip, but they also provide a compliment to every outfit in every season. Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night will keep college students from donning their favorite pair. Each of us has at least one pair in our closets, which has undoubtedly seen the likes of class, parties and even church. Flip-flops, worn with dress pants and a tie, are now accepted among most collegiate men, and have long been accepted among well-dressed college women. Traditional leather, platform and even dazzling beaded varieties are available, allowing for every foot to exist in the highest style.

Don't worry about the approaching winter infringing upon your vast shoe selection, for students here are apparently oblivious to snow. We are willing to numb our toes and brave the cold, wearing flip-flops religiously throughout the winter months. There are a select few who will try and slip a pair of socks on with the flip-flops, succeeding only in making their toes ridiculously uncomfortable. Most find the cold more bearable than this strange look.

So whether your flip-flops keep you safe from the darker side of dormitory living or expose your beloved feet to the curses of winter, I'm sure everyone would agree they are a crucial part of college life. To be without them is almost certainly guaranteeing yourself an uncomfortable and embarrassing infection, as well as depriving your wardrobe of a most crucial accessory.

Want to tell Mom and Dad what's happening on campus, but don't have the time? Give them the gift of knowledge; give yourself the gift of time—a subscription to The Bucknellian.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail to The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837.

Name _____ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues through May 2004 for $45 (a $15 savings)
Address _____ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify _____
Phone _____
E-mail _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

FEATURES

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Walking down 7th Street and past Smith Residence Hall, prospective students enjoy an afternoon tour of the University. With the steadily rising tuition, the final price tag of their college education may be much more than they anticipated.

Tuition costs continue to rise

With increasing prices, cutting class costs you $231.98 per day

By AMY WAGNER
Writer

For those students who currently juggle their school work, extra curricular activities, social life, and a job to help cover the costs of college tuition, you are not alone. With tuition rising at public and private colleges across the United States, many college students are working part time throughout their education and saving to pay off student loans.

More students are in need of financial aid across the country because of rising tuition bills, but this is not a new problem, according to Barmak Nassarian, the Associate Executive Director of the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers.

"The tuition hikes were part of a pattern that began when governments gradually began shifting the burden of funding education to students and their parents in the late 1970s," Nassarian said, according to CNN.com. Even though this pattern of annual tuition increases began well before any of us were even a twinkle in our fathers' eyes, we as college students deal with this issue every day. Students at the University have felt the impact of tuition hikes just as much as students at institutions around the country, many of which have been considerable amounts.

According to ABCNews.com, the average cost of a four-year college education has risen 43 percent at private institutions and 49 percent at public institutions since 1992. Personal income rose only 2.2 percent, as per ABCNews.com, and when compared with the large increases in tuition, college becomes an even heavier monetary burden. At the University, tuition has risen this year again as it has in the past. Tuition for the 2003-2004 school year is $28,764.00. Additional fees, including the Student Activities Fee and room and board bring the final cost up to a lofty $35,262.00. This breaks down to $231.98 per student per academic day at the University. It's no secret that the University's tuition has increased, and according to Andrea Leithner, the director of Financial Aid, the cost of tuition and fees rose approximately 5 percent from last year. While this may seem like a large increase, Leithner says that tuition rises about that percentage every year, and some years it may rise even more. For instance, in the 2002-2003 school year, the cost of tuition and fees rose approximately 8 percent from the previous year. Despite increases in college tuition bills, Leithner states that the number of students seeking financial aid has not risen a significant percentage.

Since 1992, the average cost of a four year college education has risen 43 percent at private institutions and 49 percent at public institutions.

"Sending a child to a private institution would have consumed 162 percent of a low-income family's earnings, compared with 44 percent of the earnings of a high-income family," CNN.com reported in 2003.

There are several ways for students to combat the rising tuition costs in the falling economy, ranging from financial aid from universities to applying for scholarships and "Education Savings Accounts" (ESA). An ESA is not for everyone; however, it is a good option for a parent to save for a child's college education early on. An ESA allows the parent to invest up to $2,000 per year for his or her child's future education. The money invested grows tax-free, and all withdrawals can be used for college expenses.

"College Board President Donald Stewart urged families to begin saving early for college expenses, but he also said that the majority of students at four-year colleges and universities pay less than $4,000 a year for tuition and fees," CNN.com reports.

It seems that beginning to save early may be the most practical strategy for combating the cost of college.

While the rising cost of college tuition is a problem for many college students, the University offers financial aid to approximately 50 percent of the student population. Since this is a private institution, the tuition is much higher than at a public university. The education we would receive from any college would make our earning expense worth every penny, according to Lawrence Gladieux, an analyst with the College Board, as quoted on CNN.com.

At the University, the cost of tuition may give many students headaches throughout their four years here at college and for a few years afterward, but the promise of education helps make it seem worthwhile.

Ms.

presents ...

Sex and the Bubble

Answering your burning questions

Dear Bucknell,

Of this I've been thinking: SEX. Yes, that's right, sex. It's about time that someone blew the lid off of this can of worms and talked about all the dirty details behind Bucknell's relationships and hookups. Let's face it: sex is the driving force behind much of the social scene here in the "bubble." The more I talk to people, the more I realize that Bucknellians seem to be lost when it comes to dealing with sex and relationships. Therefore, I, the lovely and talented Ms. O, have taken it upon myself to begin writing this column, to deal with the questions I know all of you want answers to. Here's how this works: You send me your most agonizing and tormenting questions and problems relating to sex, relationships, hookups, love and whatever else you can think of and I will give you all the answers. I promise not to hold anything back and to give you the most brutal and uncensored information possible.

This week, I have chosen an extremely common question to answer ... I mean address:

Dear Ms. O,

I have been dating a guy who is really shy. The problem is that I'm shy too, so neither one of us has the guts to initiate any kind of physical contact. We haven't been able to get past kissing and I know that we both want to move our relationship on to a more physical level. Help!

-K

Dear 'K,'

Don't worry. This "problem" that you two are having is something that can be fixed quite easily. It is extremely normal to be scared or intimidated about making the first move. Once one of you makes the first move, the ice will be broken and everything will go a lot easier.

Initiating doesn't mean that you have to come on really strong or attack your guy. In fact, you should do the exact opposite. The next time you are cuddling, try nuzzling his neck a little bit. This will probably catch him completely off guard, but will thrill him nonetheless. After you just kind of sniff him for a little bit, you can move on to light little kisses and licks on his neck. If this is too forward for you, then you can tell him to lie face down on your bed or couch and offer to give him a massage. Start by simply kneading his shoulders, then move down lower on his back.

Once he begins to get used to the harder sensation of the kneading, move on to gentle rubbing in slow, circular motions. The circular pattern will confuse the nerve-endings in his back and drive him crazy. He won't know where you are going to touch next. If you are feeling really daring, then you can throw in some light kisses up and down his back, especially on his spine. This will create a whole new sensation and will really get his blood pumping. I guarantee you that these simple maneuvers will knock his socks off. Your guy won't know what hit him, and before you know it, the two of you will forget all about your inhibitions. Good Luck, and happy hooking up!

-Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question(s) in the form of a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

Where is the craziest place that you have hooked up?

Wings and things at the Lewisburg Hotel

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

If you happen to find yourself meandering along the quaint sidewalk of Market Street and the stir of hunger rises in your belly, there are a number of fabulous establishments where you can grab a tasty bite to satisfy your cravings. On this particular occasion, I would like to suggest the Lewisburg Hotel as the first place you should stop.

This fantastic restaurant, nestled within the walls of a still functioning, Victorian-style hotel, has something for everyone. From Wing Night on Thursday to lunch or dinner any day of the week, the Lewisburg Hotel is certain to satisfy your eager stomach.

I took two of the toughest critics around, my grandparents, and my more amiable roommate to lunch at the hotel. As much as I love them, the seagarians, better known as Ben and Nancy Maliken, are both critical of their food and are experienced in the ways of fine dining, so I knew they'd share their honest opinions. Our meal choices ranged from a Southwest chicken wrap to a Greek salad, all of which earned the Lewisburg Hotel our praises.

To begin with the most difficult customers, my more health-conscious grandmother had a piping-hot bowl of wild mushroom soup complemented by a Greek salad, while my grandfather opted for the more exotic crab cake sandwich. Both were wholly satisfied with their selections and had only the most wonderful things to say.

"The sandwich was so large I couldn't have eaten another bite, though I would've liked to have been able to," Ben Maliken said. Nancy, though also a huge fan, found that her meal did not match the caliber of her own cooking.

"The baby spinach leaves were nice and fresh, and the vinaigrette tastes almost as good as my homemade," Nancy Maliken said.

All in all, both of these selections earned A's for pleasing flavor and adequate portion size.

My roommate and I were

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian
The Lewisburg Hotel warms Market Street with its antique Victorian style. University students have enjoyed the much acclaimed Wing Night here every Thursday for years.

much easier to please. That didn't undermine the impressive quality of our meals, however. I enjoyed a Southwest chicken wrap, a festive blackbean/corn medley with a kick of Jack Daniels marinated chicken. It was not only delicious, earning an A+ (blowing away its wrap counterparts at the Bison), but it was also huge. Halfway through, I was stuffed, and opted to bring the rest home as I reached the threshold of discomfort.

Ectle Altman '06, my roommate with the most refined palate, chose the classic cheeseburger, which she complemented with lettuce, tomato and ketchup. Accompanied by a monstrous portion of French fries, this burger earned both an A and her future recommendation.

"The burger was a little overwhelming, bursting out of the bun, but it was done exactly as I'd requested and was a welcome change from the 'burgers' of the caf," Altman said.

In addition to a fabulous lunch and dinner menu, the Lewisburg Hotel offers a special fiesta on Thursday nights that is very popular among University students.

Wing night, which offers a selection of chicken wings including plain, BBQ and hot wings, draws both students and locals in hordes and presents a wonderful atmosphere along with great wings. It's more relaxed than the everyday dining experience, and for approximately $10 per person, you get 20 hearty wings, which is usually enough to curb the appetite rather nicely.

"The wings are really good, and not that expensive. I don't think I could eat more than 20 anyway," Alex Mejean '06 said. "It's a blend of locals and students, all there for the same reason."

And so, my hungry little readers, I suggest that when you take that inevitable walk to CVS for life's little necessities, you bring your appetite in tow. Bid the caf a fond farewell just this once, and invest a few of your precious college dollars in a meal you're sure to enjoy.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

<http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian>

September 19, 2003

inside

Volume 132, Number 3

News:

Looking back at the great flood of 1999

See page A3

Ataris to co-headline with Mraz for concert

Courtesy of www.ataris.com

The Ataris will co-headline with Jason Mraz at this year's fall concert. The University Concert Committee hopes to appeal to many musical tastes on campus.

By ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

The University Concert Committee has announced that the punk band The Ataris will co-headline with Jason Mraz for this year's fall concert. This is the first time that Mraz and The Ataris will perform together.

"We are really excited about this," said Karl Conrad Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Activities and Programs. "The local radio stations have said that this will probably be one of our biggest concerts in a couple of years, and they are really excited about it. I always get my feeling about how good the show will be by the local radio stations' responses, and from their responses I think it will be great."

The Ataris' newest album, "So Long, Astoria," was released by Columbia Records in March and includes the band's hit single, "The Boys of Summer."

According to the band's Web site, The Ataris takes its inspiration for "So Long, Astoria," from a concept expressed in "punk pioneer" Richard Hell's novel, "Go Now." The idea for the album is "that memory can transcend the experience that generated the memory," according to the band's Web site.

Mraz and The Ataris are in different musical genres and appeal to diverse musical tastes. "We want to please eclectic tastes in music. We want to appeal to all the different music tastes at Bucknell," Conrad said.

Conrad said the general reaction she has heard from students is that most are happy to hear Mraz will be playing the fall concert, and expects with the release of the information about The Ataris as Mraz's co-headliner, that even more students will be excited.

"Last year there was no fall concert, and I'm so excited not to see ATARIS, page A2

Ferrare to assist with presidential search

By SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

Presidential Search Committee Chair Norman E. Garrity '63 introduced Jamie Ferrare, Senior Consultant for the Academic Search Consultation Service (ASCS) in Washington D.C., to the University community at the Presidential Search Open Forum last week.

Ferrare and ASCS were enlisted to assist the search committee in articulating the credentials for the 16th president of the University in an Institutional Profile and to actively recruit candidates.

"We are trying to put together a picture of what we need to have a successful University," Garrity said.

According to Jerry Rackoff Director of Institutional Research & Assessment and On-campus Coordinator for the Presidential Search, the Institutional Profile will be a compilation of qualifications, not a strategic plan for selecting the president.

"We are looking to prioritize characteristics of the person."

Rackoff said.

Ferrare is currently gathering information for an Institutional Profile that will outline the attractions of the University, the current state of the University and the personal and professional characteristics that are necessary for the position.

In order to complete the Institutional Profile, Ferrare and the search committee have commissioned several advisory committees. According to Garrity, these groups will assist Ferrare

See PRESIDENT, page A2

ALPHA PHI OMEGA SPONSORS BLOOD DRIVE

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Students, faculty and staff donated blood at Alpha Phi Omega's 2003 blood drive for the American Red Cross.

Abroad in France

From France, Dana Binnendijk '05 discusses issues from the refined style of French fashion to reading to children.

See page A8

Men's Soccer

The Bison keep their three-game winning streak alive.

See page B1

Fall Fest Fun

Saves the Day and Taking Back Sunday rocked the Gerhart Field House on Saturday.

See page A10

CANDLE-LIGHT VIGIL HELD FOR 9/11 MEMORIAL

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Members of the University community attended a candle-light vigil held last Thursday behind the Rooke Chapel. The vigil was sponsored by the Inter-Religious Council.

Surgala named VP of finance and administration

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Writer

Former Chief Financial Officer David Surgala was named Vice President of Finance and Administration for the University in July.

"I'm extremely pleased that Dave joined us as Vice President for Finance and Administration," University President Steffen Rogers said. "In his post, he demonstrated the strong financial background he developed in the corporate world, and also has shown us a solid understanding of higher education budgeting practices."

Surgala received his B.S. in accounting from Cleveland State University and attended Cleveland Marshall School of Law before becoming financial officer of The JPM Company in Lewisburg. His areas of expertise include risk management, budgeting, financial analysis, auditing and investor relations.

"Being selected to serve the students, trustees, employees and alumni [of the University] is an honor and a privilege," Surgala said.

The department's current issues include increasing health care costs and rising tuition and fees. Surgala views the University's financial position favorably.

"While the institutions of higher education are facing difficult

Monica McMurrer—The Bucknellian
David Surgala was named VP of finance and administration for the University this July.

financial challenges, [the University's] solid financial underpinnings will allow it to responsibly address financial issues and also position it for continued educational leadership," Surgala said.

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Sept. 7

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION FRATERNITY ALCOHOL VIOLATION—Public Safety conducted a party check at Sigma Phi Epsilon and identified two students who admitted to drinking alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Citations issued to both students for underage consumption. The fraternity was cited for serving minors.

CHECK ON THE WELFARE—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall to check on the welfare of two students. Upon investigation, the two individuals were found to be alright and no further action was necessary.

INFORMATION—A student reported to Public Safety that she was struck by a paintball that was propelled from a moving vehicle in the Gateway parking lot. The individual did not wish to press charges and the vehicle could not be located in a search of the area. Lewisburg Police Department was notified.

DUI / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety assisted East Buffalo Township Police Department with a traffic stop along Stadium Drive. The driver was determined to be intoxicated. Citations issued for DUI, public drunkenness, disorderly conduct and traffic violations.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety approached a student to check on her well-being at the rear of Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. The student admitted to having consumed alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Citation issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION POSSESSION OF OPEN CONTAINER—Public Safety witnessed a student walking along the sidewalk of St. George Street with a can of beer in his hand. The student was stopped and admitted to drinking alcohol although under the age of 21 years. The student will be cited for underage consumption and possession of an open container of alcohol.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a student with abdominal pains. Student Security Aide transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment. She later returned to campus.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window pane in the door at Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Monday, Sept. 8

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) denied the left rear door of his vehicle while it was parked in the old Kappa Sigma Fraternity parking lot. The incident is under investigation.

Tuesday, Sept. 9

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an employee who had fallen and hurt her knee. The individual stated that she would go to Student Health Services for treatment.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged a University vehicle while parked in the physical plant parking lot. The incident is under investigation.

Wednesday, Sept. 10

VANDALISM—Public Safety responded to Rooke Biology Building for the report of vandalism to several table tops. The incident is under investigation.

Thursday, Sept. 11

FOUND PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) found a bicycle on S. 7th Street. He turned the bicycle over to Public Safety for storage until the owner can be located.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety observed two males damaging the flood light that illuminates Carey House. When the males were approached, they fled the area. The incident is under investigation.

Friday, Sept. 12

TRESPASSING / UNLAWFUL USE OF COMPUTER—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) entered his unlocked Taylor Hall office and used his computer. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) entered his unlocked room at Vedder Hall and damaged his laptop computer, and room mirror. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed his clothes from the laundry room in Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, Sept. 13

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to South Seventh Street to assist Lewisburg Police Department to clear a party and patrol the area. Lewisburg Police Department cited a student for underage consumption and disorderly conduct as a result of urinating in public.

Sunday, Sept. 14

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to Carey House to assist a Public Safety security student with a student he witnessed urinating in the bushes outside Carey House. The student was cited for disorderly conduct.

Monday, Sept. 15

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged two seats at the Christy Mathewson Stadium during the Lewisburg football game. The incident is under investigation.

Suddath dies at 70

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Writer

A picture of the late Bison employee Nancy Suddath sits at the entrance of the eatery in memory of the "good friend, good neighbor and loving mother."

"Nancy was so full of life," Bison employee Bobbi Earnest said. "She was 70 years old, but she acted like she was in her forties."

Earnest worked with Suddath for two years and remembers her the most for her sense of humor.

ATARIS From page A1

only that there is one this year, but that Jason Mraz will be performing," Marisa Aronson '06 said.

Other students feel their musical tastes are still not being represented by the concerts played at the University.

"I don't plan to go to the concert because I don't listen to that kind of music," Matt Beyel '06 said. "I think we should get some reggae for something different."

The seating for this year's concert, which will be held in the Gary Sojka Pavilion, will be different than the seating for the Third Eye Blind concert last spring.

"There will be a lot more room on the floor for people to move around, and this will provide a lot more energy," said Concert Committee member Adam Yukelson '05.

According to Yukelson, floor tickets will be on sale exclusively

PRESIDENT From page A1

in drafting the Institutional Profile by outlining the most important characteristics that will ensure the success of the next president.

Garrity expects the Institutional Profile to be completed within the next month, and it will be available on the presidential search Web site.

ASCS will then actively recruit candidates whose experience and qualifications match the Institutional Profile. According to Ferrare, less than ten percent of searches conducted by ASCS are unsuccessful. Of the successful placements, 25 percent have been women and eight percent have been minorities.

Garrity emphasized that recruitment by ASCS would target even those who are not openly searching for a position.

"It is likely that the person will be someone at a university that does not even know he wants to leave," Garrity said.

Advisory committees will be active throughout the search process. According to Garrity, they will be asked to nominate candidates and provide input and output to the search committee throughout the various stages of the search process. Advisory committees are being established for many sectors of the University that have expressed interest in participating, including students, faculty, staff, parents and alumni.

"I think it is important for students to be given the opportunity to be involved," said Merisa Levine '05. "The president has a large impact on the workings of the University and the students are directly impacted by his decisions."

In addition to the advisory groups, interested members of the community can submit public or anonymous comments or nominations to a campus e-mail address (pres_search@bucknell.edu) or a campus mail address (Presidential Search, c/o Office of Institutional Research, Marts Hall Post Office, Bucknell University, Lewisburg, PA 17837).

In its official charge to the search committee, the Board of Trustees set July 1, 2004, as the day by which the 16th president of the University will be named, but, according to Garrity, the search committee hopes that with the help of the advisory committees the process will conclude by March.

"What we need to do is not be complacent," Garrity said. "We have a lot of challenges."

"She was a prankster," Earnest said. "She used to pull pranks on her two sons all the time. She was also a flirt and teased several of the young males and other students. She had a lot of good friendships with students."

Suddath is survived by her two sons, but her maternal influence touched those at the Bison, as well.

"She was like a mother figure to most of [The Bison staff], so it makes it even harder," Earnest said. "She was a wonderful lady. I miss her. We all miss her."

ATARIS From page A1

for University students. Other tickets can be purchased through

"There will be a lot more room on the floor for people to move around."

—Adam Yukelson, '05

Ticket Master. The first day for ticket sales has yet to be determined by the committee.

"I would encourage students to buy tickets as soon as they can and to buy them on campus, because they will be cheaper than buying them through Ticket Master," Yukelson said.

PRESIDENT From page A1

in drafting the Institutional Profile by outlining the most important characteristics that will ensure the success of the next president.

Garrity expects the Institutional Profile to be completed within the next month, and it will be available on the presidential search Web site.

ASCS will then actively recruit candidates whose experience and qualifications match the Institutional Profile. According to Ferrare, less than ten percent of searches conducted by ASCS are unsuccessful. Of the successful placements, 25 percent have been women and eight percent have been minorities.

Garrity emphasized that recruitment by ASCS would target even those who are not openly searching for a position.

"It is likely that the person will be someone at a university that does not even know he wants to leave," Garrity said.

Advisory committees will be active throughout the search process. According to Garrity, they will be asked to nominate candidates and provide input and output to the search committee throughout the various stages of the search process. Advisory committees are being established for many sectors of the University that have expressed interest in participating, including students, faculty, staff, parents and alumni.

"I think it is important for students to be given the opportunity to be involved," said Merisa Levine '05. "The president has a large impact on the workings of the University and the students are directly impacted by his decisions."

In addition to the advisory groups, interested members of the community can submit public or anonymous comments or nominations to a campus e-mail address (pres_search@bucknell.edu) or a campus mail address (Presidential Search, c/o Office of Institutional Research, Marts Hall Post Office, Bucknell University, Lewisburg, PA 17837).

In its official charge to the search committee, the Board of Trustees set July 1, 2004, as the day by which the 16th president of the University will be named, but, according to Garrity, the search committee hopes that with the help of the advisory committees the process will conclude by March.

"What we need to do is not be complacent," Garrity said. "We have a lot of challenges."

Grab a slab
Famous Hickory-Smoked BBQ Baby Back Ribs

At BJ's we're famous for our own Hickory Smoked BBQ Baby Back Ribs & Chicken, and our Specially Seasoned Chicago Sirloin. For the really serious steak lover try one of our Sizzling Butcher Block Steaks. We also feature a wide selection of fresh seafood, salads, and sandwiches, served anytime. We're open late every night serving our full menu till closing.

BJ's Steak & Rib House

Open: Sun - Thurs 11am - 1am
Fri - Sat 11am - 2am

374-9841 SELINGSGROVE, PA
275-5110 DANVILLE, PA

www.bjsribs.com • bjsribs@sunlink.net

News

Sixth Street was one of the hardest-hit areas during the flood of 1999. All Sixth Street residents were evacuated from their homes for at least one night.

The area around the Hunt Hall parking lot, adjacent to St. George Street, received some of the most severe damage in 1999. An entire slab of the sidewalk was swept away by the current.

"It all just swept away"

Many think back to the severe flooding of 1999 in the wake of Hurricane Isabel

By MEGHAN BALL
News Editor

Hurricane Isabel has been crawling her way up the east coast and passed near the

Even after two days of draining, the Grove by the Gateways was still flooded. Nearly 10 inches of rain fell the morning of Sept. 7, 1999, causing extreme flooding throughout campus.

Lewisburg area. The campus began to feel the effects of Isabel last night, and it should rain throughout the day today. The University has been monitoring the situation closely, holding contingency planning meetings with University Vice President of Student Affairs Charles Pollock, Public Safety, Housing Personnel, the Deans of Students and many others. Isabel peaked in the beginning of the week as a category 2. While the prediction is currently that the campus will only experience winds of about 20 mph with gust up to 40 mph, Isabel is still a storm not to be taken lightly.

The biggest fear at the University is flash flooding. With all of the recent rain, even a few added inches could cause the rivers and streams in the area to overflow. Many may think back to 1999, when the flooding was so severe, cars floated down the streets. When students living on Sixth Street stepped out of their houses after the storm, they were facing a newly formed river.

Almost all of these students had to be offered temporary housing by the University. Students with cars parked behind Hunt Hall also found their cars a little "downstream" from where they had left them. On Sixth Street alone, over 80 vehicles had been discarded by the current. In addition to cars, an entire piece of the concrete sidewalk under the train overpass on St. George Street lifted up and floated away. The buildings with the most severe flooding were Swartz Hall, Bertrand Library, the Art Building and the Field House.

There had been little warning prior to the storm in 1999.

"In some areas, the water went from inches to feet in a matter of 5-10 minutes," said Vincent DeCherchio, director of public safety. "We were calling RAs and trying to travel about campus warning people and watching for dangerous areas at the same time."

The local police used airhorns on Sixth Street around 4 a.m. in an attempt to alert residents to the growing danger. Luckily there were no casualties or injuries. Two weeks prior to that storm, Lewisburg had already been hit with another storm totalling approximately seven inches of rain. This second storm totalled about 10 inches, and caused the aforementioned serious flooding.

Predictions for Hurricane Isabel have ranged from 1-10 inches of rain, but the University is taking every measure to prepare.

"We are hoping for the best, planning for the worst," said Richard Ferraro, dean of students.

In a campus-wide e-mail sent Wednesday, the Emergency Response team outlined the basic plans in case of flooding last night or today.

A siren downtown, located behind Hulley House, will sound in the event that flooding occurs. Also, students have been told to check their voicemails and e-mails for updates on the situation.

If flooding causes changes in Dining Services hours, students will be notified by e-mail, and should there be power failure there will be signs in uphill and downhill entrance ways. Students living on South 5th, South 6th, South 7th, St. Catherine or St. George Streets, and in Harris, Hunt, Vedder or Larison Hall have all been warned that in the event of severe flooding they may be evacuated to the Langone Center.

All students have been advised to park their cars in any available uphill parking lots. Parking citations will not be issued during this period, except for any students parked between Marts Hall and the Rooke Chemistry Building. As students try to get to class today they have been told to be careful in all of the above areas, as they are prone to flooding. The tunnel equipment be damaged due to flooding. As a result, it is advised that students move everything that could be damaged by water off of the ground.

Hufnagle Park and parts of Sixth St. swept underwater in 1999.

Cars lining South Sixth Street were sent crashing into each other by the high water. When students found their cars after the waters had receded, a layer of mud and debris lined the interiors.

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme
Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

NYSE chairman Grasso resigns

Embattled New York Stock Exchange Chairman Richard Grasso resigned Wednesday, falling victim to growing outrage over his $140 million pay package.

Clark's official: He's running

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Saying he has "the kinds of skills and experiences that are needed to guide this country into the future," retired Army Gen. Wesley Clark announced Wednesday that he would join the nine other Democrats in the 2004 presidential race.

Hostages taken at a Tennessee college

DYERSBURG, Tenn.—A man with a gun and a knife claiming to be a member of al-Qaida took a classroom of college students hostage Wednesday afternoon, then released four people several hours into the standoff, authorities said.

BBC reporter admits errors on Iraq story

LONDON—A British Broadcasting Corp. reporter acknowledged Wednesday that he made several errors in a report that accused the government of "sexing up" an intelligence dossier on Iraq and set off a fierce dispute with the government.

Bush: Saddam not part of Sept. 11

WASHINGTON—President Bush said Wednesday that there was no evidence that former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein was involved in the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, disputing an impression that critics say the administration tried to foster to justify the war against Iraq.

Teen pleads not guilty in worm case

SEATTLE—Jeffrey Parson pleaded not guilty Wednesday to charges that he authored an Internet computer worm that infected thousands of computers last month. The Minnesota teenager was arrested with much fanfare Aug. 29 in connection with the MSBlaster series of programs that wreaked havoc on the Internet earlier that month. The arraignment comes as computer experts warn of another worldwide computer flaw which could lead to the same kind of worm outbreak.

Monkeys exhibit sense of fair play

Humans aren't the only ones who hate a bum deal, it turns out. In a recent study, brown capuchin monkeys trained to exchange a granite token for a cucumber treat often refused the swap if they saw another monkey get a better payoff—a grape. Instead, they often threw the token, refused to eat the piece of cucumber, or even gave it to the other capuchin after viewing the lopsided deal, said Emory University researcher Sarah Brosnan.

World's oldest genitals discovered

LONDON—Scientists have discovered fossils of the world's oldest genitals—belonging to 400 million-year-old insects—in ancient rocks in Scotland. The penis of the ancient harvestmen insects, commonly known as a daddy longlegs, was two-thirds the length of the body and remarkably similar to the modern-day species, New Scientist magazine said Wednesday.

Herbal remedies' claims questioned

CHICAGO—The editor of a leading U.S. medical journal called Tuesday for tighter regulation of herbal remedies because of "potentially misleading" health claims made by distributors of the products.

'60s radical Boudin paroled after 22 years

BEDFORD, N.Y.—Kathy Boudin, the former Weather Underground radical and fugitive, was released from prison Wednesday after a 22-year stretch for taking part in an armored-car robbery in which a security guard and two policemen were killed.

News

Calendar of Events

September 19 FRI	September 20 SAT	September 21 SUN	September 22 MON	September 23 TUE	September 24 WED	September 25 THU
Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Pilates Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. CardioKick Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Men's and Women's Cross Country Meet Mod Fields 5 p.m. Shabbat Service Berkson Center for Jewish Life 104 (Chapel) 5:30 p.m. Graham Field Dedication Krebs Fitness Center Hall of Fame 7 p.m. "Run Lola Run" Hilltop Film Series Vaughn Lit Auditorium 8 p.m. Comedian: Co Coa Langone Center Bison 9 p.m. The Recruit Langone Center Forum 10:30 p.m. Open Mic Night 7th Street Cafe 11 p.m.	"The Countertenor Voice" Workshop: John Goldsmith Sigfried Weiss Music Building 116 11 a.m. Stop the Hate Vigil Rain Location Langone Center Forum 1 p.m. "Training Children's Voices" Workshop: Elaine Goldsmith Sigfried Weiss Music Building 116 1 p.m. Women's Soccer vs. Colgate University Women's Varsity Soccer Field 1 p.m. Jelani Dance Practice Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 2 p.m. "Run Lola Run" Hilltop Film Series Vaughn Lit Auditorium 3 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel (Main Sanctuary) 5:30 p.m. Bucknell Orchestra Concerto Concert Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m. Pool Contest Uptown 9:30 p.m. Phone Booth Langone Center Bison 10:30 p.m.	Quaker Services Vaughn Lit (Willard Smith Library) 10 a.m. Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 11 a.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel (Main Sanctuary) 4 p.m. Contemporary Worship Rooke Chapel (Meditation Chapel) 7 p.m. Catholic Mass Hunt Hall Living Room 101 10 p.m. The information for these events is subject to change. Some events are open to members of an organization only.	Swim Conditioning Class Natorium 7 a.m. Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Zen Meditation Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 4 p.m. Exercise Class Larson Hall Dining Room/Cafeteria 4:30 p.m. Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Aerobic Kick Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 6 p.m. Adult Beginning Swim Class Natorium 7 p.m. Turkish Coffee Night Meeting Taylor Hall Lounge 7:30 p.m.	Personal Fitness Step Aerobics Classes 8 a.m. & 11 a.m. Low Intensity Aerobics Class 12 p.m. Spinning Classes 12 p.m. & 6 p.m. Abs Class 1 p.m. Pilates Class 4 p.m. CardioKick Class 5 p.m. Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio Golf Lessons Golf Course 8:30 a.m. Sneaker Sale Davis Gym 9 a.m. Catholic Mass Langone Center Forum 12:10 p.m. Women's Soccer vs. St. Joseph's College Women's Varsity Soccer Field 4 p.m. Intermediate Tennis Class Varsity Tennis Courts (beside Davis Gym) 6:30 p.m. Conservatives Club Tuesday Meeting Taylor Hall 115 (Lounge) 7 p.m.	Swim Conditioning Class Natorium 7 a.m. Episcopal Services Rooke Chapel Meditation Chapel 12 p.m. Personal Fitness Spinning Class 8 a.m. & 4 p.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class 12 p.m. Cardio Kick Class 5 p.m. Yoga Class 6 p.m. Pilates Class 7 p.m. Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio Exercise Class Larson Hall Dining Room 4:30 p.m. Jelani Wednesday Step Practice Harris Hall 17 (Lounge) 7 p.m. "Do Plantanos Go Wit Collard Greens" Lecture: David Lamb Langone Center Forum 7 p.m. Holes Vaughn Lit 100 (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. Golf Lessons Golf Course 8:30 a.m. Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. & 6 p.m. Abs Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 1 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Cardio Kicks Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Two Past Midnight Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 9:30 p.m.

Send calendar submissions to
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

FORTUNE
100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2003

COMPUTERWORLD 100
BEST PLACES
TO WORK IN IT 2003

Investing in You.

Reach the pinnacle of your potential at Vanguard. Exciting growth opportunities are available in these programs:
Acceleration Into Management (AIM) • Accelerate into Client Engagement (ACE) • Start IT •
Corporate Internship Program

Other challenging positions available include:
Client Relations Associates • Financial Associates

Look for us on campus. Interviews will be conducted for select positions.
If you miss us, visit www.vanguardcareers.com. Reference job code: PCOBK

Vanguard is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

you accidentally knock
your roommate's
toothbrush into the toilet.
he's not home. what do
you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others.
explore what matters
at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS PwC

Opinions

THE Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 132, Number 3
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editor-in-Chief

Alyson Walker '04

Associate Editor

Michelle Donbeck '05

Managing Editor

Alyson Walker '04

Business Manager

Stephen Santulli '05

Director of Sales

Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors

Jason Rubinstein '04

Sandi-Jo Galati '04

News Editors

Elizabeth Salzman '06

Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editor

Aaron Hanlon '04

Business & Politics Editors

Courtney Homan '05

Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors

Cecily Cairns '04

Pat Evans '04

Brent Butler '06

Features Editors

Ashley Mallick '06

Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editor

Josie Cetta '04

Photo Editors

Eric Graham '05

Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout

Nick Kupenski '07

Chief Copy Editors

Stacey Greenberg '06

Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers

Joshua Mayer '04

Emory Strother '04

John Heekin '05

Davaini Mallotra '06

Marketing Directors

Joseph Giordano '05

Alexander Kanaris '05

Circulation Manager

Hasan Sultan '04

Adviser

James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFO

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

MEMBERSHIP

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisement if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Concert lineup sounds good

The announcement that The Ataris will co-headline the fall concert with Jason Mraz is a big step in the right direction for the University's Concert Committee. While we doubt that everyone will be pleased with these two selections, we are encouraged by and applaud both the result and the process undertaken to arrive at this semester's concert lineup.

Both acts registered hit songs over the summer and both acts have a substantial college following. These two traits may seem like obvious requirements for the fall concert, but they have not been in the past. Concerts by Busta Rhymes and Shaggy have lead to disappointing ticket sales and disappointing performances.

The choice of co-headliners is one that we agree with. Two acts that are capable of headlining an event like this broadens the appeal to potential attendees and provides for a more diverse and enjoyable concert.

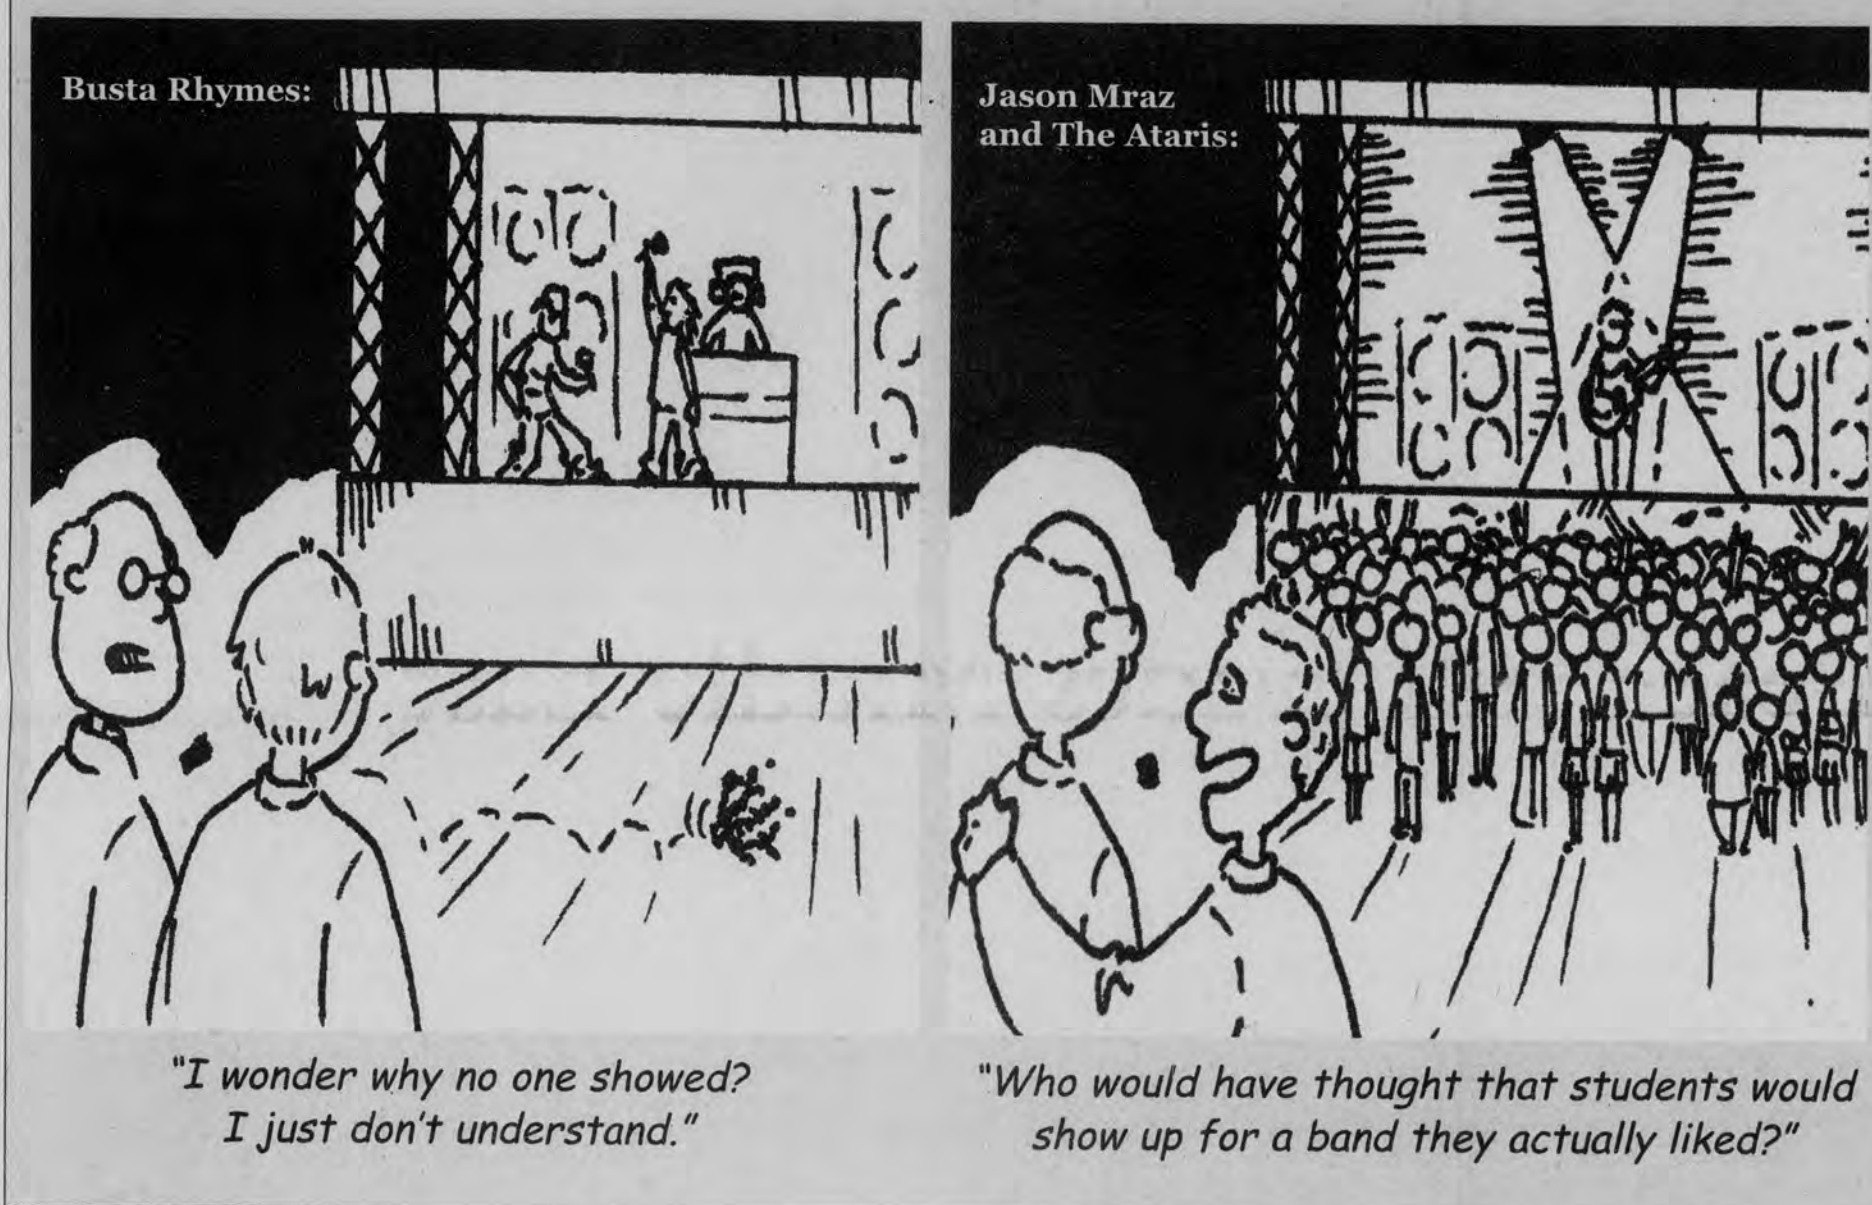

In the past, the concert committee has tried to please everyone, usually unsuccessfully. There are few performers who can satisfy the desires of all students and the members of the surrounding community by themselves. The renewed focus on the preferences of students as the primary consideration is a welcome improvement. While the opinions of the local area is worthy of consideration, the concert committee has rightly recognized that this is foremost a concert for University students.

This page has been critical of the concert choices in the past, both in choosing performers and when considering the logistics of the concert. This year's seating plan and the continued use of the Gary Sojka Pavilion promise to provide a more realistic concert experience. We now applaud the improvement.

Not since Live came to campus in the Fall of 2001 has there been this much excitement about the performance. While only the ticket sales and after performance reviews can truly measure the success of the concert, we are pleased with the thought and diligence that have occurred thus far. The concert committee has listened to past critiques and learned from them, fulfilling their mission to represent the students' interests in this area.

Attendance policies punish good students

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

Never underestimate the value of attending class. Some have made the mistake of skipping too many classes during our first few years in favor of sleeping, drinking, socializing or any number of other things that are easier to do than sitting in a classroom and working out our minds.

It's amazing how much better we do in school when we simply show up and pay attention.

It should go without saying that we ought to attend classes as often as we can for our own intellectual benefit, GPA and tuition dollars aside. This isn't high school anymore, right?

In spite of the fact that skipping class is arguably detrimental to our academic achievement and intellectual development, circumstances may be such that every once in a while we may not be able to attend.

While I know that in Syllabus Utopia alarm clocks always go off, nobody plays sports, everyone's families live forever and the entire world revolves around one class—which is itself a logical paradox, considering the fact that we take at least four classes each semester—the real world doesn't operate that way.

Many professors, however, consistently impose attendance policies that penalize students by means of downgrading for a set, arbitrary number of absences.

If you miss three classes, you get an A minus? I hope you have at least two healthy grandparents.

If you miss four classes, you get a B plus? Sorry coach, I can't go to Stanford this weekend. I have a lecture on the gentrification of Harlem, and it would be my fourth absence.

If you miss five classes, you get a C? No, mom, I'm not getting into law school. I overslept.

You get the picture. Life doesn't always go as planned. Sometimes things get in the way of classes; amazingly enough, these things are often out of our control, and beyond the prediction of omniscient syllabi as well.

Human error has accounted for many, if not all, horrible things in the history of the world. Why did Julius Caesar have to be so ambitious? Why did they bomb Pearl Harbor? Why does slavery exist? What happened on 9/11? I don't know—people screwed up! With these disasters as a frame of reference, how terrible could it be if you missed a few classes because you forgot to set your alarm?

If you're the Type A personality who doesn't buy into excuses like human error and circumstance, consider this: The best professors in the world can't teach any of us a thing without our participation. Going to class is our responsibility, and if we mess it up the consequences are dire enough. Pragmatically, we lose about $84,293 per minute in tuition when we skip class. Philosophically, we miss out on an intellectually enriching experience and an opportunity to gain knowledge. Morally, we fail to apply ourselves and take our opportunities for granted, so do you really need to dock our grades?

Attendance likely has a strong impact on a student's performance in a class; however, such an impact is self-evident enough not to be forced upon students. Attendance policies only hurt the students who have a fairly low number of circumstantial absences.

Let's make a deal: If I miss five classes, you can fail me. If you miss five classes, I get your Ph.D. Sound good? Even with a fair tradeoff, attendance policies are a no-win situation. We can be fairly sure that no one's extenuating circumstances would justify a failing grade.

Attendance policies are clearly problematic. The solution is very simple: Be understanding when normal, everyday, unfortunate circumstances arise, and leave it at that. When students miss class to the point at which it drastically impairs their learning experience, let that impairment be a lesson to them without forcing a grade penalty.

While those students may deserve it, there are always others who truly aren't trying to cheat the system but are paying the price anyway. Drop the attendance policies, and we'll do the best we can to show up. Sound good?

All other students who frequently miss class for less legitimate reasons will undoubtedly fall victim to the Attendance Policy of Nature; if you skip enough classes, you won't have a clue, you'll underachieve and you'll likely be a little bit dumber than everyone else.

Meanwhile, people missing class here and there for oversleeping, attending a sporting event or two, having a difficult family situation, etc. are generally completing their work, keeping up with the reading and being unjustly penalized in the end for relatively insignificant errors in the grand scheme of the semester as a whole.

Some professors with attendance policies will hypocritically miss more classes themselves than their prescribed absence limit. This has happened with me, and I'm sure it has happened to some of you. It's entirely unacceptable for professors to fall short of their own policies without any accountability whatsoever.

Let's make a deal: If I miss five classes, you can fail me. If you miss five classes, I get your Ph.D. Sound good? Even with a fair tradeoff, attendance policies are a no-win situation. We can be fairly sure that no one's extenuating circumstances would justify a failing grade.

Attendance policies are clearly problematic. The solution is very simple: Be understanding when normal, everyday, unfortunate circumstances arise, and leave it at that. When students miss class to the point at which it drastically impairs their learning experience, let that impairment be a lesson to them without forcing a grade penalty.

While those students may deserve it, there are always others who truly aren't trying to cheat the system but are paying the price anyway. Drop the attendance policies, and we'll do the best we can to show up. Sound good?

All other students who frequently miss class for less legitimate reasons will undoubtedly fall victim to the Attendance Policy of Nature; if you skip enough classes, you won't have a clue, you'll underachieve and you'll likely be a little bit dumber than everyone else.

Meanwhile, people missing class here and there for oversleeping, attending a sporting event or two, having a difficult family situation, etc. are generally completing their work, keeping up with the reading and being unjustly penalized in the end for relatively insignificant errors in the grand scheme of the semester as a whole.

Some professors with attendance policies will hypocritically miss more classes themselves than their prescribed absence limit. This has happened with me, and I'm sure it has happened to some of you. It's entirely unacceptable for professors to fall short of their own policies without any accountability whatsoever.

Let's make a deal: If I miss five classes, you can fail me. If you miss five classes, I get your Ph.D. Sound good? Even with a fair tradeoff, attendance policies are a no-win situation. We can be fairly sure that no one's extenuating circumstances would justify a failing grade.

Attendance policies are clearly problematic. The solution is very simple: Be understanding when normal, everyday, unfortunate circumstances arise, and leave it at that. When students miss class to the point at which it drastically impairs their learning experience, let that impairment be a lesson to them without forcing a grade penalty.

While those students may deserve it, there are always others who truly aren't trying to cheat the system but are paying the price anyway. Drop the attendance policies, and we'll do the best we can to show up. Sound good?

All other students who frequently miss class for less legitimate reasons will undoubtedly fall victim to the Attendance Policy of Nature; if you skip enough classes, you won't have a clue, you'll underachieve and you'll likely be a little bit dumber than everyone else.

Meanwhile, people missing class here and there for oversleeping, attending a sporting event or two, having a difficult family situation, etc. are generally completing their work, keeping up with the reading and being unjustly

Fond freshman memories

From TV to fraternities, sophomore year is a bit better than the first

By JORDY LEISER
Writer

Acting like the immature, prepubescent freshman (or first-year student, excuse me) that I was last year, I wrote a random, yet well-overdue article for The Bucknellian in which I expressed my opinions about being a freshman "dude" at the University.

But now hear me out. Freshman: It was worth it! Any or all lack of acceptance due to your freshman nature is okay because of what's ahead of you.

First, what was I thinking? Second, I should have received a thorough beating for what I wrote. Third, I still have time to recall every single word of that article before someone reads the archives online and actually gives me that bloody beating.

My goal last year was to live by a sacred creed, one that dates back to hallowed antiquity—also known as the early 1990s.

A legend among legends, Vince Vaughn from "Swingers" once said, "there's nothing wrong with letting the girls know that you're money, and that you're ready to party."

Last year, I felt like I was the opposite of money. I had no car. I had no TV. I lived in a dorm (a quad to be exact) and I had nothing but two million caf meal credits at my disposal.

In my deprived state of existence, I referred to my life in that article as "my claustrophobic universe which is limited to the 5,000 square-foot block that is Lewisburg, Pa."

Shocking? Not hardly. I'm only scratching the surface. I was also farther from being "ready to party" than George W. Bush is from knowing how to manage the economy. I decided that because I wasn't allowed to join a fraternity, I had no access to people who threw parties, people who stood at the door of parties, people who bought required "beverages" for parties, social parties, dance parties, upperclassmen or any kind of action.

I tried to pull some stupid shenanigans that would make freshman guys feel more welcome at parties. I think one idea was centered on a quota system. "This party will not start until I have at least 10 freshman guys up here dancing with the 10 hottest senior chicks at Bucknell." Nice try, but seriously ... take it easy!

Hear me out. Freshmen: It was worth it! Any or all lack of acceptance due to your freshman nature is okay because of what's ahead of you.

I'm now a sophomore—although some would argue my maturity level hovers somewhere between the eighth and ninth grade range, and these first few weeks of school are already worth my entire undergraduate experience.

Life after freshman year is like going from a middle-class neighborhood in Jersey City to a 10,000 square-foot mansion in Aspen. Yeah, I just did.

Let's attack these issues one by one. Car: Yes, I have one. Yes, the air-conditioning is broken. No, you (freshmen) may not have a ride. TV: Yes,

I'm now a sophomore—although some would argue my maturity level hovers somewhere between the eighth to ninth grade range.

Peace still evades Middle East

Peace process unravels despite efforts by the international community

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

For the past three years, peace and war have ebbed and flowed in the Middle East.

forced to resign. And somewhere right in the middle, the peace process unraveled.

How is this peace? Neither the Palestinians nor the Israelis can see eye-to-eye. Yasser Arafat, holed up in his compound, holds tremendous popularity, yet is deemed "irrelevant" by Israel and the United States.

For the past three years, peace and war have ebbed and flowed in the Middle East, human slaughter has been condoned by means of human sacrifice and outside powers have coaxed, prodded, pressured and humiliated. The latest trend is the unraveling of the "peace process." A Hamas leader was killed by Israel, Israelis were killed by Hamas, the prime minister Abu Abbas ridiculed, slighted, belittled, beleaguered and then

I can remember a time when peace was punctured by human bombs. I can remember no end to fighting, but only an end to peace.

What I can foresee is no different. I don't care if you call it a road map, a peace plan, a peace process, a "cooling off" period, a "trust building" period or whatever other euphemism you want to use, because at some point, somewhere, everything will literally go up in smoke, flames, tears, sacrifice and misery.

This is not a good fight, or even a fair one, for any party. You do not even have to read the paper to know that more people on each side, any side or even no side, will die. This is not new. As for peace processes, it's not news, but lies.

This downward spiral of violence puts false hope into an unsolvable situation. Only when both sides mentally and physically exhaust themselves can real peace and real progress be achieved.

Human imagination knows no limits, and human creativity knows no bounds. Whether or not these talents can be born out of death and destruction and used for tolerance and trust is the truest test of the human spirit.

But for now, keep on watching the weather, because in the meantime it will be very heated in the Middle East for years to come.

Only when both sides mentally and physically exhaust themselves can real peace and real progress be achieved.

Cell phone overuse takes away from valuable personal time

By KEVIN BROWN
Writer

Humans have been developing new ways to transmit ideas through time and space for many years. From the invention of the written word, to the telegraph and now to the cellular telephone, we have been advancing our means of staying connected to others.

In short, we have come from a time when long distance communication was standing on a rock and yelling at someone in the cave next door, to the point where a person situated in Nebraska, several miles from any paved roads and electricity, is capable of waking up to his friend who is studying abroad in France, sleeping off a heavy night of sex, drugs and rock and roll, to remind him that he is in France to learn and not melt brain cells. What a world.

Cell phones have made it possible for people to easily communicate from anywhere, to anywhere, at anytime. This feature distinguishes cell phones from any other form of long distance communication available. Certainly the them wherever they go and do not turn them off. This itself doesn't sound that terrible, it shifts attention away from the happenings in our physical environment, isolating people from tasks at hand.

Americans are working more yearly and a cell phone can become a leash to a job. White-collar employees, which many of us will be, are particularly subject to this because they are often salaried and don't receive overtime. The cell phone is not a time saving device in this case. If you talk for two hours on your cell phone over the weekend, you don't get to leave work two hours early on Monday. The cell phone only generates more work.

The mobile feature of cell phones is what makes them very appealing. For instance, cell phones are great if you have a flat tire or are about to be mauled by a grizzly bear.

The obvious annoyances of cell phones—"that guy" in class, the person driving the car with the phone, and interruptions in face-to-face conversations—are the symptoms of the overall problem. People carry

Stop Hate March starts many opportunities

Fighting hatred is a civic duty

By PHIL MARTOMA
Senior Writer

The Stop the Hate March scheduled for tomorrow is an event that the community and those affiliated with the University should attend. It marks the fifth year of this event, which was initiated in response to the deaths of James Byrd and Matthew Shepherd.

It is at times like these that we must ask ourselves to put aside our other plans and try to focus on the community values that shape us and stop the hate we hold in our hearts as individuals to serve a community need.

This message has too quickly become a cliché in our discourse about the subject; a number of people have voiced their opinions that such a march is a waste of time and will not prevent anything. I disagree because I know that with an issue such as this, the actions of one person reflect the values of the whole group. In our society, and especially in college, we are taught to assert our individuality and hold ourselves accountable for what we do as individuals.

The hate crimes against James Byrd and Matthew Shepherd are not crimes against individuals; they are crimes against a group. So long as any factor that causes a criminal act depends on any aspect of the victim's identity, it should not be judged as a crime against individuals. If this crime is instead a crime against a group of people, then we must act as a group to prevent it.

This is an unsettling statement because it means that we will not be judged as individuals when we try to stop hate, but as a group. As a group, we may also be judged by the actions of our worst members. In the case of homophobia, this worst member would have to be the Reverend Fred Phelps.

One example of his hatred of homosexuals is his Web site www.godhatesfags.com, on which you see Shepherd burning in hell. If you move your cursor over this picture you will hear him scream. Most would say that they do not feel this level of hatred, and that they should not be compared with one lunatic who clearly has a fixation with homophobia. As most college students do not care or hate on Phelps' level, they should be exempt from attending an event to stop people like him.

This serves to illustrate my point that we as a society have a problem with confusing crimes against groups with crimes against individuals. To say that Phelps' actions are not indicative of the way most people think may be true, but it only serves to distance his actions from ours. This leads us to feel justified in whatever we do as individuals once again.

Still, to do nothing to realize this principle of separating ourselves from Phelps will only silently condone his message that God hates homosexuals and therefore society does as well. As Edmund Burke said, "Evil only triumphs when good men do nothing," and so long as you separate yourself from Phelps you only succeed in entitling yourself to doing nothing.

Phelps should not be seen as an anathema to us, but representative of our society; he embodies an opportunity to confront head-on the hatred within our society. This is why as a student I encourage students to not only stop hating, but to actively try to get others to stop hating as well.

Phelps will also touch our community in a more direct way by his planned appearance at a Harrisburg showing of the movie "Jim in Bold," which depicts the story of a young gay man who committed suicide in rural Pennsylvania. One need not look at those who protest Phelps as idealistic, but simply as those willing to directly challenge hate. If we looked at him as an opportunity to confront hate, rather than something to distance ourselves from, then the world would be a better place.

I encourage students to not only stop hating, but to actively try to get others to stop hating as well.

Phelps will also touch our community in a more direct way by his planned appearance at a Harrisburg showing of the movie "Jim in Bold," which depicts the story of a young gay man who committed suicide in rural Pennsylvania. One need not look at those who protest Phelps as idealistic, but simply as those willing to directly challenge hate. If we looked at him as an opportunity to confront hate, rather than something to distance ourselves from, then the world would be a better place.

Phelps will also touch our community in a more direct way by his planned appearance at a Harrisburg showing of the movie "Jim in Bold," which depicts the story of a young gay man who committed suicide in rural Pennsylvania. One need not look at those who protest Phelps as idealistic, but simply as those willing to directly challenge hate. If we looked at him as an opportunity to confront hate, rather than something to distance ourselves from, then the world would be a better place.

Phelps will also touch our community in a more direct way by his planned appearance at a Harrisburg showing of the movie "Jim in Bold," which depicts the story of a young gay man who committed suicide in rural Pennsylvania. One need not look at those who protest Phelps as idealistic, but simply as those willing to directly challenge hate. If we looked at him as an opportunity to confront hate, rather than something to distance ourselves from, then the world would be a better place.

Phelps will also touch our community in a more direct way by his planned appearance at a Harrisburg showing of the movie "Jim in Bold," which depicts the story of a young gay man who committed suicide in rural Pennsylvania. One need not look at those who protest Phelps as idealistic, but simply as those willing to directly challenge hate. If we looked at him as an opportunity to confront hate, rather than something to distance ourselves from, then the world would be a better place.

Phelps will also touch our community in a more direct way by his planned appearance at a Harrisburg showing of the movie "Jim in Bold," which depicts the story of a young gay man who committed suicide in rural Pennsylvania. One need not look at those who protest Phelps as idealistic, but simply as those willing to directly challenge hate. If we looked at him as an opportunity to confront hate, rather than something to distance ourselves from, then the world would be a better place.

Phelps will also touch our community in a more direct way by his planned appearance at a Harrisburg showing of the movie "Jim in Bold," which depicts the story of a young gay man who committed suicide in rural Pennsylvania. One need not look at those who protest Phelps as idealistic, but simply as those willing to directly challenge hate. If we looked at him

FEATURES

Chateau Langeais (left), one of the French wonders, offers beauty and solace to all who visit. Tours run daily for tourists and locals alike. The landscape of France (right) provides many wonders for the eyes to feast upon. Binnendijk, who is currently studying abroad, has been able to see this and much more of what France has to offer.

Courtesy of Ben Fisher

Abroad perspective: Finding confusion in France

By DANA BINNENDIJK
Contributing Writer

I could actually feel my heart pumping inside my chest as I heard the rustling behind the large wooden door. There was a small crash followed by a miniature hand appearing through the mail-slot. The fingers began to wave around as if they were searching for something to hold onto, and then quickly disappeared back behind the door. The mail slot opened again, and a tiny blue eye stared up at me from inside.

"Je n'ai pas une clé" said the voice behind the eye, telling me that she did not have a key. "Desolé, mais je n'ai pas une clé." She kept talking, but all I could think was how this child spoke infinitely better French than I could. I attempted to ask the little girl in my broken French where her mother was, when all of the sudden I heard the clicking of a keyhole and saw the door open before me.

"Bonjour!" my host announced, smiling and welcoming me inside. She began speaking, and I could have sworn they were playing a joke on me. It sounded as though she was making up the words as she went along. I told her to speak slower if possible, and was finally able to translate a few words.

Needless to say, there are many difficulties that you have to go through while living in a foreign country, not to mention the problems with getting a VISA and passport or scheduling the right plane. Communication, differences in make sense of me, and I'm having similar difficulties. Claire, the four-year old, has asked me many times to speak French, just as she does. "Essayez!" she says, telling me to "Try!" She is constantly taking my hand and leading me places, such as her favorite hiding spot or her special talking computer for children. She wants me to read to her but doesn't like how long it takes me to pronounce a word. Despite her frustration at my childlike abilities, she counts me as one of her playmates and is constantly in my feet.

The two middle children, Béatrice and Marguerite, understand why I don't speak French as well as they do, but can't seem to slow down the speed of their speech to my level. Marie, the eldest, and both parents, recognize that speaking slowly helps me understand, and I'm slowly beginning to improve my skills with their help.

Sometimes, when trying to construct a French sentence, I just want to start screaming in English as if the volume of my voice might help them understand. There is a blank space where there should be information and a certain inability to communicate.

However, just because there is a language barrier now doesn't mean I will never break it down.

The more I talk, the more I understand and once I am no longer stuttering or scurrying off to get my dictionary, it will feel as though I have won a marathon.

The French have a different type of culture than the Americans. It is true that they leaned over their dinner plates staring at each other or kissing. Even though PDAs are considered rude or even inappropriate in the United States, in France they present a degree of passion for another person and are highly accepted. At first it was a bit shocking for me to see such intense affection in public, but I have grown accustomed and have even begun to welcome the love that is all around.

Also different in France is the style, which I find much more refined than that of the United States. In France women are usually dressed up in scarves, expensive jeans, skirts or at the least, nice pants. Tennis shoes and shorts are never worn by women, and the sweat pants so loved by Americans, especially college students, would never even be considered.

Yet despite the dress, the French seem to be less self-conscious of their bodies. Nudity is commonplace at most beaches, for both women and men, and none seem uncomfortable or ashamed of their bodies.

The French, like most Europeans, also have a different eating schedule than we do in the United States. The children of the household eat before the 'grownups,' which caused me great distress on my first day. When 8 p.m. arrived and we hadn't eaten, I went downstairs to see if I could help my mother with dinner. She recognized my panic upon seeing only three places being set, and explained that we eat later and the children eat first.

Food selection is also different. Baguettes (French bread) are by far the most common food source here. Wherever you turn there are men and women carrying baguettes and biting into du jambon et beurre (ham and butter) sandwiches. Although fattening, it is a highly satisfying meal after a long morning of French class and complements red wine very nicely. Every morning for breakfast the French eat baguettes with butter and jam or perhaps some cheese. My experiences with dinner in France have been fantastic as well, experiencing a variety of cuisine my palate had never imagined possible.

The other vital part of French cuisine is wine. In passing by any of the restaurants, you will notice the majority of people having a glass of wine with their lunch or dinner. Not only do they drink a lot of wine, but a good bottle may also cost as little as 3.50 Euros (or approximately $4.00). The main difference between the wine-drinking of the French and that of Americans is that the French consider it a part of their culture and an important complement to their meals. Drinking for the purpose of becoming intoxicated is far more uncommon than in the United States.

Though coming to France was like jumping into cold and unknown ocean waters after just growing comfortable on the warm sand, I know that soon enough I'll become accustomed to the chilly waters and never want to leave.

From drinking wine with friends along the Loire River on Friday afternoon to sitting down to a delicious French dinner with my 'family,' I would never change my decision to take the opportunity to immerse myself in a world far different from the 'Bucknell Bubble.' Everyone needs to stir the waters once in a while.

Jeff Bowen and his gamers enjoying a rousing game of Cathedral. The University's new games club will be meeting bi-monthly for some good, clean fun.

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Staff Writer

Nothing to do in the middle of nowhere? Go to Knoebels, a fabulous blast from the past.

If you're hungry for a taste of nostalgia, fun or even food, there's a place within driving-distance of campus that has every element to satisfy all your appetites. That place is Knoebels Amusement Resort, a park that has been in existence for 77 years.

"At one time there were over 35 [amusement] parks between Selinsgrove and Clark Summit," said Joe Muscato, director of advertising and public relations.

Of those 35, Knoebels is now all that remains. Nestled in the center of a valley, hidden away from the world, it seems as if it has been preserved from some past era of carnivals and cotton candy. At Knoebels, you won't find the pushy crowds and high-tech atmosphere of larger amusement parks. You will find, however, a park full of its own character and charm.

Though Knoebels is old-fashioned, it is not out-of-date. It has been featured on both the Discovery Channel and Food Network. The park is home to The Phoenix, which was originally built by the Philadelphia Toboggan Company in 1947, and the Twister, their newest and longest coaster.

"The roller coasters are my favorite rides. I love the Phoenix, the one with all the dips," Emily Thede '04 said. According to Muscato, Knoebels has been highly acclaimed by all its visitors for the fantastic selection of food. This food selection runs the gamut from fried pierogies to pickle-on-a-stick, to healthier selections such as bread-bowl salads.

The accolades listed above are not even the park's most appealing feature. At Knoebels, the most old-fashioned element is its price. Parking, entertainment and admission are all free. You can buy a low-cost, ride-all-day ticket, or pay for each ride as you go on it. Even top attractions such as The Phoenix will only take about $1.60 out of your pocket. In addition to being wallet-friendly, Knoebels is also easy on your schedule. There's no need to dedicate a whole weekend, or even a whole day, to appreciate the park and its attractions. Knoebels is the ideal size for an afternoon trip.

"It's cheap, but it is small, so you can go for a couple of hours and still have a great time," Janet Forney '04 said. This may leave one wondering how the park has survived. Muscato said that the Knoebel family makes a point to put all the money they earn back into the park. It thrives on word-of-mouth advertising.

"We don't have the ad budget that your multi-million dollar parks have," Muscato said, "but we do depend on a lot of word of mouth."

Knoebels is open from the end of April until the end of September. However, there are two upcoming weekends that may be the ideal time to visit. Sept. 20 will be a "special coupon day." If you purchase a ride-all-day pass tomorrow, you will receive a coupon for another pass to be redeemed any Saturday in May.

"[The free pass] will provide a great relief during finals," Muscato said. The annual Covered Bridge Festival is also approaching on the weekend of

Oct. 4-5. Ninety percent of the rides will be open this weekend. "There shouldn't be any lines; you should be able to walk onto any ride," Muscato said.

So, how do you reach this pocket of the past? Take Route 15 South until you see signs for PA-61 towards Sunbury. Exit onto 61, and follow this route for about 12 miles. After this point, there will be an intersection marked Junction 487. Turn left on to 487, which will take you right into the open arms of the park. It takes about half an hour to reach Knoebels, 25 miles away from the University. Once you've found Knoebels you may also find it hard to leave. With its unique combination of thrilling rides, fried food and perfect price, it may become a frequent destination for those looking to spend a day away.

"I went with my international students during orientation," Meghann Peace '04 said. "When it was time to leave, I had to fight with them to get them to go. That's how much we all liked Knoebels."

Courtesy of Ben Fisher

This cathedral, located in Tours, is a true representation of French architecture. This and many other historical wonders are only part of the wonder of participating in Bucknell en France.

FEATURES

Want to come back to my place?

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Contributing Writer

There is always something to love about Friday nights. Whether you hit downtown or the frat houses, or party in your own room, there is always fun to be had. Amid this fun, the phrase "hooking up" is often heard. But what exactly does this term mean? Some University students were willing to offer their opinions on the definition of "hook-up," all varying in levels of intimacy.

"When two people make out or do anything more-fooling around, not including sex," Mike Molinet '07 said.

While some people rule out sex when defining "hook-up," others leave much more room for individual interpretation.

"Anything more than kissing," Stu Hollenshead '07 said.

Still others recognize that the real definition of a "hook-up" is something that can never truly be pinned down, as every individual on this campus and across the country may have their own interpretation.

"More than kissing, not necessarily having sex. That's my definition but it may vary from person to person," Alyssa Gross '05 said.

According to Associate Professor of Sociology Deborah Abowitz, the exact definition of "hooking-up" varies from person to person, and is as different as every student at the University.

"Hooking-up" is anything from kissing to sex," Abowitz said. "People construe the expression 'hook-up' any way they want. Using the expression 'hooking up' makes it easier to relate with others because it prevents them from having to specify."

According to Abowitz, the term "hooking-up" has been around since the '80s. Twenty years ago the term was first introduced during a "transition" period from the more conservative sexual views of the past to the more liberal philosophies of today. The term has gained popularity in the modern college world.

"Hooking-up" has become a part of campus culture nationwide. We cannot deny that it exists. It is a pattern of behavior that has existed for many years here at the University and at other schools.

A student's "hooking-up" says a lot about how they approach relationships on an emotional and physical level. Dating is rare here at the University because "hooking up" is so available and popular.

But why do "hook-ups" occur on campus? The atmosphere of the college life creates new relationships between young men and women, stimulated by the openness of students, coed dorms and increased comfort levels.

"Students of the University share a sense of comfort and trust because we are all part of one community," Abowitz said.

When asked if the rate at which "hook-ups" occur increased due to the college environment, alcohol and the party scene, students generally responded affirmatively.

"The rate has increased. Hooking up is part of maturing and experimenting. And I do believe that alcohol has an effect on this rate," Gross said.

While some chalk the increased rate up to experimentation, others believe it's due to a new level of freedom that some just aren't prepared to deal with.

"The rate of hook-ups is higher especially for first-years. They have their first taste of freedom, meet new people and live with no parental supervision," Abowitz said.

Hook-ups are often spoken of in conjunction with alcohol use. The party scene atmosphere has obvious effects on the behavior of students, a population of young men and women with an overabundance of hormones in search of a way to satisfy them.

Students use such terms as "slut" and "whore" when expressing their opinions about a girl who "hook-ups" often with different partners. A guy is referred to as "player," "stud" and "pimp." Although this touches upon gender issues, it is apparent that there are often negative repercussions to participating in a "hook-up" of any degree too often.

"Girls who get around end up with a bad reputation. That's just the way it is. Guys aren't affected at all," Michael Becker '07 said.

Yet phrases that used to carry such a negative connotation are becoming so commonplace, even used in a joking manner amongst friends, that to be referred to as such doesn't always generate offense.

"Since the terms like 'slut' are so overused, I've become desensitized, hence I don't get offended—unless it is used in direct confrontation," Laura Mlynarski '07 said.

Another issue that arises relating to "hooking up" on campus is the term "hallcest." The term roots from the word "incest," which is taboo in our society, and implies "hooking-up" or having a relationship with another person on your hall. The fact that the term "hallcest" exists means that though "hooking-up" is permitted and even welcomed, there are still some boundaries that University students don't wish to see crossed.

"Hallcest is just plain wrong. It makes things awkward for the entire hall if something bad happens," Pat Lynch '07 said.

Today's media has made a huge impact on the popular view of "hooking-up." Shows such as "Sex & the City" and "reality TV" deliberately advertise young men and women "hooking-up," making it acceptable for physical and sexual encounters without a true, monogamous relationship. They promote such behavior to the public and make it hard for actual couples to survive. University students will live in this comfort zone for four years, but when they reach the end and begin their lives in the real world, will they be ready for real relationships?

"I believe 'hooking-up' may not necessarily help or prepare them in future terms," said Abowitz.

Nevertheless, no one seems to be complaining too loudly right now. It's safe to assume "hooking-up" will stay part of our campus culture for years to come, regardless of its potential effects.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

The college environment provides a perfect place for "hooking-up;" the definition of a "hook-up" remains uncertain.

Get your game face on

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Every student at the University has a preferred way they like to spend their time. Some are diligent, using every spare moment to complete assignments days or even weeks in advance.

Others are not so studious, lounging in front of a movie or endless episodes of "Family Guy" while the work piles up.

And still others opt to stimulate their minds with an invigorating game of "Risk" or "Strategy."

Until now, these players have been unable to find a place to meet with friends and competitors to get their game on. That was until Jeffrey Bowen, assistant professor of physics at the University, started the Games Club.

Centering around games such as the previously-mentioned Risk and Strategy, along with Go, Othello, Mastermind and Cathedral.

Bowen's game club is scheduled to meet from 4-6 p.m. on the first Sunday of every month and from 8-10 p.m. on the third Friday of every month.

The club will stay clear of games like Dungeons and Dragons, as well as the games of the Chess-and-Checkers genre as clubs already exist for those.

"No experience is necessary. All you need to bring is yourself, friends and an interest in playing, learning and talking [about the games],"

Bowen said.

Initially, all games will be played in a pick-up style. However Bowen plans on having a tournament of champions toward the end of the semester.

This final face-off will give those true masterminds a chance to shine and blow all the novices out of the water.

Bowen plans on keeping the meetings as casual as possible, even venturing outside to enjoy the pleasant weather while it lasts.

There are no dues to be paid, no elections for officers, just good, clean gaming fun.

Thus far, response has been fair with 45 replies to the initial campus mailing, but Bowen hopes for more.

What to do in the middle of nowhere

Knoebels old-fashioned amusement park offers food, fun, and a blast from the past

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Staff Writer

Nothing to do in the middle of nowhere? Go to Knoebels, a fabulous blast from the past.

If you're hungry for a taste of nostalgia, fun or even food, there's a place within driving-distance of campus that has every element to satisfy all your appetites. That place is Knoebels Amusement Resort, a park that has been in existence for 77 years.

"At one time there were over 35 [amusement] parks between Selinsgrove and Clark Summit," said Joe Muscato, director of advertising and public relations.

Of those 35, Knoebels is now all that remains. Nestled in the center of a valley, hidden away from the world, it seems as if it has been preserved from some past era of carnivals and cotton candy. At Knoebels, you won't find the pushy crowds and high-tech atmosphere of larger amusement parks. You will find, however, a park full of its own character and charm.

Though Knoebels is old-fashioned, it is not out-of-date. It has been featured on both the Discovery Channel and Food Network. The park is home to The Phoenix, which was originally built by the Philadelphia Toboggan Company in 1947, and the Twister, their newest and longest coaster.

"The roller coasters are my favorite rides. I love the Phoenix, the one with all the dips," Emily Thede '04 said. According to Muscato, Knoebels has been highly acclaimed by all its visitors for the fantastic selection of food. This food selection runs the gamut from fried pierogies to pickle-on-a-stick, to healthier selections such as bread-bowl salads.

The accolades listed above are not even the park's most appealing feature. At Knoebels, the most old-fashioned element is its price. Parking, entertainment and admission are all free. You can buy a low-cost, ride-all-day ticket, or pay for each ride as you go on it. Even top attractions such as The Phoenix will only take about $1.60 out of your pocket. In addition to being wallet-friendly, Knoebels is also easy on your schedule. There's no need to dedicate a whole weekend, or even a whole day, to appreciate the park and its attractions. Knoebels is the ideal size for an afternoon trip.

"It's cheap, but it is small, so you can go for a couple of hours and still have a great time," Janet Forney '04 said. This may leave one wondering how the park has survived. Muscato said that the Knoebel family makes a point to put all the money they earn back into the park. It thrives on word-of-mouth advertising.

"We don't have the ad budget that your multi-million dollar parks have," Muscato said, "but we do depend on a lot of word of mouth."

Knoebels is open from the end of April until the end of September. However, there are two upcoming weekends that may be the ideal time to visit. Sept. 20 will be a "special coupon day." If you purchase a ride-all-day pass tomorrow, you will receive a coupon for another pass to be redeemed any Saturday in May.

"[The free pass] will provide a great relief during finals," Muscato said. The annual Covered Bridge Festival is also approaching on the weekend of

Oct. 4-5. Ninety percent of the rides will be open this weekend.

"There shouldn't be any lines; you should be able to walk onto any ride," Muscato said.

So, how do you reach this pocket of the past? Take Route 15 South until you see signs for PA-61 towards Sunbury. Exit onto 61, and follow this route for about 12 miles. After this point, there will be an intersection marked Junction 487. Turn left on to 487, which will take you right into the open arms of the park. It takes about half an hour to reach Knoebels, 25 miles away from the University. Once you've found Knoebels you may also find it hard to leave. With its unique combination of thrilling rides, fried food and perfect price, it may become a frequent destination for those looking to spend a day away.

"I went with my international students during orientation," Meghann Peace '04 said. "When it was time to leave, I had to fight with them to get them to go. That's how much we all liked Knoebels."

Courtesy of Knoebels.com

The Twister, one of the many thrill coasters they have to offer, majestically shrouds Knoebels Amusement Park. In addition to thrilling rides, Knoebels also offers family rides and plenty of delicious food.

Oct. 4-5. Ninety percent of the rides will be open this weekend.

"There shouldn't be any lines; you should be able to walk onto any ride," Muscato said.

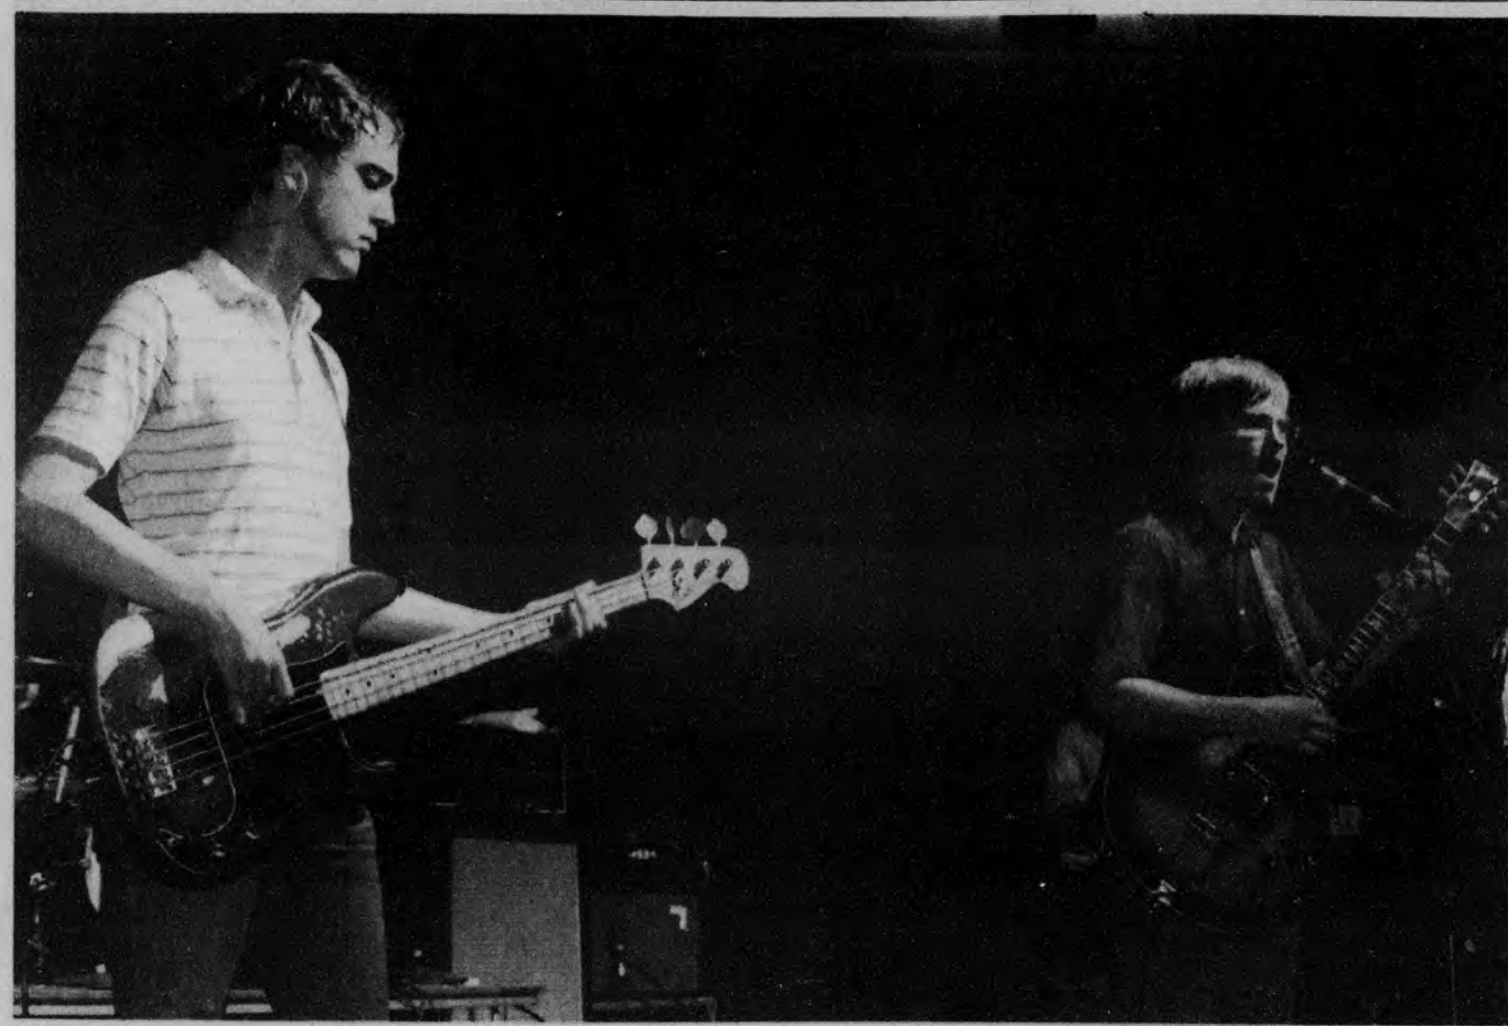

So, how do you reach this pocket of the past? Take Route 15 South until you see signs for PA-61 towards Sunbury. Exit onto 61, and follow this route for about 12 miles. After this point, there will be an intersection marked Junction 487. Turn left on to 487, which will take you right into the open arms of the park. It takes about half an hour to reach Knoebels, 25 miles away from the University.

Once you've found Knoebels you may also find it hard to leave. With its unique combination of thrilling rides, fried food and perfect price, it may become a frequent destination for those looking to spend a day away.

"I went with my international students during orientation," Meghann Peace '04 said. "When it was time to leave, I had to fight with them to get them to go. That's how much we all liked Knoebels."

FEATURES

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The crowd responded with shouts and cheers to Saves the Day, the second of Fall Fest's two bands. The band played a strong set featuring songs from its 2001 CD What You Are and its newly released album In Reverie.

Taking back Fall Fest

Saves the Day and Taking Back Sunday rock Gerhard Field House

By MICHAEL DiMARIA
AND RACHEL HOFFORD
Contributing Writers

The aroma of sweat pervaded the room. A jumbled mass of bodies occupied one of the basketball courts and elbows were being thrown. On more than one occasion a body flew through the air. Just another day in the Gerhard Field House, one might think. Just another casual pickup game of basketball on a Saturday afternoon. Au contraire, for this day was very different.

Last Saturday the Field House was completely transformed. It underwent a total makeover, and instead of basketball courts and volleyball nets, it housed food, activity tables and most notably, a large stage nestled in the far corner. It was on that stage where two of the most energetic and popular acts in modern punk music played to a huddled mass of sweaty, chanting bodies.

Taking Back Sunday was one of these bands. Originally formed in Long Island, Taking Back Sunday has been on the scene for nearly four years. After undergoing a few line-up changes, signing to Victory Records and releasing its album Tell All Your Friends, Taking Back Sunday

Sunday has quickly grown to become one of the most popular bands in the underground scene and one of the reasons why people flocked to this year's University-sponsored Fall Fest.

"Right now you're about a two. We're going to take you to a ten."

—Adam Lazzara, lead singer for Taking Back Sunday

Taking Back Sunday kicked off the concert festivities with a bang, and it wasn't long after it started playing that people were chanting along and surfing the crowd.

"Taking Back Sunday was incredible. I haven't seen such a good live show in a while, let alone at Bucknell," Mark Stevenosky '06 said, after attending Saturday's show.

Adam Lazzara, lead singer for Taking Back Sunday, played largely from their 2001 CD, Stay What You Are. It kicked things off with the album's "At Your Funeral" and then closed with its final track, a stellar version of "Firefly."

Saves the Day played practically non-stop for two hours. The one time they did pause, however, Conley willingly shared his water bottle with the audience, who passed it around until it was empty.

The band was also very appreciative of the audience. Despite having to leave immediately after the show for Lazzara, the lead singer for Taking Back Sunday, kept the crowd moving and fully energized with his writhing movements and microphone-swinging antics.

"Right now you're about a two. We're going to take you to a ten," Lazzara said of the crowd's energy level.

And the band did just that, in about three seconds. The enthusiasm and energy with which the band played left the crowd hot, sweaty and begging for more. After telling the audience that its members were just waking up, the band made as it tore through a set that rocked with an intensity scarcely found this side of the emo/punk spectrum. The set included standouts "Cute Without the E" and "Bike Scene" from Tell All Your Friends. It also treated fans to a couple of new songs during their 45-minute performance.

Saves the Day, veterans to the scene, took the stage shortly after Taking Back Sunday and continued the show without missing a beat.

Saves the Day formed out of New Jersey in 1997 and has put out three albums to date.

The new five-person line up of Saves the Day, with singer Chris Conley taking over former guitarist Ted Alexander's role, played largely from their 2001 CD, Stay What You Are. It kicked things off with the album's "At Your Funeral" and then closed with its final track, a stellar version of "Firefly."

Saves the Day played practically non-stop for two hours. The one time they did pause, however, Conley willingly shared his water bottle with the audience, who passed it around until it was empty.

The band was also very appreciative of the audience. Despite having to leave immediately after the show for another concert scheduled that night in Atlanta, Georgia, the band displayed great stamina, maintaining its level of play throughout its set.

The enthusiasm and energy with which the band played left the crowd hot, sweaty, and begging for more.

"Saves the Day always has a lot of energy," Kristen Hughes '06 said. Its interaction with and appreciation of fans has definitely contributed to its huge fan base, and the angst-filled lyrics are a point of connection between it and its high school-aged fans.

"Saves the Day was my favorite band in high school. The epitome of [Saves the Day] is listening to "Shoulder to the Wheel" loudly with the sunroof and windows down, driving fast with my best friends," Monica McMurrer '06 said.

Fall Fest received exceptionally high ratings from University students for this year's concert.

However, this year's Fall Fest

Another titillating edition brought to you by...

Ms.

Sex and the Bubble

Answering your pressing questions

Wow Bucknell! I can see that I was right about you! I have gotten such an overwhelming response to my column that it has become quite obvious to me that Ms. O is not the only one with sex on the brain! You are all just dying to talk about sex, relationships and more! So keep those e-mails and letters coming, and I will do my best to answer each of your questions in one of my columns.

After receiving so many great questions, it was really tough to choose only one to answer, but I think you will all agree that this week's question is absolutely sex-tacular!

Dear Ms. O,

I have been dating the typical nice guy that every girl wants in the end, since the second semester of freshman year. He is amazingly sweet and would do anything if I ask him. Flowers on random occasions, dinners out, you name it and he does it for me, except get my engine going. Recently, when my girls and I have been going out, I can't help but think about the "bad boys" and how turned on I am by them. I want a bad boy; someone who isn't always nice but whose wild side would more than make up for it! Am I so wrong to go for the loud and fast when I have the quiet and consistent? HELP! I WANT BOTH!

-D.

Dear D,

That is quite a predicament you have there, but I think that much of your problem may be in your own mind. It sounds as if you have what Ms. O likes to call "The Good-boy/Bad-boy Complex." It seems as though you believe that men must either fall into the "Good Boy" category or the "Bad Boy" category. However, these two categories are way too black and white. You have to realize that there is a lot of gray area when it comes to dealing with men.

Your problem may be easier to fix than you think. Have you tried talking to your man about the way you are feeling? Perhaps he is feeling the same way too. It seems as though you guys have entered into a relationship rut and just need to re-examine things a little. Before you write your man off as the quintessential "Good Boy," at least give him the chance to prove you wrong. In my many years of dating, I have discovered that no matter how nice a guy may come off, there is always a little inner "Bad Boy" lurking beneath the surface. Ask your boyfriend what his biggest fantasy is. I guarantee you that it will be more "bad" than "good." Next, share all of your deepest, darkest fantasies with him. This simple act of sharing your fantasies will help to clue him in on how to better satisfy you, in and out of the bedroom. Once your man knows exactly what you want and need from the relationship, he will be able to satisfy your desire to have the good and the bad.

-Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous. Tell all about your crazy antics and...

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What do you think is the sexiest body part?

another concert scheduled that night in Atlanta, Georgia, the band displayed great stamina, maintaining its level of play throughout its set.

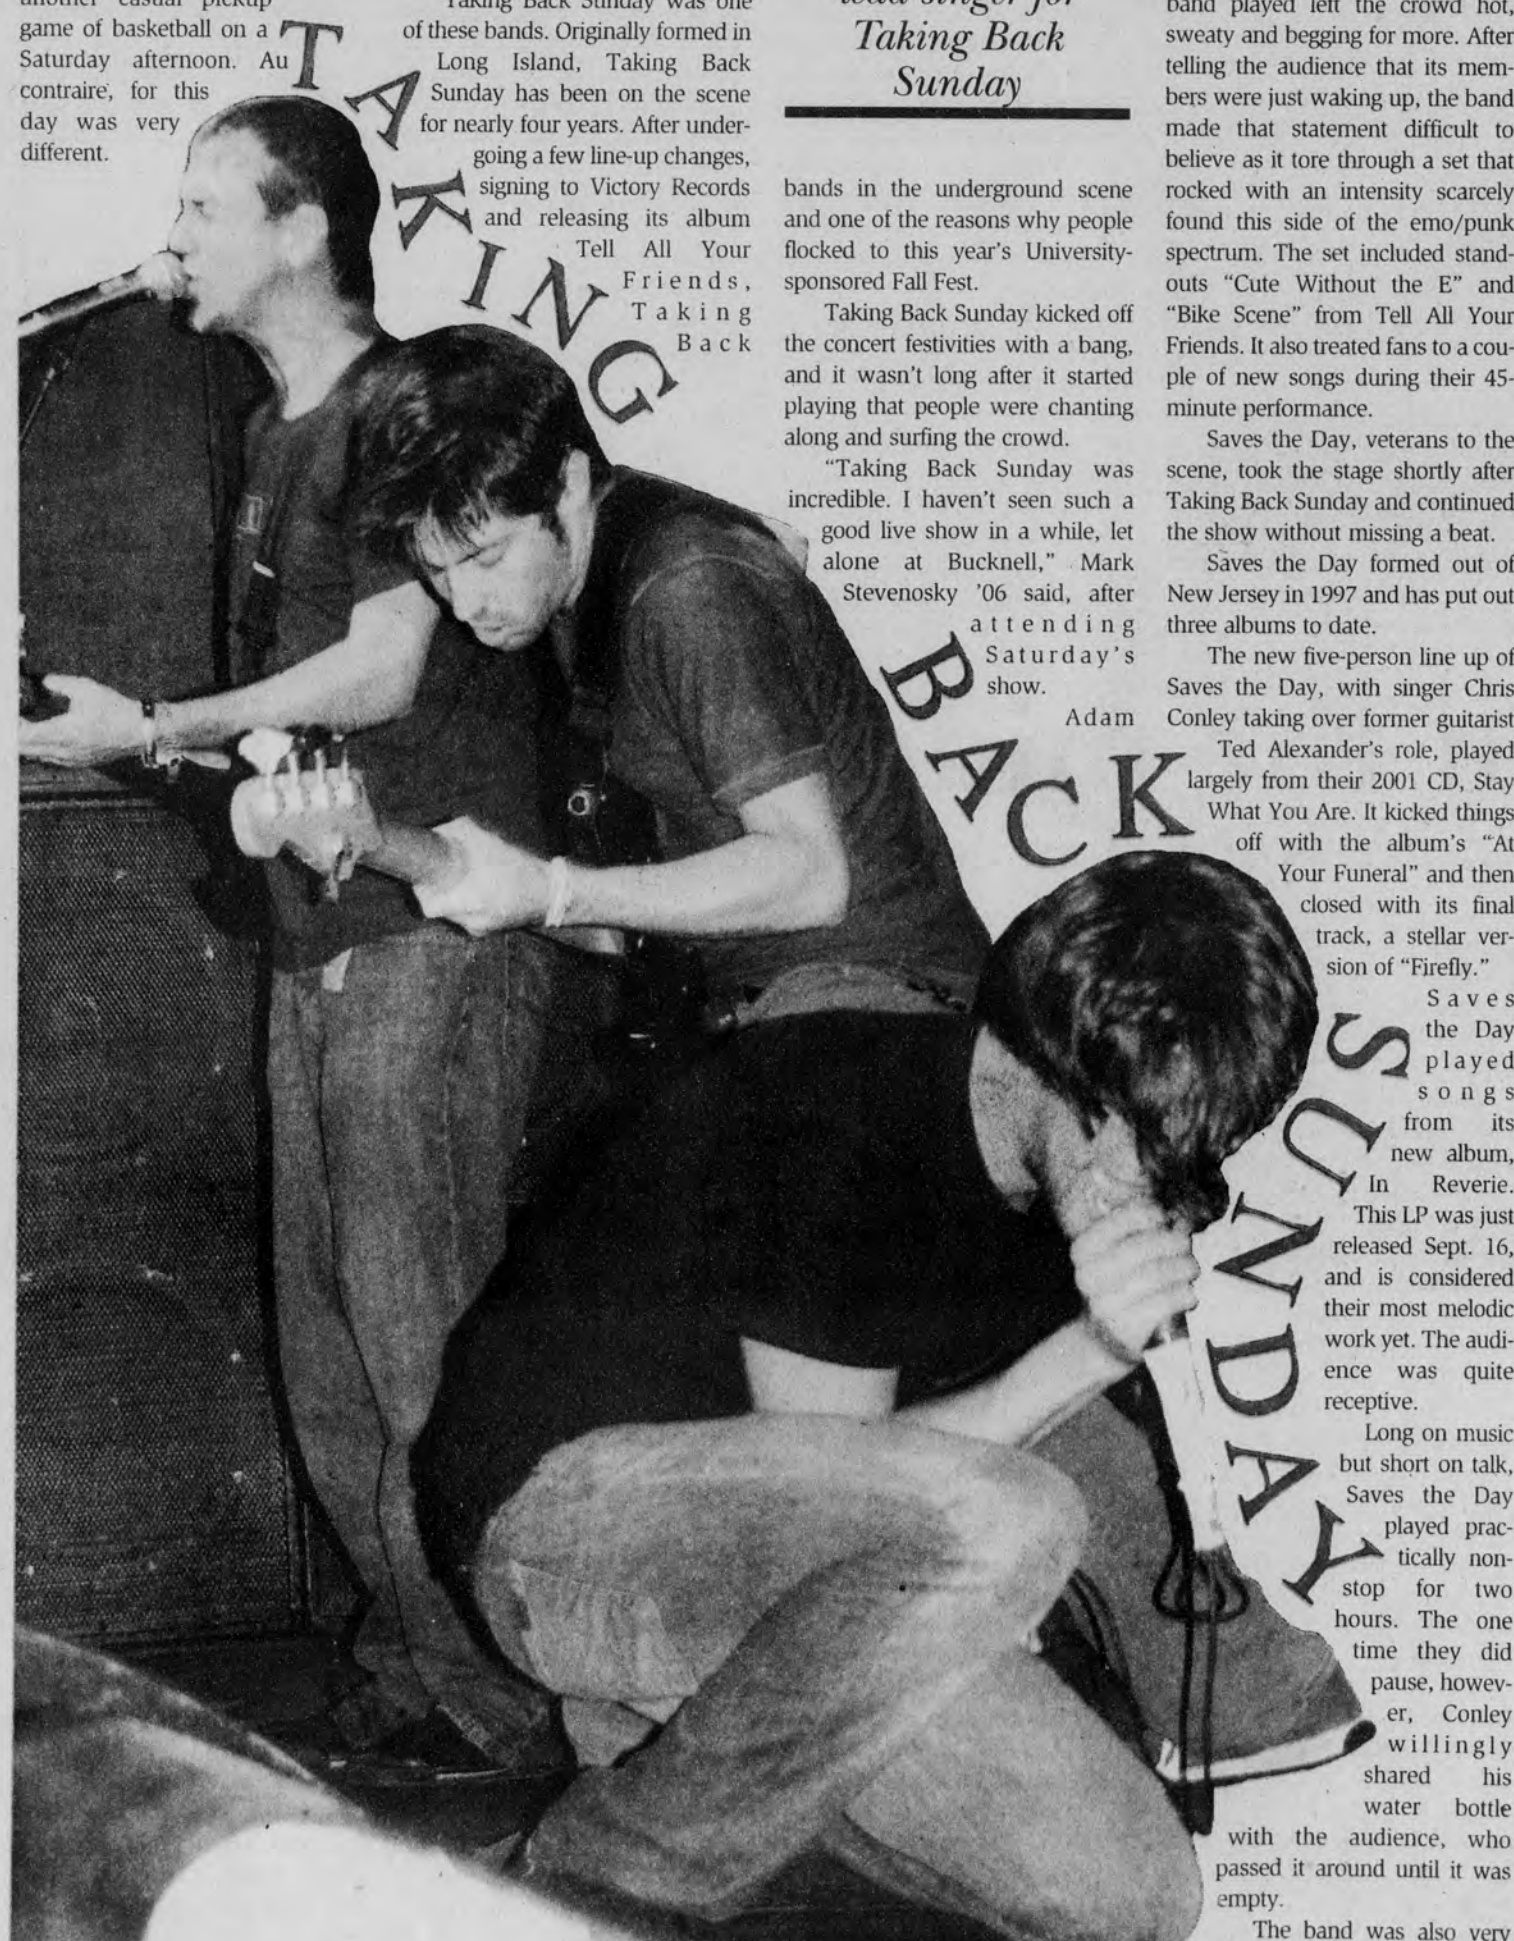

The enthusiasm and energy with which the band played left the crowd hot, sweaty, and begging for more.

"Saves the Day always has a lot of energy," Kristen Hughes '06 said. Its interaction with and appreciation of fans has definitely contributed to its huge fan base, and the angst-filled lyrics are a point of connection between it and its high school-aged fans.

"Saves the Day was my favorite band in high school. The epitome of [Saves the Day] is listening to "Shoulder to the Wheel" loudly with the sunroof and windows down, driving fast with my best friends," Monica McMurrer '06 said.

Fall Fest received exceptionally high ratings from University students for this year's concert.

However, this year's Fall Fest

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Taking Back Sunday, enthused throughout their entire show, rocked the crowd for 45 wild minutes. University students and visiting fans enjoyed the concert at last Saturday's Fall Fest.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

September 19, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 3

Business and Politics:

2007 Executives Flory Perez, Laura Mlynarski and Brianna Evans are ready to start their first year in BSG.

See page B10

Men's golf takes BU Invitational

Tournament win is first 36-hole championship for Bison in 16 years

By TERI SCHLANG
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell men's golf team captured its first 36-hole golf tournament title in nearly 16 years this past weekend. The Bison "Orange" squad fired a season-best 291 on Saturday at the Bucknell Invitational. Combined with its Friday round of 293, it earned a grand-total of 584 and the title over the other 19 teams present.

The Bison had only a one-shot lead over Cornell after the opening round, but Cornell soon fell back to sixth after scoring 312 in the second round. Lafayette was the closest contender, shooting a two-day total of 595, but remained 11 strokes behind the Bison "Orange."

Charlie Waddell '07, competing in his first collegiate event, led the Bison "Orange" squad to victory. He followed up his opening round of 71 with a final round of 72. His 36-hole total left him tied for third, five shots behind

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Abbie Valentine '04 takes a swing during an earlier tournament. Valentine shot a 73 on Saturday.

medalist Andrew Hill of Mount St. Mary's, either day, but my short game really saved who shot matching rounds of 69.

"I didn't strike the ball particularly well

See GOLF, page B5

Women on the rebound

By PAT EVANS
Sports Editor

The Bison women's soccer team rebounded from a 2-1 loss to Cornell with a commanding 3-0 win over Howard at home. Jennifer Margolis '07 scored the opening goal and the Bison never looked back, outshooting the visitors 22-7 and holding a 10-1 advantage in corner kicks.

The game-winning goal turned out to be 33 minutes, 50 seconds into the game when Ashley Dincher '05 crossed the ball from the right side of the field just past the Howard goalkeeper, and Margolis put it in from the left side. Margolis' goal made it four straight games that the first-year attacker has scored a point, putting her at 11 points for the year.

"Jennifer has provided a spark that we were missing last year on offense," Head Coach Chrissy Findlay said.

Margolis has made a major contribution to the Bison offense and has been the highest scoring rookie the team has seen since 2000.

"All of the girls have helped me out a lot and made it a lot easier for me to make the adjustment to playing at the college level," Margolis said.

Putting insurance on the board against Howard for the Bison after Margolis' goal were Rachel Prowler '06, who scored her first goal of the season 13 minutes into the second half, and Suzanne Arata '06, who scored with just seven minutes left in the game.

"I think one of the keys this year has been that we've been able to give equal playing time to more players, so that everyone is fighting for a starting posi-

See WSOCER, page B5

Bison offense comes to life in 4-1 triumph over La Salle

Men's soccer improves to 3-2 after three-game winning streak over St. Peter's, Niagara and La Salle

By PAT EVANS
Sports Editor

The Bison men's soccer team capped off a three-game winning streak last Tuesday, beating La Salle 4-1 at home. Scott Visnic '06 scored what proved to be the winning goal 65 minutes into the game when he received a pass from Mike Lookingland '05 on a free kick. Last week the Bison picked up two victories against Saint Peter's and Niagara, winning each game 1-0.

Ori Adrabi '05 got things started for the Orange and Blue against La Salle, receiving a pass from Greg Buzzell '05 and putting it in the back of the net just 18 minutes into the game. La Salle battled back, and 20 minutes later tied the game at one to go into halftime.

The Bison came out firing in the second half, outshooting La Salle 11-3. The Herd was eventually rewarded for its effort when Lookingland found Visnic open on a free kick.

"The free kick was outside the box," Visnic said. "They were setting up a wall, and I was wide open on the far post. I just made eye contact with Mike [Lookingland] because I knew I couldn't say anything and risk the defense coming over to me. He gave me a good pass, and I put it in."

Visnic's goal opened up the floodgates as the Bison then scored two more goals: one from Chris Beekman '04 and another from Visnic late in the game.

Goal-scoring was the major question mark coming into the season for the Bison, so the 4-1 win meant something extra special.

"I think what's been helping our offense is just that we're starting to take a lot more chances," Lookingland said. "Before, we were kind of playing conservatively even though we knew that our offenders could beat people one-on-one. Now we're not playing as timidly and we're going out there and doing what we've always been capable of doing."

The focal point of that offense thus far has been Visnic, who also scored the game-winning goal against Niagara.

"We have very high expectations for Scott," Head Coach Brendan Nash said. "He also has very high expectations for himself, so he puts a lot of pressure on himself. He expects himself to score every game, and we are hopeful that he does that."

While the offense has started to put the points on the board for the Bison, the defense has always been the core of the team. The Herd gave up just one goal during the three-game winning streak, and it was this defensive effort that sparked the offense.

Co-captains Lookingland and Brian King '04 have been the reliable anchors for that defense, and both knew early on that it would be their responsibility to inspire other areas of the team.

Goalie Adam Edwards '06 has also contributed to that defense, recording two shutouts this season. These shutouts bring him to a total of 12 for his career, a number just two shy of entering the Patriot League Top 10 for career shutouts by a goalie.

See MSOCER, page B5

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

Goalkeeper Adam Edwards '06 leaps for a shot during the 4-1 win over La Salle on Tuesday. After dropping their first two games, the Bison have won three in a row.

SPORTS

Field hockey

Field hockey remains undefeated with its third straight victory.

See page B2

MUSIC

The Amalgamation

The Amalgamation radio show rocks on WVBU.

See page B7

BUSINESS

Illegal Downloading

ResNet discusses the particularities of illegal downloading and the consequences for University students.

See page B10

Sports

Field hockey collects another victory

Team is still undefeated after smooth win over Monmouth; Boynton drives home two goals for Bison

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell field hockey team has yet to slow down, improving its record to 3-0 with a 4-1 victory at Monmouth last Saturday. The undefeated start is the best for the Bison since 1994.

Meiko Boynton '05 led the scoring with two goals for the Bison, while Kelly O'Brien '06 and Kirsten Nilson '06 added a goal apiece. As a team, Bucknell outshot Monmouth 20-6.

Head Coach Heather Lewis was pleased with her team's performance.

"Right now we're playing solid hockey and not making those glaring mistakes that can cost you in the course of a game," Lewis said. "We're a veteran team, and the experience is paying off."

Although the Bison dominated the game, it was Monmouth who struck first, slipping a goal past Liz Jordan '06 to take a 1-0 lead. It was only the second goal allowed by Jordan this season, and it turned out to be the last one she allowed in the game.

Seven minutes later, O'Brien capitalized on a penalty shot to tie the score at 1-1 with her first goal of the season.

Boynton gave the Bison the lead just before the completion of the half with the first of her two goals. Her unassisted shot 34 minutes, 40 seconds into the game pushed the score to 2-1.

Boynton struck again at 14:40 into the second half, scoring a goal off a Cara Turner '05 assist to give the Orange and Blue a two-goal cushion.

"What was nice about the win is another person came to the forefront," Lewis said. "In this particular game, Meiko was able to take advantage of a midfield mismatch which led to plenty of scoring opportunities for her. I was pleased with how she took advantage of those opportunities."

Nilson sealed the win for the Bison with an insurance goal 24:59 into the second period. Lindsey Gentel '04 picked up an assist on the play.

"Kelly O'Brien and Kirsten Nilson are playing outstanding as a duo," Lewis said. "They are becoming an offensive force that is hard to contain."

Jordan was once again stellar in the goal, allowing just the one goal and compiling four saves. The Bison's effort was anchored by more superb defensive play, a regular occurrence for this year's unyielding squad.

Meiko Boynton '05 weaves around an opponent with the ball during a previous game. Boynton, who led the team in goals last season, scored her first two goals of the season against Monmouth.

Lewis appreciated the team's defensive strength.

"Defensively, we're very solid and Liz is playing well in goal," Lewis said.

The win gives the Bison the momentum they will need as they prepare for big games down the road.

"I think anytime you can start the season out with a few wins, especially entering a crucial game against Holy Cross, that it helps the confidence level," Lewis said.

The team has already begun to turn some heads with its success, garnering three nominations in last week's National Field Hockey Coaches Association poll.

Next week will bring a landmark game for the team, as they christen the brand new artificial turf field on Saturday. The first game on Graham Field will bring a formidable opponent in Holy Cross, the team selected to finish second in the Patriot League.

Lewis and her team look forward to the inaugural game.

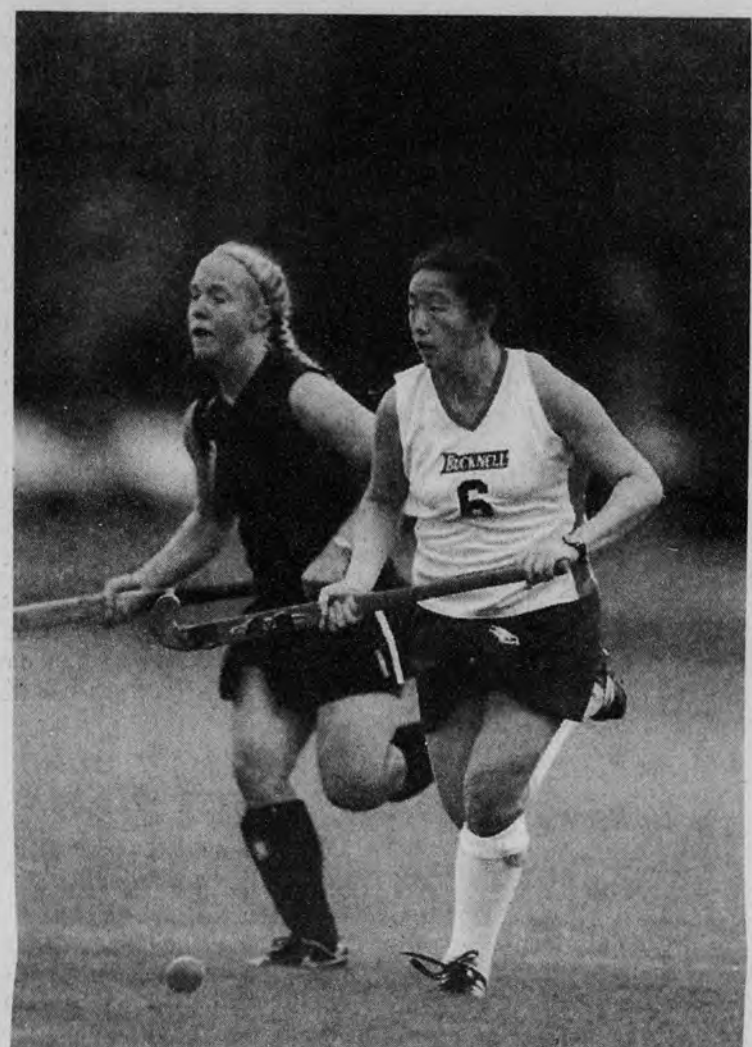

"This weekend is going to be very special with the dedication of the turf field," Lewis said. "The generosity of Bill Graham along with so many alumni, family and friends of Bucknell field hockey have made the turf field a reality. I know my team members appreciate that generosity every single day they step on the field and they make a point of being a team many people would be proud of."

The Bison will have a chance to improve their record to 4-0—a mark that hasn't been achieved in the program since 1984. A win would also advance the team's Patriot League record to 2-0. The game begins at 12 p.m. on Sept. 20.

USA SPRING BREAK.com
Cancun, Bahamas, Acapulco, Jamaica & More!
Don't be fooled! Go with Quality and Experience!
28 years in business!
Largest Student Tour Operator
(Division of USA Student Travel)

Call Toll Free:
1-877-460-6077
Now also hiring
Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $$

Meiko Boynton '05 goes after the ball on the team's old field. The Bison will play their future home games on artificial turf.

Editors NFL Picks Week One	Brent Sports Editor	Cecily Sports Editor	Adam Photo Editor	Michelle Assoc. Editor	Peter E.I.C.	Aly Mng. Editor
Minnesota at Detroit
New Orleans at Tennessee
N.Y. Jets at New England
Tampa Bay at Atlanta
St. Louis at Seattle
N.Y. Giants at Washington
Green Bay at Arizona
Baltimore at San Diego
Buffalo at Miami
Oakland at Denver

Photos courtesy of Associated NFL Coaches

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

Together, Affirmed and Alydar stand alone

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Sometime last week, rag-to-reckless riches trainer Barclay Tagg announced that he wouldn't send his astronomically hyped trainee Funny Cide to the Breeder's Cup Classic. Or anywhere near it.

The emphatically adored gelding may not set foot on a track again this year, and if he does, it won't be the same track that multi-million dollar Triple Crown-killer Empire Maker makes his next appearance on.

And so ends the great rivalry. No more good versus evil. No more blueblood versus blue collar. No more hero. No more villain.

Some rivalry. They entered the starting gates together just three times.

Empire Maker got the last laugh. And the first laugh. And was an aching foot away from having the middle laugh as well.

Somewhere, from the ethereal paddocks of above, a couple of old stallions are having perhaps the heartiest laugh of all. After all, they do have a right to be smug when it comes to rivalries. Twenty-five years ago, they set the bar. They really set it.

Affirmed was the coverboy, the champion, fortune's darling.

Alydar was the cursed one, the king of "almost"—the equine embodiment of the Boston Red Sox.

Together, they were everything the sport needed.

They were both foaled in 1975—Affirmed on February 21 and Alydar a month later on March 23.

Alydar started out with all the blessings. He had regal breeding and a nice build, and best of all, he was born on the storied grounds of Calumet Farm. The same Calumet Farm that had seen its silks float to Triple Crown glory on the backs of Citation and Whirlaway. And hopefully, three years down the road, would see its silks carried to a third try on the back of this deep chestnut son of Raise A Native.

Affirmed wasn't quite as striking. He was dainty as a youngster—feminine, even. His coat was a bit pale. His breeding was respectable, but only that. He was nothing to be scoffed at, but he wasn't sending racing gurus into backflips either.

He wasn't Seabiscuit; he wasn't War Admiral. He was just a horse, a nice horse, who might have a chance to win something here and there.

In 1977, back when racehorses actually raced, the two faced off six times. Affirmed won the first time they met, but it was Alydar's first career start. Alydar drew away in the Great American Stakes, evening the score and re-igniting the backstretch buzz surrounding his auspicious future.

That may have been as good as it ever got for Alydar. The lucky one—the one with the right breeding, the right connections, the right looks—was anything but that.

The Hopeful Stakes cast shades of the future, with Affirmed denying Alydar the win by a pertinacious nostril. The Futurity Stakes yielded the same result. And so did the Laurel Futurity.

When the year ended, the smaller colt, the "pretty" colt with his flaxen mane and pink silks, was named Best Two-Year-Old Colt.

Bring on 1978. Most people like to tell the story a certain way. Most people aren't very creative. They need an underdog. They need an overdog.

They like to tell it with Affirmed as the stalwart one; they cast the paler chestnut as the game one, the one with more guts, the one with more grit and heart.

Alydar got to be on the other end of that romanticism. He was the talented one, the one who simply got out-gamed, out-gutted, out-smarted by his plucky little rival.

The truth is, they were two of a kind. Talented. Game. Gritty. That was Affirmed. And that was also Alydar.

Affirmed got bigger before the 1978 Kentucky Derby, perhaps not as big as his West Coast counterpart, but he was no slouch. He jumped to the pace in the run for the roses, while Alydar broke slowly, took a wide trip and couldn't get there in the end.

Alydar got a little closer in the Preakness, but not close enough. Affirmed had won the first two legs of a Triple Crown that was supposed to be swept by Calumet Farm and its gallant Alydar.

The third leg, the Belmont, would be the one that defined the rivalry. They would duel, eyeball to eyeball, all the way down the longest stretch in the nation, a strip of racing history that racing fans never stop talking about or replaying.

When it was over, Affirmed was wearing the white carnations and the figurative crown. His name became the 11th, and last, to be added to a list that included Secretariat, Seattle Slew and Citation.

Alydar got his name plunked onto a list, too, only his stands alone. He is the only horse in the entire history of the sport to place second in all three Triple Crown races.

Calumet's champion was soon after chased off the track by injury, a nemesis even more formidable than Affirmed. The two horses faced each other 10 times; Affirmed had won seven of them, Alydar three (one by Affirmed's disqualification).

If there is such thing as a curse, it clung to Alydar's side even in his retirement. In 1990, he turned up one morning with a shattered leg. Vets tried to fix it, and Alydar tried to fight it.

Ironically, the horse who was supposed to have been "out-gamed" and "out-gutted" so many times in his career was the one who hung on to his precarious life with more tenacity and grit than any animal could possibly need on the racetrack.

But just like all of his efforts in the Triple Crown, Alydar lost this battle. He was euthanized, and Calumet Farm collected on the stallion's colossal insurance payoff. It was decided later that the big horse's death was no accident after all, although no one really knows for sure. Affirmed lived another 11 years and then joined his old rival.

If there is any trace of salvation for Alydar—aside from the dazzling trail of prodigy he left behind at stud—it's that he is forever linked with one of the most spectacular entities in sports history. Nobody thinks of Affirmed without Alydar by his side. And vice versa.

They were a pair, a package deal, partners in crime. That's how history will always remember them.

No matter what the media tries to pitch as the new "great rivalry," no matter how intense they make it seem, it doesn't quite measure up. Twenty-five years removed from the last day those two grand chestnut horses stepped on the track together, nothing else has come close. Chances are, nothing ever will.

No need to shell out for pricey NFL quarterbacks

By MIKE ORTA
Contributing Writer

In the past few years, the NFL has joined the ranks of MLB and the NBA by negotiating $100 million contracts. It's official—NFL quarterbacks now merit salaries greater than the gross domestic product of most African countries. But the question at hand isn't whether or not they deserve it, but if it is a good idea for a franchise to invest most of its money in one player for an extended period of time. The answer is a resounding "no."

First, let's take a look at the quarterbacks who have signed such contracts. We have Drew Bledsoe in New England—wait, they traded him the next off season. We have Donovan McNabb in Philadelphia, Daunte Culpepper in Minnesota and Brett Favre in Green Bay.

Let's start with Drew Bledsoe. Bledsoe was drafted as the number-one pick in 1993 with the idea that he would become the new face of the New England franchise. With the Patriots, Bledsoe managed to accomplish this by establishing a new record for pass attempts in a season in 1994 and leading the franchise to the 1996 Super Bowl. As time passed after that Super Bowl season though, the number of Bledsoe's supporters began to decrease, at least everywhere outside of the franchise. Despite the criticism he received for being too slow, taking too many sacks and not having a quick enough release, one thing remained constant—he was "our guy" to the Patriots. So, with this commitment to its quarterback in mind, New England made Bledsoe a $100 million quarterback, with the intention that he would retire a Patriot. Well, the next season he got injured, was replaced by Tom Brady and sat quietly on the bench during the team's Cinderella season. Game over, Drew, game over. The team promptly dumped him the next off-season, trading him to Buffalo.

Why would you trade such an impact player to a team in your own division? Talk about an indecisive front office. While the team had once been so enamored with Bledsoe that it was willing to live with his terminal slowness, they had suddenly fallen out of love. Scratch that—they sky-dived out of love with this guy. This illustrates a point about modern NFL roster management—nobody is untouchable. This team obviously knew this, and still practiced this mentality today. Why would you invest that much money into a guy when you know that he is as replaceable as a rug?

Next we look at Donovan McNabb. McNabb is another player who was drafted with the idea of "becoming the franchise." It should be noted however, that a majority of Philadelphia fans were less than enthused with this pick—they wanted Ricky Williams. McNabb has since carved a name for himself in the rugged city of Philly by leading his team to two NFC town isn't going to sit through a Tarleton or Elway-type career. McNabb needs to win. Now, I'm serious. Last season when he got injured, both of his backups played extremely well, won a couple games and put Philly in the playoffs. This begs the question, "How hard is it to run the Eagle's offense if some third-string quarterback can do it and post a com-matter what draft pick was used on him, or that he has a couple of pedestrians starting at wide receiver. When it comes down to it, McNabb is going to take either all the credit, or all the blame, for his team's performance. Instead of investing $100 million into him and increasing the focus on his performance, maybe the front office should have added another playmaker to the become unstoppable and Philly wins the Super Bowl. Instead they've got a situation where every other team in the league knows that to beat Philly you must simply contain McNabb. This is exactly what is happening so far this season.

The Minnesota Vikings made Daunte Culpepper a member of the $100 million club this past off-season.

Now, unlike the other quarterbacks, Culpepper wasn't made a starter early on. He sat for a season during the Randall Cunningham/Jeff George era. He sat and he learned. Culpepper threw 33 touchdowns in his first season as a starter, took the team to the playoffs and got slaughtered in the championship game. He then saw his passer rating decline by 20 points over the next two seasons. This past May, Red McCombs and the "funky bunch" gave Culpepper a 10-year, $100 million contract extension. Wow. This is a guy who had a passer rating of roughly 75.3 last year. When Randy "The Nightmare" Moss wants a new contract for posting stats that defy the laws of probability (which he inevitably will within three seasons), how much money are you going to fork over? Certainly you have to pay him something comparable to the guy he makes look good. The point is, giving such a huge extension to a quarterback who has had only one good playoff run, when you've got a prima donna at wide receiver and a shaky defense to top it off, is asking for trouble. How much of the cap are you going to invest in two players? Not to mention the fact that you've got a young running back coming up on a contract year and a defense that's going to need some more teeth to win a championship. Another $100 million quarterback, another franchise tying up a whole bunch of money in one guy when there are other areas of distinct need.

Finally we come to the golden boy: Brett Favre. Who could say anything bad about this guy? Seriously. The man is a living legend. He's like a really big kid out there, having fun, making plays. He completes passes nobody else would ever conceive to be possible. He would play with a fractured skull. Favre embodies everything there is to love about football. He is a sure-fire bet to go to the Hall of Fame in his first year of eligibility. This is the problem. The majority of Green Bay fans would die for this man. The franchise just might do it, too. They gave a $100 million extension to a quarterback over

See QBS, page B5

Green Bay fans watch as multi-million dollar quarterback Brett Favre heads off the field. Green Bay, Philadelphia, Minnesota and New England are among several teams that have recently offered huge contracts to quarterbacks.

Championship games, during which McNabb looked as confused as a geek at his first high school dance. Now let's get something straight about Philly—anyone can get chased out of town. This is the city that booed Santa Claus. This parable passer rating to the starter?" Getting injured really was the worst thing for this guy, because now his fans have tasted other winning quarterbacks, and if McNabb doesn't get it done, then he is out of Philly. No joke. It doesn't offense. It's not like they had $10 million in cap room. At the very least, another guy could've taken some of the heat off of McNabb.

In the best case scenario, the other player helps out the offense, the Eagles

Sports

Volleyball captures second in Bucknell Invitational

Bison defeat Fairleigh Dickinson and Howard at Davis Gymnasium, fall to Dartmouth in five games

BY BRENT BUTLER
Sports Editor

The Bucknell women's volleyball team fell short in the Bucknell Invitational this past weekend, failing to defeat Dartmouth in a pivotal five game loss on Saturday. With wins over Fairleigh Dickinson and Howard, the Bison were able to capture second-place in the Bucknell Invitational.

"I'm pleased to come away from this weekend 2-1 without some key players in the lineup," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said. "The key for us is going to be to minimize the unforced errors and come back strong for our next couple of games."

"The most important aspect of the preseason tournaments that we have played so far is that we are getting great competition," Opalski said.

In their match against Fairleigh Dickinson, the Bison started off with a 30-22 victory in the first match, only to see FDU come back and barely win the second game by the score of 32-30.

"With every game we just keep improving," Opalski said. "We definitely are progressing very well as a team."

Bucknell took the game over from there, winning the next two games in an imposing fashion. The Bison defeated the Knights 30-20 and 30-23 in the final two games.

In the crucial third game, the score was deadlocked at 20-20, until Sarah Groman '07 started off a 10-0 run that finished off the Knight defense.

"The key to having that type of run is minimizing the unforced errors and just staying very consistent," Opalski said. "All you have to do is keep it between the antennas and inside the lines."

In the fourth and final game, the Bison started the match off with a 5-0 run and didn't look back. Bucknell had a comfortable lead throughout the match, and finally finished Fairleigh Dickinson off 30-23.

Offensive power Jackie Leahy '05 led the Bison with 13 kills, while Brandi Trapasso '04 added an impressive 12 kills and 18 digs in the winning effort. Jennie Smith '07 had 10 kills on the night along with five block assists and a respectable hitting percentage of .292. Breaan Trapasso '04 supplied 46 assists and 14 defensive digs in the Bison's triumph.

"Jackie Leahy and Brandi Trapasso are doing a great job on the outside for us this whole year," Opalski said. "We have had a number of players really step up for us this year. Chelsea Anderson has been incredibly consistent and a really important part of our team."

The Bison did not fair as well against the Big Green of Dartmouth earlier in the day. Bucknell was able to capture the first games in two hotly contested 30-28 matches. In those two games alone, Bucknell and Dartmouth had 20 ties and nine lead changes.

In the third game, Dartmouth started off with a 10-5 lead and stayed ahead for the majority of the match. The Big Green were able to sweep the next three games 30-25, 30-27 and 15-12.

Leahy finished off the game leading all players with 22 kills, while Brandi Trapasso added 16 kills and 21 digs to the Bison effort. Libero Chelsea Anderson '06 captured 31 digs, a career high, and fell just one short of a Bucknell match record. Smith broke an 18-year old Bucknell record with 10 block assists; Kristin Colbert set the previous record on Sept. 9, 1985.

"Jennie Smith has really done a great job this year. She stepped up into a starting position

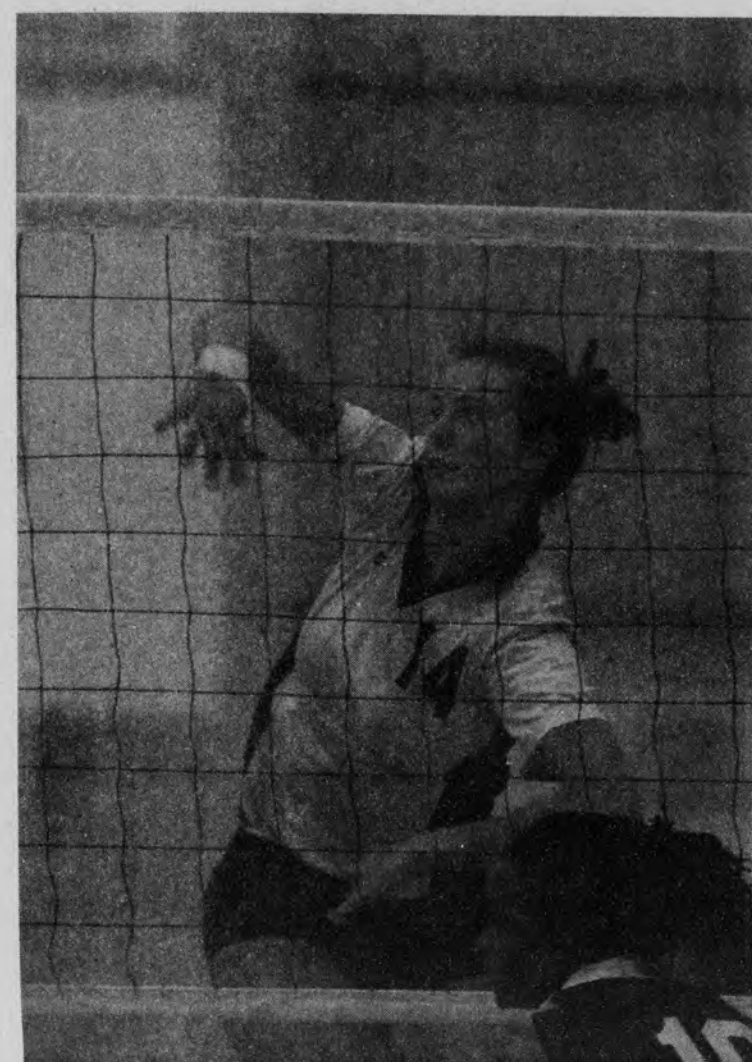

Courtesy of Athletic Communications
Chelsea Anderson '06 prepares for a dig during the Bison's win over Howard. Bucknell finished second in the invitational.

this weekend," Opalski said. "She did a great job both offensively and defensively."

Bison defeated Howard to open up the tournament, finished second overall with a 2-1 mark, while Howard took third and Fairleigh Dickinson finished fourth.

Weather permitting, the Bison are headed to the Morgan State Invitational this weekend where they will compete against Morgan State, Stony Brook, UNC Asheville and Youngstown state.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications
Jennie Smith '07 leaps to block the ball against Howard. Smith's 10 blocks broke the University's single-game record.

Calendar

Women's Tennis Bucknell Tournament Sat., Sept. 20 All day Volleyball at Morgan State Fri., Sept. 19 1:00 p.m. Volleyball vs. Stony Brook (at Morgan State) Fri., Sept. 19 5:00 p.m.	Football at Cornell Sat., Sept. 20 1:00 p.m. Men's Soccer at Air Force Fri., Sept. 19 9:00 p.m. Women's Soccer vs. Colgate Sat., Sept. 20 2:30 p.m. Men's Water Polo at Navy Sat., Sept. 20 1:00 p.m.	Women's Tennis Bucknell Tournament Sat., Sept. 20 All day Men's Water Polo vs. Johns Hopkins (at Navy) Sat., Sept. 20 6:00 p.m. Field Hockey vs. Holy Cross Sat., Sept. 20 12:00 p.m.
--	---	--

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts

800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproducts.com

Spring Break—Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $499! Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More!
Organize Small Group—Earn Free Trips plus Commissions!
Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Dor Days Exclusive Classified Sale!
Electrovoice "very efficient" SL-18, 3Way DJ Speakers on Cachers!
Extra 18" Waffer and horn tweeter one pair $550!!
- 524-4174-
Bar Neons, Bar Lights and Bar Mirrors for Sale
Ask for Skip 524-4174

Syracuse @

Madrid

Florence

Strasbourg

London

Hong Kong

Study Abroad

<http://suabroad.syr.edu>
1-800-235-3472
• Semester and summer programs

Sports

Women's soccer takes two of three in homestand

WSOCCER from page B1

when they squared off against visiting Cornell. The Herd was one goal away from making history, as the Bison have never beaten an Ivy League team in women's soccer.

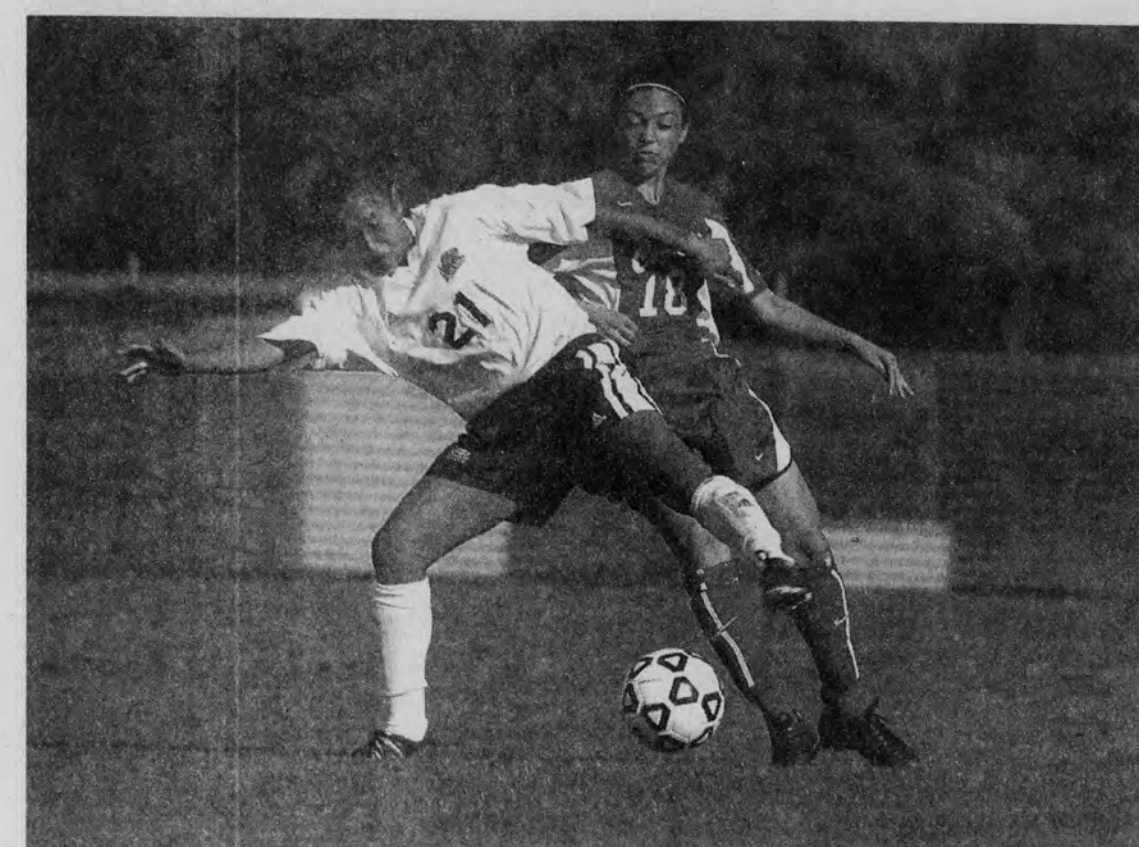

The Orange and Blue got on the board first when Dincher cleaned up a missed shot by Margolis and put one in the back of the right corner of the net. Only six minutes later, Cornell responded to tie the game at one, and with seven minutes remaining, the Big Red scored another to take the win 2-1.

"When we were up a goal, I think we were playing not to lose instead of playing to win," Findlay said. "But on a positive note, we opened our eyes to the problem with that mentality, and it's something we're going to work on changing for upcoming games."

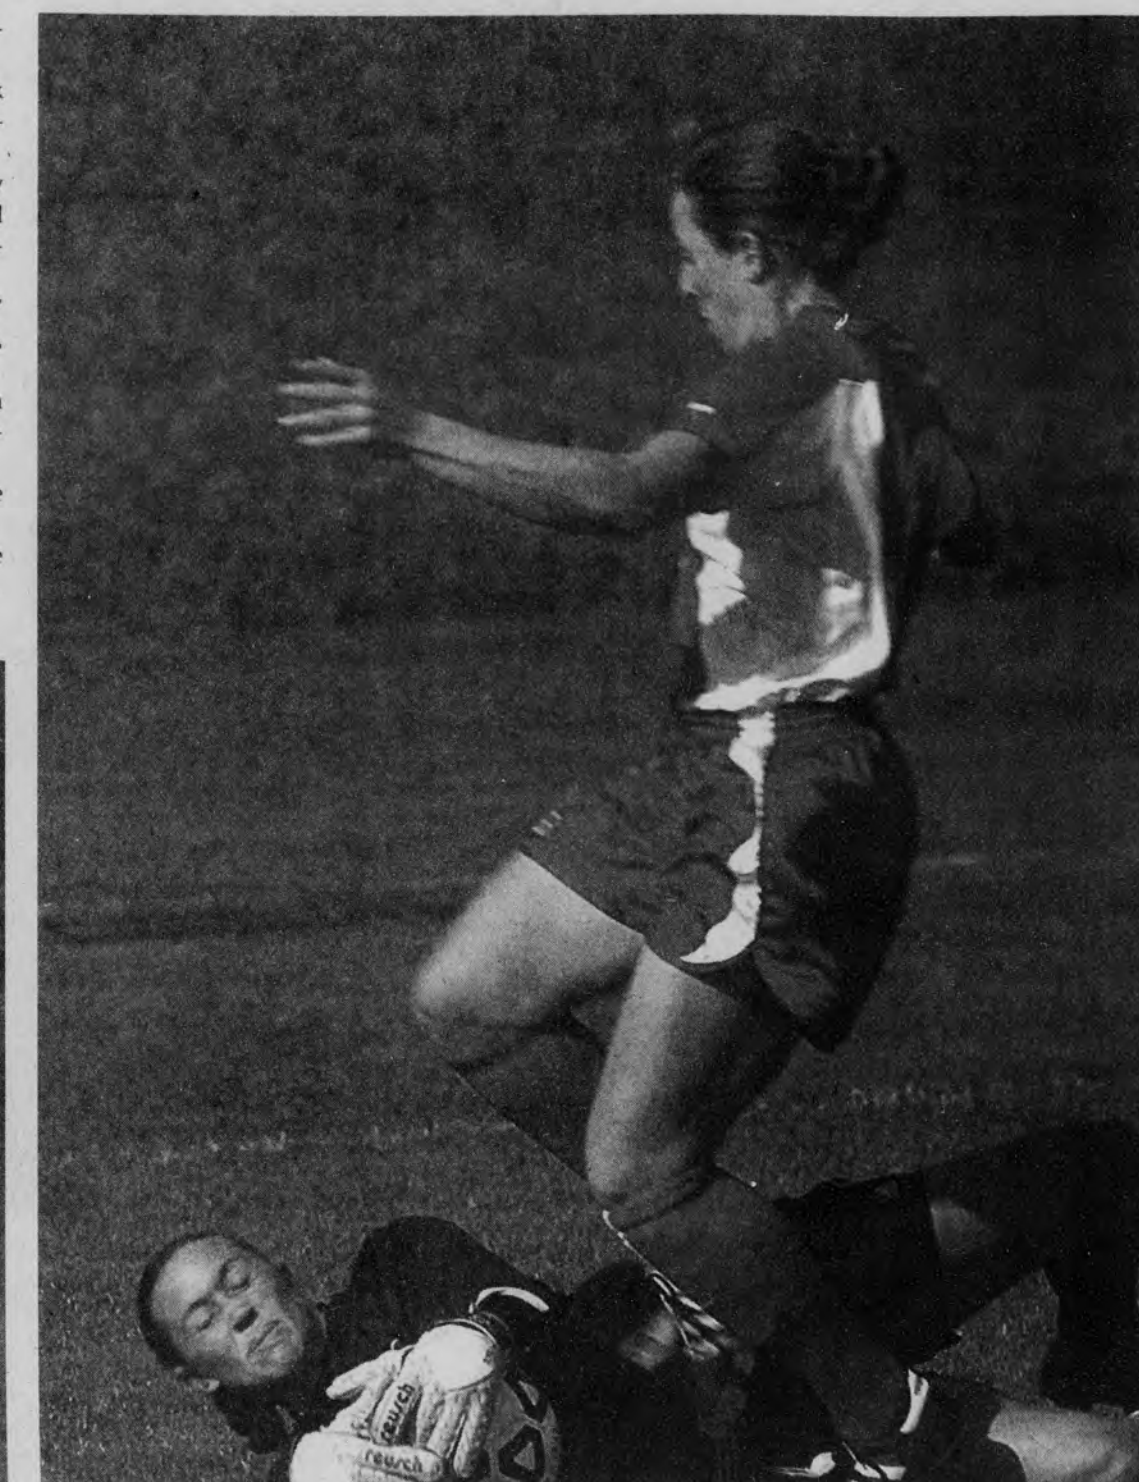

A challenging schedule is up ahead for the Bison who will start Patriot League play on Saturday when Colgate comes to visit. The squad is confident that they can compete with anyone.

Findlay, who has been head coach for seven years and has seen a Patriot League Championship, is enthusiastic about this year's group of players.

"This is the best Bucknell team that I have coached since I've been here," Findlay said. "We feel confident stepping on the field with anyone, so it's very exciting."

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian
Kerry Fitz-Patrick '06 dodges around a defender during last Wednesday's loss to Cornell. The Bison lost to the Red Raiders, but rebounded from the loss to beat Howard two days later.

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian
Samantha Hecht '06 makes a save during the loss to Cornell. Hecht had four saves in the game.

QBs: worth the money?

QBS from page B3

thirty years old, several seasons removed from his last impressive playoff performance. This team's sentimental attachment to Favre is killing it. They believe that he can win any game. They believe that he can get them out of any mess. "In Favre we trust," they say. Favre can't catch his own passes. He doesn't kick field goals. He doesn't return punts. He doesn't play defense. He cannot win a game by himself. Surely I will burn in the infernal regions for saying this, to be forever tormented by Bill Romanowski and Brian Bosworth. Now back to the point. Green Bay seems to think that Favre is going to play forever, despite the fact that every off-season he hints that the next season is his last. Aaron Brooks, Matt Hasselbeck. These were Favre back-ups. Now they're starters for other teams. These are guys that could have been his successors. Instead they were traded away, much like the franchise's immediate future after Favre hangs up his cleats.

Don't get me wrong, I like these quarterbacks. Heck, I'd take any one of them in a heartbeat. A franchise quarterback is hard to come by. But they are no longer necessary to succeed in the NFL. Let's look at the past four Super Bowl winners and their starting quarterbacks in that game. The 1999

Rams had Kurt Warner, who bounced around professional football a bit before landing in St. Louis. The 2000 Ravens had Trent Diller, who had been "the guy" in Tampa but never lived up to expectations there. In 2001, we had the Patriots' Tom Brady, a third-round pick out of Michigan, where he wasn't even a full-time starter. Then last year there was Brad Johnson of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Johnson was a free agent acquisition who was cast off by a few other teams before landing in Tampa. The point is that none of the Super Bowl-winning quarterbacks panned out with his original team.

Quarterback is a finicky position; you can't just entrust your franchise to a position when so many other things help determine its success. It takes a lot of quality players to be successful in the NFL. It takes a defense, a running back, a quality offensive line and a little bit of luck to make it through the playoffs. By spending a lot of money on a quarterback, the team has to pay for it by lacking depth at other positions. Looking at the playoff performances of these $100 million quarterbacks over the last few seasons would lead me to believe that the money would have been wisely spent somewhere else. Don't tell these teams though; they're too busy waiting for their well paid men under center to deliver them to the Promised Land.

Golf snags milestone victory

GOLF from page B1

me," Waddell said. "I was just happy to be able to handle the pressure of playing in my first collegiate event."

Waddell was also named this week's Lewisburg Hotel Athlete of the Week.

Assisting Waddell in victory were Alex Dollé '05, Tom Lane '06, Ben Pellicani '06 and Abbie Valentine '04. Valentine, Dollé and Lane all shot 73 during the second round, helping to lead the team to success. Pellicani fired a 78 Saturday after a mediocre performance the first day.

Lane said that the Bison have a "core group of solid players returning, and the addition of Charlie Waddell, should [make us] very competitive for the entire season."

The Bucknell "Blue" team also competed this weekend, finishing in tenth place in the 19-team field. It fired a 36-hole total of 616 (308-308). The team was composed mostly of first-year students, who fared well for their first collegiate event.

"Winning this weekend in a field with 19 schools is very rewarding for these young men"

—Jim Cotner,
Head Coach

"Tenth place was a solid performance," Kyle Moran '07 said, "considering the team was made up of four freshmen with very little or no experience competing at the collegiate level."

Moran tied for 15th along with Lane after shooting a two-day total of 151. Charles Wagner '07, Patrick Yingling '07, Charles Markey '04 and Ryan Hom '07 made up the rest of the Bison "Blue" squad.

The team worked hard over the summer to improve, and this week's results showed it. This year's team also consists of a very strong group of first-year students, making it more competitive within the team for who will travel and compete. Head Coach Jim Cotner was impressed with the squad's performance.

"Winning this weekend in a field with 19 schools is very rewarding for these young men," Cotner said. "Bucknell had not won a 36-hole tournament since the 1987 ECAC tournament."

Cotner looks forward to the remainder of the fall tournaments, hoping they will prepare the team for the spring season and the Patriot League Championship.

TURF IS READY FOR ACTION

Alex Rosario—The Bucknellian
The field hockey team will play its first game on the University's brand new artificial turf facility tomorrow.

Men keep winning

MSOCCER from page B1

"We've been very pleased all around with the team," Nash said. "Overall it's been the team's attitude and willingness to do anything we ask of them in practice and then carry it over into the game that has helped us."

Next up for the Bison is a trip to Colorado for a tournament with some of the nation's best teams. The Herd will square off against Air Force, a team known for its intense defensive play, and Loyola Marymount, which is often ranked in the top 25.

"It's going to be a very tough tournament," Nash said. "Our defense will have to do very well. We're going to play two excellent teams, and it should be great preparation for our Patriot League games later in the season."

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Arts & Entertainment

Jelani integrates rhythm with good fun

Co-Presidents Jasmine James '04 and Alisha Lang '05 plan an exciting and steppin' new season of dance

Last year's Jelani Showcase consisted of nine students showing off their Hip Hop dancing skills. This year, the group welcomed 10 new participants at its interest meeting. Although there are many female participants, the group hopes to recruit more males.

By KEELEY PATERSON
Contributing Writer

Jelani, the Swahili word for 'mighty,' serves as a fitting title for a fresh addition to students' activity offerings. Founded by University alumna Cheri Skipworth, this non-selective, performance group continues to thrive and grow in membership. Many falsely perceive Jelani as being comprised solely of rhythmic, black females, when in fact the group becomes more integrated each year. Jelani is a joining-together of different race, gender and dance skill levels.

This year, returning

President Jasmine James '04 shares her title with Alisha Lang '05.

"[Jelani] originated from a bunch of girlfriends who often times joined together to choreograph dance routines to the beats of their favorite artists," James said.

The most challenging aspect of her presidency is in "retaining the fun, sociable atmosphere with which the group was founded without making practices too formalized or strict."

James will also serve as choreographer alongside Nicole Thompson '04, a founding and soon departing member who is scheduled to finish her degree this winter. The duo will continue to focus on the Hip Hop style, but it hopes to change things by infusing some Salsa and African dance into its repertoire.

Jelani kicks off its performance schedule on Oct. 24 at Midnight Mania, where it will unveil a new routine, dancing to a recent, chart-topping record. It is working to put on a step routine as well.

Jelani is also slated to perform as part of the Dance Studio Collective on Nov. 13 in Tustin Studio, and will most likely make an appearance in February at Martin Luther King dinner.

Members will be heating things up at Jelani's much-celebrated annual showcase, scheduled for April 24 in the Terrace Room.

This year, Jelani welcomed 10 new members to the group, though it still seeks increased male participation in order to incorporate more partner dances into its shows.

Just last year two new men joined returning member Jason Kim '04, the first male member

"It was a way for me to break new ground and take a risk. I didn't know how I'd be perceived as the only male, but all I wanted was a chance, and here I am three years later and counting."

—Jason Kim '04

of the group.

"It was a way for me to break new ground and take a risk," Kim said. "I didn't know how I'd be perceived as the only male, but all I wanted was a chance, and here I am three years later and counting."

New member JC Ortiz Calcano '04 has already reaped the benefits offered in his dance training, as he enjoys showing off his newfound skills at parties.

"Jelani is a good way to develop a collection of actual dance moves, instead of boppin' to the beat or two-steppin'," Ortiz said.

In October, Jelani hopes to bring an NYC-based Hip Hop, non-violence group to campus to give outdoor performances and various workshops, topped off by an evening showcase in the Terrace Room.

If you are interested in learning more about Jelani or joining the group, e-mail jjames@bucknell.edu.

"Jelani is a good way to develop a collection of actual dance moves, instead of boppin' to the beat or two-steppin'."

—JC Ortiz '04

John Mayer's Heavier Things fails to carry its weight

Only the five minutes of "Something's Missing" redeems the album from total sellout to pop culture

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

If by Heavier Things, the title of John Mayer's new album, the singer-songwriter meant over-produced pop influenced songs laden with sophomoric lyrics and more teenage angst than a high school Nirvana fan, he hit the nail right on the head.

In many cases where an album's music is lacking in style and originality, powerful lyrics can easily save it from the back of a CD collection. Heavier Things definitely doesn't fall into that category.

Having listened to Mayer since 2000, I know what he is capable of. His first album, the independent, recently re-released Inside Wants Out, was a melee of intricate acoustic work, catchy lyrics, and signs of greatness. Now, to be cliché, I don't even know who he is anymore.

Take the album's first single, "Bigger Than My Body." It starts out with a drum beat, underplayed behind what could be a guitar but sounds more like a demo track on a child's keyboard. As the track progresses, the music gets no better, and may as well be a Justin Timberlake song.

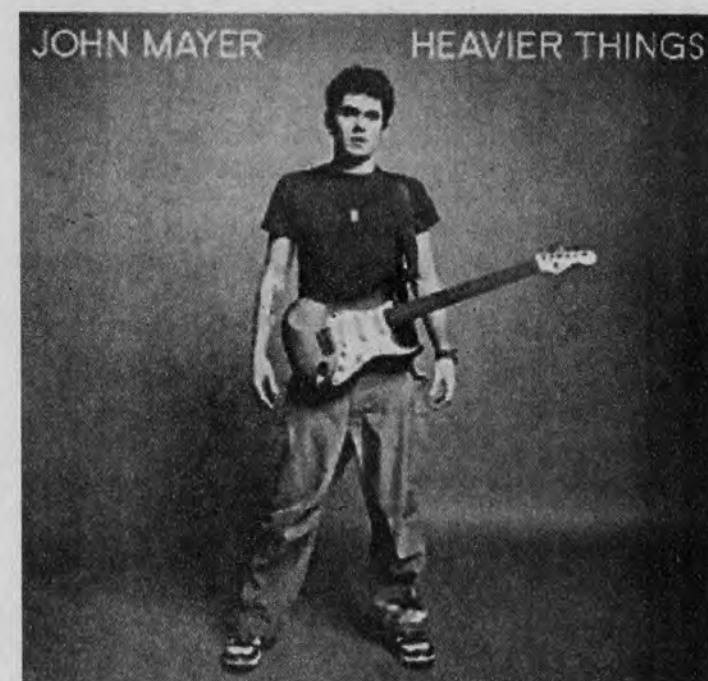

I'm supposed to believe that this is the same person who floored me a couple years back with his improve solo leading into Neon, a tune that appeared on his first two albums in different forms.

In many cases where an album's music is lacking in style and originality, powerful lyrics can easily save it from the back of a CD collection. Heavier Things definitely doesn't fall into that category.

Many criticized Mayer's previous albums for their lyrical immaturity, but I was always able to ignore a lot of the vocals in lieu of the unbelievable instrumentation.

This time, I don't have that luxury. It's hard for me to find any seriousness in lines like, "I can tell you this much / I will marry just once / And if it doesn't work out / Give her half of my stuff."

John Mayer's new album Heavier Things lacks the powerful and original lyrics found in his first album, Inside Wants Out. The only high point of this album is his song "Something's Missing," which features the guitar.

The one "diamond in the rough," if you will, on Heavier Things is the song "Something's Missing," a guitar-driven piece that avoids any attempt to use pop techniques to make it catchy.

As someone who does in fact like John Mayer, I see this track as a saving grace, but not enough so to let me in good conscience recommend the album.

For all Mayer fans out there, do yourselves a favor—jump online, snag a copy of "Something's Missing," and save yourself the fifteen bucks.

Maybe, for the 5:05 of the track, you can sit back and remember what this guy is capable of... and then realize how short he's sold his fans and himself.

Arts & Entertainment

The Amalgamation show rocks on WVBU

The Amalgamation crew features Jon Berardino '04, Ben Johnson '04 and Joe Simko '04 (left to right). Mike Lanewala '04 (not pictured) also participates in the program.

By DAVE ALLEN
Staff Writer

"The Amalgamation" is a radio show on the University radio station, 90.5 WVBU. For first-time listeners to WVBU, "The Amalgamation" would be a great first show to listen to.

The show airs from 8-10:30 p.m. on Tuesdays. Its hosts are four very energetic and knowledgeable students who have been on-air personalities since their freshman year: Jon Berardino '04, Ben Johnson '04

(aka "The Enforcer"), Joe Simko '04 and Mike Lanewala '04. Berardino also serves as WVBU's programming director and as a station engineer.

The current show was formed from the combination of two previous shows. Simko and Johnson hosted a show called "Blowing Up Stu," and Berardino and Lanewala were hosts of "The F-Bomb."

When they realized that they might not have enough time to host two separate shows, they decided to merge their programs into one.

None of the hosts heard WVBU when they visited the University; they learned about the station during the second semester of their freshman year.

"I think there was an e-mail that went out. We knew people involved with it," Simko said.

The show plays an eclectic assortment of music leaning toward loud, heavy and fast rock music. When asked what kind of music they play on their show, they list "punk, rock, ska, hardcore, metal... generally loud and fast."

"We also throw in a rap song or a song from the '80s sometimes," said Berardino, also known by his on-air nickname, "Ootz."

All were hard-pressed to list their five favorite artists, but each eventually came up with a short list.

Berardino's favorites included At the Drive-In, The Mars Volta, Pennywise, Hot Water Music and Iron Maiden, with "honorable mention to Sting and the Police," Johnson listed Thrive, Thursday, Suicide Machines, RX Bandits and Dropkick Murphys. Simko said Less than Jake, 311, Incubus, Tool and Sublime. As for Lanewala, he listed Boy Sets Fire, Korn, Sevendust, Coheed and Cambria and Avenged Sevenfold.

All of the hosts enjoy their evening time slot. After 10 p.m., a time period in radio broadcasting known as Safe Harbor begins, during which songs that contain offensive or obscene lyrics can be played. Berardino said they usually like to begin the Safe Harbor period by playing the song "Jay's Rap" from the movie Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back.

"We like songs with a very high curse-per-minute rate," Berardino said.

When asked if an evening slot interferes with work, they all said that they end up doing work in the studio. With four hosts, plus friends stopping by the studio, whoever is nearest to the mic can introduce the next song.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian Berardino, nicknamed "Ootz," adjusts the control board.

They appreciate that a lot of students listen to the radio while they are doing work in their rooms. They receive most requests via America Online (AOL) Instant Messenger.

"We get maybe one phone call per show, but sometimes we'll get someone who says they used to live in Lewisburg requesting a song, only they're living in Virginia. People at the Country Cupboard used to always call and request Mudvayne," Berardino said.

During the show, Berardino said, "We just have fun." "We mosh, we flip out, skank in the corner, just dance around... Joe airdrums all the time. Jon's air-guitaring," Lanewala said.

One very entertaining aspect of "The Amalgamation" and its previous incarnations are amusing stunts involving "The Enforcer." In the past, "The Enforcer" has consumed energy drinks, oatmeal cream pies—three in one minute, 30 seconds—and 27 breath-freshening strips. He also has a unique claim to fame.

"I was the first person in radio history to kick himself in the face on-air," Johnson said.

"We built it up for weeks," Simko said.

Other on-air routines include "Find the Enforcer," part of a contest to give away concert tickets. "The Enforcer" wore a sandwich board entitled "I am 'The Enforcer' and listeners were challenged to find him somewhere on campus."

"We gave musical clues to

The show plays an eclectic assortment of music leaning toward loud, heavy and fast rock music.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian Berardino looks for a CD. Amalgamation airs from 8-10:30 p.m. Tuesdays.

his location. He was at the observatory, so we were playing 'Stellar' and 'Jupiter.' The first person to find him won a concert ticket. We didn't tell people they'd have to actually catch him, though. We also used to send him to places like the Bison or Hunt Hall with a cell phone, saying to people, 'I'm The Enforcer, follow me to the basement of Roberts,'" Berardino said.

If a high-energy mix of rock music, crazy stunts and humorous commentary sound appealing to you, then tune into "The Amalgamation" on Tuesday nights. Four guys all talking at once makes for a difficult interview, but for a very exciting radio show.

Open mic hits 7th Street café

Students will have the opportunity to hear their friends perform live

By JULIANA PIETAK
Staff Writer

Do you have a hidden musical talent, or long to find out which of your fellow students do? If so, the Open Mic Nights at the 7th Street Café provide both the outlet and the opportunity for both.

This semester's first Open Mic Night will be held tonight from 11 p.m. - 1 a.m. According to Laura Bender '06, chair of the Campus Activities and Programs (CAP) Center's Late Night Music Committee, there are usually three Open Mic Nights per semester.

The line-up this weekend will consist of 12 acts. Each act will perform for 10 minutes.

"Most [acts] are acoustic guitar, piano or a vocalist, but we even have a rapper this time. There should be a lot of good music," Bender said.

All performers are University students. Sign-ups were held in the CAP Center last week.

"It's just a really great time, and a really great opportunity to hear your friends. The maximum capacity in the café is 135 people, and we always have about that much. A lot of people bring their friends."

—Laura Bender '06
chair of CAP center's Late Night Music Committee

Bender said that the night is not a competition, but rather, is just for fun.

"It's just a really great time, and a really great opportunity to hear your friends," Bender said. "The maximum capacity in the café is 135 people, and we always have about that much. A lot of people bring their friends."

Lauren Scott '04 has attended Open Mic Nights in the past and really enjoyed them.

"You just get to relax, play some games, hang out with your friends and listen to some great music," Scott said.

This semester, bean bag chairs will be added to the set up in the Seventh Street Café.

"We've never had bean bag chairs in the café before, and it should make it an even more comfortable place to sit and drink your coffee while listening to the music," Bender said.

Cinema Center
Selinusgrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall • 374-2049
Play Dates: September 5-11, 2003
Cold Creek Manor (R)	Cabin Fever (R)
1:45, 4:30, 7:10 & 9:45	2, 4:10, 6:40, 9
Underworld (R)	Matchstick (PG-13)
2, 4:30, 7, 9:40	1, 3:45, 6:20, 9:15
Secondhand Lion (PG)	Anything Else (R)
2:15, 4:30, 7:15, 9:40	1:30, 4, 6:30, 9:10
S.W.A.T. (PG-13)	Open Range (R)
1:15, 4, 6:40, 9:30	2, 5, 8
Pirates of Caribbean (PG-13)	Once Upon A Time In Mexico (R)
1:45, 5, 7:45	1:15, 3:30, 7, 9:30
Freaky Friday (PG-13)	Jeebers Creepers (R)
1, 3:30	6:30, 8:45
Dickie Roberts (PG-13)	Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday
1:30, 4:15, 6:45, 8:50

Take a Deep Breath...
...and Relax with a Therapeutic Massage from Rick Hummel, Massage Therapist
Massage has long been an effective method of relaxing tense muscles, improving circulation and promoting an overall sense of peace and well-being. — By Appointment Only —
Call Rick today ~ 524-5015 ~
rickhummel@mac.com ~ You Deserve To Feel Great! ~

Market Street PHOTO

We like picky people!

We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.

523-1543

M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5 24 hour drop box
120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro

Come see what's new and exciting. Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts August 24th
11:00 AM to 2:00 PM
Wednesday-Saturday Bakery 10-2
Lunch 11:30 - 2, Dinner 5-9
412 Market St. Lewisburg 570-523-8088
www.elizabethsbistro.com

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Salads for every occasion since 1961!

Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com
570-524-7481

MARCO'S

Enjoy a Taste of Mediterranean Cuisine in Historic Danville

Serving Lunch and Dinner

Monday-Thursday 11:00am to 9:00 pm
Friday-Saturday 11:00am to 10:00pm
Closed Sundays

LIVE Music Monday Evenings
282 Mill Street, Downtown Danville
275-8122

Study In English Abroad

The Swedish Program

STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY

COME TO AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING

OCTOBER 6, 2003 4:00 P.M. TAYLOR HALL LOUNGE, ROOM 115

If you are unable to attend this meeting, please contact your Study Abroad Advisor or The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323
(315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film
Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies

Arts & Entertainment

UNIVERSITY ORCHESTRA TO FEATURE SENIORS

Alexis Zackey (left), Monica Hoy (middle) and Elsbeth Eager (right) will be the senior soloists at the University Orchestra's Annual Concerto Concert on Sat., Sept. 20 at 8:00 p.m. at Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

Courtesy of Bucknell Orchestra

The world according to Al Franken

"Lies and the Liars Who Tell Them: A Fair and Balanced Look at the Right"—an amusing political satire

By MICHAEL NIEBAUER
Senior Writer

◆ BOOK REVIEW

As we go into the presidential election cycle with this White House on the wrong side of most domestic and foreign policy issues, the world needs people like Al Franken, Dennis Miller, Bill Maher, Maureen Dowd and a host of others who can clearly speak to the issues of the day without putting audiences to sleep.

In these trying times, with a rising death toll in Iraq, when an airport employee can easily slide by airport security to ship himself cross-country in an air-freight crate charging it to his employer and still spend billions on homeland security, we need the Franken's and Michael Moore's of the world.

In a world where so many so-called experts cover themselves with glory at every opportunity, whether they are successful or not, we need someone like Franken to write a book.

Franken's latest book, "Lies and the Lying Liars Who Tell Them: A Fair and Balanced Look at the Right," reads like a good, standard comedy routine, similar to George Carlin's books. Whether or not these comedians' written words are as funny as their stand-up routines is totally dependent on the political views and values of the reader.

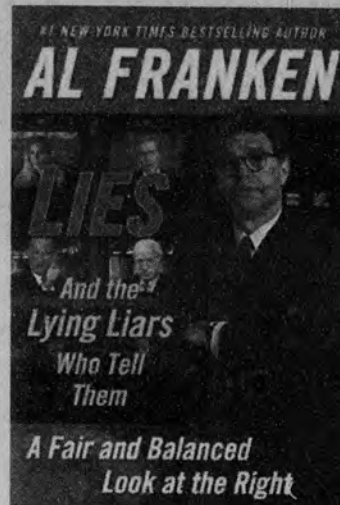

After all the noise and discord raised by Bill O'Reilly and Fox News over the ownership of the phrase "fair and balanced"—in which they lost—Franken's book will do better business at national bookstore business. Franken probably bought some Fox stock out of everlasting gratitude to Rupert Murdoch for creating a good market for his book.

One passage from the book uses statistics to make a hilarious, yet sadly accurate, point. Franken asserts gleefully that if the economic performance of the Bush Administration could be extended back through time, Americans would never have been employed; the protestant work ethic would never have existed. This is the humor used by "Team Franken."

"Team Franken was the eager, young group of Harvard students that helped Franken produce the tone, text and theme of the book, while still following in the tradition of his previous works, such as "Rush Limbaugh is a Big Fat Idiot and Other Observations" and "Oh the Things I Know."

I predict that if there is no further political or legal challenge to this book it will do as well in paperback as any Michael Moore or George Carlin text so far.

After the disappointment of Bill Maher's "Riding With Bin Laden" book last spring, Franken has put progressive social and political satire on a path in which it could influence the general election in 14 months. That is as it should be.

Courtesy of Amazon.com

Franken's book critiques the Bush administration politics.

Sports and Shakespeare?

By STEPHANIE MALENICH
Staff Writer

"Why can't Shakespeare be more like sports?" asked an actor performing a reading of the "Complete Works of William Shakespeare (Abridged)" this past Saturday.

I'm sure at one time or another during our academic careers we have all had a similar thought. Don't get me wrong; his plays are great, with those sword fights and sizzling love triangles. They are regular daytime soap operas, right? Wrong!

Shakespeare, while it having all of the aspects of those great melodramas known as soaps, can be incredibly difficult and tedious to work through, as anyone who has read them can attest. Finishing one of his plays feels like a monumental scholastic accomplishment, and afterward, a person can boast, "Yeah, I know [insert any Shakespearean play here]."

Who could resist the chance to mock the big guy? Certainly, the 20 or so University actors and actresses who participated in this performance could not.

The play is true to its title, covering the majority of Shakespeare's plays in a much condensed form with interesting and hilarious twists for each. While the tone of the play is highly satirical, it also takes special precaution to remind the audience of this, serving as a tribute to Shakespeare, master of theater and English literature. This essential aspect of the play was upheld by various comments interspersed throughout the play, and in the midst of the Hamlet spoof, his most poignant monologue (Hamlet's "To be or not to be") was performed beautifully.

Although this performance was only a reading and was presented with a disclaimer from Director Kim Klauder '05 that there were "limited rehearsals," those students who performed it did an outstanding job.

While the tone of the play is highly satirical, it also takes special precaution to remind the audience of this, actually serving as a tribute to Shakespeare as a master of theater and English literature.

"With only three rehearsals, I found myself incredibly nervous. Fortunately, I was blessed with a fantastically creative and attentive cast that really helped bring the piece to life. I am very grateful to the talent and fine work of all of the actors involved," said Klauder.

This talent certainly shone through on Saturday. The material was not read stiffly or verbatim from the scripts each actor held, but was delivered with high levels of energy and animation. Despite a few faltering lines or sequencing—as can only be expected from a reading—the performers were able to recover quickly and usually used such mistakes to their advantage, adding to the humor.

There were many comical and unexpected spins on the works covered, including the presentation of "Titus Andronicus" as a Julia Childs-style cooking show complete with "human head bread" and a rap version of "Othello." The most hilarious scene, by far, was one in which all of the histories and "King Lear" were covered in the setting of a knock-down, drag-out game of football. All of the performers got in on this game. One actor commented on the mass on stage to cover these somewhat less-thrilling plays resulting in a truly hilarious bit. The answer to the opening question is that apparently in this play Shakespeare can be more like sports.

The actors took an intermission as they contemplated performing the last remaining play and the most daunting, "Hamlet." They returned to do a pretty accurate—though much abbreviated—version. Following this they huddled up, deciding they could do it faster, and then proceeded to repeat it two more times condensing it to an amazing 45 seconds. Then they ended with a hilarious rendition of the play in reverse.

This reading was a great success as it allowed actors a chance to partake in a low-stress form of comedy. It provided entertainment and uproarious laughter for the audience.

The play shed some new light on the world of Shakespeare, solving the problem it expresses: how to make 400-year-old plays accessible to the modern audience.

Going to the movies?
Write a review.
E-mail Josie JCetta@

Want to tell Mom and Dad what's happening on campus, but don't have the time?
Give them the gift of knowledge; give yourself the gift of time—a subscription to The Bucknellian.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail to The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837.

Name _____ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues through May 2004 for $45 (a $15 savings)

Address _____

Phone _____ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

BUSINESS & POLITICS

CDC assists students face economy

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

With the current economic climate, more and more students are considering graduate study. While graduate school can be the right choice for many students, there are important considerations that must be made by students before committing to the pursuit of an additional degree.

Studies conducted by the Employment Policy Foundation published by "CNN/Money" this month showed that those with a Ph.D. or other professional degree will make roughly $4.4 million more than those with only a bachelor's degree.

A similar estimation published by "CNN/Money" in February 2002 breaks down annual earnings of degree holders.

A wage-earner who has a bachelor's degree brings in an average salary of $49,700 per year. This figure increases to $61,033 with a master's degree and $79,986 with a Ph.D. Professional degrees in highly specialized fields, such as law and medicine, can push the average annual salary up to $94,400.

When looking only at these figures, it's not hard to understand why many undergraduate students opt to continue their education. However, these amounts alone do not take into account the other side of graduate school: the costs.

According to statistics published by "CNN/Money" on Sept. 5, the average graduate student will leave school with about $23,000 in student loans. As of February 2003, law school tuition at private institutions was up to $21,790 per year, not including housing costs.

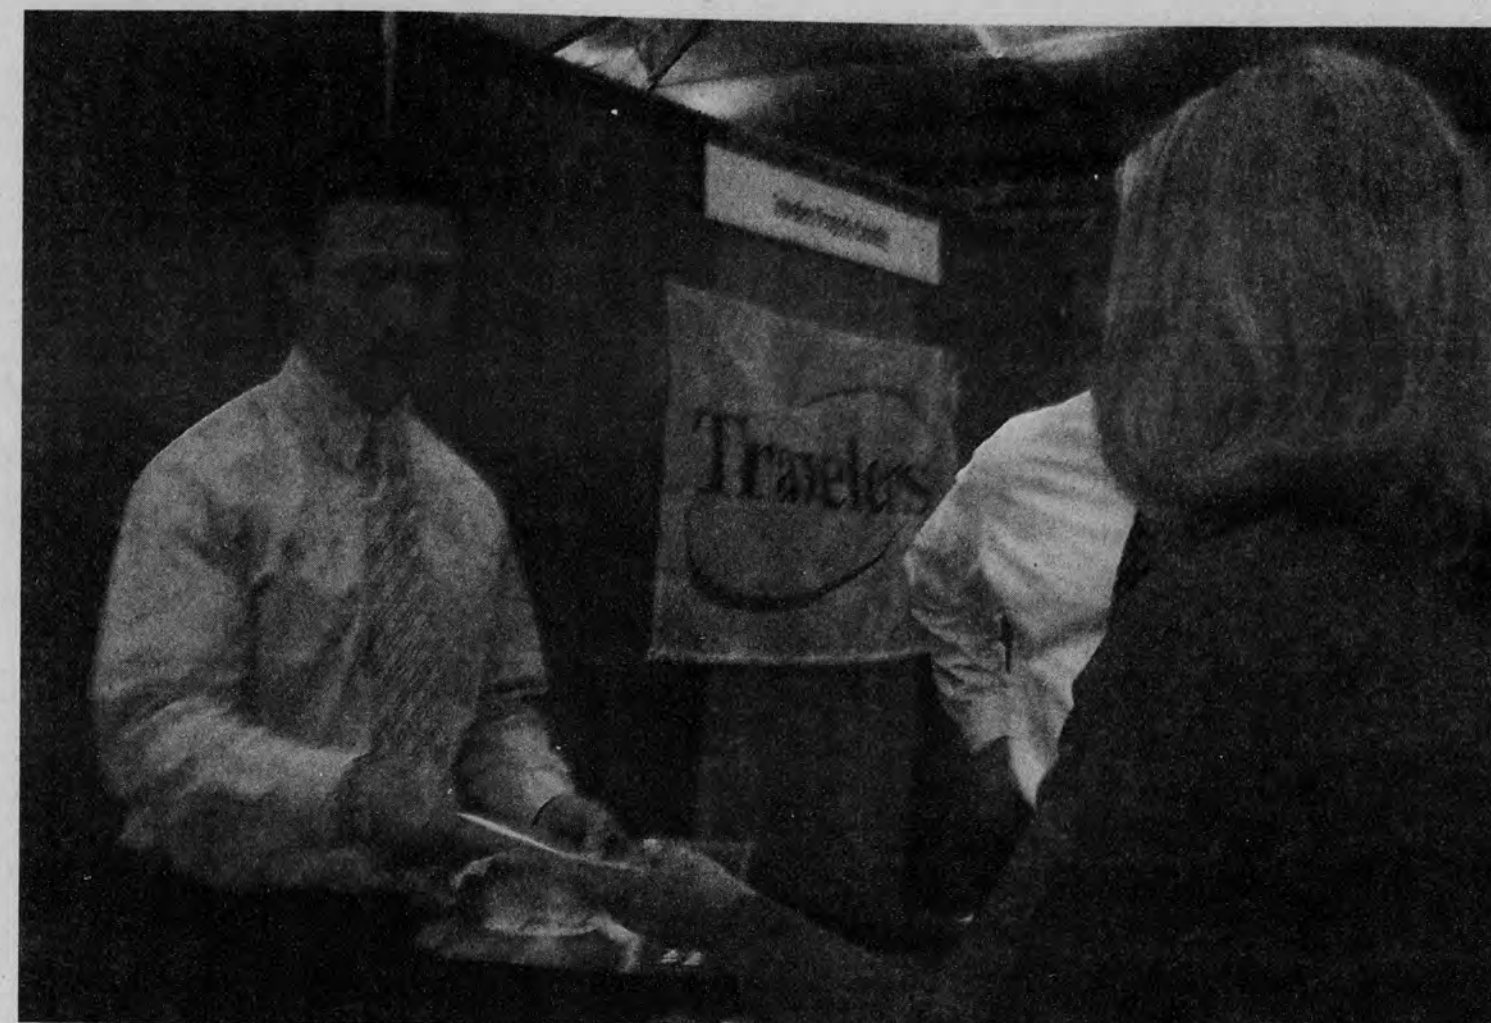

Tuition and housing costs are only part of the story. Valuable time that could be spent accruing 401K money is lost. Also, graduate students usually have to pay for their own medical and dental insurance, instead of being able to rely on an employer to do so for them.

Competition is another factor that should be considered by potential graduate students.

An increasing number of companies now demand highly educated people, so it follows that the number of applicants to graduate schools is also increasing. With the recent economic downturn, institutions are seeing an unprecedented number of applicants. "CNN/Money" reports that according to statistics released by the Council of Graduate Schools, the number of applications received by graduate schools rose four percent.

Putting too much emphasis on the economy can be a mistake. Sarah Bell, of the Jesselyn Greiner '05 hands her resume to Jack Bole of Ernst and Young at the Employer Expo sponsored by the Career Development Center (CDC). The CDC has services for both those looking to enter graduate school or the job market.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

"Students shouldn't assume the economy is that bad. Last year, six months after graduation, only 7 percent of our students were still looking."

—Sarah Bell,
Associate Director of CDC

of Graduate Schools, the number of applications received by graduate schools rose four percent.

Putting too much emphasis on the economy can be a mistake. Sarah Bell, of the of Graduate Schools, the number of applications received by graduate schools rose four percent.

Putting too much emphasis on the economy can be a mistake. Sarah Bell, of the of Graduate Schools, the number of applications received by graduate schools rose four percent.

Putting too much emphasis on the economy can be a mistake. Sarah Bell, of the

This logic extends to hiring practices.

"What we've been seeing is MBAs having a harder time than undergrads getting a job because they cost more," Bell said.

Another complication arises when a student enters graduate school to make themselves more attractive to employers only to find after completing the degree, there is no longer a demand for him in their field of study.

So why should a student decide to pursue a graduate education?

There are two main reasons. The first is if graduate study is one of the requirements for a future career. The medical and law professions are two prime examples. The second reason is genuine interest.

"Students should go to graduate school because they are studying what they love and want to learn more about. It takes determination, perseverance and talent," Bell said.

If graduate school still looks like a viable option, do your research; a graduate education is not unobtainable.

According to "Yahoo! News," there are many ways to defer the cost of graduate school.

Financial aid is often available and many times so are tax deductions and employer reimbursement.

For University students interested in learning more about graduate programs, the CDC is sponsoring a Graduate and Professional School Fair from 3-5:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Oct. 22 in the Terrace Room.

The University also offers a graduate school advising program which is listed under Academic Offices & Resources on the University's Web site.

Illegal downloads problematic for University students only from the record companies, but also the artists and everyone else involved in making a CD.

RESNET from page B10

While the University does not condone peer-to-peer file-sharing networks, Diehl says they aren't out to hunt down users and punish them immediately. He said that one or two songs will not make that much of a difference since it won't draw a great deal of attention to that user.

It does become a problem when there is a single computer downloading dozens of songs and a few movies per day. Diehl used the following example to relate the impact such using could have. Say you are driving 30 miles an hour in a 25 mph zone, and everyone around you is driving about that speed. Then someone whizzes by at 150 mph. This is the kind of difference that would be noticed.

In a situation that would draw the record companies' attention, Diehl will get an e-mail from the company. He has received these e-mails before. They simply request attention from the University to stop the user from downloading such large quantities of material.

It seems difficult to believe that a record company from anywhere in the country would be able to narrow the abuse down to one computer, but it is possible.

Every computer and every user has an IP address, which is a series of numbers that specifies the area and the network, all the way down to the individual's computer. Diehl will then give the student a warning and ask the person to stop downloading any illegal files. He has never had to approach a student after a first warning.

Diehl's main concern is for the students. He said that in downloading other people's files, a person opens ports in the computer to the entire world. The Internet is global, and having it open to the world is distributing all of the information on the computer over the Internet to anyone who wants it over the Internet.

A common feeling among students seems to be the question: "Why would anyone want my information?" A hacker can gain access to your computer and download even a piece of the computer without the owner having a clue.

This could be used for a variety of things, but the hacker will primarily be using your e-mail and network to traffic spam to other computers all over the country or the world.

Last year, University students professionally developed their own file-sharing network. "Buckster" existed only for University students and didn't allow anyone from outside of ResNet to gain access to the system. The Information Services and Resources Desk had heard rumors about the fact that this program existed but didn't go searching for it.

The reason that "Buckster" ended was because a few students came forward with complaints, thinking that Bucknell had created this system. They were surprised that the University would sponsor such blatant illegal activity. "Buckster" also dramatically slowed the network speed because it was occupying such a large part of the bandwidth.

The final decision is the students to take the risk of download illegal material, possibly resulting in fines. "If a student wants to download 10 to 15 songs and think they are staying out of trouble to get off right after, that's fine, as long as they don't mind playing Russian roulette," Diehl said.

FREE Ticket to Paradise
with every Spring Break package!
Limited time offer. Check our website for details.
www.studentexpress.com
Call NOW: 1.800.787.3787

Fraternities - Sororities
Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event.

Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks.

Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It Works.
Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

HEY STUDENTS!!

CALL US FOR THE BEST RENTALS IN TOWN

1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2004/2005

Call Linda or Duska to see the LARGEST Selection of Rentals in Town!!!

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

WANTED: LEADERS/PILOTS
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER IN OUR COMPANY, THIS COULD BE YOUR OFFICE.

Few people will ever set foot in an office like this. But then, few people have what it takes to be a Marine Officer. Officer Candidate School (OCS) is the first step towards preparing you for a future beyond anything you could imagine.

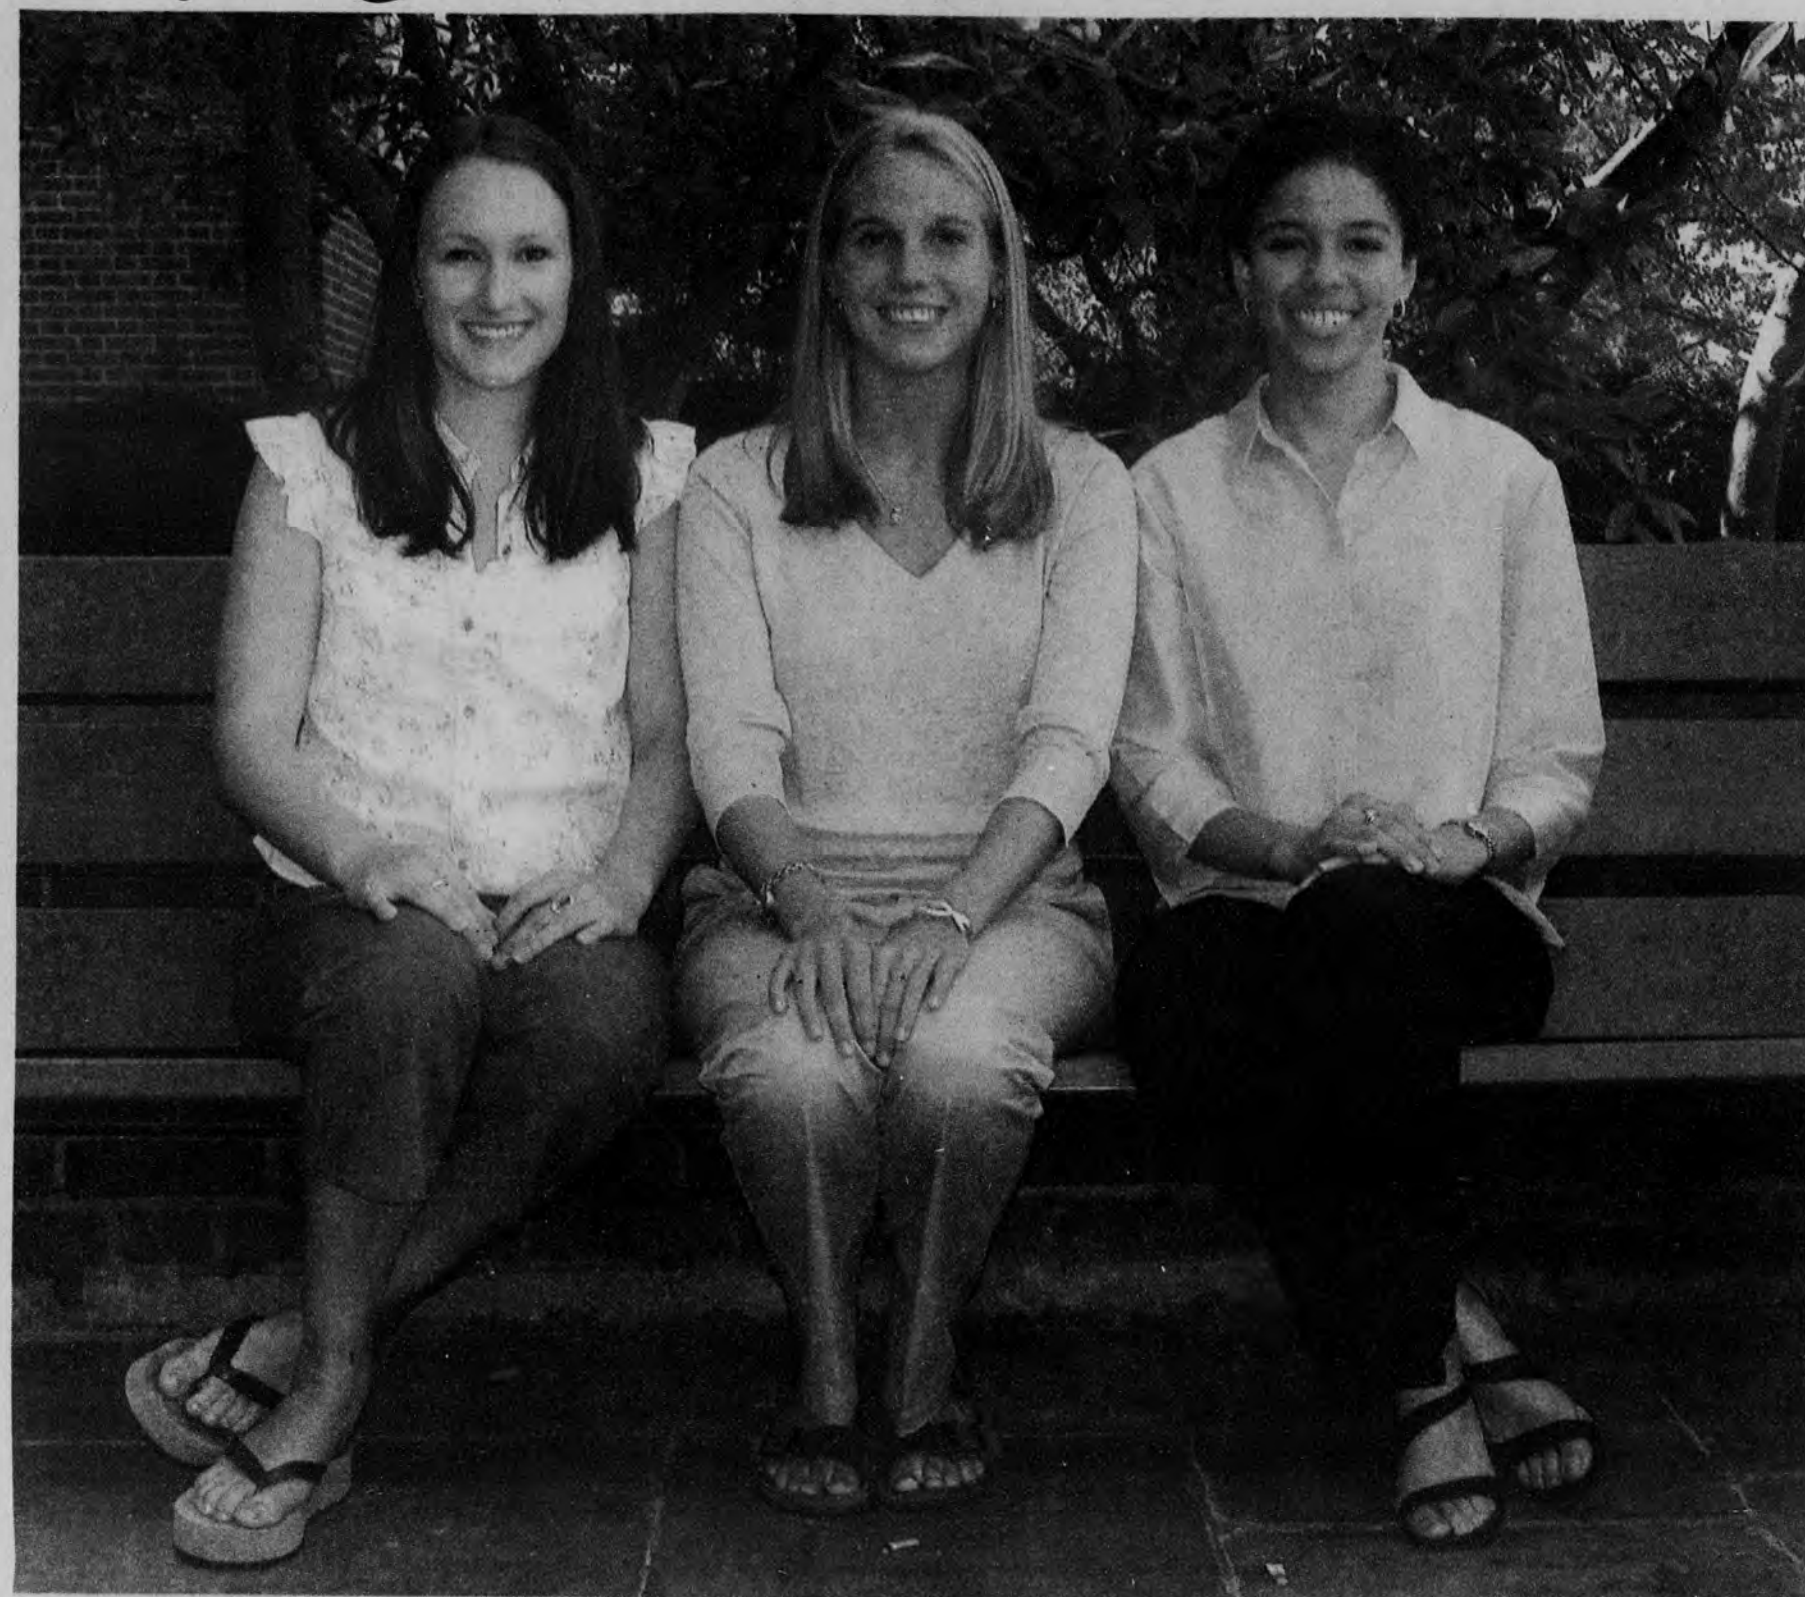

Attend a PAID INTERNSHIP during the summer in Quantico, VA
NO OBLIGATION
Unparalleled LEADERSHIP TRAINING
TUITION ASSISTANCE is available

For more information contact us @:
1-800-544-2259
or osowb@aol.com

www.MarineOfficer.com

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Laying a solid foundation for 2007

BSG Class of 2007 Secretary/Treasurer Brianna Evans, Vice President Laura Mlynarski and President Flory Perez (left to right) are eager to accept their duty leading their class. The newly elected officials are enthusiastic about the potential of the class to set high goals and meet the challenges facing them.

By LINDSEY GENTEL
Staff Writer

The newly elected Class of 2007 Bucknell Student Government (BSG) representatives are eager to begin leaving their mark on campus after officially taking office this past Sunday. President Flory Perez, Vice President Laura Mlynarski and Secretary/Treasurer Brianna Evans are already beginning to embark on making their ideas a reality for the academic year.

The officers are determined to come up with several different plans to improve the campus, not only for their class but for the entire student body. Perez, Mlynarski, Evans and the 2007 Congress have already met for the preliminary stages to brainstorm different issues to address on campus.

"I expect this year to go by quickly," Perez said. "We have an amazing body of people to represent the Class of 2007, and I have no doubt concerning our ability to get things done in a timely and enjoyable manner. There are so many events and class activities that are to be planned that I just hope the year is long enough to fit them in."

Mlynarski agrees that the first-year representatives have many ideas to keep their class inspired and actively involved on campus.

"I expect the year to be crazy. We've been described as thoroughly enthusiastic and motivated students, and I don't see that stopping," Mlynarski said.

The 2007 BSG officers are hoping to plan several class activities including dorm mixers, a first-year spirit section at athletic events, fundraisers and a first-year student formal. They are also putting together the fourth annual First Night event and activities for Parents Weekend.

"Everything is currently in the planning stage, but with all the enthusiasm generated by the first meeting, I guarantee you we'll have a great year," Mlynarski said.

In addition to these events, the officers are investigating the availability of cable in the dorms, and implementing change machines in the dorm washrooms.

The class is especially focusing on community involvement, specifically in raising awareness for the issue of poverty. Perez hopes to offer volunteer opportunities and organize fundraising to help fight poverty.

"This year is going to be focused on class unity, dedication to the students and our theme of poverty," Perez said. Perez and the rest of the BSG elected officials plan on accomplishing their goals by seeking assistance from several different facets of the campus. While they will have guidance from influential members of BSG, the campus and the community, the officers will be seeking instruction primarily from members of their own class.

"Our student body has a dedicated group of representatives behind them who are ready and willing to listen and act on their wants and needs," Perez said. "The only way to succeed this year will be to work as a group; individual parts coming together to make a whole."

Perez seeks to bring her class together. Her individual goal is to not allow the divisions of uphill or downhill proximity affect first-year students from meeting one another.

"I strongly believe in providing events for the class so that people may get a chance to relax and meet other students they would not have met before," Perez said. "This is a means of promoting our unity on campus, that we may have a major influence during our time here."

Mlynarski also wants to become close with her class.

"I hope to represent my class effectively and have a great time in the process," Mlynarski said.

"I think it is obvious to everyone that our class is going to have fun. We certainly have already made an impression at Play Fair. What other class has broken a field goal on the first day at campus? We just became a bit over zealous," Mlynarski said.

"Our class is quite, for lack of a better word, crazy. I mean that in the best sense of the word. We are going to do things a little different around here," Perez said.

Perez, Mlynarski and Evans are looking to embrace the "craziness" of their class to get involved on campus and in the classroom. They hope to have members of the Class of 2007 distinguish themselves by the active part they will take in the University community.

The Class of 2007 officials are grateful for the opportunity given to them by their classmates and hope to do an effective job representing them.

"We were elected by the students because they felt that we could do the jobs designated to us to the best of our ability. As BSG freshmen elected officials, we want our class to come together to have a voice and a known influence," Perez said.

As the first semester of college gets moving for the 915 first-year students at the University, their elected officials want to emphasize that they are all working toward a common goal.

"This will be a year of beginnings for all of us, and we are ready to take it on," Perez said.

Bin Laden tape sparks fear of attack

By MATTHEW HINSON
Senior Writer

Where is Osama bin Laden? After being the focus of U.S. President George W. Bush's administration and media attention for many months, bin Laden seems barely on the radar screen, buried by political talk of Iraq, the deposition of Saddam Hussein and the progress, or lack thereof, in creating a democratic Iraq.

Last week, al-Jazeera, the most prominent Arabic-language news station, aired a tape that appears to be the work of bin Laden and an associate. According to CNN, the CIA says that the voice is "probably but not definitely" him.

The date of the tape's recording is disputed. The voice supposed to be bin Laden's makes no reference to current events, making it difficult to determine when the recording was made. On the tape bin Laden is talking with a person presumed to be top al-Qaeda Lieutenant Ayman al-Zawahiri, who speaks of Americans dying in Iraq.

For the anniversary of the September 11, 2001 airplane hijackings, the U.S. State Department has issued a worldwide caution that al-Qaeda may once again be preparing to strike American interests. Each time a new al-Qaeda tape is released, or increased levels of communication between al-Qaeda members are detected, fears of new attacks begin to rise.

Osama bin Laden appears in a recent video aired on al-Jazeera television. Bin Laden's appearance has generated concern that al-Qaeda may be planning a terror strike against the United States.

There seems to be a correlation between the release of a tape and a new attack. According to CNN, communications among al-Qaeda members increased in July followed by suspected al-Qaeda attacks on Jakarta, Indonesia, the United Nations building, the Jordanian embassy in Baghdad and a mosque in Najaf, Iraq. Although recent attacks have been overseas, officials caution that another attack on the U.S. mainland is likely in the coming years.

ResNet takes stand on file sharing

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

The next time you naively assume that you can download songs without being noticed, think again. Record companies are out to find people stealing from them and aren't afraid to make them pay. University students are no exceptions.

Companies including Sony, MGM and Paramount Pictures have hired troops of people to track Internet activity around the country, particularly at college campuses.

College students are not only the most likely to download copyrighted material, their age group is also the record companies' targeted audience. They hope this age group will buy the most CDs and movies. When they don't buy CDs but download songs instead, they are causing the record companies to lose billions of dollars each year.

FoxNews.com reports that from 1999 to 2002 there was a 25 percent drop in CD sales and a drop in revenues from $14.6 billion to $12.6 billion. FoxNews.com also estimates that 2.6 billion songs are downloaded every month.

With the recent lawsuits, it

"If a student wants to download 10 to 15 songs and think they are staying out of trouble to get off right after, that's fine, as long as they don't mind playing Russian roulette."

—Mike Diehl, Technology Support Leader is important to know what is happening on the University's Residential Network (ResNet).

Mike Diehl, technology support leader for ResNet, says that the University does not condone file sharing. It is illegal, and involves stealing not

See RESNET, page B9

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

September 26, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 4

Sports:

The first game on the new Graham Field resulted in a disappointing loss for the Bison.

See page B1

UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY PARTICIPATES IN ANNUAL STOP THE HATE MARCH

Chris Vennemeyer—The Bucknellian

A variety of student groups came to support the Stop the Hate March on Saturday. They walked from the downhill Langone Center to Huffnagle Park. Speakers talked about the need for tranquility and read descriptions of different hate crimes that have occurred over the past years.

Several students locked on bus after Senior Night

By MICHELLE DOMBECK
Associate Editor

Between 10 and 15 students were detained on a bus after Senior Night on Sept. 19. The seniors were prevented from leaving the bus until Public Safety and the Lewisburg Police Department responded by the request of the bus driver, who complained about a broken window near the front of the bus. The incident, which is under investigation by the University, has left some students increasingly frustrated with the treatment by the local authorities.

"We get treated as second-class citizens here. I was really upset I had to deal with this," Ny Baez '04, who was on the bus, said.

Steve Alexander '04 sent an e-mail detailing the night to members of the University administration after returning home.

"This is not how things should be handled, regardless of whether or not we are college students," Alexander said in the e-mail.

Alexander said he tried to file a complaint against the bus driver with one of the Lewisburg Police Officers. According to Alexander, Officer

Fred Hetrick said that "he had more important things to do," and told Alexander to talk to the police chief and the mayor.

The Lewisburg Police Department said "Because there were no arrests made, there is no information to release and [the chief] has no comment." No one from the police department was available for further comment.

"I'm pretty sure the officers did the right thing. Whatever [the officers] did, I would support it," Lewisburg Mayor Judy Wagner said.

The students involved boarded the last bus to leave Big Andy's Bar and Grill at 1:30 a.m. last Friday morning. It is unclear at what point during the six-mile trip a window on the bus was broken.

According to Alexander, the bus continued into Lewisburg and stopped at the corner of Market and 7th Streets. Students were allowed to exit the bus at that stop, and again at a stop by the Langone Center. The bus then turned left onto University Ave. and stopped between Hunt Hall and President Roger's house.

At this point the remaining students on the

See SENIOR NIGHT, page A4

Green speaks to students about alcohol abuse

Recovering alcoholic Michael Green spoke to University students about drinking at college and about alcoholism.

By MICHAEL DUDINSKI
Staff Writer

Recovering alcoholic and a member of the Collegiate Consultants on Drugs and Alcohol Michael Green spoke to students on Sept. 14 about drinking responsibly. He said that although alcohol consumption is a major component of the college party scene, drinking responsibly is not common.

Green warned students that one night of reckless drinking could cost a person everything. According to Green, the most important thing to remember is to not allow one night of socialized drinking to get out of control.

"If a night starts to turn sour and tensions arise, he said that the best option is to walk away rather than instigate," Green said.

Green provided students with an example of how drinking can have serious consequences.

"A group of students at a university in Maine were out drinking one night. A verbal confrontation arose between two guys, while the others instigated the bickering further. Before you knew it, one guy hit other on the forehead with a crowbar. The victim is still in the hospital today struggling with a coma," Green said.

Had the student's friends told him to walk away, Green said that the brutal outcome would have been prevented.

See ALCOHOL, page A3

Mitchell sends letter criticizing speech code

By ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

Conservatives Club President Charles Mitchell '05 mailed a letter to all first-year students that said while attending the University, students will not be allowed to express their speech rights to the fullest extent.

"On the most basic level, we sent the letter out because we think it is very important for students to know about the rules at the University," Mitchell said. "The only speech rules we should know about are in the Student Handbook, which are very easy to miss. ... Frankly, we want people to be outraged. These rules are crazy."

The University is a private institution and therefore has the power to limit students' rights, including those of free speech. Public institutions do not have that Constitutional power.

"Let me ask you this: did you come to Bucknell knowing that you would be less free than your friends at, say, Penn State? Somehow, I don't think so. And I doubt that the folks in Admissions told you that being a Bucknellian involves checking your First Amendment rights at the door. Rather, they probably said that Bucknell values free inquiry and free speech, blah, blah, blah," the letter said. Rourke Day '06 said he thinks the speech code at the University is necessary.

Charles Mitchell sent a letter to all first-year students about the University's speech code, which he said limits students' freedom of speech.

"Since I attended a Catholic high school, I am

See SPEECH, page A3

Lamb discusses relationships between Blacks and Hispanics

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Writer

Complex drums, base lines and horns echoed in the Langone Center Forum, forming one of the many cultural connections between Latinos and blacks that Professor and Author David Lamb presented to a diverse group of members of the University community on Wednesday.

The primary topic of the lecture was the connections in cultural survival associated with music. Lamb also discussed Latino and black links in culinary survival with "Latino food" and "soul food," as well as the portrayal of women in both cultures. Lamb has had first-hand experiences with all of these issues.

"I was born in Historia, Queens, an area that at the time was predominately populated with people of African American, Puerto Rican and Greek origins," Lamb said. "There was constant tension between the Greek community and the African American and Professor and Author David Lamb presented the many similarities between Blacks and Hispanics to a diverse group this past Wednesday in the Langone Center Forum.

Puerto Rican communities, so the [latter two] bonded together because of the similar cause: safety."

Another memory Lamb had from growing up was listening to the Latino beats coming from his friend's window. Lamb noted the contributions of two musicians, Dizzy Gillespie and his Latino percussionist, who collaborated their culturally-influenced music to produce a specific genre that is a foundation for salsa, jazz and hip hop. And Hip hop is an area of expertise for Lamb; he teaches a course on the subject at Hunter College.

"I really like rap music,"

See LAMB, page A3

PRESIDENTIAL PROFESSORS APPOINTED

University President Steffen Rogers sent out a campus-wide e-mail this week announcing the appointments of Professor of Electrical Engineering and Computer Science Maurice Aburdene, Professor of Chemistry Charles Clapp and Professor of History Martha Verbrugge to Presidential Professorships, effective Jan. 1, 2004.

Non-partisan politics

The officers of PACE are ready to encourage discussion on campus.

See page B8

Caucasian club

Kyle McNeel argues that even though a caucasian club would not be a good idea, it would illustrate the exclusionary nature of the University's Office of Multicultural Affairs.

See page A7

Restaurant review

Bechtels:

Treat your tastebuds at this laid-back, inexpensive diner.

See page A9

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Sept. 14

ASSIST POLICE—Public Safety responded to South Seventh and Louis Streets to assist Lewisburg Police department to identify a student who was cited for littering.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / RESIDENCE HALL VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity for the report of an intoxicated female. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified the female as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Upon a plain view search of her room, Public Safety observed a full bottle of vodka. Citations were issued for underage consumption, public drunkenness and residence hall violations.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / RESIDENCE HALL VIOLATION—While checking a pull station at Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity, Public Safety observed a male throw a punch at another male in the basement area. Both were identified as students who consumed alcohol although under the age of 21. Upon a plain view search of the room, Public Safety observed a full can of beer and several empty beer cans. Citations were issued for disorderly conduct, underage consumption and residence hall violations.

INFORMATION / PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of water damage to a laptop computer, DVDs and a CD. The student's wallet was also removed from the unlocked room and later located in an adjacent room. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Stadium Road for the report of damage to parked vehicles. Upon arrival, Public Safety observed three vehicles with bent rear license plates and one vehicle with a missing rear plate. The East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—While on routine patrol, Public Safety was stopped by a visitor who reported that his side mirror had been broken off of his vehicle while it was parked on Moore Avenue. The East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

VANDALISM—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) threw an orange and broke her window at Swartz Hall. A work order was placed to repair the window. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a head injury. A Student Health Services driver transported the female. She later returned to campus.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that her vehicle was scratched while it was parked in the Gateway Lot. The incident is under investigation.

HARASSMENT—A student reported to Public Safety that he was punched at an off-campus location downtown. Lewisburg Police Department responded. The student later decided not to file charges.

Monday, Sept. 15

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Dana Engineering building for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

HIT & RUN ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to Lower Harris parking lot for the report of damage to a student's vehicle while it was parked there. The incident is under investigation.

HARASSMENT—Several students reported to Public Safety that an unknown male followed them from the downtown area to Swartz Hall. Public Safety conducted a search of the campus with negative results. East Buffalo Township Police Department and Lewisburg Police Department were notified and given a full description of the individual. The incident is under investigation.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to Larson Hall for the report of occupants of two vehicles throwing fire works from the cars. No suspects and no evidence of fire works were located in a search of the area.

Wednesday, Sept. 17

ACT 64 / DRUG VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. No evidence of marijuana was located but a student admitted to smoking a cigar in the room. A citation was issued for smoking in a dorm room.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Carey House for the report of damage to a door's hinges. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke out a door window at Swartz Hall. Physical Plant responded and repaired the window. The incident is under investigation.

HIT & RUN / DUI / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / RECKLESS ENDANGERMENT—Public Safety responded to the 7th Street cafe for the report of a possible hit and run accident. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that a vehicle had struck parked vehicles on Walker Street causing damage to three cars. Public Safety and East Buffalo Township Police Department apprehended the suspect on Stadium Road. The suspect was identified as a student who had consumed alcohol although under the age of 21. The male was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room by East Buffalo Township Police Department and was cited for DUI, underage consumption, leaving the scene of an accident and reckless endangerment. Additional charges are pending. Lewisburg Police Department also responded.

Thursday, Sept. 18

ASSIST POLICE—Public Safety responded to Wagner Alley off of St. Louis Street to assist Lewisburg Police Department with a student who was cited for underage consumption and public drunkenness at an off-campus location.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—An employee reported to Public Safety that two students were carrying an orange and white barricade in front of the Fieldhouse. Public Safety observed one of the students carrying the barricade and proceeded with a pedestrian stop of both students. Public Safety later determined that one student admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21 years. One student charged with underage consumption and the other student charged with criminal mischief.

ACT 64 / DRUG VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Larson Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. Upon arrival, Public Safety observed a strong smell of marijuana coming from a resident's room. Upon investigation, Public Safety identified four students in the room and discovered a plastic bag filled with marijuana, a water bong, empty beer bottles and unopened beer cans. Lewisburg Police Department was contacted and confiscated marijuana and the drug paraphernalia. Citations filed for possession of controlled substances, tampering with fire equipment, possession of alcohol by an underage person, using a candle, smoking in a dorm room and presence of empty alcohol containers in a room of an underage person.

Friday, Sept. 19

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—A student reported to Public Safety that a male opened her unlocked room door at 23 University Ave. House while she was undressed. The incident is under investigation.

VEHICLE DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to the front of Hunt Hall to assist Lewisburg Police Department with the report of a student who accidentally broke a Susquehanna Trailways bus window. No one on the bus would admit to causing the damage. Lewisburg Police Department advised that the bill should be given to the organization that chartered the bus service.

INFORMATION / STORM DAMAGE—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed the following damage caused by Hurricane Isabel: the foot bridge near Lower Harris parking lot broken, damage to a tree at the front of Upper Harris Parking lot, and damage to a tree outside the Public Safety building.

ARSON—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) set a bulletin board fire at Roser Hall. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of two intoxicated males knocking on room doors. Upon arrival, Public Safety located two males who admitted to drinking alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of an intoxicated male vomiting. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the student consumed alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed her unsecured bicycle from the bike rack outside Swartz Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Conservatives Club featured in NY Times

By KIM DUNLAP
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell University Conservatives Club (BUCC) was offered an opportunity for national recognition in May when reporter John Colapinto published an article on the modern day spread of conservatism thought on college campuses in the New York Times Magazine.

Titled "Armies of the Right: The Young Hipubicans," Colapinto's piece focused on the BUCC and how its image is changing from the preconceived view of the typical right-wing organization. Colapinto concentrated on Charles Mitchell '05, the club's current president and former editor of its magazine, The Counterweight.

"We hung out with him for two days; he really got to see us work," Mitchell said.

After a period of observing the club during meetings and activities, Colapinto was able to get a sense of the inner workings of the group and its perspectives.

"[Colapinto] even asked me if I would take him shooting," Mitchell said.

The BUCC appeared on the cover of the magazine on May 25, featuring the higher-up officers of the club with serious expressions and wearing white t-shirts with U.S. President George W. Bush's face printed on them. This was not exactly what Colapinto had envisioned.

"They had the shirts made for us," Mitchell said. "They told us to look serious."

Many of the things featured in the article were different from what the club had expected. Not only were the photo shoots out of their control, but many generalizations made in the article displeased the BUCC members. Along with Colapinto's suggestive title, the writer makes several references to the club members as straight-up Republicans "poised to inherit the responsibility of shaping the Republican party."

"I didn't like it ... we're not Republicans," Mitchell said. "That's not who we are."

Colapinto also implied that the club's recruitment is slightly opportunistic, striving to turn students towards its ideology by whatever means possible.

"Many of these kids are not yet prepared to declare a particular political affiliation. This is where the campus activists come in," Colapinto said in the article.

For an authoritative view on campus conservatives, Colapinto quoted David Brock, a graduate of the liberal University of California at Berkeley and former supporter of right-wing ideology.

"They have a theory of getting them when they're young," Brock said.

He went on to assert that college conservatives take advantage of confused or undecided students to gain momentum to their cause.

"There's no valid comparison between us and David Brock," Mitchell said. "That's not what we're trying to do."

Despite the less-anticipated portrait of the BUCC that appeared in the article, Mitchell praised the piece and said it had several positive aspects. One example was the attempt by the Colapinto to break the stereotypes of conservative clubs left over from decades before.

"Don't strive to be thought of as 'serious' and 'respectable'. On campus, these words equate to 'irrelevant and ineffective,'" the article reads, quoting a handbook called "Stop the Presses!" encouraging conservatives to reverse once-common stereotypes now obsolete in college settings.

Mitchell and his colleagues were pleased by this contemporary abolishment of stereotypes, a problem that many of its members resent.

"If someone can read this article and realize that we're not these things, then we're getting somewhere," Mitchell said.

The BUCC was also optimistic about the credibility its appearance in the Times offered the club.

"It's a credibility thing, that we've done this. We're not some wacky club in Pennsylvania. It's good for our members to know they're a part of something like that," Mitchell said.

The publicity for the BUCC, based in a small liberal arts campus, was also seen as an upside to their feature.

"We were on TV four times ... [and] on the radio twice," Mitchell said.

Despite some of the more negative elements of Colapinto's representation of the Conservatives Club, Mitchell seemed to think that the article was beneficial to a club they feel is underrepresented.

"You have to look at the big picture. If you do that, it's a great thing for us," Mitchell said.

When asked if the publicity about the article would give the BUCC a greater influence, Mitchell said, "It's something to build on."

The New York Times Magazine published a story on the BUCC last spring. Club officers Denise Chaykun, Charles Mitchell, Allison Kasic (pictured left to right) had mixed feelings about the article.

ISABEL SWEEPS OVER THE UNIVERSITY

Dan Fallon—The Bucknellian

Hurricane Isabel passed through the central Pennsylvania region on Sept. 19. Although flooding did not occur, the storm caused some damage. This tree, located behind Harris Hall, was uprooted and broke the bridge in that area.

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme
Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Rumsfeld: Iraq funding affordable

WASHINGTON—Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld told Congress on Wednesday that President Bush's $87 billion request for Iraq and Afghanistan represented an affordable and needed investment in international security. But a top Democrat questioned whether the American people had ever blessed the massive U.S.-led Iraqi reconstruction effort now under way.

United States may send more reservists to Iraq

WASHINGTON—Within several weeks, the Pentagon may alert a large number of additional National Guard and Reserve troops needed for duty in Iraq, a senior military official said Wednesday.

Recall candidates to meet in debate

SACRAMENTO—With court challenges to the state's Oct. 7 recall vote apparently exhausted, candidates hoping to replace Gov. Gray Davis began a 14-day sprint to the finish that includes a crucial debate Wednesday night among the leading challengers.

United States tightens security at Guantanamo

WASHINGTON—The United States has tightened security at its military base in Cuba, where 680 al-Qaida and Taliban suspects are held, after a U.S. military chaplain and translator were arrested in a possible spy plot involving Syria, a top American general said on Wednesday.

Stoning sentence for Nigerian mom raises global issues

Under the glare of the international spotlight, a court in Nigeria on Thursday is expected to decide the fate of Amina Lawal, a young mother sentenced to death by stoning. After an 18-month court battle, this is her final chance to appeal for leniency under a harsh interpretation of Islamic law. There are good reasons that this case has drawn widespread attention, but experts say the basic fact of Lawal's case—condemnation to death for adultery or another sexual offense—is not as rare as it would seem.

Hilary Clinton upset over censored memoir

BEIJING—The Chinese-language version of Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton's autobiography has been censored for mainland readers, an action that "amazed and outraged" the former first lady. Her American publisher demanded Wednesday that the edition be recalled.

Sick pope skips general audience

VATICAN CITY—Pope John Paul II took the rare step of canceling his weekly general audience on Wednesday in the face of growing concern over his health, but the Vatican insisted that only a "minor" intestinal problem was to blame.

Five young ATV riders die in collision

DOUGLAS, Ga.—An all-terrain vehicle with six children clinging to it was struck head-on by a car on a rural road at night. Five of the youngsters were killed and the sixth was critically injured.

Flame retardant found in breast milk

High levels of a common flame retardant used in furniture, computers and cars have been found in the breast milk of a sample of women across the United States, according to a study by an environmental advocacy group published Tuesday.

Mother, child cancer risks linked

COPENHAGEN, Denmark—Women whose children develop cancerous tumors early in life are more likely to suffer from breast cancer, scientists said on Wednesday.

FDA to decide on Alzheimer's drug

WASHINGTON—A drug long used in Germany to slow the ravages of Alzheimer's disease is facing its first big hurdle en route to the U.S. market.

New e-paper could show moving images

LONDON—Even before the electronic ink has dried on the e-page, a new generation of electronic paper may soon be able to bring a moving image to a foldable screen near you, according to Dutch scientists.

News

Mitchell attacks University speech code in letter to first-year students used to "checking my rights at the door." Students who went to public schools aren't used to it. It really does make Bucknell a better place," Day said.

SPEECH From page A1

Gloria Clendaniel '06 received Mitchell's letter in the mail and said she is not pleased with the University's speech codes.

"School authorities have taken things too far. Policies need to be re-evaluated and re-written," Clendaniel said.

Charlie Waddell '06 agreed with Clendaniel after he read the letter.

"It is wrong that the school falsely advertises these rights. It is understandable that we pay to go here, and it is a private institution, but if freedom of speech is promoted, the standard must be upheld," Waddell said.

The letter said that "one of the many" problems with the University's speech code is that the University does not consider its speech limitations to be an infringement upon students' rights.

The letter said that the most offensive example of the University acting in this way is located in the Student Handbook on page 12. It says that "engaging in conduct which alarms or seriously annoys such other persons is harassment, for which you may be punished."

"Think about that. Do you think you should be punished if you inadvertently 'seriously annoy' someone? How many times a day are you 'seriously annoyed'? Don't 8 a.m. classes 'seriously annoy' you?" the letter said.

Mitchell's letter said that the "Bucknell Guide About Bias-Related Harassment and Violence," is reasonable in some senses and irrational in others. "Bias-related graffiti" is prohibited by the University and contains such things as "disparaging or condescending remarks about a person's nationality, religious beliefs or sexual orientation" and "verbal abuse, including anti-gay jokes and disparaging remarks about one's race or language."

The letter said this policy "may sound okay in principle," but is too vague and is a violation of students' rights, because "what's 'disparaging' or 'condescending' to one person is not so to another. And since when do people need to be protected from the punchline of a joke?" the letter said.

The letter provided students with the URLs for the University's bias-related harassment Web site and for the Web site on the University's sexual harassment policies for students.

"Of course, you need to judge for yourself whether or not you think the Bucknell administration has any business banning all the kinds of speech that it does," the letter said. "I, as you might guess, think those people ought to have better things to do than figuring out and outlawing what's 'condescending' or 'disparaging' to each of us."

Mitchell said in the letter that he believes harassment should be illegal on campus, but anything less than harassment should be allowed. Mitchell provided examples of comments that would be illegal under the University's speech code.

"The stupid Americans went into Iraq without the U.N.," ("disparaging or condescending remarks about a person's...nationality"), "The Bible says homosexuality is a sin," ("disparaging or condescending remarks about a person's...sexual orientation"), "Guys are pigs," ("sexist jokes") and "That girl looks hot in those black pants" ("inappropriate remarks about one's body or clothing"), the letter said.

Mitchell said that he doesn't think anyone should have the right to not be offended.

"For Bucknell to shelter people from being offended is morally wrong," Mitchell said. "Certainly people have been offended across history."

Vice President of Academic Affairs Charles Pollock '70 said he agrees with the Conservative Club commitment to the Bill of Rights, but he does not agree with the club's interpretation of the University's policy.

"Bucknell does not have a 'speech code' now, in either of the guides cited in the letter, and it will not have one later this year, when its new bias-related harassment policy is completed and implemented. The University is deeply committed to preventing harassment and to protecting students' ability to pursue their educations, which does require civility. Certain acts and utterances are therefore discouraged," Pollock said. "But that is part of living in a community, and it falls far short of a frontal attack on First Amendment rights."

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) sued Shippensburg University, a public institution in Pa. for an unconstitutional speech code. On Sept. 4, a federal court issued a preliminary injunction for Shippensburg University's president not to enforce the speech code.

"Shippensburg's speech code is very similar to Bucknell's," and since Shippensburg's was found to be unconstitutional, then Bucknell's (speech code) is unconstitutional as well," Mitchell said.

According to FIRE's Web site and speech-codes.org, a Web site propelled through FIRE, many other universities across the country, including Harvard University, have similarly limiting speech codes.

Chief Executive Officer of FIRE Thor Halvorssen said the Shippensburg ruling is a landmark case.

"This is a great victory and a vital step in the struggle against the scandal of unconstitutional campus censorship at public colleges and universities," Halvorssen said. "Shippensburg faces the legal consequences of trampling the Constitution of the United States. FIRE will now seek to make this preliminary injunction permanent."

Mitchell said that even though he is addressing the problems with the University's speech code, he does not think the University should eliminate harassment policies.

"Our problem is the insidious rules at the University," Mitchell said.

Mike Halle '06 did not agree with the letter and said he thinks the University's speech policy is a good one.

"Although the rules sound vague, they serve as a benchmark for ways in which people can be punished if University assistance is needed. With any rule you can pick out certain instances where it does not best serve the public. Bottom line—one will get in trouble that doesn't deserve to be," Halle said.

Nicole Impellizzeri '06 said she does not believe speech should be limited at any universities, given that the nature of a university is to learn and explore new ideas.

"There is definitely a distinction that needs to be made between freedom of speech and things that are offensive. College is a time for learning about different areas of study and ideas. Even if you disagree with an idea you need to listen to arguments and valid points and accept them for what they are. You must respect differences and find commonalities between different groups of people. In the end you may not need to foster other's ideas but you can learn from them and apply them to different areas of thought," Impellizzeri said.

—Julie Lesko contributed to this article and am interested in the origins of it," Gary Thaniel '04 said.

LAMB From page A1

"[After hearing the lecture], I have a different point of view on the origin and culture of hip hop music," Thaniel said.

Lamb does not only examine the roots of hip hop, but also why it is important to study its foundation.

"History is a current event," Lamb said. "What happened yesterday happens today. Music is a continuation of what came before."

HARVEST HOUSE
CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

GO Vertical

310 Market St.
Downtown Lewisburg
Under CVS

Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

SPRING BREAK

Nassau/Paradise Island,
Cancun, Jamaica and
Acapulco from $489!
Air, Hotel, Transfers,
Parties and More!
Organize Small Group-
Earn Free Tips plus Commissions!

Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

News

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

HEY STUDENTS!!

CALL US FOR THE BEST RENTALS IN TOWN

1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2004/2005

Call Linda or Duska to see the LARGEST
Selection of Rentals in Town!!!

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA
570-523-3244

USA SPRING BREAK.com
Cancun, Bahamas, Acapulco, Jamaica & More!
Don't be fooled! Go with Quality and Experience!
28 years in business!
Largest Student Tour Operator
(Division of USA Student Travel)

Call Toll Free: 1-877-460-6077

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $$

Seniors detained on bus after an unknown student broke a window

SENIOR NIGHT From page A1

bus began to exit. The students near the front of the bus were allowed to exit until approximately 12 students were prevented from leaving the bus.

"He demanded our names as witnesses to the breaking of the window; he described the person that he had seen being pushed into the window and questioned us about it. As all of us on the bus had been in the back when it had been broken we did not know who the person that had broken it or what happened," Alexander wrote in the e-mail.

Baez offered his name, phone number and address. He asked for the driver's contact info, a request that the driver refused, according to Baez and Alexander. Once the driver refused to share his identification information, the remaining students refused to give their names and other contact information.

According to Baez, Alexander and other students who chose to remain anonymous, the driver locked the bus and called Public Safety. After several minutes, the officers arrived and spoke to Baez off the bus. Public Safety then called the Lewisburg Police.

While the police talked to the driver and some students, Alexander told an officer that he wanted to file a complaint against the bus driver. When the officer refused, Alexander asked for the officer's identification. According to Alexander, the officer also refused this request.

Feeling threatened by the officer, Alexander left the scene when instructed to by the officer. The officer was later identified as Fred Hetrick. Inquiries to the Lewisburg Police Department about the incident were unanswered other than to confirm that Fred Hetrick is an officer there. Questions regarding officer identification by Lewisburg Police were referred to Wagner, who was unable to respond by press time.

Other police departments were asked about their policies regarding officer identification.

"I would expect [an officer] to give their name and badge number is asked. Those are things people are entitled to know," said East Buffalo Township Police Chief Barry Hosterman. Hosterman also pointed out that his department doesn't have a written rule about identification though.

Pennsylvania State Police Trooper Smith said that he usually provides his name, badge number, department and supervisor or station manager's name if a citizen asks for them.

Baez said he thinks the police often do not act in a professional manner.

"The cops here can do just about anything. They are really unprofessional sometimes. I'm from New York City where the cops have to be a little more professional because they are scared of lawsuits," said Baez.

"I just wanted to go home," said Matt Dino '04, who was on the bus.

According to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, the investigation into the incident is being headed by Associate Dean of Students Kari Conrad and Associate Dean of Students Gerald Commerford.

Conrad was unavailable for comment.

"We are looking at all possible suspects. I can't say much. Hopefully we will get it cleared up for the next Senior Night," Senior Class President Jessica Briski '04 said.

Know all the news on campus—
Write for News
e-mail Liz at esalemme@

Take a Deep Breath...

...and Relax with a Therapeutic Massage

from Rick Hummel, Massage Therapist

Massage has long been an effective method of relaxing tense muscles, improving circulation and promoting an overall sense of peace and well-being. ~By Appointment Only~

Call Rick today ~ 524-5015 ~

rickhummel@mac.com

~ You Deserve To Feel Great! ~

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It Works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Calendar of Events

September 26 FRI	September 27 SAT	September 28 SUN	September 29 MON	September 30 TUE	October 1 WED	October 2 THU
Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Pilates Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. CardioKick Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Shabbat Service Berelson Center for Jewish Life (Chapel) 5:30 p.m. Volleyball vs Army Davis Gymnasium 7 p.m. "Like Water for Chocolate" Hilltop Film Series Vaughan Lit (Auditorium) 8 p.m. No Limit A Capella Langone Center (Bison) 9 p.m. Graham Colton Uptown 9:30 p.m. Analyze That Langone Center Forum 10:30 p.m. Doug Wilcox 7th Street Café 11 p.m.	Symposium on Girl Singers of the 60s Vaughan Lit (Auditorium) 9 a.m. Rosh Hashanah Service Bucknell Hall (Recital Hall) 10 a.m. Field Hockey vs. Lafayette College Field Hockey 1 p.m. Jelani Dance Practice Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 2 p.m. Volleyball vs Holy Cross Davis Gymnasium 4 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel (Main Sanctuary) 5:30 p.m. Slam Poet: Jason Carney 7th Street Café 9 p.m. Foosball Tournament Uptown 9:30 p.m. Holes Vaughan Lit (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Quaker Services Vaughan Lit (Willard Smith Library) 10 a.m. Rosh Hashanah Service Bucknell Hall (Recital Hall) 10 a.m. Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 11 a.m. "Like Water for Chocolate" Hilltop Film Series Vaughan Lit (Auditorium) 3 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel (Main Sanctuary) 4 p.m. Poetry Reading: Liliana Ursu Bucknell Hall (Recital Hall) 7 p.m. Contemporary Worship Rooke Chapel (Meditation Chapel) 7 p.m. Catholic Mass Hunt Hall Living Room 101 10 p.m. The information for these events is subject to change. Some events are open to members of an organization only.	Swim Conditioning Class Natatorium 7 a.m. Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Zen Meditation Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 4 p.m. The NYC Finance Career Fair Langone Center (Forum) 5 p.m. Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Aerobic Kick Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 6 p.m. Adult Beginning Swim Class Natatorium 7 p.m.	Personal Fitness Step Aerobics Classes 8 a.m. & 11 a.m. Spinning Classes 12 p.m. & 6 p.m. Abs Class 1 p.m. Pilates Class 4 p.m. CardioKick Class 5 p.m. Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio Golf Lessons Golf Course 8:30 a.m. Qigong Class Lounge (Vedder Hall Living Room) 12 p.m. Catholic Mass Langone Center Forum 12:10 p.m. Field Hockey vs. St. Francis College Field Hockey 6 p.m. Intermediate Tennis Class Varsity Tennis Courts (beside Davis Gym) 6:30 p.m. Humanities Institute: Dr. Cyndia Clegg Langone Center (Gallery Theatre Lecture Hall) 7:30 p.m.	Episcopal Services Rooke Chapel Meditation Chapel NOON Personal Fitness Spinning Class 8 a.m. & 4 p.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class 12 p.m. Cardio Kick Class 5 p.m. Yoga Class 6 p.m. Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio Jelani Wednesday Step Practice Harris Hall 17 (Lounge) 7 p.m. The Life of David Gale Vaughan Lit (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. Golf Lessons Golf Course 8:30 a.m. Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 12 p.m. & 6 p.m. Abs Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 1 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Cardio Kicks Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Film: Beyond Rangoon Langone Center (Gallery Theatre Lecture Hall) 7 p.m.

Send calendar submissions to
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

you were out late with your friends. you sleep through your alarm. your boss asks why you are late. what do you tell him? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 132, Number 4
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
17837

(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackeman '04

Associate Editor
Michelle Dombek '05

Managing Editor
Allyson Walker '04

Business Manager
Stephen Santilli '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04

News Editors
Elisabeth Salemme '06
Meghan Hall '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Keeley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Homan '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Pat Evans '04
Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
Ashley Walker '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Josie Gatta '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photo Editors
Eric Graham '05
Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout
Nick Kupinski '07

Chief Copy Editors
Stacy Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
John Heekin '05
Davaish Malhotra '06

Marketing Directors
Joseph Gordanio '05
Alexander Kanaris '05

Circulation Manager
Hasan Sultan '04

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editors of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinion expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFO

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Talking about speech

Lost somewhere in the heated discussion about whether or not the University has speech codes and whether these guidelines are appropriate is an important truth: The discussion itself about the limits of public discussion is a positive development for our community. Students are active and attentive; the administration is trying to be thoughtful and effective in its communication and there may even be some learning going on outside the classroom.

We view the campus discussion itself as completely necessary and encouraging. Intelligent people may disagree about the motives of the Conservatives Club in sending out its letter, and we are certainly not going to try to give a definitive answer. But it is far better to have students, especially first-year students, exposed to this topic early in their college career.

Some first-year students may be outraged by the rules and may find an inner determination to struggle for expansive speech rights now and further on in their lives. Some first-year students may be annoyed by the letter and find the rules appropriate, the administration is trying to be thoughtful and effective in its communication and there may even be some learning going on outside the classroom.

There are a few opinions expressed in the letter that we strongly disagree with. First, it is quite clear that the administration has not decided to prevent students from expressing our rights to free speech. If the Conservatives Club believes that the administration has unfairly limited some speech rights, it can and should say that.

This publication and the others on campus are clear examples of bastions of free speech. We are not censored in any way by anyone outside of our paper. The views expressed in this section are those of the editorial board or the writer of each article. The administration has not and does not attempt to prevent us from expressing any view we hold.

Second, it is true that as adults we can be called to sacrifice our lives for the principles of our country, few, if any of which, are more important than free speech. But it is also true that men and women have and may again be called to sacrifice their lives to protect the rights of people to be safe from threat, intimidation and harassment.

The disagreement about the University's rules is over a matter of degree. Where does my right to speech end and your right to not have to hear something begin?

There are easy answers on the extremes and less clear answers near the middle. Political and media speech are the most respected and revered kinds of speech and suffer from the least limitations. Physical threats and intimidation are the least tolerated kinds of speech and our society has seen fit to restrict them severely.

Between these are kinds of speech that can be viewed differently by different people.

A major issue covered in the letter is that of enforcement. We would be shocked and disappointed if a student were to be punished for some of the examples contained in the Conservatives Club's letter. To the best of our knowledge, this does not happen.

The academic and theoretical discussion on this topic is necessary. We should nonetheless also consider how the policy is enforced.

The letter brings up many points about an important topic. Unfortunately, it takes a complex topic worthy of discussion and reflection and attempts to simplify it into a proposition of right and wrong. Continued discussion will serve the campus well.

Weathering the local news proves difficult

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

When I sat down to watch WYOU, the local news, I saw reporters linking drinking and driving to fatal accidents, talking about residential fires (sadly, some dogs were killed), explaining the budgeting issues for a new police building. Then came what I had been waiting for: the weather report.

Well fine, I didn't really watch the weather. I mean, I was shut up in a dark basement room in my dorm building, so far removed from nature that I had my eyes glued to a screen that showed fancy graphics and flashy icons, mimicking what the weather was doing minutes ago. The forecaster said it was 68 degrees outside, down from 70 degrees a little earlier.

It was reassuring to know that a professional was paid to insult my intelligence and reward my ineptitude by telling me exactly how many degrees it was outside. After all, why step outdoors and actually feel what the weather is doing when doppler radar, computer simulations and a meteorologist can do it all for me?

Still lazy, I stuck around to watch the rest of the news. I learned that the Bloomsburg Fair was selling jumbo doughnuts, so large that a normally-sized doughnut can fit inside the center. If you eat it and survive the quadruple bypass, why not drink in celebration? Wash it down with a caffeine-laden drink the Bloomsburg Fair euphemistically calls "The Killer."

Far from informative and verging on the absurd, features on "The Killer" and super mega jumbo doughnuts came right after the local health report.

After the commercial break came a supplemental weather report, the first being presumably inadequate. Indeed it was, for this installment focused on the autumnal equinox and went beyond current conditions, selling the drama by unveiling its climatic seven-day forecast.

Not to be outdone, a short, two-minute segment on Hurricane Isabel, a nearly unintelligible five-second soundbite by U.S. President George W. Bush, a heads-up look at tomorrow's newspaper, sports and a comfort food recipe by Mr. Ford followed.

As if that were not enough, WYOU came through with a clutch report to finish a very busy news day with a spectacular finish—a summary of the previous weather report, again with the very same seven-day forecast plus a flash flood warning.

Out of a 30-minute program, WYOU dedicated 5 minutes, 45 seconds to the weather and a full eight minutes, 45 seconds were dedicated to ads. In all, approximately 15 minutes of a 30-minute program were dedicated to either weather or commercials.

Local news is not a problem—just a misnomer for broadcast mindlessness that hardly even qualifies as entertainment.

Ironically, it will actually save you time to turn the television off, take the 30 seconds to look out a window or go outdoors and actually feel for yourself how hot or cold, wet or dry it actually is. Now that is a local forecast. As for the rest of the "news," I have a news flash of my own: this is not what news should be.

Granted, weather reports are useful when there is a potential natural disaster. Granted, local news does have a place on the air. What is truly taken for granted is the amount of mindless gibberish that is actually (mis)taken for news. There was not one compelling issue, one important debate, one dynamic story to be seen, though I am sure they are out there.

I do not want to see nearly six minutes of weather and nine minutes of commercials. Just recently U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft issued orders to reduce plea-bargaining, thereby maximizing a prisoner's access to the death penalty while minimizing potentially beneficial alternatives. Want impassioned local news? Ask the inmates in the Lewisburg Penitentiary what they think about Ashcroft's latest order.

Local news is not a problem—just a misnomer for broadcast mindlessness that hardly even qualifies as entertainment. I like television as much as the next Bucknellian, but when it comes to the news, I read a paper. When it comes to the weather, I'm outside watching the skies.

different corner of the courtyard when I walk by it tomorrow. I'm afraid if I say something or actually move the dirt myself, the guys who work on that elegant piece of property will actually have to find something productive to do and legitimately earn their wages. What a shame that would be.

When faculty and staff members are given special parking spaces in ideal proximity to important academic buildings, they are receiving privilege to which the rest of

Finally, I must bring up my issue with the use of the cemetery as a local playground. I'm not exactly one to dwell on holy places or sacred locations. But come on. It's a cemetery. You know, dead people, rotting people, quiescent people.

If the land is really going to be used as a local park, where are the elementary school kids going to play their games of four square? On the graves? These are the types of questions we have to start asking as ultimate Frisbee and mid-afternoon jogs become the norm in the quarters of the non-living.

Obviously, if my hip joints didn't sound like a welding factory when I walked, then I probably would not have had to ponder these disturbing issues. I hope and pray for an expedited recovery so I can no longer dwell on these minor details which currently plague my life.

To me, though, it looks like a couple guys come about twice a week and spend close to an hour just moving the four-foot-high dirt pile from one side of the courtyard to the other. I see no constructing. I see no improving. I do, on the other hand, see a four-foot-tall mound of dirt that will probably be in a ments. Construct and improve away.

To me, though, it looks like a couple guys come about twice a week and spend close to an hour just moving the four-foot-high dirt pile from one side of the courtyard to the other. I see no constructing. I see no improving. I do, on the other hand, see a four-foot-tall mound of dirt that will probably be in a

Caucasian club is unlikely

By KYLE MCNEEL
Contributing Writer

You wonder what Jonathan Swift would say. You wonder because it seems satire would accomplish nothing. These are days beyond mockery, as they are so absurd that satire could not help but to be surreal.

Maybe you've heard, but perhaps not. There's a 15-year-old girl in Oakley, CA trying to start a Caucasian Club at her high school. Freedom High School freshman Lisa McClelland says she's not racist, the Contra Costa Times reports, but that the club will be all inclusive and will seek "to solve the issues of racial disparity." The proposed club has already seen fierce resistance.

Charna Mosley is a junior at Freedom High School, a member of the Black Student Union at Freedom and one of the detractors.

"There's no need for a Caucasian Club because they're not a minority," she said.

Darnell Turner, Vice President of the East County Chapter of the NAACP, thinks the club will create racial tension.

"If her motivation is to bring harmony, as she alleges," he said, "this is not the way to go."

He's right. A Caucasian Club will do nothing to soothe already inflamed racial relations at the school. Fourteen-year-old Elliott Perez, who is part Latino, has a handle on things when he said, "I think it's fair for white people to have their own club, because every other race has their own club."

Paradoxically, both Perez and Turner have assessed the situation properly, though they disagree on what the outcome should be. It would, indeed, be fair to allow McClelland to start her Caucasian Club, but such clubs are not the way to racial harmony. We should not separate ourselves based on our crudest attributes, attributes that are out of our control and have no effect on what we are to become.

That aside, imagine what would happen if such a club was proposed here on campus. Almost certainly, the club would provoke the ire of the PC Police and likely would never have the chance to hold even an interest meeting.

Undoubtedly, someone would perceive the proposal as creating "a hostile environment for another individual or group because of race," which qualifies as "thought crime" under the University's Guide to Bias-Related Harassment. Certain events last year show that race is still, unfortunately, a hot issue at the University.

Generously assuming that the club escapes unscathed by the University's egregious speech code, the next hurdle would be to gain legitimacy on campus. What's the best way to do this? Recognition by the University's panacea to all racial ills, the Office of Multicultural Affairs and the Multicultural Council of Presidents (MCOP). MCOP's Mission Statement commits it to "fostering an inclusive and diverse campus community." This can be seen by the diverse grouping of organizations under the MCOP umbrella: Brothers and Sisters Empowered, FLAG&BT, Students for Asian Awareness, and the Turkish Student Association, to name a few.

Is the Caucasian Club a good idea? No! Yet the irony is thick as it serves an important purpose.

MCOP's recent history has been less than inclusive. Last February, former president of the University's Conservatives Club, Denise Chaykun '04, went before MCOP to request a seat on the council. She was summarily rejected with no explanation (the explanation came months later). The Conservatives Club, apparently, does not mesh with MCOP's understanding of diversity, nor does it qualify for membership. One can only assume that a Caucasian Club would receive similar treatment. Because Caucasians are not one of the fetishized "protected" groups at the University, we can be sure that a club intended to promote equality by representing Americans of European descent would receive short shrift.

As Michael Boland '03 wrote in The Counterweight last year, reporting on the MCOP scandal, "MCOP has no membership standards apart from the personal preferences of its members; it is run by liberals, for liberals, and is little more than a University-sanctioned instrument for liberal causes."

Is the Caucasian Club a good idea? No! I robustly reject the legitimacy of or need for such an organization anywhere. Yet the irony is thick as it serves an important purpose.

That the proposal has created such controversy shows us that the way to racial harmony is not through Balkanization and self-segregation. We slip further and further into identity politics, forgetting what makes us who we are.

Let us not succumb to descent to those most base and ignoble aspects to define ourselves. As we deny the Caucasian Club, we must expose the rest of the divisive race-based clubs for what they are and allow the rain of reason to saturate those under the MCOP umbrella.

The origin of the word "lesbian"

The classic poet Sappho sheds light on sexual identity

By PHIL MARTOMA
Senior Writer

While I was at the Craft Center recently, I made a patch for my jeans that said, "Sappho was a lesbian." One of the goals of the Craft Center is to allow students to practice a craft to express themselves individually, which is exactly what I felt I was doing while making my patch.

The people who noticed the patch tended to not understand the significance of its message. Either they did not know who Sappho was or they did not know why it would be extraordinary to call her a lesbian.

As a classics major, I always have felt that a classical background in your education can be helpful in any area of knowledge. However, this sentiment is usually not shared by many of my fellow students who have never had the joy of reading the Iliad.

I do not think there is anything wrong with being a management major, but I do think there is something wrong when we forget that the liberal arts is about developing yourself intellectually as a whole person. As the old adage goes, "If we do not know where we came from, then we will not know where we are going."

This does not mean that we should not be afraid to try new things that break some traditions. So long as we learn to incorporate our past into our present, then we will truly learn to be a whole person, which brings me back to the patch I made at the Craft Center. The patch is supposed to be a joke because in truth the ancient Greeks had no concept of a sexual identity as we do today.

Sappho was the first female poet to write about her love for women and men. While this may tempt us to say that she must have been bisexual, we must understand that this is a sexual identity and therefore not applicable.

Sappho remains significant to the history of lesbians as an identity, and resided on the island of Lesbos. This is where the word lesbian comes from and this is why I chose to make my patch the way I did.

I seek to claim not that she was attracted to members of her own sex, but that she was a resident of the isle of Lesbos. In this way I show her importance within today's contexts to modern lesbians with the play on words.

To leave it at the fact that she had no sexual identity would be a disservice to her, and her contributions to the idea of the lesbian identity. Also, it is important that we do not try to put our modern understandings of sexuality on those to which they do not apply.

Unfortunately, few people understand or are aware of all the issues brought up by my patch. In order for it to be fully effective, therefore, we all need to have a common background in history that applies to all of our lives no matter who we are. It is only then that we can apply these stories in a meaningful way to where we are now. Also, this is the only way we can learn when and where it would be good to break traditions as well as how to apply the traditions we want to keep.

To leave it at the fact that she had no sexual identity would be a disservice to her, and her contributions to the idea of the lesbian identity.

Sappho was the first female poet to write about her love for women, as well as men.

Parking system slights students

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

Parking has been a hot topic at the University for the last few years, and consequently the student body is often discussing the overwhelming lack of convenience, if existent, parking spaces.

Since we've been in the business of hiring extraneous deans lately, and our parking situation is still unsatisfactory to many students, now is the time to appoint a Dean of Parking. We might as well strike while the iron is hot.

The University's parking policies are biased and discriminatory. The lots closest to the academic quad and other major academic buildings on campus contain a disproportionate amount of parking spots designated for faculty and service vehicles.

Meanwhile, the rest of us disadvantaged paying customers are often left to cruise Fraternity Road and maybe swing into a lot somewhere across from the Structural Testing Lab or behind the Lambda house—the slums of University parking.

Practically, it's really a harmless walk from anywhere to anywhere else on campus, but I challenge the principle behind parking spaces designated specifically for faculty and staff.

When faculty and staff members are given special parking spaces in ideal proximity to important academic buildings, they are receiving privilege to which the rest of us on campus do not have access. Such privilege denotes a hierarchy of importance that should be deemed offensive by any number of University students.

In this case, parking bias is a direct result of color: When a parking sticker is of "student" color, Public Safety is quick to issue fines and even tow in more extreme situations. When the sticker is of "faculty" color, however, it is permitted to park virtually anywhere on campus without any sort of disciplinary action.

Those of "student" color are continually harassed and literally marginalized to the outskirts of University property

It is a moral and social imperative that we raise awareness within the student body, faculty and support staff of the privilege that comes along with "faculty" color. While those of "student" color are continually harassed and literally marginalized to the outskirts of University property, those of "faculty" color enjoy preferential treatment.

The principal danger in this scenario lies in the failure of most faculty and support staff to take it upon themselves to recognize their privilege, and adjust their behavior accordingly.

When you are capable of gallivanting around campus and parking anywhere you please, it becomes almost second nature to ignore the plight of the underprivileged. Upon even the most modest degree of reflection, however, one of "faculty" color might realize how a simple act of self-limitation might change his entire worldview.

In recognizing privilege by means of self-limitation, faculty and support staff have the opportunity to see the effects of a more accommodating and socially-conscious lifestyle.

We're one member of the privileged faculty and support staff to give up a close-proximity parking spot to one of "student" color by hiding or ripping down the "Faculty Only" sign, he might be able to set an example for the rest of the faculty and support staff and encourage them to follow suit in recognition of their privilege.

By virtue of color, it is an uncontested fact that faculty have privilege on our campus. Such is the nature of parking sticker color. While we cannot change our respective colors, we can work to be more sensitive and accommodating within our social framework. As parking is a zero-sum game, our faculty and support staff must answer the call of duty, and reallocate parking resources to achieve true equality. The first and most crucial step in this process is the recognition of privilege.

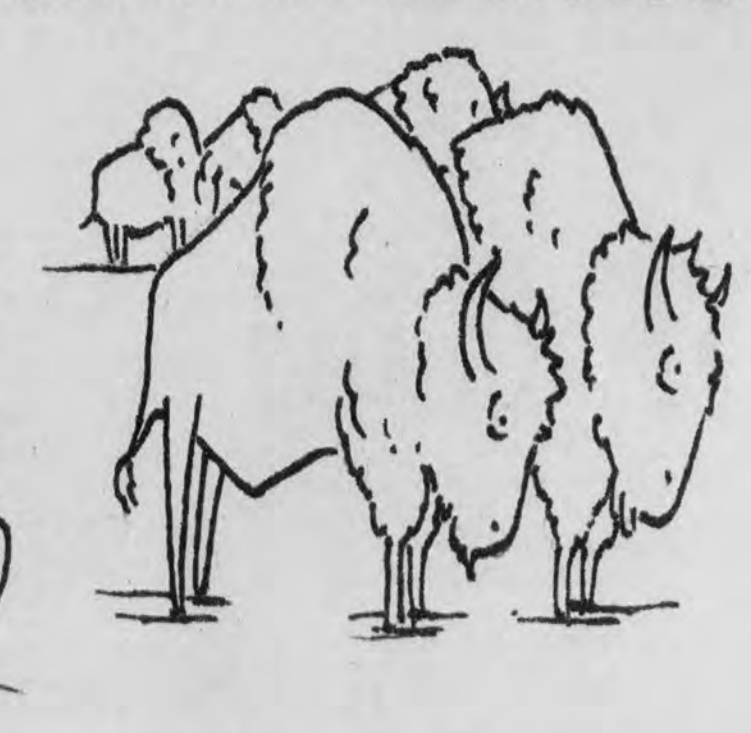

The evolution of the herd

Single-celled organisms

Mesozoic buffalo

The American bison

First-year students

Let your voice be heard! Write us a letter—
Bucknellian@bucknell.edu or Box C3952

FEATURES

The long-awaited trip homeward

By TAMANNA HYE
Writer

Going back to Bangladesh after so many years was one of the best and most wonderful experiences I have had in my life. Having been born there and coming to the United States at a very young age, I was so excited about going back and reconnecting with my "roots."

I will never forget the feeling when we first landed at Zia International Airport in Dhaka. It was an incredible experience, and to this day I can't believe that I was actually on Bangladeshi soil. I was so overwhelmed that I started crying tears of joy. This was the land that I was born in and where my roots are embedded.

I remember that as I stepped off the plane into the hot and humid July afternoon, I felt completely Bangladeshi. I don't think it was a transformation of any sort, and I know I wasn't changing in any physical way. It was more of a mental transformation—of feeling completely myself and comfortable in my own skin. There was a lot of commotion in the airport itself because everyone was looking for their luggage. I loved the sounds of the Bengali language being spoken by everyone around me. It was like music to my ears.

As my family and I walked through the airport to greet our relatives, I remember thinking that this was the first time I and he helped us with our luggage. There were three cars waiting for us because we had brought so much.

Tommy drove us to his house in one of Dhaka's cantonments. Dhaka is the biggest city in Bangladesh. It was a life-changing experience to see the country as we drove down the highway. Many people from all walks of life come to Dhaka to find jobs and to go to the university. I was overjoyed

It was shocking to see the disparity between the rich citizens and the poorer ones in Dhaka. I saw poor children without shoes walking by speeding BMWs, and the irony was overwhelming.

at all the development of businesses and factories that surrounded the highway.

Despite the appearance of prosperity, I was appalled at the levels of poverty that existed. Never in my life have I seen poverty as close up as when we drove through Dhaka on our arrival day. It was shocking to see the disparity between the rich citizens and independence, the cantonments became the residential areas for the military officials.

Once inside the cantonment, my sister and I noticed a drastic difference from the rest of the city. While there seemed to be much commotion and chaos in the greater part of Dhaka, order existed inside the cantonment itself. Officers directed traffic and the streets were wider. Less people walked, and more drove cars.

One interesting thing I noticed was Prime Minister Khaleda Zia's house on the way to my aunt's house. Her house is actually not far from my aunt's house; it's within walking distance. There were many guards surrounding the compound as well as the high walls surrounding the residential area. In essence the Prime Minister is a neighbor of my aunt and uncle. I found living so close to the Prime Minister of the country to be very amusing, but to my cousins, who had lived there for quite a while, it was simply the way things were.

Once we got to my aunt's house, the servants helped to unload the car and bring our luggage in. As I saw my aunt come outside, I was so happy that I started crying again. I remembered what a wonderful mother-figure she was when I was a small child. She looked just as beautiful as when I left her, except that this time she had more gray hair than before!

The house my aunt and Workers in the city of Dhaka spend nearly every day in the marketplace. Despite the appearance of prosperity, poverty lies around every street corner.

delectable meal of curry chicken, lentil soup called Dal, rice and sweets. It was so wonderful to sit down next to my uncle and speak to him. Bangladeshis never stop talking, whether it is about politics or just plain old gossip. They tend to be extremely good in holding conversations, and my aunt and uncle proved to be no exception.

One of most-asked questions posed to my sister and me was "Do you speak Bangla?" It is unusual for us to be able to do so since we grew up in the United States. Everyone was amazed that my sister and I could speak Bangla fluently after so many years. It was a wonder to them that we spoke it at all. Many Bangladesh-American children do not speak it well or even want to try. But my sister and I wouldn't stop talking to everyone.

I wanted to know everything about Bangladesh. My cousins were so helpful in teaching us about the country. It was very humorous when my cousins, my sister and I sat down and watched "Friends." I couldn't believe how much they knew about American culture without having ever left the country. Their English was flawless.

My family and I spent about nine days in Dhaka. We did a lot of shopping in New Market, the biggest market in the city. There were thousands of stores and shops; many of them were primarily in the garment district. Bangladesh is known for its garment exports to other countries. I was so amazed at all the colors and different fabrics. It was an incredible sight to behold.

My aunt came with us, and she is a good bargainer. In fact, that is the way to do any kind of shopping in the majority of the shops. In the United States we usually pay the fixed price, while in Bangladesh it is all about bargaining. My sister and I bought many things, and it was so cheap compared to the U.S. market prices.

We left Dhaka and took a bus to Khulna, the city of my birth. I will never forget when we were first dropped off in front of my grandfather's townhouse in Khulna City. What a wonderful sight to behold, the house that my grandfather built for his children and grandchildren!

The conversation was wonderful; it consisted of politics, the weather, our travel adventure, my experience here at the University, education in general and the wonderful meal of curry chicken, lentil soup called Dal, rice and sweets.

I remembered this beautiful white house. It looked just the same as it did the last time I saw it. It is a three-story house with the first floor rented out to tenants. Inside the house there is a little balcony with a swing. As a little girl, I remember sitting inside it and having someone push me because my legs were too short to touch the ground!

In Khulna, just like in Dhaka, we ate very good curry, fish and chicken dishes. We spent time shopping, as well as visiting many relatives. Since this is the city where I was born, this visit was even more poignant. On one of our excursions into the city, we passed by the hospital where I was born, and my mother pointed it out to me. It was an incredible moment.

I was in love with the country and the atmosphere. Everyone was wonderfully hospitable. Just like my sister and I wanted to know about Bangladesh, those in Bangladesh wanted to learn more about the United States. It was cultural diffusion on both sides. My relatives were so excited to have us visit, and they didn't want us to leave. We were treated like guests of honor at every household we visited. I couldn't get over the fact that everyone was so hospitable and was in no rush to get on with their lives. Everyone fed us the best foods and talked for long hours about themselves. It was certainly a trip I will never forget.

Bangladesh is located on the eastern Indian border. Many people in the United States would have trouble locating it on a map.

In the heart of Dhaka, bicycles are the preferred mode of transportation. Cars appear further in the country, where luxuries are more frequent.

had seen my relatives in almost 17 years. When we were finally able to collect our luggage and leave the airport, I saw my cousin, Tommy. It was so overwhelming to see him; the last time I'd seen him he was nine years old. Now he was a grown man of 25. He has a career and a life, no longer the playful child I remembered.

My sister and I couldn't believe that Tommy was standing in front of us. The first thing he said when he saw us was, "Hi girls, how are things?" in perfect, unaccented English. It was a strange response to get from him. My sister and I exchanged glances. But we were so happy to see him that we gave him a hug.

the poorer ones in Dhaka. I saw poor children without shoes walking by speeding BMWs, and the irony was overwhelming.

We arrived at the cantonment where my aunt and uncle live. Since my uncle has been an army lieutenant for the Bangladesh military for over 30 years, he and his family have always lived in the cantonments. My cousins, Tommy and Tonima, both grew up inside the cantonments, which are quarters for the officials of the army. During the time when the British ruled the region, they built these quarters to reside in. After India, Pakistan and Bangladesh received their uncle live in is wonderful. It has high walls with a guard always on duty. The rooms are spacious and airy, with high ceilings and wide windows. The house even has a small garden with palm and coconut trees everywhere. It felt like we had landed in the middle of a tropical paradise.

That evening was one of the most memorable days of my trip. When my uncle came back from work, we all had dinner with the rest of the family that my sister and I had never met. The conversation was wonderful; it consisted of politics, the weather, our travel adventure, my experience here at the University, education in general and the won-

BIG Andy's BAR & GRILL
Mon-Fri. 5-7 PM
Mondays - Monday Night Football on 50+ TVs $5 All You Can Eat Wings!
Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm 8 pm Trivia Contest! Win $30 gift cert!
Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings - $5!! 10 pm-2 am - Live band in The Vault
Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak - $12.99!! 9 pm - 2 am - Karaoke Night!!
Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon-Fri. 5-7 PM
Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $18.99 Hip Hop DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am
Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm All Request DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm 16+ Dance Club with Hip Hop DJ!!

THE Night Club VAULT
Now Hiring**
Wait Staff and Bartenders**

SPRING BREAK 2004! Meet with Beach Life Va America's Best Student Tour Operator Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, F Sell Trips, Earn Cash! Free! Call 1-800-733-6141 www.beachlifetravel.com

Ignite the white!
Zoom!
whiter brighter faster
Whiten your teeth in one hour or one weekend!
Take your first step to feeling good, looking great and making a memorable impression on every time you smile. You won't stop smiling! Find out more about Zoom Professional Teeth Whitening. Call today!
523-3207
David R. Robinson, DMD, P.C.
339 Market St., Lewisburg, Pa. (Downtown)
Bring this ad in & receive 15% off any whitening procedure

Bechtel's serves diner food up right

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

RESTAURANT REVIEW

In today's world you'd be hard-pressed to find good things cheap. Inflation has taken even the simplest amenities, like a loaf of bread or a pack of gum, from cents to dollars, leaving consumers helplessly gaping at their empty wallets. This week I have succeeded in solving this problem with a restaurant that offers a fabulous meal for minimal cost in Bechtel's, distinctly marked on Route 15 by the massive cow standing atop the roof.

Atmosphere is a huge part of the dining experience at Bechtel's. Just walking through the doors is like taking a time-machine to 1957.

Atmosphere is a huge part of the dining experience at Bechtel's. Just walking through the doors is like taking a time-machine to 1957. The staff is casually dressed in T-shirts bearing the restaurant's name and signature cow, which indicates immediately the relaxed nature of the restaurant. The two small rooms, lined with booths complete with red vinyl seats, are wallpapered in a wonderfully outdated paper that only complements the motif. And the glasses are "classic diner", holding barely enough water to wet your palate.

For my dining pleasure I opted for the classic cheeseburger, which was appropriately accompanied by potato chips and ketchup to taste. Having not had this simple delicacy in quite some time, I thoroughly enjoyed my burger experience. But let's be honest, there's not much you can do to mess up a cheeseburger.

An additional plus was the freshness factor of the chips, which is of utmost importance. My only disappointment was with the lower bun; it was a bit moister than it should've been, indicating the burger had been sitting a little too long before delivery to my mouth. However despite this slight negative, I still gave my meal a B-plus (as no simple hamburger can do anything to earn an A).

To ensure a proper sample was taken of Bechtel's offerings, I was accompanied in my tasting by Leslie Altman '06. She opted for the tuna melt, another classic, which was also served with potato chips.

"Overall, the tuna melt was good. I had a few problems because the tuna kept falling out, but I attribute that to my own clumsiness. It was very tasty," Altman said.

The tuna melt proved to be a wonderful choice and earned an enthusiastic B-plus. But Bechtel's dining did not end there; we both decided that dessert was very much in order. A big fan of the fluffier-nutter sandwich, I decided to give the newest ice cream flavor of the same name a go. It was a delicious choice, with small bits of peanut butter mingled with the marshmallow-hinted vanilla ice cream. Redeeming the less-than-stellar bun, the ice cream brought my overall rating of Bechtel's up to an A-minus.

Black raspberry was the second ice cream flavor of choice, and it was an equally satisfying endeavor. Texture and flavor were both of the best quality, and it was the perfect finish to a satisfying meal and earned an overall rating of B-plus.

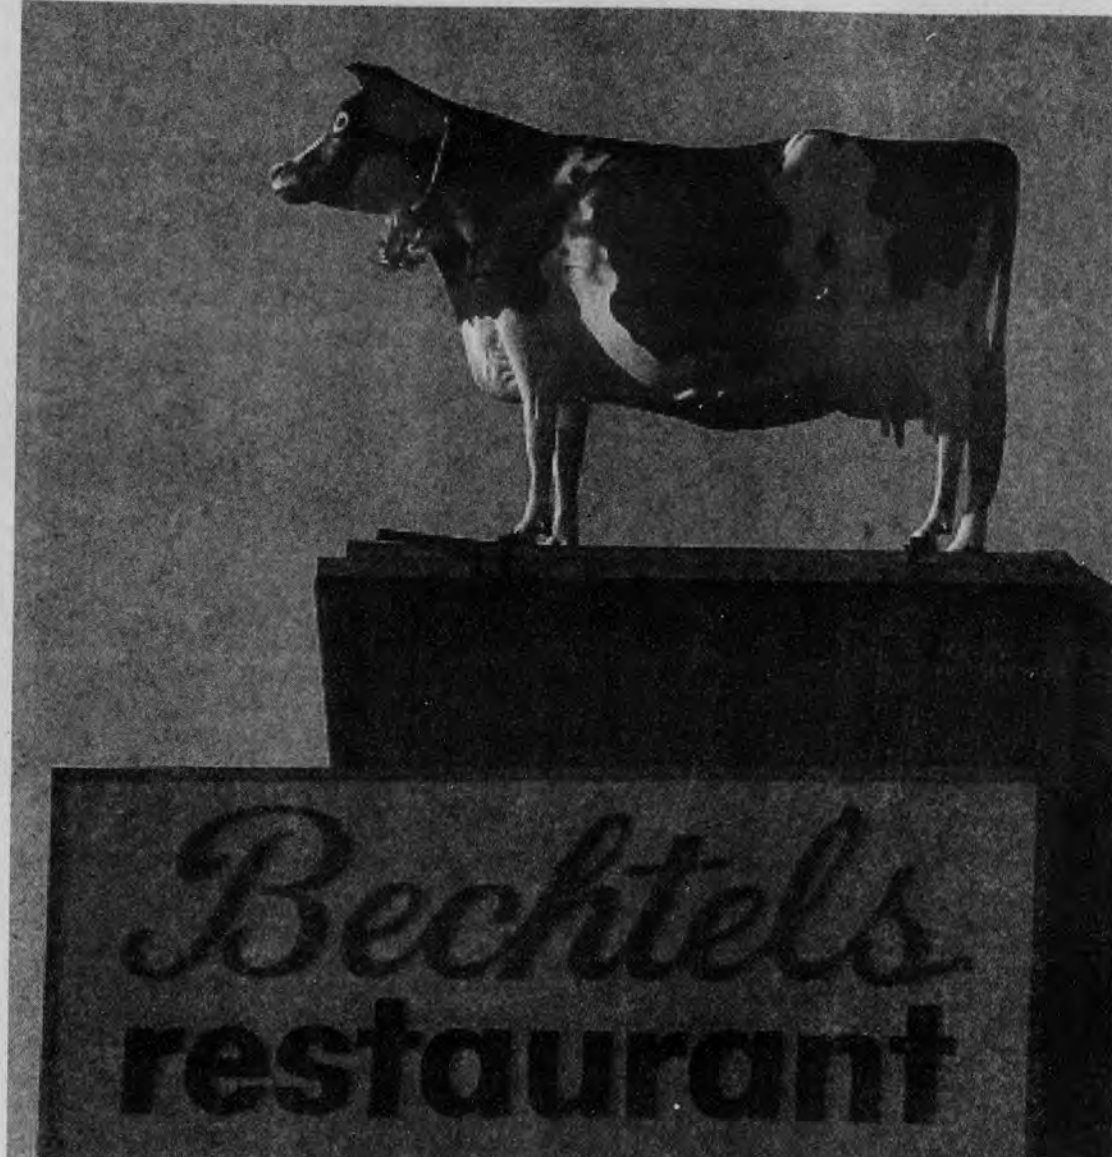

"I was very impressed by the ice cream. They're going to give the Freez a run for their money," Altman said.

You may be wondering if the claims I made about Bechtel's being kind to your taste buds as well as your wallet were true. I'll let you, my frugal readers, be the judges. For both meals, sodas and dessert, the bill was under $15.00. College-budget appropriate? I'd say so.

"I'd certainly go back again. In the realm of diners it was very good, and the price made it that much better," Altman said.

You may have experienced some of Bechtel's original delights last week in the caf at "Taste of Lewisburg" night. However that small sample could not possibly do justice to everything Bechtel's has to offer, and so an actual trip there is certainly suggested.

A few words need to be Sitting atop Bechtel's, the signature cow makes this diner visible for miles. Rumor has it the cow was placed at its high altitude to inhibit the frequent thefts by University students.

said about the clientele before you schedule your trip. While Bechtel's opens its doors to customers of all generations, those who frequent it are usually a bit older than the average college student. In fact, they're probably right around the age of your grandparents. So I suggest that when you test out the food here, as you absolutely must, be respectful and use your 6-inch voices so as not to upset the regulars. So take my advice and give Bechtel's a try. You'll love the atmosphere, the food and most importantly, the price.

What to do in the middle of nowhere

Bloomsburg fair celebrates its 149th year with big-name performers, food, and farm animals

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Staff Writer

If you take a county fair and multiply it exponentially, only then will you begin to get the slightest idea of the experience to be had at the Bloomsburg Fair, appropriately located in Bloomsburg, Pa. The fair, celebrating its 149th year, has become a benchmark event in central Pennsylvania.

"The Bloomsburg fair is one of the greatest weekly celebrations in Pennsylvania history," Carol Varano '03 said.

Where else but this self-described "country fair" can you find fried apples, "freak shows," and farm animals?

The Bloomsburg Fair annually attracts 605,000 visitors during its seven-day run in the third week after Labor Day. This year it opened September 20th and will run through Saturday. Visitors come for a variety of attractions uniquely combined for this event.

The grandstand is central to the fair's appeal. This year, the stage will host Lonestar, Hootie and the Blowfish, Billy Ray Cyrus, Darryl Worley, The Smothers Brothers, Mickey Rooney, Michael Bolton, Montgomery Gentry and the Charlie Daniels Band, according to the fair's website at www.bloomsburgfair.com. Unfortunately, Lynyrd Skynyrd had to cancel at the last minute.

Big-name performers are not the only draw the fair has to offer; it seems to be the center for all things exotic, unique and just plain unusual. Walking from one end to the other of the fairgrounds, you should not be surprised to find signs advertising the "headless woman" or the "world's largest rat."

In addition, you will find an unheard-of selection of food - fried Oreos, key lime pie on a stick, fried cheese-cake, chicken and waffles, fried apples, chicken cheesecake and fried everything else under the sun.

"We look forward to the food, the sights, the sounds, etc. Where else can you eat a fried Oreo, milk a cow, see the world's largest pig for 50 cents, count numerous mullets, watch a dog race and buy crafts all in the same place?" Varano said.

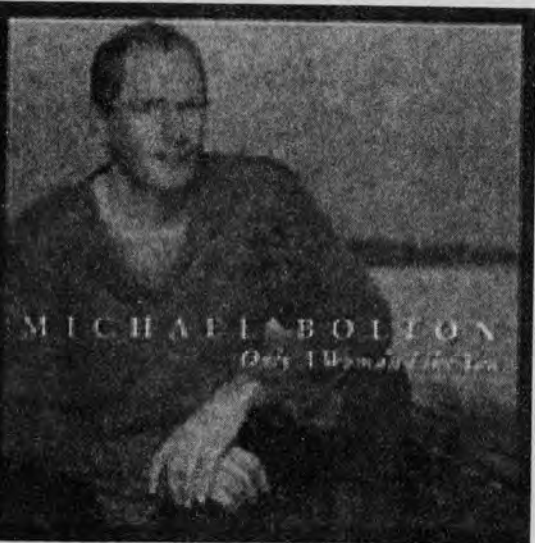

Like other fairs, the Bloomsburg Fair also offers a range of exhibits. You can observe livestock ranging from dogs to cows, or visit the booth of one of its countless vendors. Upon arriving, you can't help but become wrapped up in the outlandishness of this local treasure.

"I can't imagine finding a better display of country life with something everyone will enjoy. You can't go without feeling totally lost on what is happening and still be so caught up in everything around you," fair visitor Mike Farley said.

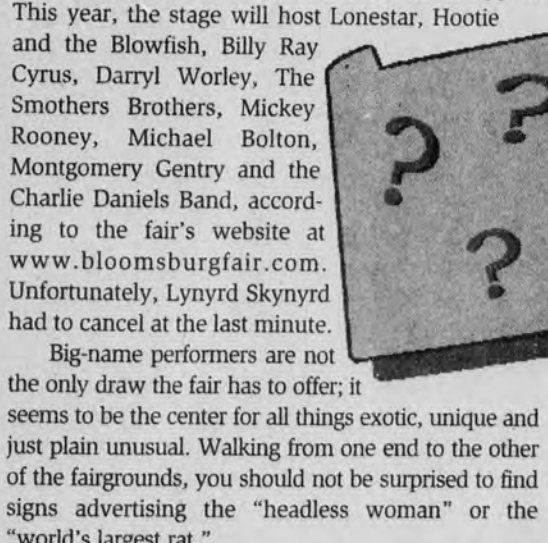

To reach the fairgrounds, drive north on Route 15 until you see an exit for 80 East toward Bloomsburg. Merge onto Route 80 and, after about one half-hour, you will see signs for the Bloomsburg Fairgrounds. Take exit 232 and follow signs toward the fair. The 33-mile trip can be made in about 40 minutes.

The Bloomsburg Fair is an experience worth a day trip-rain or shine.

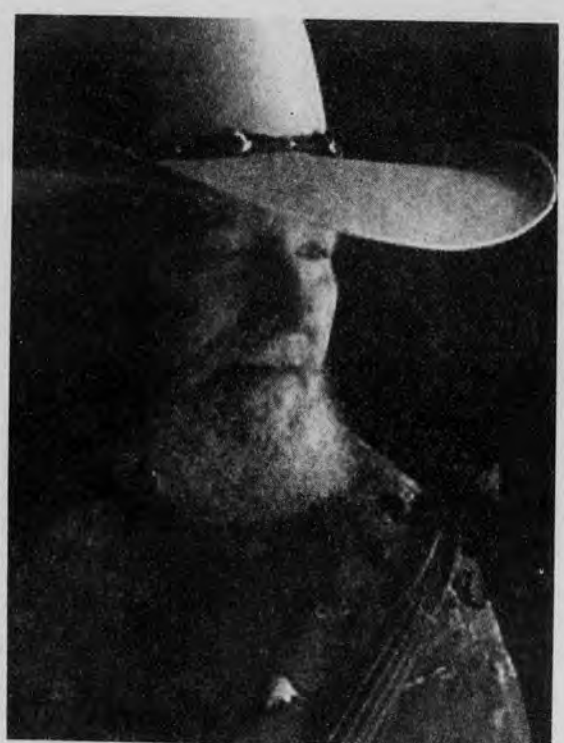

"I love the Bloomsburg Fair ... even in the rain it was a great time, spent among the animals and arts and crafts and the many vendors. Not to mention all of the Performers like Michael Bolton will grace the stage at the Bloomsburg fair this year. In its 149th year, the fair remains a local attraction.

Charlie Daniels, of the Charlie Daniels Band, will be playing Friday night on the main stage.

Charlie Daniels, of the Charlie Daniels Band, will be playing Friday night on the main stage.

yummy food that you can't get anywhere else!" Janet Forney '04 said.
Total cost includes a $3.00 parking fee and a $4.00 admission charge, but your experience at the Bloomsburg Fair will be considered priceless.

Elizabeth's An American Bistro
Come see what's new and exciting. Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.
Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards
Sunday Brunch starts
August 24th
11:00 AM to 2:00 PM
412 Market St. Lewisburg 570-523-8088
www.elizabethsbistro.com

DOR-DAY'S
GREAT SUBS!
Subs and Salads for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com
570-524-7481

Market Street PHOTO
We like picky people!
We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.
523-1543
M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5 24 hour drop box
120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

FEATURES

Above is the cross-section of typical Bucknell West unit. Each unit is home to four students and includes 2-double bedrooms, a full-sized kitchen, living room and bathroom.

More than just a trailer park

Bucknell West is a world all it's own, complete with jungle animals

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Far away from the hustle and bustle of the University's main campus, there exists a secret community. Separated by Route 15, this utopia is home to much of the University's sophomore class, as well as a few token juniors and seniors. Bucknell West (BUWEST), more commonly referred to as the "mods" in reference to the modular homes it is composed of, is that utopia. While outsiders may not understand why living in a trailer park is such a thrill, it is simply because they cannot see what lies underneath the surface.

"We plan home-cooked dinners for every Sunday, which makes it really hard to go to the caf during the week. It's a lot of fun, and we invite all our friends over to watch TV and eat some real food."
—Michelle Ballard '06

Originally constructed in 1972 as housing for married students, more modules were added in 1973, 1979 and 1985, bringing the final number up to 33 units, enough housing for 264 students. While the BUWEST was designed as a temporary solution to housing problems, 20 years later they are still here.

The perks of living in a BUWEST are innumerable, beginning with freedom from dorm life. The pounding of your neighbor's subwoofer as he listens to 50 Cent at 2 a.m. is gone, and instead replaced with the soothing rumble of 18-wheelers careening down Route 15. Trekking down a hallway to take a shower is a thing of the past, as you have your own personal facilities. And cafeteria food is no longer the only option, as each unit has a full-functioning kitchen complete with stove, oven and full-sized refrigerator.

"We plan home-cooked dinners for every Sunday, which makes it really hard to go to the caf during the week. It's a lot of fun, and we invite all our friends over to watch TV and eat some real food," Michelle Ballard '06 said. There are a few drawbacks to living in BUWEST, most of them stemming from location. Back in the day when construction commenced, someone thought it would be a good idea to put the University's prime collection immediately adjacent to BUWEST. On particularly warm or humid days, this causes a rather ripe smell to waft from the cages and into the delicate noses of BUWEST dwellers.

"After pseudo hurricane Isabel, some really nasty odors were floating around [at BUWEST]. It was fresh over here, let me tell you," Kristin Bassett '06 said.

BUWEST is also located a slight distance from the academic buildings, but the addition of an underpass beneath Route 15 makes the walk very tolerable to those who opt not to drive.

"It's pointless to drive. Parking is so horrible that it takes longer to find a spot than it would to walk," Ballard said.

The freedoms of BUWEST do not come without a new level of responsibility. There is no longer a cleaning lady to tend to your bathroom mess, which lends itself to rather messy living quarters for some BUWEST inhabitants. The perks far outweigh the negatives, and anyone who lives there will tell you that life is just a bit different.

"I love living out here. My 'mod-mates' are fabulous, and almost all of my friends live out here too, so it's not even like anyone is far away. It's our own little world," Lectie Altman '06 said. "It's almost like we're not at school half the time, because we're so separated from everything else. It's an appreciable distraction from the stressors of learning."

While outsiders may not understand why living in a trailer park is such a thrill, it is simply because they cannot see what lies underneath the surface.

Some don't hold such a high opinion of BUWEST. Rob Bentinck-Smith '05 and Mark Veillette '05 are spending their second year here, and are not very thrilled about the idea.

"We were upset we had to live here again. There were five of us last year, and I was in the bedroom with three guys. We didn't even know the other two," Bentinck-Smith said. "Let's just say it wasn't the best experience, and we weren't eager to relive it."

Though each unit has been reduced to the originally intended number of inhabitants, four, it was still hard for Bentinck-Smith and Veillette to return.

"We saw all our friends moving up in the world, and we just stayed here. But at least there are only four of us this year. Five was rough," Veillette said.

Yet despite their dissatisfaction with living in BUWEST for a second year, both have found that their place remains the main hub for all of their social gatherings.

So to all you first-year students out there, when the time comes for housing next year, give BUWEST a try. The distance from class will give you stellar calves, the monkeys nearby provide a wonderful soundtrack for doing homework and the amount of fun to be had out here is second to none. Bucknell West: all the cool kids are doing it.

Another titillating edition brought to you by...

Ms.

Sex and the Bubble

With each passing day, my e-mail account becomes more and more full with your most burning questions and desires. But Ms. O is greedy... and I want more! I anticipate receiving even more questions from all of you this week! But in the meantime, this week's question is "sex"-tra special!

Dear Ms. O,

I have a huge dilemma, and I desperately need some advice. I have "hooked-up" with this one guy a few times this semester. So far, they have just been random "hook-ups" that happen occasionally after we bump into each other and nothing more, but after we "hooked-up" this past weekend, I realized that I think I want something more from him. He is an awesome guy, but I don't want to scare him away and risk losing him. What should I do? Should I tell him how I feel, or should I just let it remain casual like it is now? Please help!

-M'

Dear 'M',

I think that you have two options here. Your first option would be to try asking this guy out on some less "intimate" outings with you. I would recommend giving him a call and casually suggesting a fun, low-pressure date. You could invite him to go see a movie or to head over to Original Italian Pizza and Subs or Bechtel's for some food. Just make sure you choose a place that will take the emphasis OFF of "hooking-up," and put it ON conversation. You want him to realize that you want more than "hooking-up." Inviting him out on one of these casual dates will tell him that you like him as a person and want more than just a physical relationship.

Your second option is little scarier, but will give you a more definite and immediate answer if you are an impatient babe like myself. Here it goes... You could be really really gutsy and just tell this guy how you feel about him. Just sit him down somewhere quiet and tell him everything that you told me. If he is as nice and amazing as you think he is, then he will probably have a good reaction to the news that you like him.

He must already have some inkling, since you have "hooked-up" on multiple occasions. I also think there is a strong possibility that he may feel the same way about you. If not, he would not have continued to "hook-up" with you. Random "hook-ups" are easy to come by at the University. If that was all he wanted, then he probably would have moved on to someone else by now. You can also feel comforted by the fact that chances are, even if he doesn't want a relationship with you, he will still be cool and at least want to be friends with you. Personally, I recommend taking the gutsy route, if you can. I think this guy will be incredibly impressed with your take-charge attitude and confidence! Good luck and don't be afraid to be a bawlsy babe and go after what you want!

-Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!
What is the sexiest color for undergarments?

"Hooking-up" can lead to pregnancy and STDs

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Contributing Writer

Weekend partying is a typical University student activity. Within this sexually active atmosphere, students engage in drinking and many times, "hooking-up." It is important to understand the possible consequences of this action.

You may not hear about pregnancies or sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), but it doesn't mean they don't occur. Students must be wary of these issues and understand that they do occur on campus.

There are consequences of "hooking-up" which affect both men and women. These consequences should be carefully considered by both parties before deciding to "hook-up."

Consequences can be very difficult for young women to handle. "They have worries about their parents' reaction, how to approach the legal system [and] the overall aftermath of reporting such incidences," Rozalyn Yannaccone, nurse practitioner of Student Health Services at the University said.

Young women that have been raped or are at risk for pregnancy, have the option of taking the Emergency Contraception (EC) pill, more widely known as the "morning-after pill." EC pills reduce the risk of pregnancy if taken within 120 hours of possible impregnation, but are most effective if taken within 72 hours.

Student Health Services provides a range of birth-control options for those young women who are cautious of consequences their actions may generate. The birth-control pill, Depo-Provera shot, Ortho Evra patch and the Nuva Ring are all available through Health Services at a reduced fee. Of all the forms of birth-control offered to students, the pill remains the most popular.

"The girls on the birth-control pill are very good at taking it. They stick to their schedule(s) extremely well," Yannaccone said.

Student Health Services offers free condoms to students. Condoms continue to be a popular tool in practicing safe sex.

Most students who consult Student Health Services are just looking for an added safety net, as unprotected sex does not seem to be the norm at the University.

"Most girls who make an appointment here at the Health Services are already using protection," Yannaccone said. "They are usually using [male] condoms."

The popularity of the birth-control pill is not surprising, as it is still one of the most effective forms of birth control.

"Of 100 women who use the pill correctly, only five will become pregnant within the first year of typical use," according to Planned Parenthood.

Although the pill may prevent pregnancies, it does not protect STDs.

"There is a major worry about the pill when it comes to STDs. Because it does not protect against STDs, over half of the patients who are on the pill also use a condom," Yannaccone said.

Another major misunderstanding are the dangers of oral sex. There are several infections transmitted by oral sex, including gonorrhea, herpes, hepatitis and syphilis.

"Oral sex involves risks of STDs. For example, Herpes of the mouth can be obtained and cross-contaminated, resulting in a spread of STDs," Yannaccone said. "Your risk of getting STIs is most definitely reduced when you use a condom during oral sex."

National statistics show that two-thirds of people with STDs become infected before the age of 25. Younger men and women are more at risk for a number of reasons: they are more likely to have multiple sexual partners, there are more possibilities for unprotected sex and their partners may have a higher risk of being infected. Of course, only abstinence is 100 percent effective.

If you choose to be sexually active, it is important to always use protection. Although condoms do not completely eliminate the risk of STDs, they reduce the risk significantly.

It is important to recognize that, although "hook-ups" happen all over campus, many young men and women of the University are cautious about the consequences. Young women and men of this age should understand that as long as this college atmosphere continues to thrive under partying and drinking, "hooking-up" will be a part of campus culture. And while the results of "hooking-up" can vary, the possible consequences are very real. It is clearly better to be safe than sorry.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

September 26, 2003

inside

Volume 132, Number 4

Arts & Entertainment:

The orchestra concert featured the tantalizing tones of senior soloists.

See page B10

Spotlight: Wes Reinhardt

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The majority of the top men's and women's cross country teams spent the last two weeks exclusively training; both have had two weekends off between meets.

The Bucknellian caught up with Wes Reinhardt '04 as the team prepares for the Iona Meet of Champions at Van Courtland Park to talk about his outlook for the season and his opinion on a variety of issues affecting student-athletes at the University.

Bucknellian: What are your individual and team goals for the season?

Reinhardt: A lot of people really ran great last year in the spring, and it definitely raised everyone's goals for this upcoming season. As a team we really want to make an impact at the Patriot League Championship. The league has gotten a lot stronger this year with the addition of Navy, and after last year's disappointing finish, nobody in the league is expecting much from us. It would be great to just go into the end of the season and surprise some people and upset some teams at the conference and regional meets. Personally, I just want to help out as much as I can, and if that means being All-League or All-Region, then that's great.

Bucknellian: What do you think about Navy joining the league for cross country?

Reinhardt: Navy joining the conference full-time makes the Patriot League one of the best cross-country conferences on the East Coast. It's great for the league. The conference meet used to just be a dual meet between Bucknell and Army, and now there are four very good teams, as well as a few other teams that are always getting better making the conference more competitive every year.

Bucknellian: What kind of training did you do this summer to get ready for the season?

Reinhardt: By the end of the summer I was doing about 80 miles per week in single runs.

Bucknellian: What is your current training like?

Reinhardt: Since the season started, I've been running between 85-95 miles for a typical week. During the week, I usually do four morning runs before class in addition to our normal practice everyday.

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bucknellian: You're a

Bison taste defeat for the first time in 2003

Orange and Blue miss winning their third straight game by inches, falling to Cornell 21-19

By JOSH HERWITT
Staff Writer

Seeking to extend a two-game winning streak against Cornell, the Bucknell football team was only inches away from earning a third straight victory. The Big Red was able to hold off a fourth quarter attack by the Bison to end with a dramatic 21-19 finish Saturday at Schoellkopf Field.

Despite trailing throughout the game, Bucknell (2-1) had a chance to win the game with 1 minute, 43 seconds left, but place kicker Ryan Korn '07 hit the left upright with his 27-yard field goal attempt. Korn converted field goals of 31 and 37 yards earlier in the contest, but inexperience late in the game could have played a role in the missed kick.

"Kicking a game-winning field goal is pressure for anyone," Head Coach Tim Landis said. "Combine that with the fact that Ryan has not had the experience in college of kicking a game winner, and I guess you could say that being a freshman factored into the end result."

Korn's missed field goal did not seal a Cornell victory though. With the Bison defense stopping Cornell on three straight running plays, the Bucknell offense had one more chance to score on the Cornell 49 yard line with 38 seconds remaining. Cornell (1-0) sealed the victory when Kyle Thomas intercepted a pass from Bison quarterback Daris Wilson '05 along the right sideline on the first play from scrimmage.

Even so, the Bucknell offense played its best game of the season, racking up a season-high 390 yards. Wilson led the offensive production with the spread option threat, rushing and passing for over 100 yards on the day.

"The beauty of the option is that a defense can't take away everyone, so our bread and butter has been our option game," Landis

Quarterback Daris Wilson '05 (shown here in an earlier game) rushed for 106 yards and passed for 125 yards as the Bison racked up a season-high 390 yards of offense.

Wilson '05 along the right sideline on the first play from scrimmage.

Even so, the Bucknell offense played its best game of the season, racking up a season-high 390 yards. Wilson led the offensive production with the spread option threat, rushing and passing for over 100 yards on the day.

"The beauty of the option is that a defense can't take away everyone, so our bread and butter has been our option game," Landis said.

Complementing Wilson's performance was running back Raphael Darrington '05, who earned a career-high 107 yards on the ground. Darrington was the third running back during the last three weeks to gain over 100 yards for the Bison.

The Bison are currently second in the Patriot League in red-zone offense, scoring 10 times out of 12 trips (83.3 percent) with seven touchdowns and hitting three out of five field goal attempts.

But Saturday was a different story for the Bison, as they struggled to score touchdowns in the second half, often settling for field goals from Korn.

"Against Cornell we certainly would have preferred six points instead of three, however, you must credit the Cornell defense with a solid effort," Landis said. "As always, we will work very hard

Field Hockey suffers first loss of season

Bucknell's debut on Graham Field leads to 2-1 loss to Patriot League rival Holy Cross

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The first game ever played on Graham Field was an intense one, as the Bucknell field hockey team suffered its first loss of the season in a 2-1 battle with Patriot League foe Holy Cross on Saturday. The defeat drops the Bison to 3-1 overall and 1-1 in the league.

Despite the disappointing outcome of the contest, the day was one of many thrills, including the dedication of the new field prior to the start of the game. The brand new artificial turf facility was dedicated to William Graham '62, the lead donor for the field's construction.

"Words can't express the gratitude the entire team feels for the wonderful contribution given by Bill Graham," Lindsey Gentel '04 said. "The experience of playing on a facility that we've been given is truly a dream come true. We are only going to get better and better because of his generosity."

Head Coach Heather Lewis was impressed with the University's ceremonies.

"The field dedication ceremonies on Friday and Saturday were appropriate and very special," Lewis said. "Bill Graham's generosity is a blessing for this program, and I think the University recognized his gift in a very touching manner. We will be forever grateful to Lindsey Gentel '04 faces UMBC players during a game on Tuesday. The Bison suffered their first loss against Holy Cross on Saturday.

Graham and all of the alumni, family and friends of Bucknell field hockey that gave to the turf field project."

Even though the final score on Saturday didn't turn out as the Bison would have liked, the game was an exciting one, highlighted by the first career goal of Corin Inderbitzin-Brooks '05. Both the defense and offense put forth superb efforts, showcasing the squad's tenacity on both sides of the field.

Gentel views the loss as a character building experience for the Bison.

"I truly believe it's only through

See HOCK, page B4

Students and the PATRIOT act

Student privacy may be threatened by proposed legislation. Even though the act is supposed to protect people, will it expose us more than we realize?

See page B8

Samek Gallery review

Richard Cramer's portrayal of the Mahanoy Plane is reminiscent of the actual mining region.

See page B9

Wrestling feature

An in-depth look at the University's club wrestling program.

See page B5

Sports

Bucknell falls to tenth place

After an opening round of 304, the Bison were placed in a five-way tie

By TERI SCHLANG
Contributing Writer

After winning its first 36-hole tournament in 16 years, the Bucknell men's golf team competed and came in 10th place out of 15 teams this weekend at the St. Bonaventure Keenan Invitational at Bartlett Country Club in Olean, N.Y. After an opening round of 304 placed the team in a five-way tie for third place, a second round of 309 could not compete with the field, and the Bison fell back to 10th place.

Host St. Bonaventure won the title after beating Duquesne in a play-off. Both teams shot 595 for the tournament.

Siena shot 292 the second day of the tournament, which was the low team round of the event, and was just one shot out of the playoff with a two-day total of 596.

Josh Anderson of St. Bonaventure won the individual title, finishing with a 1-under-par 139. He beat his closest competitor, Scott Sanderson of Seton Hall, by four strokes.

Leading the Bison was Abbie Valentine '04 with a two-day total of 149, tying for third place. After the first day, Valentine was in a three-way tie for seventh place after finishing a strong 33 on his back nine.

"I got off to bad starts both days,"

Valentine said. "I couldn't putt or drive the ball."

Kyle Moran '07 followed up Valentine with a two-day total of 154. Moran was competing in his second collegiate event and his first event away from his home course. Moran's second day score of 76 was the lowest for the team that day. Tom Lane '06 opened with a 75 the first day but didn't play as well the second day, shooting an 81 for a two-day total of 156.

After tying for third in last week's Bucknell Invitational, Charlie Waddell '07 struggled a

"Hopefully we can move on from here and continue to play how we know we can play."

—Charlie Waddell '07

bit this weekend. He shot 79 the first day and had his first collegiate tournament round in the 80s the second day; his two-day total was 159.

Waddell continues to have a positive outlook for both his play and the team's play.

"We played poorly this weekend," Waddell said. "Hopefully we can move on from here and continue to play how we know we can play."

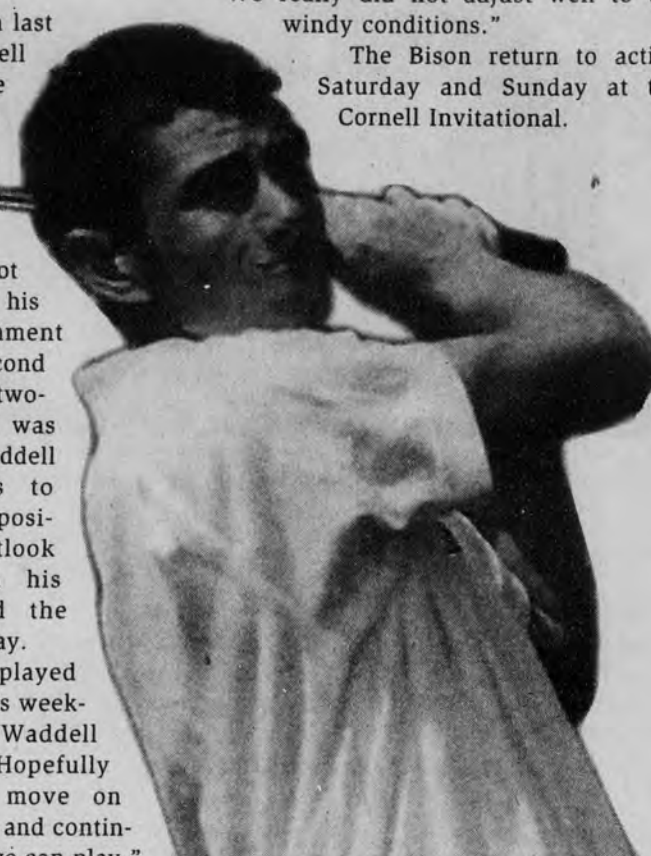

Bucknell's fifth man Alex Dolle '05 shot 76 the second day, tying with Moran for the second day low round. Dolle unfortunately opened with an 81, and tied for 46th in the tournament with a 157.

After the first day, the team still appeared to be in contention for its second title in a row, but did not play to potential in the second round.

"The men's golf team really struggled the last day of the St. Bonaventure tournament," Head Coach James Cotner said. "We really did not adjust well to the windy conditions."

The Bison return to action Saturday and Sunday at the Cornell Invitational.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications
Abbie Valentine '04 takes a swing during an earlier tournament.

Bison fall to Colgate, 1-0 Women lose first league match

By PAT EVANS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell women's soccer team dropped its first league contest of the season against Colgate 1-0 Sunday at home. Earlier in the week, the Herd boasted a strong first half against 11th-ranked Penn State, but eventually lost 6-0. The team is now 4-3 overall and will next visit Lafayette in hopes of evening its Patriot League record.

Colgate dominated the Bison early, scoring what turned out to be the winning goal just 7 minutes, 25 seconds into the game. The Orange and Blue were unable to recover despite a few opportunities to beat the Raiders' goalkeeper, including one just minutes after the opening goal when Ashley Dincher '05 drove down and nearly put one in.

"We came out flat, and they played better than us on that day," Head Coach Chrissy Findlay said. "There is so much parity in the league this year that it comes down to who plays better on each particular day, and unfortunately they were better that day."

Colgate outshot the Bison 15-8 and improved their record to 6-2 overall and 1-0 in the Patriot League.

On Sept. 17, the Bison gave powerhouse Penn State all they could handle, leaving the game scoreless for the first 20 minutes of the contest and going into half-time down just 1-0.

The stalemate didn't last much longer than that, as Penn State scored a little more than a minute into the second half and never looked back. The Lions tallied four more to make the final score 6-0.

"We stuck to our game plan in the first half," Findlay said. "We wanted to make sure Penn State played their best game to beat us, and we really frustrated them in the beginning. But they readjusted in the second half and showed us the next level and why they are a top-10 team."

Tuesday's scheduled game against St. Joseph's was cancelled due to inclement weather from Hurricane Isabel; next up for the Bison is a trip to league foe Lafayette. The Orange and Blue hope that they can get back on track and even their Patriot League record at 1-1.

"I feel that we're more ready going into Lafayette than we were for Colgate because of the lessons we learned this week," Findlay said.

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

There's no Denning these dreams

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

"A Red Sox ship with a single leak will always find a way to sink."

Thomas Boswell wrote that 11 years ago. In that sentence, Boswell—whose deployment of the English language is akin to the impeccability with which Greg Maddux decorates the strike zone—summed up what has now escalated into 85 years of abject futility for Boston's American League team.

Losing is never so cataclysmic anywhere else as it has been for the Red Sox and their pertinacious fans.

The Red Sox don't just lose. That would be boring. Instead, they claw their way to the verge of success, where they are inevitably kicked in the face by some schematically pre-ordained construct of injustice.

Historically, they've had everything—great teams, fantastic players, legendary seasons and a myriad thrilling subplots. And they've had chances.

It's never good enough. The Red Sox are like a faultily bounded Choose Your Own Adventure book—all the adventures and misadventures lead to the same damn ending: some guy with a name like Mookie or Bucky sneaks up and thwarts the cosmic forces of justice, swiping the proverbial pot of gold from beneath the fingertips of the Fenway faithful.

For Boston fans, though, it's always worth the read. Call them loyal. Call them foolish. Call them gluttons for abuse. Whatever they are, they repeatedly place themselves at the mercy of a team that is perhaps best described as fortune's punching bag.

And then there are the Yankees. Like fortune's little lapdog, this franchise basks in pleasantness nearly every autumn. A Yankees ship with a single leak—hell, 50 leaks—will still drift happily into port, probably rolling its massive bow right through the already descending stern of the Red Sox ship on the way.

That, of course, is history. October will soon be upon us, and right now it looks like both ships have survived the tumult of the open sea. So far.

Now it's time for the Yankees fans to start blithering on about destiny and aura, launching harangue after harangue about their team's sparkling compilation of World Championships and laughing cruelly at the desperate optimism of their less-fortunate division rival.

Boston fans, on the other hand, are just trying to separate this year's hopes from the string of grotesque postseason memories that haunt the Sox. Even in the face of constant reminders, they do a pretty good job of kicking aside torturous bits of history.

There's one memory, though, that's difficult to prevent from resurfacing. Especially 1978, when the Bosox were sitting atop the American League Eastern Division standings, 14 staggering games ahead of an overwhelmed New York squad. Fourteen games is pretty comfortable, even for the Red Sox.

Then came September, and with it came 13 losses in the first 16 games of the month. The Yankees, meanwhile, had managed to launch one of the greatest comebacks in the sport's history. The Red Sox and their intrepid fans

Yankees, Boston strung together eight wins in the last eight games of the season, good enough to hit the wire in stride with their arch-nemesis.

And so they were pitted against one another in a single-game playoff to decide who would win the division. For six innings, the Fenway crowd was appeased—the home team led 2-0 and maybe, maybe this would be the way it ended.

Instead, with two outs in the ninth and two Yankees aboard, little Bucky Dent, a .243 hitter in 1978, jacked a homer. Augmented by the light October breeze, the white sphere vanished into the netting above the Green Monster, far above the head of outfielder Carl Yastrzemski, and fatally deep into the heart of Red Sox Nation.

It was only a one-run deficit, but it was a big enough leak, as Boswell might have said, to drag the Red Sox oceanliner under the water's surface.

In the end, Yastrzemski came to bat with a man on third and two outs, with a chance to tie the game, a chance to bring salvation to a tortured city. But this was the Red Sox. And these were the Yankees. As it was scripted, the ball plunked innocently in Craig Nettles' glove, and that was that.

The Yankees went to the ALCS, which they won, and then to the World Series, which they also won. The Red Sox went home.

The Red Sox have had plenty of disappointment since, and the Yankees plenty of glory, but nothing—no, not even 1986—has ever been quite so wired with emotion as that day 25 years ago. The pain, compounded with that of every other sad episode of the Red Sox' past, just festers in the soul of the franchise.

It still lingers now, perhaps in the form of suppressed dread, as the Red Sox head into October. But the Red Sox ship looks watertight enough and ready to face whatever opponent sails its way in the first round—even if it's the Yankees.

However it ends, no one's heading for the lifeboats. That's just not how they do things in Boston. There's no bailing out; there's no abandoning ship.

One has to imagine that if there is such a thing as justice, 25 years after that home run, faded over the big, green wall, this year's Red Sox will find it in themselves to defy Boswell's nautical law.

Either way, it ought to be a good ride.

Red Sox fans, somehow unfazed by years of disappointment, can't hold back their optimism. October 2 mark the 25th anniversary of perhaps the most painful of all Boston memories.

since next Thursday will bring about its silver anniversary.

October 2, 1978. It was the game. In nine innings, it entirely defined everything the Yankees-Red Sox rivalry had been and everything it would be over the next quarter century.

You need mention only two words—Bucky Dent—and anyone who has an emotional investment in either team will know exactly what nine innings you're talking about.

Translated into Red Sox Nation dialect, it becomes three words. Bucky _____ing Dent. Of course, in Boston, the blank is never blank.

It's best to start the story in mid-July of suddenly felt the chilling breath of implausibility at their necks, and on September 10, they were no longer at the top looking down.

After a four-game slaughter at Fenway Park in which New York outscored Boston 42-9, the Yankees were right there at the top, staring the Red Sox in the eye. Less than two months before, the Sox couldn't even hear Yankee footsteps behind them. Now they were deadlocked. By September 16, they were just dead.

It gets more interesting, though.

Fueled perhaps by the scars of 1949, the Red Sox refused to be out-gutted down the stretch. After dipping to 3.5 games behind the

Overrated: certain NFL coaches don't measure up

By MIKE ORTA
Contributing Writer

With the NFL season underway, a number of head coaches' job securities are rapidly going down the proverbial drain. And while there are a number of good coaches who get fired every year, there are a couple who never cease to amaze me in their abilities to keep their jobs. I'm talking about those guys with the headsets on that I think are overrated. Trust me—there are a number of them.

More often than not, their job security has more to do with the people around them than their actual ability to coach. Some of these guys have had success as coordinators, but this doesn't change the fact that they are overrated as head coaches. The true question is, "Which head coach in the NFL is the most overrated?"

Let's begin with the guy everybody loves to pick on, Mike Martz. Martz had the task of taking over the Rams after Dick Vermeil walked off into the sunset (only to re-emerge in Kansas City, but that's besides the point). After serving as offensive coordinator for that Super Bowl Rams team, Martz has done nothing but rock the boat in St. Louis.

He has proven to have poor choice in play-calling, often being overly aggressive and turning the ball over all the time. Then he sticks with Warner when Bulger is obviously the better player. Martz is coaching as if he's still just the offensive coordinator. He doesn't think about things like conserving time outs, conserving replay challenges, or minimizing turnover. He wants to win like every offensive coordinator, by putting a lot of points on the board. He wants to win, but he wants to win his way, not any way he can. It is this mentality that keeps the Rams from utilizing the vast talent they have, and from becoming a truly dominant team.

pass and it put up points. He was also supposed to be an incredible quarterback guru. To give the man credit, he does have a Super Bowl ring. Let's get a few things straight though. This team has an anemic offense ning the Lombardi trophy, he released the quarterback who had put the Ravens on their winning streak. He then signed Elvis Grbac, who went on to have one of the worst seasons by a non-rookie starting quarterback ever.

Mike Shanahan—the genius in the Rockies, right? Wrong. This man has done little to nothing right since Elway rode off into the sunset. Sure, he turns up good running backs. But he also wastes cap space by signing free agent busts, and he gave the largest signing bonus in franchise history to a guy they would release less than five years later.

If there is one word to describe the Broncos over the last four years it has to be under-achiever. Every year his team is picked to go deep into the playoffs. He's been to the playoffs once since Elway's farewell tour in '98, a one-and-done. His teams have averaged nine wins and seven losses over the past four years. This team was supposed to be a dynasty, even after Elway retired. Shanahan was supposed to have it figured out. The only thing he has figured out is how to keep his job. His time is coming though, and it's getting to the point where it's up to or get the heck out of Denver.

Now there are a couple of other guys who you might say are overrated, but don't quite rank up there with the guys mentioned previously. Dave Wannstedt. His Dolphins are another perennial underachiever at this point, but nobody expects too much out of this guy.

Mike Holmgren in Seattle has been pretty quiet since leaving Brett Favre and the Packers, but he's mostly just over-rated as a talent evaluator.

Jon Gruden is regarded by some as over-rated. But the people who say this are full of it.

Gruden actually won a Super Bowl in his first season as the head coach of the Bucs, a team that many had termed an under-achiever as well.

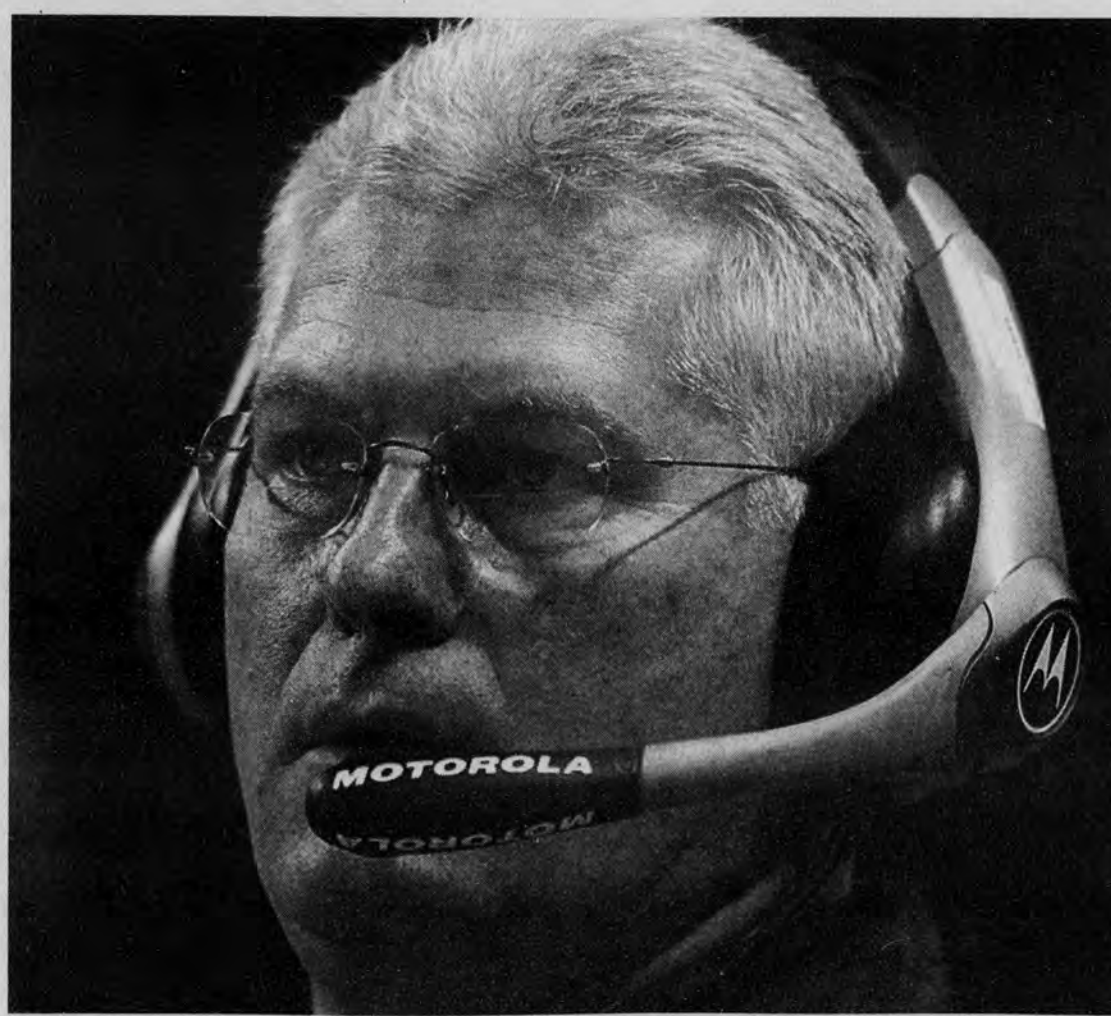

Yet another guy who might be overrated is Herm Edwards in New York. His Jets teams don't seem to think the season starts until week six or so. That or they want to give everyone else a head start. I'm gonna cut him some slack though, because he's had to follow the Tuna, and he's taken the team to the playoffs with some success.

Bill Parcells is said to be over-rated, but this guy is strictly a turnaround type guy. He's just there to turn your team into a winner, so he can walk away and say, "Damn, it feels good to be a gangster."

He does have two titles to his name, and he turned around the Jets and Pats so we're gonna back off on him.

Back to the discussion at hand though. What it comes down to is which head coach seems to buy into all the hype surrounding him. It can't be a coach who can actually be credited as having accomplished what he is supposed to. It has to be a guy who is just blatantly not responsible for his team's success. This is Brian Billick. Billick is truly the most overrated head coach in the league.

If you had a one man defense in Ray Lewis, not to mention a stud running back in Jamal Lewis, you'd never be out of a game by the fourth quarter either. So there you have it, folks. Brian Billick takes the cake. So next time you see him, make sure to have a clothespin, or anything else that might deflate his ego, because somebody has to do it, and frankly I'm too disenchanted with the man to do it myself.

Courtesy of Reuters
Mike Martz watches his St. Louis Rams. Martz has come under fire for some of his decisions.

On the flip side we have Brian Billick. This man has an ego the size of Texas. The funny thing is that he hasn't done much to justify having such a big ego. He was hired as the Ravens' head coach because he ran an awesome offense in Minnesota. It was balanced between run and at best. During its Super Bowl run in 2000, the offense went the whole month of October without scoring a touchdown. Seriously.

At least he is a quarterback guru though, right? Wrong. Billick has started almost 10 different quarterbacks during his tenure in Baltimore. After win-

While the man has a title to his name, it wasn't because of his coaching. He got his ring because Marvin Lewis and Ray Lewis composed one of the most dominant defenses ever. Not to mention the fact that Ozzie Newsome, who heads up the Ravens front office, consistently

BISON PROPERTIES

- The Best Off-Campus Rentals at the Best Prices!
- Professionally Managed and Maintained
- High Speed Internet Available
- Two to Eight Bedrooms
- Units and Individual Rooms Available for '04-'05
- Now Accepting Applications for '05-'06

Call or E-mail Scott Bank '91
for more information

610-506-6676

bison.properties@comcast.net

Calendar

Football at Columbia Sat., Sept. 27 7 p.m.	Men's and Women's Cross Country at Iona Meet of Champions Bronx, N.Y. Sat., Sept. 27 10 a.m.	Women's Soccer at Lafayette Sat., Sept. 27 7 p.m.
Volleyball vs. Army Fri., Sept. 26 7:00 p.m.	Men's and Women's Tennis vs. St. Francis (Pa.) Fri., Sept. 26 3 p.m.	Men's Soccer at Army Fri., Sept. 26 7:30 p.m.
vs. Holy Cross Sat., Sept. 27 4 p.m.	vs. Delaware Sun., Sept. 28 12:30 p.m.	at Monmouth Sun., Sept. 28 2 p.m.
Women's Golf at Princeton Invitational Fri., Sept. 26, Sat., Sept. 27 and Sun., Sept. 28	Women's Crew vs. George Mason and Drexel Sun., Sept. 28 1:00 p.m.	Men's Golf at Cornell Invitational Sat., Sept. 27 and Sun., Sept. 28
Volleyball at Morgan State Fri., Sept. 19 1:00 p.m.	Men's Water Polo ECAC Championships Providence, R.I. Sat., Sept. 27 9:00 a.m.	Field Hockey vs. Lafayette Sat., Sept. 27 1:00 p.m.

Sports

Bison suffer frustrating loss at home

HOCK from page B1

overcoming obstacles that champions are made," Gentel said. "This loss allows us to come back more determined than ever."

Lewis feels confident that, while it was a difficult defeat, the players have the determination it takes to bounce back.

"Obviously, as a program we're disappointed in the loss to Holy Cross," Lewis said. "I think each of us has to accept responsibility that we didn't play our best on Saturday. I anticipate this team will learn from our game against Holy Cross and be ready to play on Tuesday against UMB." "

Holy Cross jumped on the scoreboard first, driving home a goal with 28 minutes, 19 seconds left in the first half. After another 7 minutes, the Bison struck back emphatically.

Indertzin-Brooks intercepted a pass midfield and drove past several defenders to the Holy Cross goal, where she planted the ball in the cage to tie the score at 1-1.

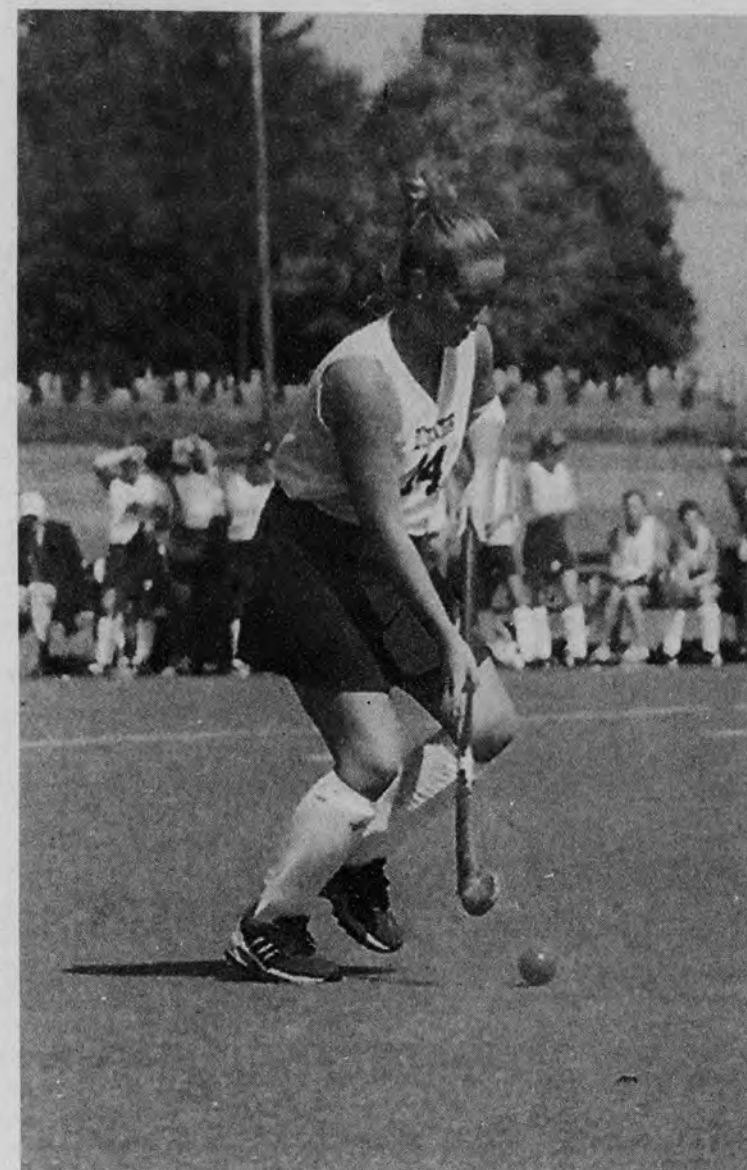

After that goal, the two teams held each other scoreless until halftime, setting the stage for an exciting second frame.

Holy Cross came out swinging, jumping to a 2-1 lead quickly with a goal just 2:27 into the second half.

Neither team scored again, despite plenty of shots on goal. The Crusaders had 21 shots over the course of the game, including 12 in the second half, while the Bison totaled 13 shots in the contest.

The game also marked the first time this season that Bison goalie Liz Jordan '06 has allowed more than one goal in a game. Despite this

Chris Vennemeyer—The Bucknellian
Jenni Turner '05 drive downfield with the ball. Turner and the Bison were tough on offense, even though they lost the game.

statistic, Jordan had a superb day in the goal, racking up a career-high 14 saves.

"As usual, I thought Liz Jordan performed well in goal and I thought our defensive penalty corner unit did a very good job," Lewis said.

Gentel noted that Jenni Turner '05 and Cara Turner '05 were both elemental in sparking the team's tenacious performance.

"Jenni Turner had an incredible game," Gentel said. "She was aggressive and never gave up. That mentality really kept us going even after some disappointing moments in the game. [She and Cara Turner] were both key in getting our attack going."

The team will use the tough loss as motivation to fuel it through upcoming contests, perhaps even a future rematch with Holy Cross.

"We know nothing is going to be handed to us, and it's only through adversity that we are going to be capable of achieving our goals," Gentel said. "I know all of us are just really looking forward to playing [Holy Cross] again."

The team gets another chance to christen the new field with a victory when it faces off at 1 p.m. tomorrow at home against Patriot League rival Lafayette.

The players will be eager to get back on track, and Lewis anticipates that they will do just that.

"If Holy Cross is one of the 'top' teams in our conference, then we're not far behind," Lewis said. "This team is slowly recognizing that [it's] as good as anybody in the league ... when we play our style of game. So, while it was a difficult loss, I anticipate we'll rebound and get moving in a positive direction very quickly."

Susquehanna backs out

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Head Cross Country Coach Kevin Donner were very excited about racing, and were let down when we found out Susquehanna would not attend."

"I was very disappointed that we did not run the race," Donner said. "Our runners were very excited about racing, and were let down when we found out Susquehanna would not attend."

Despite the lack of competition, the team still treated the workout like a race.

"We decided to still run the meet against ourselves, and I was very pleased with the results," Donner said. "It was important for me to see some of our younger runners in a competitive situation."

William Young '07 took home the honors with a time of 16 minutes, 1 second in what became a three-mile inter-squad meet in wet and muddy conditions brought by Hurricane Isabel.

Jamie Gow '06 won the women's race in 19:44. Gow, who earned first-team All-Patriot League honors last fall, has been off to a slow start, but is expected to be a factor for the Bison once again in November.

Bucknell splits its squad again this weekend, with the top 12 runners heading to the Iona Meet of Champions at Van Cortland Park in the Bronx, while the remaining athletes are heading to the Lock Haven Invitational.

Write for Sports.

Please.

E-mail ccairns@ or bbutler@

Spotlight: Wes Reinhardt

REINHARDT from page B1

chemical engineer. How hard is it to take care of academics and still take care of your body after all the running you do? Do you have to make many sacrifices?

Reinhardt: Sometimes it can be pretty tough to handle school work and still get enough sleep at night. Usually I don't have a problem getting my eight hours of sleep, but every once in a while I have to make some sacrifices, which usually involves doing more work during the day so I can get more sleep at night.

Bucknellian: The University's admissions standards are getting tougher every year. Since you've been at the University, does it appear to you that it is putting more emphasis on academics to the sacrifice of athletics?

Reinhardt: It's definitely tougher to get into Bucknell now than when I got in, which is a good thing because it makes me look smarter. However, there have been a few people on the team in the last couple of years that probably could not have gotten in now, but that's what happens at a school like Bucknell. Academics are obviously more important than athletics.

Bucknellian: While you've been at the University, you've witnessed the elimination of wrestling and the re-categorization of various men's and women's sports in the name of Title IX. How do you feel about all this, and do you think Title IX is working to the advantage of women or disadvantage of men?

Reinhardt: It's a shame what happened, but the decisions were made for one reason or another. It's not really how Title IX was intended to be used. I think that Title IX is great for women's athletics. It has opened many opportunities for them. However, in order to come into compliance with Title IX, many schools take the easy way out and just cut a men's sport. Something needs to be done to prevent this while continuing to provide opportunities for female athletes.

Bucknellian: The Bucknell cross country program has built a reputation of turning average high school runners into great college runners. If the University begins offering scholarships, do you think this will affect the tradition of the program?

Reinhardt: Giving athletic scholarships not only goes against the tradition of the program, but also the tradition of the Patriot League. I don't think that the school should give scholarships for athletic purposes. I personally like going to meets and beating schools where all of their best runners are on scholarship.

Sports

Wrestling team still finds a way

By RACHEL GOLD
Senior Writer

As the academic stress starts to build, and papers and exams begin, students need a way to let loose. To release aggression and show of their grappling skills, some University students turn to wrestling. Although few students are aware of the Bucknell club wrestling team, the 12 devoted members fully enjoy the competition, exercise and camaraderie the sport offers.

Alex Rosario '07 is happy to participate in the sport at the college level.

"When I was touring colleges, I was interested in finding a school that had a varsity wrestling team," Rosario said. "In high school I was undefeated in my league, but I didn't have much of an opportunity to participate in a competitive atmosphere. I was really looking forward to being part of a competitive team in college."

Unfortunately at one of the very first practices, Rosario sprained his ankle during warm up. Although clearly disheartened, Rosario managed to look on the bright side.

"A week from now my ankle will be healed, and I'll be able to practice even harder than before," Rosario said.

Weighing in at 178 pounds, Rosario is completely confident of his abilities.

"Once I get back in my groove, I will be unstoppable," he said with a smile.

Matt Ganas '07, who wrestles in the 125-pound class, shares Rosario's love for the sport.

"I wrestled in high school and decided that I definitely wanted to continue to play in college," Ganas said. "I like the club atmosphere at Bucknell; I get to wrestle all the time and have fun doing it."

President of the Bucknell club wrestling team Michael Dubbs '04 has been a member of the team since 2000. He wrestles the 197-pound division. He noted that the wrestling team has evolved dramatically since his first year.

"A lot," Dubbs said. "Since the team went from Division I to club just two years ago, there [have] been a lot of changes. We now compete in the NCAA league rather than the NCAA league. Practices are now a lot less structured and intense, and the competition has dropped drastically. We just can't expect the same commitment," Dubbs said.

Justin Hartrum '05, who wrestles in the 149-pound division, named some of the team's major competitors.

"We wrestle against other club teams such as Lafayette and the University of Rhode Island," Hartrum said. "We also wrestle against some Division III schools like Apprentice in Virginia."

Hartrum explained that he has been wrestling since he was in kindergarten.

"I came to Bucknell with the intention of wrestling Division I," Hartrum said. "Unfortunately, they dropped the program my freshman year and turned it into a club sport."

Head Coach Gregory Haladay said that he too would love to see the team go back to being Division I. Haladay began coaching the wrestling team two years ago after working as the assistant coach to Tim Wittman.

"I really enjoyed working with the guys on the team," he said. "They're happy to be here, determined and talented. They make coaching fun and easy. Right now the NCWA championships are out west, and I am confident some of our guys will qualify."

Haladay said that the team is currently in preseason but he would eventually like to see them hold practices every day. "It's the only way to stay competitive," Haladay said.

The Bucknell club wrestling team practices from 5:15-6:30 every Monday, Wednesday and Friday in the fieldhouse. The athletes said that their numbers have increased this season, and they would like to see them increase more. The enthusiasm, devotion and effort the team puts in are apparent.

"Anyone that is interested in wrestling on the club team can come to the practices," Haladay said. "We got two guys that are just starting to wrestle for the first time. We'd be more than happy to see more guys come out."

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts

800-538-8009

Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Editors NFL Picks Week Four	Brent Sports Editor (12-14)	Cecily Sports Editor (15-11)	Adam Photo Editor (11-15)	Michelle Assoc. Editor (11-15)	Peter E.I.C. (14-12)	Aly Mng. Editor (10-10)
Arizona at St. Louis
Philadelphia at Buffalo Tennessee at Pittsburgh
San Diego at Oakland
Dallas at N.Y. Jets
New England at Washington
San Francisco at Minnesota
Kansas City at Baltimore
Detroit at Denver
Cincinnati and Cleveland	No one wins
Green Bay at Chicago

Photos courtesy of respective NFL owners

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2003

COMPUTERWORLD 100 BEST PLACES TO WORK IN IT 2003

Investing in You.

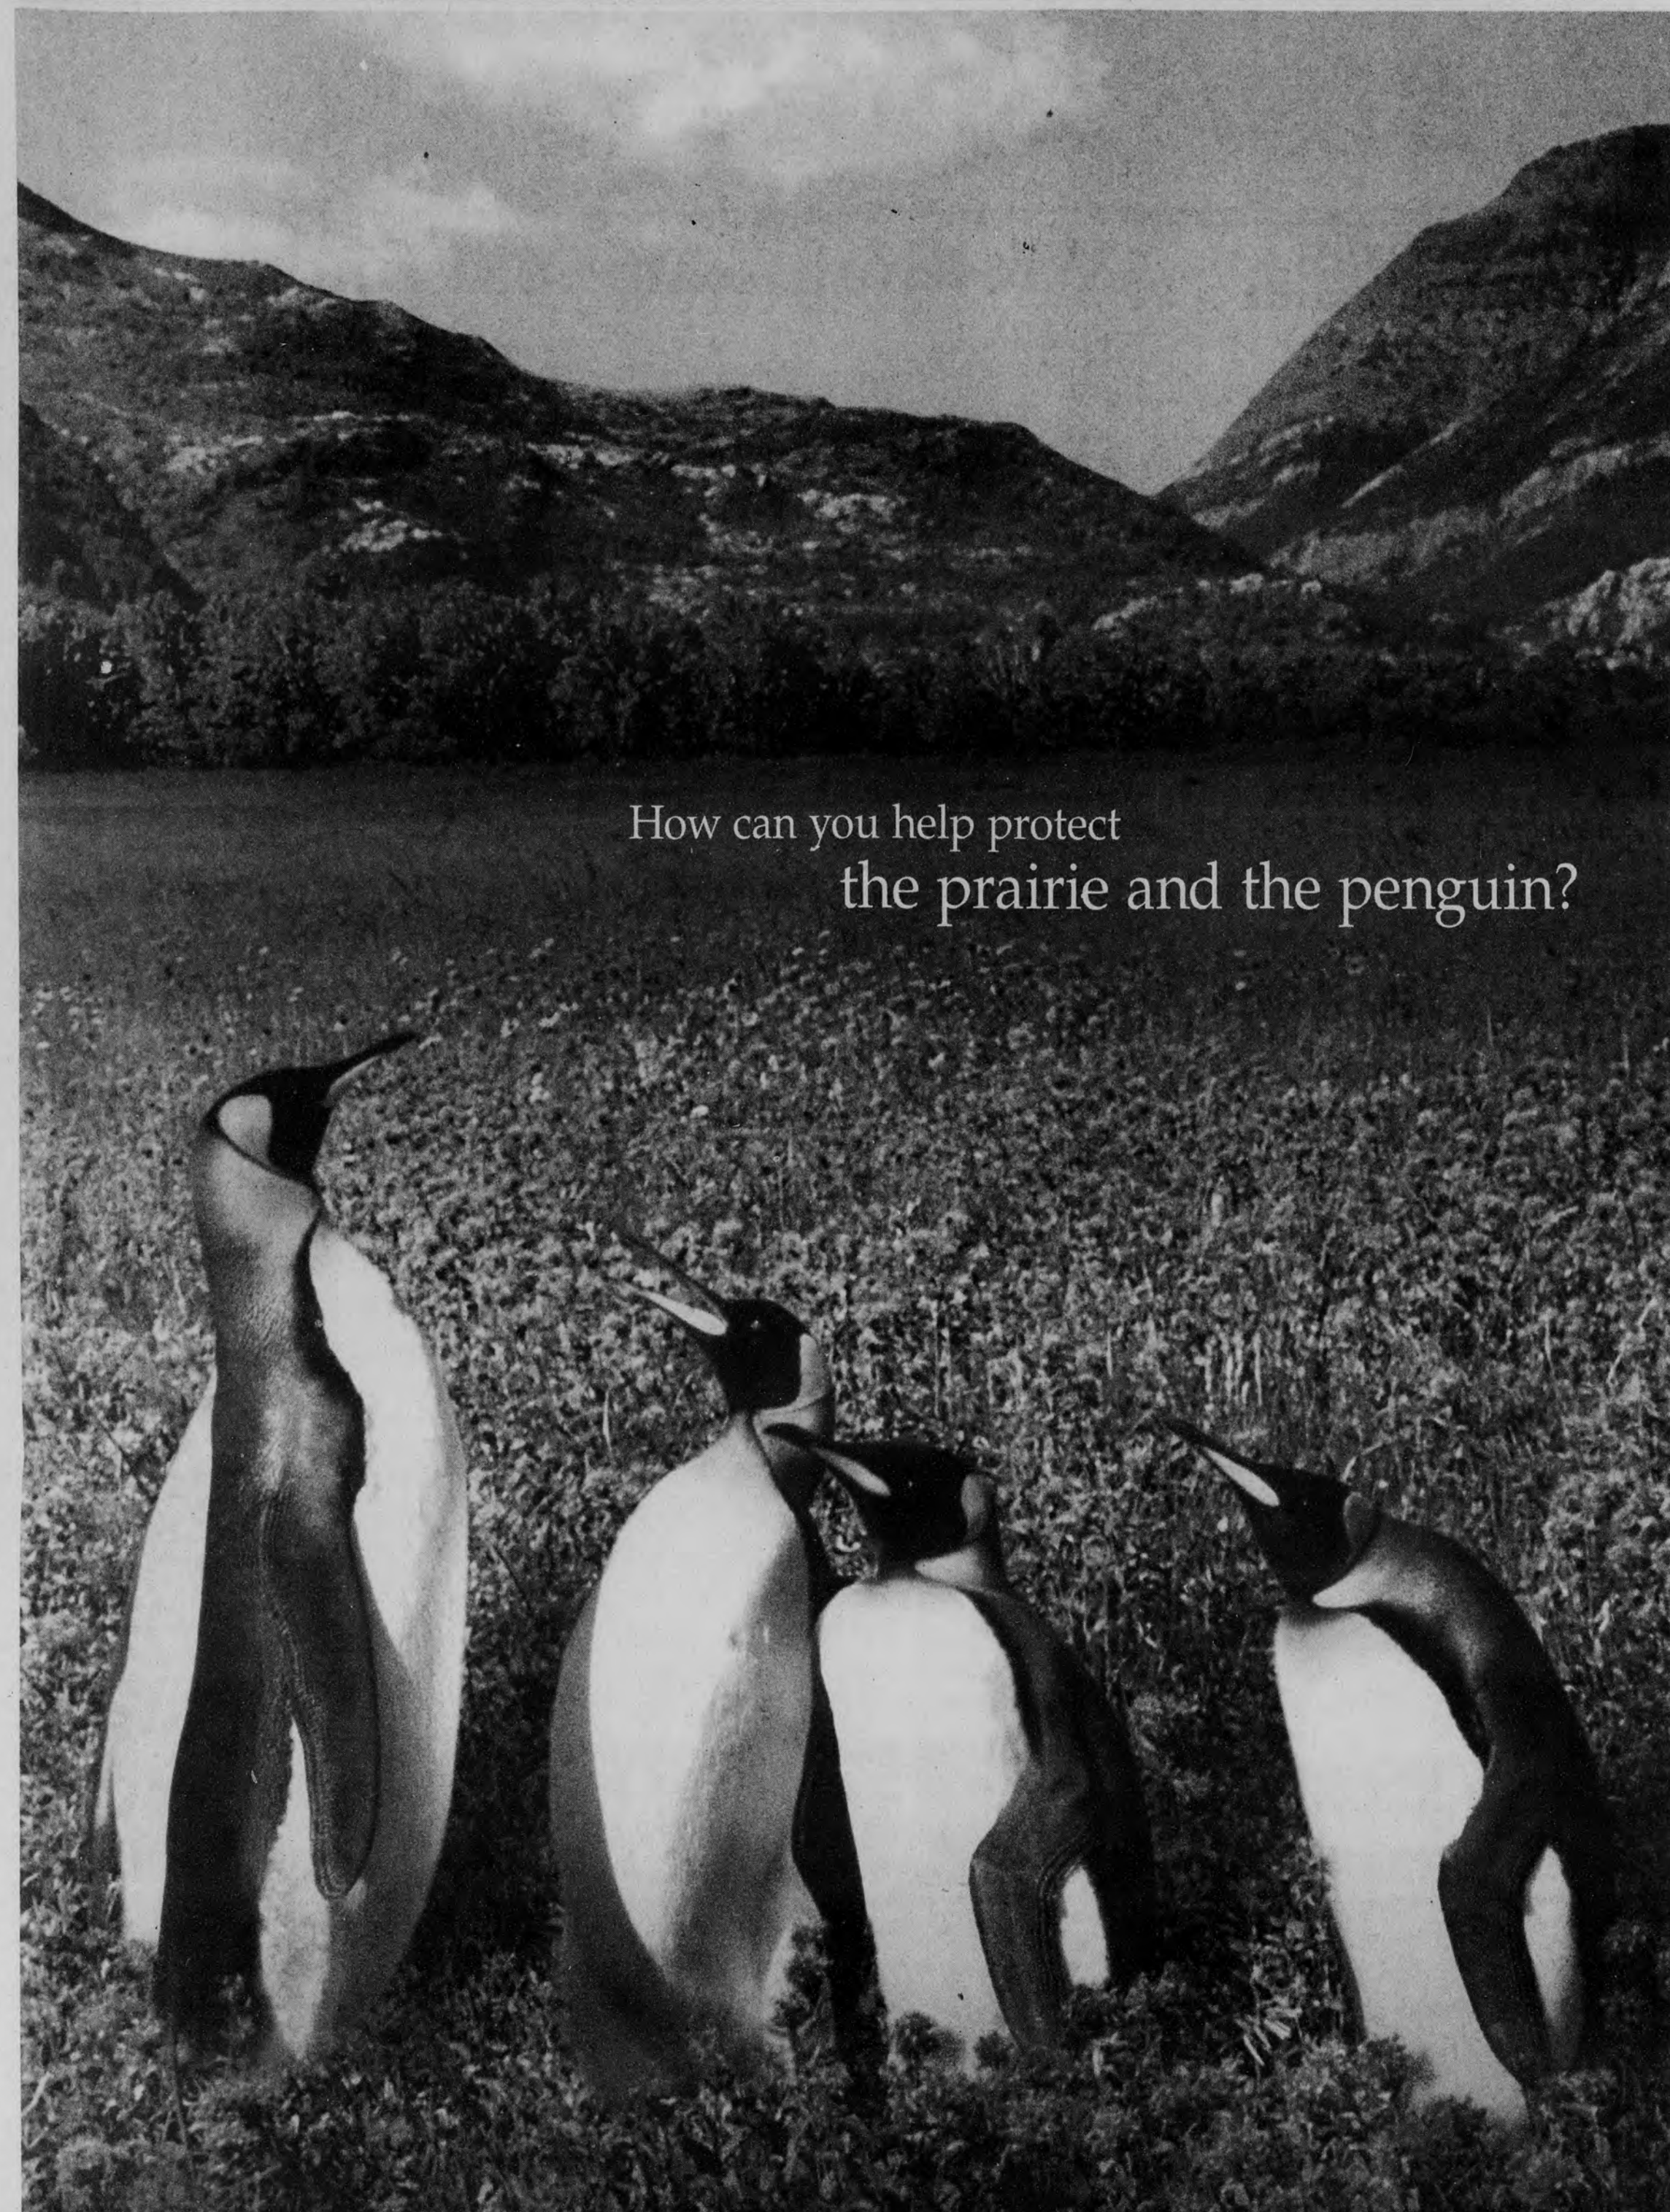

Reach the pinnacle of your potential at Vanguard. Exciting growth opportunities are available in these programs:
Acceleration Into Management (AIM) • Accelerate into Client Engagement (ACE) • Start IT • Corporate Internship Program

Other challenging positions available include:
Client Relations Associates • Financial Associates

Look for us on campus. Interviews will be conducted for select positions. If you miss us, visit www.vanguardcareers.com. Reference job code: PCOBK

Vanguard is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

THE Vanguard GROUP

How can you help protect the prairie and the penguin?

Simple. Visit www.earthshare.org and learn how the world's leading environmental groups are working together under one name. And how easy it is for you to help protect the prairies and the penguins and the planet.

www.earthshare.org

One environment. One simple way to care for it.

Earth Share

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Bush clears Saddam of 9/11 charge

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

Responding to a recent survey of the U.S. public, U.S. President George W. Bush clearly stated for the very first time that former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein had nothing to do with the Sept. 11 attacks.

A recent poll stated that 70 percent of Americans thought Hussein was personally involved in the attacks, according to BBC.com.

"There's no question that Saddam Hussein had Al Qaeda ties. [But] we have no evidence that Saddam Hussein was involved with the Sept. 11 attacks," Bush said, according to cbsnews.com.

Bush, along with U.S. Vice President Dick Cheney, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, has stated that there is no doubt that Hussein had Al Qaeda ties.

Rumsfeld stated that he has not seen any evidence to support Bush's claim that there was any direct connection.

"We know [Hussein] was giving $25,000 a family for anyone who would go out and kill innocent men, women and children," Rumsfeld said, according to foxnews.com.

When asked on ABC's "Nightline," Rice said one of the reasons Bush felt going to war against Hussein was necessary was that he presented a threat from the region in which the Sept. 11 attacks emerged.

Rice also restated what the executive branch of the government has actually said.

"[Hussein] is someone that supported terrorists, helped to train them, but most importantly that this is someone who...was a threat in this region that we were not prepared to tolerate," Rice said, according to foxnews.com.

When Cheney was asked by foxnews.com to comment on previous claims he made connecting Hussein to the attacks, he said that he did not recall having ever made such statements, but he did say that there has been a long-standing relationship between Al Qaeda and Iraq.

Al Qaeda reportedly sent representatives to Baghdad primarily to be trained in bomb-making and biological and chemical warfare.

Upon Bush's direct statement denying any previous suggestion of a connection between Hussein and the Sept. 11 attacks, BBC.com conducted research and found contradictory statements.

"We know that after Sept. 11, [Saddam Hussein] gleefully celebrated the terrorist attacks on America.

Some citizens wonder, after 11 years of living with this problem, why do we need

"There's no question that Saddam Hussein had al Qaeda ties. We have no evidence that Saddam Hussein was involved with the September 11th attacks."
—George W. Bush,
president of the United States

In presenting the U.S. case against Iraq to the U.N. Security Council, U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell discussed Iraq's training of Al Qaeda operatives and said, to confront it now? And there's a reason. We've experienced the horror of 11 September."

During a televised address, in an effort to defend his administration's policy on Iraq this September, Bush said, "[Terrorist attacks] are invited by the perception of weakness. And the surest way to avoid attacks on our own people is to engage the enemy where he lives and plans. We are fighting that enemy in Iraq and Afghanistan today so that we do not meet him again on our own streets, in our own cities."

Examining this comment and Rice's statement that "Saddam Hussein posed a risk in a region from which the 9/11 threat emerged," it seems as though the administration feels that Hussein had a direct correlation to the Sept. 11 attacks.

BBC.com reports that Bush said in October 2002, as he attempted to lay out the threat posed by Iraq, "On 11 September 2001, America felt its vulnerability. We resolved then, and we are resolved today, to confront every threat, from any source, that could bring sudden terror and suffering to America."

These statements all confirm that the Bush administration is attempting to get rid of Hussein because of his representation of Iraq and consequently his direct involvement with Al Qaeda.

Rumsfeld said at his Pentagon news conference that the United States and coalition forces are making great headway in their progress to stabilize Iraq, according to foxnews.com.

The only thing that would hold progress back is that the United States might not be able to get the international aid they need to help the security division in Iraq.

The Pentagon is hoping for 10,000 to 15,000 troops from Turkey, Pakistan and other nearby countries to help increase security.

This increase in security would also allow around 130,000 American troops to go home within the next year.

Rice also said that even if the United States was able to get the additional troops, it would be months before they would be able to enter Iraq. Foxnews.com reports that there are currently more than 210,000 forces in Iraq.

This continual occupation and recruitment represents the fact that the United States is still searching for and attempting to destroy all that holds Al Qaeda together.

Most importantly to consider is that Al Qaeda is supported by Iraq, lead by Hussein.

"I think it is not surprising that people make the connection [between Saddam Hussein and Al Qaeda]," Rumsfeld said to NBC's "Meet the Press."

President Bush addresses the members of the United Nations with hope that the international community will aid the United States in rebuilding Iraq. Recently the Bush administration admitted that there is no evidence supporting the American view that Saddam Hussein was directly connected to the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

U.S. spending outscored student test results

American students score considerably lower than students in countries that spend less on education

By DEVIN GANGI
Contributing Writer

While many of the debates in the upcoming presidential primaries will focus on such international topics as the Middle East, terrorism and Iraq, some recent educational studies have been creating great domestic concern. According to CNN.com, surveys have shown that while the United States spends more money on education than its European counterparts, its comparative test scores are some of the lowest.

The main statistical instrument used to effectively compare test scores internationally is the Third International Mathematics and Science Study (TIMSS). The TIMSS looks at students from 41 nations, and at three different grade levels: fourth, eighth and 12th. The test focuses on evaluating schools, curriculum, textbooks and student scores.

In a recent report by U.S. Commissioner of Education Statistics, Pascal D. Forgione, it was found that the United States fared poorly when compared to other countries.

Forgione said that U.S. students "are significantly weaker than their peers in other countries," by the time they leave high school, and that "our idea of advanced is below international standards."

For example, the TIMSS scored the United States at 461 at 12th grade, with 18 advanced countries in front of it, including the Netherlands, with scores at 560. The situation is even worse in the eighth grade where the United States is ranked 29th.

Most European countries have standard, governmentally-directed policies for curriculum, scoring standards and teacher pay. In the United States those policies are made at the district level and differ greatly from area to area.

You may think that with the vastly superior Gross Domestic Product (GDP) and greater national resources of the United States, it should be able to perform better than these countries. Yet it does not, for several reasons. According to the American Federation of Teachers (AFT), U.S. teachers require less training and receive less pay. Nations overseas require at least five to six years of training. The United States is so desperate to fill teaching positions that many aspiring teachers can find a position right out of college. U.S. textbooks are often accused of having a "mile-wide, inch-deep" approach. In other countries, students study fewer subjects for longer, more intensive periods of time.

Paula Colgan, the director of the International Student Services Program at the University, feels that education overseas has a "concentration not just on knowledge and facts, but on critical and analytical thinking."

The focus in the United States is more on test-taking and meeting scoring standards, whereas the emphasis overseas is based more on true comprehension and application of the material.

A final thought to consider is that U.S. school systems are the most decentralized in the world, according to the AFT. Most European countries have standard, governmentally-directed policies for curriculum, scoring standards and teacher pay. In the United States, those policies are made at the district level and differ greatly from area to area. Part of that problem rests with the fact that the United States is a demographic mess. Americans are so diverse in both income and background compared to their relatively homogenous international counterparts that decisions must be tailor-made to each unique district.

Yet why should all of this matter, if the United States spends so much on education? Good overall quality and a product of high-spending should be able to overcome minor flaws in the system. Again, these assumptions prove wrong. It is not necessarily how much it spent, but how we spend it.

Consider that the United States spends much more on transportation and food programs than other countries. You will see no big yellow buses driving around in European countries; most students walk or carpool to school and will go home briefly for lunch.

Also, we spend an incredible amount on technology in the school system, with many schools insisting on low computer-student ratios. The AFT observes that European nations pay far less attention to making sure they have the newest computers. According to the scores, having such luxuries does not directly translate into receiving a good education.

The United States educational system must be overhauled and brought up to speed if U.S. children are to compete internationally.

Forgione said that "the United States is under challenge from many quarters," as businesses increasingly turn their focus to recruiting talent overseas.

The United States must re-evaluate how it spends money and look to the tried-and-true methods of other school systems around the world.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

New club offers non-partisan alternative

New PACE officers (left to right) President Lindsey Gentel '04, Andy Schwenk '06, and Vice President Laura Zuber '06 look forward to getting the club underway for the year. PACE offers students an opportunity to participate in open discussions on current events affecting the university and the world.

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Writer

It's not always easy to stay informed about national events and political issues here in the Bucknell "bubble." Students find themselves consumed by class, homework, jobs, activities and other time commitments which can make turning on CNN or opening a newspaper seem like an extra chore. As a result, many students go through the semester oblivious to important national and international developments.

Students who do manage to educate themselves about current issues can be frustrated by the lack of a venue to address their views, feelings and concerns about what is going on in the world.

At the University, students have found they can overcome this dilemma by joining a group of politically like-minded students in the College Democrats political affiliation? Or those who are undecided about a particular issue and want to examine their options in more detail? Or those

"PACE does not want to see our participants necessarily reach an agreement on the issues that we raise. If anything, discussions will most likely end with people agreeing to disagree. We are simply offering an opportunity to hear the ideas from different sides."

—Lindsey Gentel,
PACE president or the Conservatives Club. This raises several questions. What about those who don't have a who simply want to hear from people with an opposing viewpoint?

Now there is an answer. Political and Current Events (PACE) is a non-partisan club dedicated to encouraging discussion of world, national and local political issues.

The overall aim of the club is to provide University students with the support they need to play an active role in shaping American politics.

The idea for PACE originated in the political science department. A few times every semester, political science majors would get together with the faculty for an event called "Politics and Pizza" where discussions were held about current issues.

"Politics and Pizza" was such a success that last year Tansa Massoud, associate professor of political science, suggested the formation of a student organization that would meet for these discussions on a regular basis.

Enter Lindsey Gentel '04, Patricia Hohl '06 and three Social Justice Residential College students: Laura Zuber '06, Paul Wolujewicz '06 and Andy Schwenk '06. Now the officers of PACE, these students worked with Assistant Professors of Political Science Joseph Coleman, Scott Meinke and Susan Tabrizi during the spring semester of 2003 to get the club off the ground. Last year, PACE held a discussion about the war in Iraq.

This semester, the club has over 50 members signed up. Gentel, now president, said that the early success of PACE is exciting.

"This leaves me extremely optimistic as to the effectiveness of PACE on this campus since we haven't even had our first event yet. I think there will be an even greater interest shown as things pick up over the semester," Gentel said.

Zuber, vice president of operations, was equally optimistic.

"Right now we're just trying to get our name out there so people know about the club," Zuber said.

PACE has a variety of activities on their agenda this year. The club will sponsor a discussion about the death penalty at 7:30 p.m. on Monday in the LC Forum. Several field trip destinations including the Philadelphia Constitution Center and Washington, D.C. are being considered.

Club members have also been in touch with local congressional representatives as well as Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa. to encourage them to speak at the University. None of these events will ever be mandatory for members, making PACE appealing to even the busiest students.

After the discussion about the death penalty, the next issue that PACE hopes to confront is affirmative action.

Possible events include a debate between the Conservatives Club and College Democrats and speakers co-sponsored by both clubs in conjunction with PACE. One possibility is Reginald Jones, a hip-hop producer from New York City, who has a libertarian view of racial issues. The Conservatives Club and PACE are trying to arrange a date in early October.

So does PACE foresee any obstacles in achieving its non-partisan goal? Gentel doesn't seem to think so.

"PACE does not want to see our participants necessarily reach an agreement on the issues that we raise. If anything, discussions will most likely end with people agreeing to disagree. We are simply offering an opportunity to hear the ideas from different sides," Gentel said.

"Whether you end up agreeing with another person or not is irrelevant when compared to being able to understand where the other side is coming from," Gentel said. "We expect a certain level of respect granted to everyone's ideas, and I think this respect will lead to everyone working together toward improvement. University students have a basic respect for one another and their ideologies."

USA PATRIOT act risks student privacy

By LINDSEY GENTEL
Staff Writer

U.S. President George W. Bush signed the USA PATRIOT Act (USAPA) into law on October 26, 2001. This controversial anti-terrorism law has given greater surveillance powers to federal law enforcement and international intelligence agencies.

Organizations such as the New York Civil Liberties Union (NYCLU) have expressed concern over the threat that this law poses to the privacy of innocent citizens, and especially college students' school records.

According to the NYCLU, there has been heightened concern about surveillance on campuses, particularly among foreign students who are nervous about being investigated. In addition, administrators have found themselves unsure about their legal obligations in the event that they receive requests for information from federal law enforcement.

"Privacy rights have been weakened, and it is now doubly important that college students check their education records for accuracy," said Donna Lieberman, executive director of the NYCLU, according to CNN.com. "The good news is that significant rights still remain."

The Family Education Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 (FERPA) generally bars an academic institution from releasing a student's education records without a student's consent, unless the release has been mandated by a court order or subpoena.

Education records include transcripts, financial aid and disciplinary records. When records are subpoenaed under FERPA, the school is required by law to inform the student before releasing the information. This gives the school and/or the student an opportunity to go to court to seek to overturn the subpoena.

However, the USAPA amends FERPA in taking away significant privacy protections from students. USAPA allows federal law enforcement agencies to obtain a secret court order for release of FERPA-protected information if the U.S. attorney general certifies that the information is relevant to a terrorism investigation. And because the subpoena is secret, the student has no chance to challenge it in court.

The new USAPA also allows the U.S. attorney general to use a secret terrorism subpoena to obtain a vast amount of information from schools that in the past was strictly confidential and never released. This information includes students' test scores, extracurricular activities, financial aid and personal assets.

According to a report issued by the American Council on Education in November 2001, the types of information collected in such records include a student's name, address, academic status, visa classification and any record of disciplinary action taken as a result of criminal conviction.

U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft and others in law enforcement claim that USAPA is necessary to allow them to intercept terrorist organizations. They assert that the legislation will only be used to investigate and prosecute terrorists. On January 10, 2003, Ashcroft sent around a draft of the bill "The Domestic Security Enhancement Act of 2003."

According to The Washington Post, Ashcroft has recently traveled to several different organizations around the country, to audiences in Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit and Des Moines, Iowa, defending USAPA, saying that the anti-terrorism measure passed by Congress has been key to the nation's efforts to thwart attacks against Americans.

"If we knew then what we know now, we would have passed the Patriot Act six months before Sept. 11 rather than six weeks after the attacks," Ashcroft said, according to MSNBC.com. "The cause we have chosen is constitutional."

Following the tragic events of Sept. 11, where terrorists killed over 2,800 people when they hijacked four aircraft and used them to destroy the World Trade Center in New York City, and a section of the Pentagon in Washington, D.C., a series of security bills were proposed.

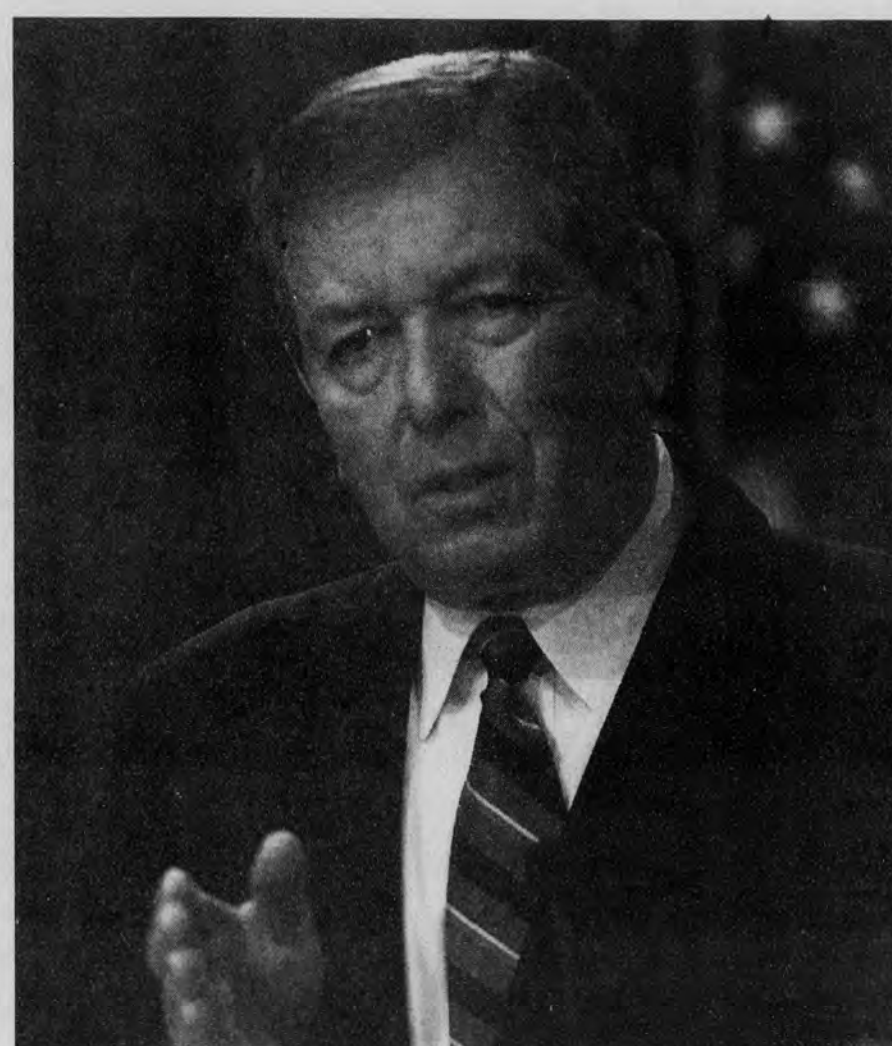

The Combating Terrorism Act of 2001 was brought forward by the Senate only two days later. Sept. 19 brought the Bush administration's draft bill, the Anti-Terrorism Act of 2001.

On Oct. 2, House bill 2975, the "PATRIOT ACT" was introduced, then on Oct. 5, Senate bill 1510, the "USA" act, was introduced.

House and Senate leaders worked to resolve the differences between HR2975 and S1510. On Oct. 25, the final bill HR 3162 USAPA passed.

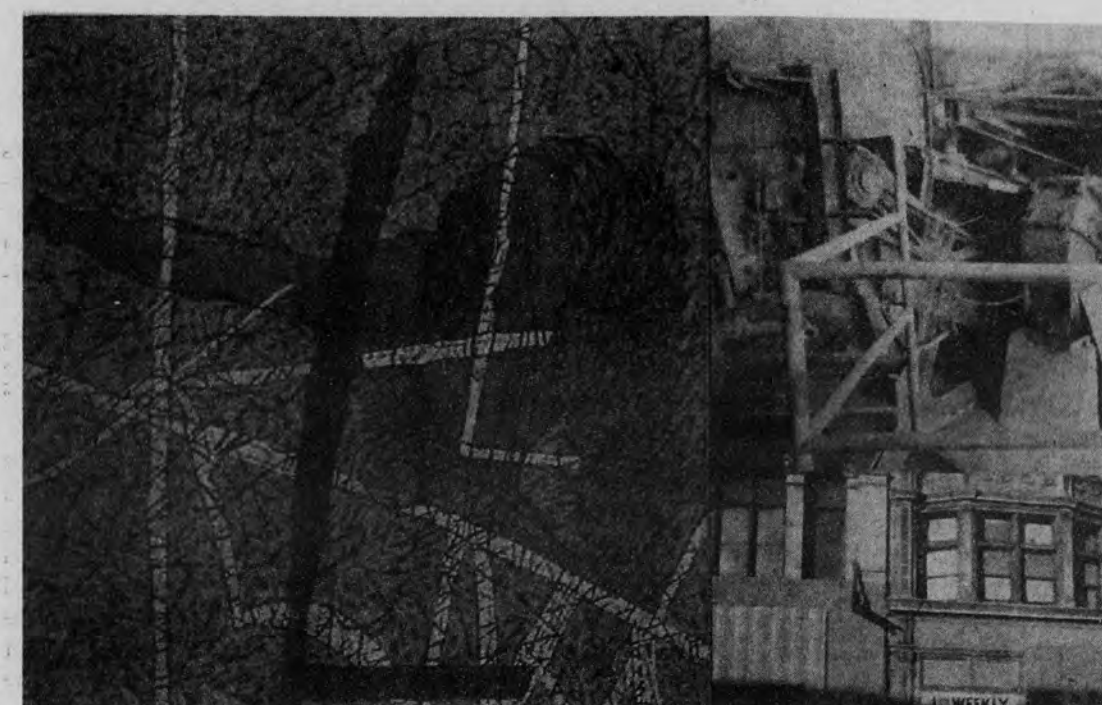

The next day it was signed into law by Bush. The USA PATRIOT Act is an acronym for "Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism."

U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft stresses the importance of the USA PATRIOT Act to protect the country from terror threats. Many Americans are concerned with the extra power granted to the federal government.

Arts & Entertainment

Richard Cramer depicts local mining towns in his work. His pieces portray the town and people of Mahanoy Plane, their brightly-colored houses and the area's darkest days in the depths of the mines.

Cramer captures local history

The artist's portrayal of the Mahanoy Plane does justice to the arduous lives of Pa. coal-mining region

By MIKE NIEBAUER
Senior Writer

I found my personal cure for homesickness in Richard Cramer's art at the Samek Gallery.

The New York/Philadelphia-based artist had an interesting presentation called "Mahanoy Plane" depicting the life of the extensive, once-prosperous "hard-coal-mining operations in the anthracite coal region of northeastern Pennsylvania's coal fields."

I grew up in the coal strip-mining region north of Altoona, Pa., and I see many parallels between the regions. Even if it was temporary, I was transported home to those days of draglines and deep mine shafts nestled among the towns, and the people that worked long, dangerous shifts inside the mines of the Mahanoy Plane (the geological formation that formed the rich coal deposits of the region).

The people would paint their houses bright colors that would soon be covered with the black soot of steam-powered generators that supplied power to the fan systems, keeping oxygen flowing down to the depths of the mines for the miners.

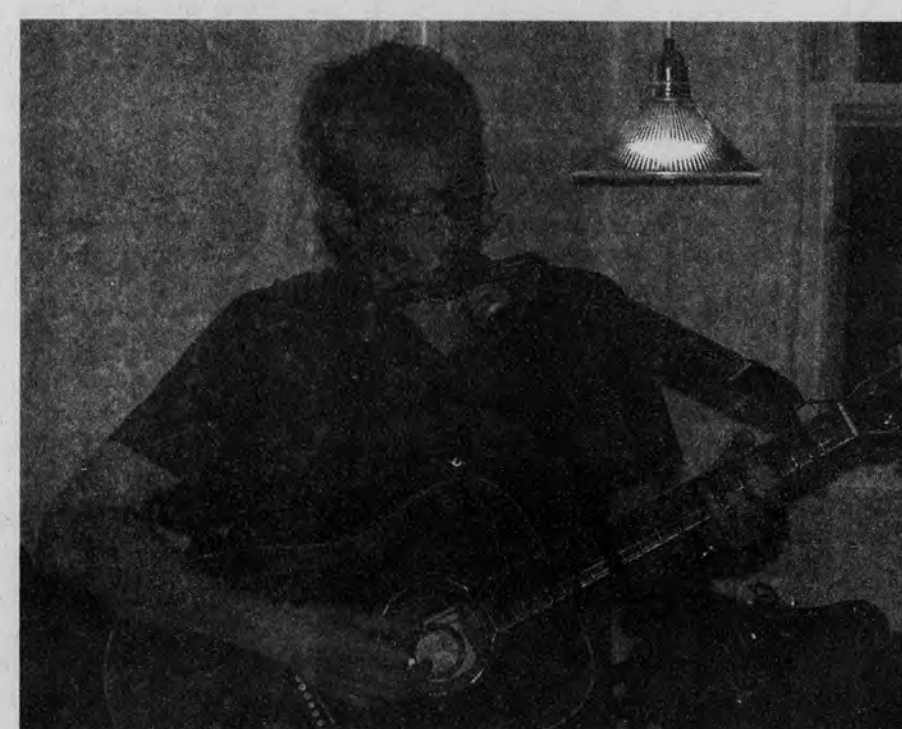

They continued to paint their homes bright colors, as if in defiance of the inevitable blackening; this shows a type of struggle of the human spirit under dangerous conditions.

Many times these people were plagued with labor strife and work stoppages and "lockouts" instigated by the mine owners to control the lives of the miners to maximize their profit. Cramer shows the vivid colors employed by the townspeople throughout the exhibit.

This work evokes the sadness and spirit in the lives of the miners he portrays, and I salute him for that because their difficult lives laid the foundations of our country, and they rarely get the recognition they deserve.

ONE-MAN SHOW

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Brad Dorrance '07 performs at the Seventh Street Cafe's open-mic night last Friday night sponsored by the CAP Center.

WANTED: LEADERS/PILOTS
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER IN OUR COMPANY,
THIS COULD BE YOUR OFFICE.

Few people will ever set foot in an office like this. But then, few people have what it takes to be a Marine Officer. Officer Candidate School (OCS) is the first step towards preparing you for a future beyond anything you could imagine.

- Attend a PAID INTERNSHIP during the summer in Quantico, VA
- NO OBLIGATION
- Unparalleled LEADERSHIP TRAINING
- TUITION ASSISTANCE is available

For more information contact us @:
1-800-544-2259
or osowb@aol.com

www.MarineOfficer.com

Courtesy of Vertical Horizon

Vertical Horizon's new CD "Go" was released Wednesday. The album features lyrics that explore the interactions between people, such that both thought and melody are united.

Musical horizons broaden

Vertical Horizon's newest album, "Go," is edgy, electric, catchy and promises to rise high on the charts

By LINDSAY BETZENDAHL
Senior Writer

◆ CD REVIEW

Vertical Horizon's new album "Go," released Wednesday, is one that should take its rightful place in your CD tower along with the last Vertical Horizon CD released in the late '90s.

Many bands produce albums with a only a few worthy songs, or, if it's lucky, just a bad one here and there. We live in a song-downloading, peer-to-peer sharing generation, so rarely do many of us spend the money to buy a new CD, jewel case and song lyrics included.

After listening to "Go" about five times in a row, I found I could not get enough of its original, edgy, electric-style sound. Vertical Horizon's catchy, evocative lyrics did not resemble the unoriginal cheesiness of pop lyrics, which makes me want to actually spend the $18 to buy the album.

It is not surprising that Vertical Horizon has produced an album that offers such sublime unity of thought and melody. The band came out with four hit singles off its debut RCA album, "Everything You Want," in 1999. "Go" surpasses its predecessor by far.

The collection of songs on "Go" employ lyrics that explore the interaction between people—an area of that is often a little too gray.

According to the album's press release, Matt Scannell, lead singer, guitarist and songwriter likes to observe people's behaviors. "I'm fascinated by the ways people communicate and miscommunicate. The words we say aren't always the words we mean. As a writer, I like to explore the gray areas between the black and white," Scannell said.

This album captures exactly what Scannell intended. The gravity of his lyrics floored me when I first heard them. The last song, "Underwater," one of the slower songs, has some of the most moving lyrics: "It's not so bad down here/underwater/ Once you get past the fear/underwater/It sends you through the haze/ just like a memory/I've been down here for days/have you seen me? /I feel your touch/will you pull me up again?"

Though the first song "I'm Still Here," is comprised of seemingly simple lyrics, the strong, rhythmic beat of the music drove the song deep into my memory. Many of the lyrics have an interconnected theme, orbiting around love. The musical talent of Vertical Horizon overpowers any possible realization that some of the lyrics are simple.

Overall, the album lays bare emotions about a relationship that has crumbled apart even after attempts to save it. Lyrics such as, "It's in your mind/it's in your eyes/so it's goodbye again/it's way past time/for one last try/so it's goodbye again," are bound to relate to anyone's disappointment in a failed relationship.

I may be criticized for commending this album so fervently when some of the lyrics and music aren't necessarily worthy of being categorized as having any groundbreaking qualities in their themes or sounds. However, Vertical Horizon has proved its maturity by producing an album bound to produce a plethora of radio-worthy hit songs.

I recommend this album for people who enjoy turning up their car stereos and singing their hearts out while banging on the steering wheel to the heavy beat of the songs.

"I'm fascinated by the ways people communicate and miscommunicate. The words we say aren't always the words we mean. As a writer, I like to explore the gray areas between the black and white."
—Matt Scannell, lead singer of
Vertical Horizon

When those songs echo their notes across the radio, I will be behind closed windows singing the lyrics that have already been connected tightly into my life.

Study
In English
Abroad
The Swedish Program
STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY

Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film
Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies

COME TO AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING

OCTOBER 6, 2003 4:00 P.M. TAYLOR HALL LOUNGE, ROOM 115

If you are unable to attend this meeting, please contact your Study Abroad Advisor or The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323 (315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

Arts & Entertainment

Concerto concert entrances local music lovers

The University Orchestra featured three seniors in an evening of vibrant tones and "orchestral color"

By CATHERINE HEVERLING
Arts & Entertainment Editor

CONCERT REVIEW

Music lovers of all ages gathered Saturday for the University Orchestra's annual concerto concert. The concert featured the University's finest musicians, including three graduating seniors: Alexis Zackey, viola; Elisabeth Fager, flute and Monica Hoy, violin.

The show began with Dvorak's "Slavonic Dance in G Minor, Op. 46, No. 8." Conductor Christopher Para, associate professor of music, described the piece as a "furi-ant." The song featured an abrupt exchange of melodic phrase between the various strings, creating an amazing tension between the instruments. The selection was an intensely exhilarating commencement for the remainder of the evening.

The next piece, "Concerto in G Major for Viola," composed by George Philipp Telemann featured Zackey on viola. The piece was divided into four separate movements,

The University Orchestra performs at its annual concerto concert Saturday night. The concert featured the works of famous composers, such as Mozart and Dvorak.

the first and third being rather slow and broad while the second and fourth were quick and technically challenging. These variations in style allowed Zackey's amazing talent and passion to shine through. The string ensemble, as well as the unique sound of the echoing harpsichord, provided a perfect complement to the soloist. It was apparent that the concert's audience was appreciative of the music. It refrained from clapping between movements, a common oversight of amateur audiences.

"Fantasy for Flute and Orchestra" by Georges Hue featured flutist Fager. Fager's performance of many quick her face. Her incredible solo at one point during the song had no accompaniment and proved that she knew not only what to play, but how to play it.

The exciting structure of the piece provided a roller coaster effect of tempo and volume.

During other parts of the piece, she was accompanied by a string ensemble as well as a few horns and reeds. These instruments provided a beautiful balance of circulating melody.

The entire orchestra gathered for the last piece of the evening "Polovetsian Dances," a piece by Alexander Borodin. Para informed the audience of the piece's initial use in the opera "Prince Igor." It was used at the end of the second act during a tribal-dance scene.

The selection featured soft strings, a strong woodwind and brass section and a flare of tambo- bourne and timpani. The exciting structure of the piece provided a roller coaster effect tempo and volume.

This year's orchestral concert provided a taste of just about everything. From Dvorak's furious rage to Hue's wistful fantasy, the performers proved that they could handle anything. At the conclusion of the show, the audience's response was an ongoing round of fervent applause. The concert ended much as it began, in an escalating whirlwind of sound.

The string ensemble, as well as the unique sound of the resounding harpsichord, provided a perfect complement to the soloist.

Flutist Elisabeth Fager performs Hue's "Fantasy for Flute and Orchestra." Fager, Hoy and Zackey, seniors, were each featured in solo pieces, accompanied by orchestral ensembles.

A Perfect Circle steps toward the spotlight

By JOSH HERWITT
Staff Writer

CD REVIEW

A Perfect Circle is not your typical modern rock band—in fact, it's far from it. It is a group of skilled, veteran musicians sharing a profound commitment to its artwork and an indifference toward media fame. A Perfect Circle separates itself from contemporaries with its moody, ethereal art-rock in the group's newest album, "Thirteenth Step."

Since its 2000 debut album, "Mer de Noms," the band has undergone transformations in its music and members. Composer and lead guitarist Billy Howerdel (ex-Tool tech), drummer Josh Freese (formerly of Devo and The Vandals), bassist Jeordie "White" (a.k.a. Twiggy Ramirez of Marilyn Manson), and newest member James Iha (former Smashing Pumpkins lead guitarist) now comprise the current band. Former guitarist Troy Van Leeuwen tours with Queens of the Stone Age, former bassist/violinist Paz Lenchantin composes solo work and former lead vocalist Maynard James Kennan is the lead singer for Tool. A Perfect Circle will begin its fall arena tour for "The Thirteenth Step" October 31 in San Antonio.

"The Thirteenth Step," a description of recovery from intense addiction, presents evocative vocals, hypnotic rhythms, thick bass lines and metallic guitars shaping an ominous, gloomy sentiment. Although Kennan explained in a recent MTV online article that his 13 years living in Los Angeles accurately represents the title, the album seems to resonate with a much darker, enigmatic side.

The first single of the album, "Weak and Powerless," combines droning guitars, riveting bass, timely beats and lulling vocals that express powerful moments of struggle and conflict.

Lines that include, "Someone feed the monkey while I dig in search of China/White as Dracula as I approach the bottom" followed by "So desperate and ravenous/I'm so weak and powerless over you," suggest that the album might not just represent chronology.

In the MTV article, Kennan explained that powerful artwork plays with a mixture of optimism and pessimism.

"Everybody has their demons they need to exercise or at least acknowledge," Kennan said. "Most music that I like that's fairly powerful has some element of struggle in it. Like every other wonderful story, there's comedy and tragedy and conflict. I think that's present in all good art."

Whether or not "Weak and Powerless" creates a mainstream following for the band, it exemplifies the rest of "Thirteenth Step." Tracks such as "The Noose" and "The Nurse Who Loved Me" feature melodic vocals accompanied by droning, morose guitars, but those like "A Stranger" and "Pet" present thicker, echoing guitar riffs with a more conventional rock beat reminiscent of "Mer de Noms."

With clever vocals and fluid musical composition, this polished group of musicians exposes interested listeners to creative, artistic forms of modern-day rock.

Hoy was enthralled in the music, closing her eyes and allowing the audience to read the sound on her face.

FIFTEEN MINUTES OF FAME

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

University students (right to left) Devin Cooch '05, Ted Schroeder '05 and Ethan Cherkasky '05 dressed the part of "Soul Man" last Friday at Uptown. The trio captured first place at the karaoke competition.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

October 3, 2003

inside

Volume 132, Number 5

Sports:

Field hockey scores a huge win over Patriot League rival Lafayette.

Student arrests increase

Students said partying has decreased uphill and increased downtown

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Lambda Alpha Chi, along with other uphill Fraternity houses, remain empty on a typical party night, while students socialize at a house downtown the same night. Student arrests have risen downtown this year, due to a decrease in registered parties on campus.

By JULIE LESKO
Contributing Writer

Returning students have noticed an increased number of arrests occurring in downtown Lewisburg this school year.

According to Associate Dean of Students Gerald Commerford, 121 students have been cited for violating the Alcohol Policy to date this school year; as of this date last year, 72 students had been cited. Citations from the local police have increased from 15 to 31. Ninety students have been cited by either Public Safety officers or residence hall staff members and there have been 10 violations on fraternity property, 13 on campus property and 67 in residence halls.

"Most alarming is the fact that four students have been charged with Driving Under the Influence (DUI) so far this semester. Last year, one student was cited for DUI in September," Commerford said.

The Bucknellian requested student arrest statistics and information from the Lewisburg Police Department, which declined to comment on the matter.

"The increase in number of arrests is proportional to the number of people who are downtown," Scott Dayer '04 said.

Many students interviewed said they think the increase in downtown parties is a result of the strict restrictions being placed upon the fraternities on campus, which force students to find alternative means to socialize other than hosting parties in the fraternity houses.

"The fraternities have been more cautious about having parties in their official houses and are moving to downtown locations," Spencer Murata '04 said.

"I believe there are more parties occurring off campus this year than ever before," Commerford said.

Tim Van Houten '04 said he sees a comparison between this year and 1998, when there was a riot in the downtown area.

"The 1998 riot was caused by similar strict campus regulations on fraternities. Eventually the students moved the parties downtown. After the riot, the administra-

See ARRESTS, page A3

Greek forum held at SAE

By MEGHAN FOX
Senior Writer

The Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC) held a meeting to discuss the issues concerning downtown partying and the large number of violations that occurred this semester on Tuesday.

Officers and members of the IFC, the Pan Hellenic Council and various sororities and fraternities gathered in the Brother Room of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity house to conduct the roundtable discussion.

Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Chip Marrara began the meeting by encouraging everyone to speak freely in his presence. Everyone introduced themselves and their affiliation and the issues were brought forth.

Within these first few weeks of the semester, administrators, townspeople, and the Lewisburg Police have been concerned about the trash, noise violations, public urination, alcohol abuse, and serious Driving Under the Influence (DUI) violations that have resulted from parties held in the downtown area.

The students, on the other hand, are concerned with the behavior of the burrow police and public safety, as well as the number of fines these authorities have distributed.

Many Greek students complained that both the police and Public Safety are simply "out to get us." Recently, police officers have been stationed on almost every corner.

President of the Pan Hellenic Council Jen Mellon described a situation that occurred where a sorority woman was recently mugged outside of Rusty's, but was unable to talk with a police officer after the incident because all of the officers had been dispatched.

"As a woman, I find a huge problem with that," Mellon said. Dean Marrara said earlier in the meeting that it was the job of the police and Public Safety to protect the students, but many students saw the authority's actions more as boastful and condescending rather than helpful.

One student said he overheard public safety officers bragging in the office about the number of parties they busted the night before.

Another student said the authorities sit outside the downtown houses "with smiles on their faces, eager to cite us."

This semester, the number of violations has increased. According to Marrara, Greeks are currently occupying 85 domiciles downtown.

See FORUM, page A2

Grasso resigns from NY Stock Exchange

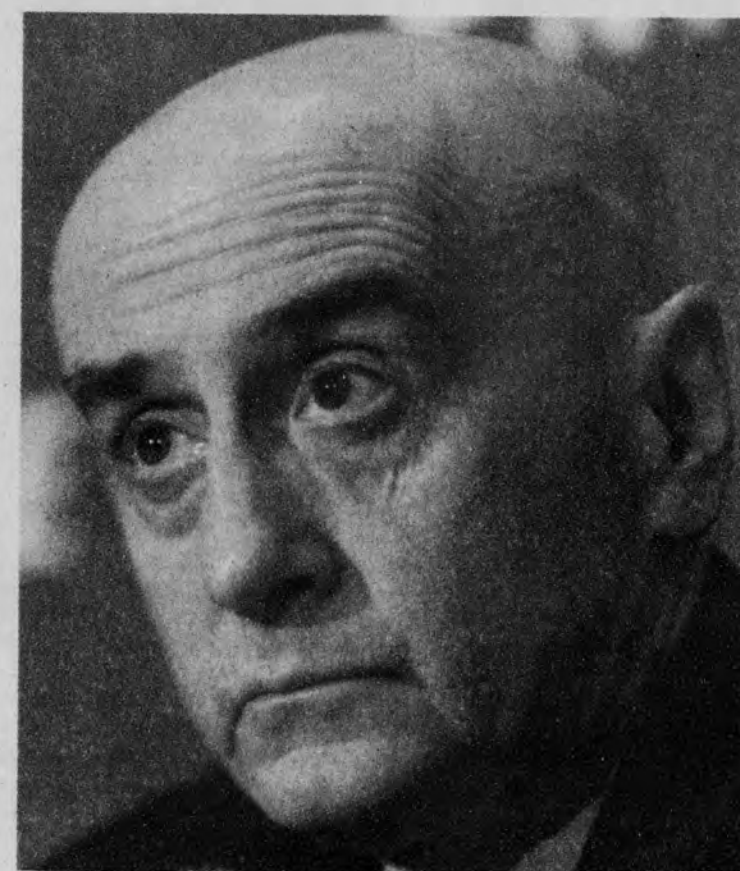

By DAVID LAROSS
Senior Writer

Richard Grasso, a parent and a friend of the University represented a genuine "American dream" story like none other until last week. 35 years ago, he started work as a floor clerk at the New York Stock Exchange, the private company that regulates and oversees the stock market at Wall Street—a symbol of American capitalism. By 2001, not only was he chairman of the board and chief executive officer, but he was known as an instrumental figure in restarting the stock exchange in the wake of the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

This August, the NYSE board of directors showed its appreciation for their chairman, not only extending his contract by two years, but giving him immediate access to almost $140 million in funds from his pension and other benefits. Three weeks later, on Sept. 17, he was gone, forced by the board to retire—as close as a multimillionaire financial magnate can come to getting a pink slip.

Nothing happened to the market in those three weeks to shake confidence in Grasso's abilities, nor was he accused of any crime. Instead, he was forced out after coming under fire for accepting the money offered to him at August's board meeting.

Grasso publicly announced the size of the payment, as well

Courtesy of Reuters

Dick Grasso resigned from his position as CEO of the NY Stock Exchange on Sept. 17. Grasso spoke at the University last year.

has his annual salary ($25 million, about 100 times that of Fed chief Alan Greenspan) as soon as he received access to the money, all of it accumulated in normal compensation and benefits over his three decades with NYSE, assuming that there would be no significant reaction.

Instead, criticism began almost instantly, from regulators, investors and fellow executives. It quickly reached state-level legislators, with Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Joe Lieberman, D-Conn., weighing in most strongly against him.

See GRASSO, page B8

Jill Wasiowich '02 passes away

By MEREDITH ATKINSON
Staff Writer

Jill Wasiowich '02, "a brilliant student with a fine personal record on campus," according to Dean Ferraro and a sentiment echoed by those who knew her, passed away on June 14.

"She passed away due to a long-term illness which had been diagnosed at age 16," Ferraro said. "She was heroic in trying to deal with this illness, but in the end succumbed."

Wasiowich was from Wayne, New Jersey and died peacefully at her home.

Before attending Bucknell, she graduated from Wayne Hills High School, and after graduating magna cum laude from the University, worked as an editorial assistant for Pearson Education.

Courtesy of Chi Omega

Jill Wasiowich '02 (center) and her Chi Omega sisters Virginia Marciano '02 (left) and Samantha Moore '02 (right) take a break from dancing at the Chi Omega 2000 spring formals.

Before her death, Wasiowich left an open letter in which she listed some of the ways she tried to live her life, and other wisdom that she accu-

See WASIOWICH, page A2

Student involved in serious DUI

By KIM DUNLAP
Contributing Writer

Five students witnessed a DUI violation on Sept. 17. William Bachelier '05 struck three parked cars on Walker St. by the 7th Street Café, damaging two vehicles and totaling one Volkswagen Jetta. Bachelier admitted to drinking heavily downtown before getting into his Ford Mustang to go across the campus.

According to a witness, Bachelier narrowly missed a Public Safety cruiser parked on Moore Avenue while "recklessly speeding."

According to witnesses, Bachelier then sideswiped the cars of students Lily Williamson '05, Eleanor Brown '05 and Tyler Bracken '04. A witness then called the Lewisburg police, who contacted Public Safety.

Bachelier was apprehended in McDonnell Hall and had a Blood Alcohol Concentration of .144.

Due to his condition, Bachelier was then brought to Evangelical Hospital, where he recovered. After returning to campus, the student received a letter charging him with Disorderly Conduct, Property Violation, University Alcohol Violations and Violation of Federal/State/Municipal law.

The penalty for this incident, according to Dean of Students Gerald Commerford, is very severe.

"The punishment is related to the sanction of DUI, plus property damage, which is a five point violation," Commerford said. "It's regrettable, the impact on the individual."

Bachelier also received an additional point for "concomitant offenses" and, among other

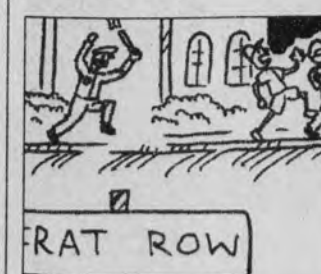

See DUI, page A3

FEARLESS OPINIONS

Central Pennsylvania offers many majestic parks for your hiking enjoyment.

See page A6

An increase in Public Safety patrols at campus fraternity parties increases incidents downtown like underage drinking and DUIs. The University must determine the optimal level of rule enforcement to avoid further upsetting the situation.

See pages A4-A5

What to Do in the Middle of Nowhere

Jim Thorpe, Pa., provides outdoor adventures like white-water rafting and paintball.

See page A6

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Sept. 21

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed two males walking with a staggered gait by Larison Hall. Upon investigation, it was determined that the males were students who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity for a female student who was highly intoxicated. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room and later returned to campus. Upon investigation, it was determined that the student was under the age of 21 and had consumed alcohol. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

FAILURE TO VACATE BUILDING DURING FIRE ALARM—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for a fire alarm activation and discovered, in a search of the building, that four students failed to exit the building when the alarm sounded. Citations were issued for failure to vacate the building during a fire alarm.

ASSIST POLICE/ALCOHOL VIOLATIONS—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall to assist the Lewisburg Police Department with a student who had fallen onto the roadway at James Alley. Upon investigation, it was determined that the female was intoxicated although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

ASSIST POLICE/ALCOHOL VIOLATIONS—Public Safety responded to S. 7th Street to assist with a pedestrian student who had been observed striking a parked car. Upon investigation, officers determined that the male was intoxicated although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

ASSIST POLICE/ALCOHOL VIOLATIONS—Public Safety responded to S. 7th Street to assist the Lewisburg Police Department with a student who was vomiting in the roadway. When approached by the Lewisburg Police Department, the individual attempted to flee but was detained. Upon investigation, officers determined the male had consumed alcohol although under the age of 21.

Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—An RA requested an ambulance be dispatched to Vedder Hall for a male student who was highly intoxicated. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room and later returned to campus. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the student was under the age of 21 and had consumed alcohol. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

MEDICAL ASSIST—While on routine patrol, Public Safety was stopped by a student who had been treated at Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for a shoulder injury and was attempting to locate ice to place on the injury per his instructions from the hospital. Public Safety located ice for the student and escorted him to his residence hall.

THEFT—A student reported Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed clothing valued at $130 and her wallet containing four student ID, a bank card and $200 from her unlocked locker in the fieldhouse. The incident is under investigation.

Tuesday, Sept. 23

ASSIST POLICE—Public Safety responded to Gateway Roser to assist the Lewisburg Police Department with a student whose nurse was snatched from her while she was walking at 6th and Market Streets in Lewisburg. Physical Plant was contacted to re-key her residence. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the front passenger side fender wheel of his vehicle while it was parked on St. George Street near Larison Hall. The Lewisburg Police Department responded. The incident is under investigation.

Wednesday, Sept. 24

PROPERTY VIOLATION—An employee reported to Public Safety that paper was being removed from the computer labs in the Rooke Chemistry and Biology Buildings. Another employee reported that 13 reams of paper were found in the basement of Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity. The house officers could not provide receipts for the paper found there. The paper was confiscated and placed in the computer lab.

HARASSMENT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) drove by her on Dent Drive and Moore Ave. and yelled offensive remarks at her. The female was unable to provide a description of the individuals or the vehicle.

Thursday, Sept. 25

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for a fire alarm activation caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station for no apparent reason. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

ASSIST POLICE/ALCOHOL VIOLATIONS—Public Safety responded to S. 6th and St. Catherine Street to assist Lewisburg Police Department with a pedestrian stop. Upon investigation, the officers determined that the male was a student who had consumed alcohol although under the age of 21. Public Safety returned the student to his residence. Citations were issued for underage consumption and an open container violation.

INFORMATION / SUSPICIOUS PHONE CALL—An employee reported to Public Safety that she received a phone call from a student who exhibited unusual behavior and displeasure with a campus organization. This matter was referred to University officials who will investigate the incident.

Friday, Sept. 26

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an ill visitor who had fainted. An ambulance responded but the visitor refused medical treatment and signed a medical waiver.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—A student reported to Public Safety that she observed damage to right rear quarter panel and tail-light area of her vehicle. The damaged occurred at an unknown time and location. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—An RA contacted Public Safety and requested medical assistance for an ill student in Vedder Hall. A Student Health Services driver transported the male to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment of a stomach problem. The individual later returned to campus.

ASSIST POLICE / LOUD PARTY—Public Safety responded to St. Catherine Street to assist the Lewisburg Police Department by patrolling the area while the officers closed a loud party.

Saturday, Sept. 27

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of an ill student. Upon investigation, Officers determined that the male was suffering a stomach flu but declined medical treatment.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male walking with a staggered gait by the Ward House. Upon investigation, officers identified the male as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

TRESPASSING / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—An employee reported to Public Safety that an unknown male inside the Powerhouse who fled on foot towards S. 7th Street. The suspect was located in the Powerhouse parking lot and identified as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for trespassing and underage consumption.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a female lying on the grass by the President's House. Upon investigation, the individual was identified as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

AMBULANCE TRANSPORT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Gateway Kalman Posner for the report of an intoxicated female. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined the individual was a student in need of medical attention. She was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment and later returned to campus. Citations were issued for underage consumption.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a female on S. 6th Street walking with a staggered gait. Upon investigation, the individual was identified as a student who had consumed alcohol although under the age of 21. Citation was issued for underage consumption.

Students address downtown partying

FORUM From page A1

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Sigma Phi Epsilon member Justin Bretting '04 voices his opinion on the recent increase in downtown partying. Students addressed their concerns at a forum held on Tuesday.

One student noted the town's financial dependency upon the University for its local economy. Marrara stressed the importance of maintaining good relations with the town.

Both the University and its students would like to see parties moved back on campus. Parties within the fraternity houses pose as less of a liability.

"Parties are a lot safer when at the house. There is a lot less hard alcohol consumption," one fraternity member said.

Many students are willing to risk holding downtown parties to avoid the constraints of public safety. "Downtown parties are a by-product of how strict Public Safety is up here," one student said. "Public safety can pretty much do whatever they want."

Registered parties can also be costly, requiring two private security guards, a number of sober brothers and wristbands, not to mention the number of petty fines the fraternity is likely to accumulate. Recently, one fraternity was fined for having six illegible names on the registered list. Another fine was assigned after a girl manufactured a fake wristband on Bid Night.

"We are the Greek community, yet we have no say in the fines," one student said.

While the blame has been placed primarily on the Greek community, first year students and independents have also been the cause of downtown violations.

Many students suggested holding an open forum with Public Safety and the burrow Police Department to discuss these issues, and by the end of the meeting, Senior Class President Jessica Briski '04 agreed to organize the two meetings.

While students said they do not expect the officials to ignore their own liabilities, they are hoping that the authorities would be willing to be reasonable with assigning various fines and more respect-ful when entering a party for inspection.

"I think it got a lot of what we wanted to say out," said Garrett Carrough, '04 President of the IFC. "It wasn't very structured, but we made some steps into contacting people to discuss some of the issues."

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Greek students participated in a roundtable discussion at the Sigma Alpha Epsilon house on Tuesday. Students said they feel there is too much enforcement uphill.

WASIOWICH From page A1

mulated in her lifetime. Among those, she suggested that everyone should "find something to be passionate about ... always be honest with yourself and others ... learn to laugh at yourself ... and don't spend life working, but instead, travel, go places, do things and see things..."

Wasiowich also encouraged readers to "learn to say you're sorry... accept apologies and forgive people ... stop worrying ... and be an optimist."

Wasiowich ended her letter by saying "I also feel that if I have made such a difference in so many people's lives (which I still don't understand how), then I must have done something right. Unfortunately, I'm not sure how I did it so I can only guess at what has made me who I am."

Wasiowich was a sister of Chi Omega, and according to the women in her chapter, she made a profound difference in many lives. Many remembered her as an energetic, kind and positive person.

"Jill was a sister who truly embodied the Chi Omega spirit. She was an amazing sister and friend to so many people. She was a very strong person, and it showed through in everything she did. She touched everyone's lives in such a positive way and she is truly missed," Chi Omega president Marie DeAngelo '04, said.

Write for News!
E-mail Liz Salemme:
esalemme@

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme

Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Global music sales tumble

LONDON—The battle-weary music industry surveyed the wreckage of another dismal six months on Wednesday as global data showed music sales tumbled 10.9 percent, piling more pressure on music companies to do deals to survive.

Muhammad statements excluded

MANASSAS, Va.—Prosecutors agreed Wednesday to exclude some material from the trial of sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad after the defense complained that he was questioned improperly on the string of slayings that terrorized the Washington area last year.

Iraqi WMD may have been bluff

With no chemical or biological weapons yet found in Iraq, the U.S. official in charge of the search for Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction is pursuing the possibility that the Iraqi leader was bluffing, pretending he had distributed them to his most loyal commanders to deter the United States from invading.

Deprived Iraqi schools start year

BAGHDAD, Iraq—The classrooms at Baghdad's al-Waqidi school are dirty and the books have yet to arrive. But excited pupils filled the playground on Wednesday as Iraq's first post-Saddam Hussein school year officially began.

Dean leads Democratic money chase

WASHINGTON—The latest round of fund raising has led to a reversal of fortunes in the Democratic presidential race, with one-time underdog Howard Dean now the front-runner in the money chase and former leader John Edwards in the back of the pack.

Polls finds growing support for recall

LOS ANGELES—A new statewide poll in California released Wednesday shows Gov. Gray Davis losing support entering the final crucial days of the campaign, with a solid majority of likely voters now favoring removing him from his job. The Los Angeles Times poll, which shows actor Arnold Schwarzenegger leading the field to replace Davis by 8 percent, was published the morning after the only woman among the major candidates, political commentator Arianna Huffington, withdrew from the race and vowed to work tirelessly to defeat the recall and prevent Schwarzenegger from occupying the governor's mansion.

New Jersey targets drowsy drivers

BORDENTOWN, N.J.—As if staying alive were not enough of an incentive, motorists in New Jersey have another reason to make sure they are well-rested when they get behind the wheel—a first-in-the-nation law against driving while drowsy.

Mystery shrouds arrest of accused software pirate

U.S. authorities are trying to reel in a rare fish—an alleged software pirate from the former Soviet Union who may be one of the biggest catches so far in the war on cybercrime. But instead of trumpeting the arrest of Maksym Kovalchuk, investigators and prosecutors have cast a net of secrecy around the case and their efforts to extradite the 25-year-old Ukrainian from Thailand.

Students party less on campus

ARRESTS From page A1

tion realized that they had to allow parties to happen on campus. In the past five years since that riot, the regulations have gotten stricter, and parties have once again moved downtown," Van Houten said.

David Castle '04, a downtown resident, said he sees a need for balance.

"Strict regulations are driving people away from the fraternity houses to the streets downtown," Castle said.

Jon Shogan '04 said he agrees with Castle. "If they start cracking down on downtown and on the hill, there is no other place for students to go. People will have fun no matter what," Shogan said.

This transition in party location can be seen in the increased number of infractions and citations received by students. Some see this as a proactive response by the police to ensure that the events of 1998 do not reoccur.

This increase in police intervention is welcomed by many.

"Given the increase in incidents of DUI infractions, the aggressive approach to breaking up parties is very warranted. We definitely need more of a presence to keep order. It's like a jungle down there," Murata said.

Dean of Students Richard Ferraro recognizes this increase in police activity downtown.

"The number of citations is up considerably from last year, and some of the behaviors are very serious. For example, this year, with only one month having passed, we have already had 10 students in the hospital for alcohol poisoning.

No fewer than six students, on a very walkable campus, have been involved in DUI infractions. Two of these DUI incidents could easily have resulted in loss of life," Ferraro said.

Ferraro said tensions have been escalating between the community and the students of the University, a fact also noted by students.

"The relationship between Lewisburg residents and students living off campus has become increasingly strained over the past few years," Matt Albrecht '04 said.

Ferraro said that last year the relationship between students living downtown and Lewisburg residents was very good.

"The Mayor of Lewisburg in May of 2003 said that it was the best year in recent memory, and that Bucknell students deserved to be complimented," Ferraro said.

Ferraro said that he does see some tension that exists between the students and the community members.

"[Because of] legal and social reasons, there is undeniable tension between at least some students and the downtown community over issues related to underage and especially heavy drinking," Ferraro said. "But that is only part of the story. A good number of students and town residents enjoy cordial relations in the context of cooperative volunteer efforts, shared religious services, and social and political interactions. Because Bucknell students acted in such a mature and responsible way last year, many persons in Lewisburg had high expectations for this year. That is why the friction that has taken place early in this semester has created as much disappointment as anger."

to pay for the damages," trend on campus.

Williamson said. "The most serious and alarming thing is we've had four incidents of DUI this semester ... that's very dangerous," Commerford said.

Commerford also stressed the importance of not letting friends drive when they are intoxicated.

"Students should be responsible for one another and take the keys away," Commerford said.

Calendar of Events

October 3	October 4	October 5	October 6	October 7	October 8	October 9
FRI	SAT	SUN	MON	TUE	WED	THU
Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio noon Pilates Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. CardioKick Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Shabbat Service Bereason Center for Jewish Life (Chapel) 5:30 p.m. Volleyball vs Lehigh U. Davis Gymnasium 7 p.m.	"Delicatessen" Hilltop Film Series Vaughan Lit 100 (Auditorium) 2 p.m. & 3 p.m. Jelani Dance Practice Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 2 p.m. Volleyball vs Lafayette College Davis Gymnasium 4 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel (Main Sanctuary) 5:30 p.m. Foam Dance Party Smith Hall Quad 7 p.m. Pro Musica Prague Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m. "Dinner with Friends" Theatre Showcase Tustin Theatre 8 p.m. Open Mic Night Uptown 9:30 p.m. "The Life of David Gale" Vaughan Lit (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Quaker Services Vaughan Lit (Willard Smith Library) 10 a.m. Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 11 a.m. Women's Soccer vs. Lehigh University Women's Varsity Soccer Field 1 p.m. JV Football vs. Fork Union Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium 1 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel (Main Sanctuary) 4 p.m. Yom Kippur Service Bucknell Hall 100 (Recital Hall) 7 p.m. Catholic Mass Hunt Hall Living Room 101 10 p.m. The information for these events is subject to change. Some events are open to members of an organization only.	Swim Conditioning Class Natatorium 7 a.m. Personal Fitness Step Aerobics Classes 8 a.m. & 11 a.m. Spinning Classes 12 p.m. & 6 p.m. Abs Class 1 p.m. Pilates Class 4 p.m. CardioKick Class 5 p.m. Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio Yom Kippur Service Bucknell Hall (Recital Hall) 10:30 a.m. Zen Meditation Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 4 p.m. Adult Beginning Swim Class Natatorium 7 p.m. Contemporary Worship Rooke Chapel (Meditation Chapel) 9 p.m.	Personal Fitness Step Aerobics Classes 8 a.m. & 11 a.m. Spinning Classes 12 p.m. & 6 p.m. Abs Class 1 p.m. Pilates Class 4 p.m. CardioKick Class 5 p.m. Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio Qigong Class Lounge (Vedder Hall Living Room) noon Non Violent Hip Hop Tour Langone Center 252 (Refractory) 6 p.m. Langone Center 276 (Terrace Room) 9 p.m. Intermediate Tennis Class Varsity Tennis Courts (beside Davis Gym) 6:30 p.m. "Love Songs, Hate Speeches" Concert: Tom McCormack Bucknell Hall 100 (Recital Hall) 7:30 p.m.	Personal Fitness Spinning Class 8 a.m. & 4 p.m. High Intensity Aerobics Class noon Cardio Kick Class 5 p.m. Yoga Class 6 p.m. Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio Swim Conditioning Class Natatorium 7 a.m. Episcopal Services Rooke Chapel Meditation Chapel noon "Head of State" Vaughan Lit (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. Golf Lessons Golf Course 8:30 a.m. Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio noon & 6 p.m. Abs Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 1 p.m. Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m. Cardio Kicks Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. Social Dance Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 p.m.

Send calendar submissions to
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

Ignite the white!
Zoom!
whiter brighter faster
Whiten your teeth in one hour or one weekend!

Take your first step to being good, looking great and making a memorable impression every time you smile. You owe it to yourself! Find out more about Zoom Professional Teeth Whitening. Call today!

Take a Deep Breath...
... and Relax with a Therapeutic Massage
from Rick Hummel, Massage Therapist

Massage has long been an effective method of relaxing tense muscles, improving circulation and promoting an overall sense of peace and well-being ~ By Appointment Only ~

Call Rick today ~ 524-5015 ~
rickhummel@mac.com ~ You Deserve To Feel Great! ~

Buffalo Bill's
TEX-MEX GRILLE & SALOON
Monday 5-9
Jumbo Hamburger & Fries
& Large Soda--$3.99
Tuesday 5-9
12 Jumbo Wings & Fries
& Soda--$3.99
Wednesday 5-9
Vegetarian Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price
Thursday 5-9
Mexican Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price
Lewisburg • 523-8900

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 132, Number 5
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor
Michelle Dombek '05

Managing Editor
Allyson Walker '04

Business Manager
Stephen Santulli '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangel '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinow '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04

News Editors
Elizabeth Saleme '06
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Keeley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Homan '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Pat Evans '04
Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
Ashley Malken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Josie Cetia '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photo Editors
Eric Graham '05
Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout
Nick Kupenski '07

Chief Copy Editors
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
John Hoekin '05
Davaish Malhotra '06

Marketing Directors
Joseph Giordano '05
Alexander Kanaris '05

Circulation Manager
Hasan Sultan '04

Adviser
James F. Lee

ON-ED POLICY

The editorial of The Bucknellian reflects the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian. Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFO

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian, Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Can parties be safe, legal and on campus?

Your actions have consequences—an important lesson college students tend to learn during their years on campus. Sometimes the consequences are obvious and predictable; sometimes the consequences are less easily calculated. But there is no debating that we are responsible for both our actions and their results. Sometimes it seems as though the adult members of our community have forgotten this important lesson.

Recent weeks have seen an increase in alcohol-related incidents involving students downtown. DUIs, public drunkenness,

As a direct result, there are more mixers, date parties and general socializing at downtown houses owned by members of fraternities and sororities. Add this to the usual party scene downtown three nights a week and we are left with an increase in downtown activity.

If the increase in downtown activity were the extent of the story, there wouldn't be a problem on campus. But there is a distinct decrease in safety and an increase in community impact when a major part of the social scene shifts from on campus to off.

Students are much more likely to consume hard alcohol when partying downtown than when at a house, where liquor is not permitted. First-year students are more likely to pre-game heavily before heading downtown to mill around in the streets for an hour before getting into a house. Unfortunately, upperclassmen are more likely to make the dreadful decision to drink and drive when partying downtown than when they are at a party uphill.

The difference of opinion about appropriate noise levels is more dramatic downtown than uphill. It would be shocking if a brother at KDR called to complain about the noise coming from the Lambda house on a Friday night; it is all too common an occurrence when non-student, downtown residents complain about noise from their neighbors on 6th Street. When there is a party at Sig Chi, almost all those plastic cups end up staying inside the house; the few that escape surely don't bother the Sig Ep brothers nearly as much as they bother the family living on 7th Street.

Most of the administration seems to understand this difference. The administrators we have talked to profess a preference for reducing the amplitude and frequency of downtown parties. But their actions seem to indicate that they have yet to fully understand the causal relationship between the way parties are handled at fraternity houses and the increase in downtown parties.

We are not asking the administration to pretend the legal drinking age in Pennsylvania is 18. We are not asking Public Safety to pretend they can't see the 19-year-old walking out of a fraternity house with a can of beer. But we think it is ludicrous and irrational for the University to think that it can eliminate all underage drinking by all University students.

This question, like so many others, comes down to a question of priorities. Should Public Safety look for minor offenses at registered parties that lead to major penalties for the host fraternity or should they look for major violations and safety concerns? Do we really want to enforce every last rule so strictly that someone dies? We wish this question was not applicable. We wish the two issues were complimentary. But they are not and a fundamental decision must be made by the administration.

need to quickly accept the invitations of the Greek community to meet and discuss these issues. They need to seriously consider the reality of the situation and make a decision on the safest and most legal way to proceed.

The students of this university are ultimately responsible for every decision they make and every action they take. No policy or enforcement decision of the leadership of the University is justification for unsafe or illegal actions. But to say that the decisions of the administration don't con-

Do we really want to enforce every last rule so strictly that someone dies? We wish this question was not applicable. We wish the two issues were complimentary.

But they are not and a fundamental decision must be made by the administration.

tribute to the worsening situation is just as indefensible a ducking of responsibility as a student who refuses to own up for their own actions. We just hope that their administration decides to look at this growing problem now, before some tragedy occurs downtown or out of town.

Life is about making difficult decisions where idealism and practicality conflict. We hope that the administration shows the current students a shining example of reasonable decision making. Teach us through your actions as administrators and enhance the education we receive in and out of class.

The administration and Public Safety

Students should park carefully

I write this as an open letter to all students tempted to park illegally, particularly in the cul-de-sac between Swartz dorm and the Bertrand Library.

On Tuesday, September 30, I advised a student not to park illegally (as he was about to do), thereby saving him $50 in parking fines. As my reward, I discovered that my wife's car had been vandalized, with an orange stuffed in the exhaust and a banana smeared into the driver's door handle. (I have since reported the incident to Bucknell campus security, and will not hesitate to pursue the matter.)

Aside from this student (dark hair, smoker, driving a two-door car) being too lazy to read simple parking instructions (on signs, and in all of the literature circulated by the University, which he undoubtedly received, since he had a Bucknell student parking sticker)-or too dense to understand them; and aside from this student being too childish to realize I had saved him (or his parents, upon whom I am sure he must depend) $50; and aside from the obvious insecurities he is unconsciously acting out (using a banana, but only one orange), he was clearly not mature enough to confront me in person, and instead decided to act out his infantile aggression upon my wife's car.

Please be advised that you have this paragon of everything that is wrong with bestowing trust based on age rather than maturity for the fact that, from now on, I will not hesitate to contact campus security in cases where students are illegally parked, anywhere I see them on campus. Rather than take advice from me (or others) and saving $50, you can take your chances on a ticket.

I have a camera, I have a cell phone, but I have no more patience for such idiotic, juvenile, and arrogant behavior. And if that student wishes to take the first step to maturity, he can speak with me face-to-face, and save the fruit for snack-time.

Sincerely,

Eric Michael Mazur
Associate Professor
Religion Department

Reader criticizes content choices

To the Editor:

I can't believe some of what you published in the Sept. 26 issue of The Bucknellian.

First, the Ms. O section—perhaps I shouldn't let it bother me, and instead ignore it and let whoever feeds off that kind of stuff enjoy it. But I have to say that if you intend to put together a sophisticated newspaper, I would suggest cutting out anything that resembles a flaky gossip column that would fit more appropriately in Teen People.

Second, the "Strange observations around campus to ponder" article last week—are you trying to fill space? If so, it would behoove you to include some more advertisements rather than an article by a frustrated, temporary cripple who felt compelled to put in print some useless drivel with subtle-yet-offensive jabs specifically at employees and inane campus observations. If you're going to know the place as a country club, hold back on your own snottiness, pal.

I think The Bucknellian is a great paper in general, and I would ask that you please take some more time to consider what you are printing.

Sincerely,

Campbell Gerrish '04

University students lack compassion

To the Editor:

Last Thursday night, my husband fell in front of the Langone Center (LC). Just then, two students came out of the LC and I thought, "Thank heavens—we are not alone." The students walked around him and continued their conversation.

Since 1964, we have had many student friends. The dinner and talk we went to that evening was wonderful, but guess what I remember most? The view of the backs of the indifferent students goes round and round in my head.

Sincerely,

Marcia Milne
Lewisburg resident

Ashcroft needs new profession

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

Thanks to Chevron, National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice has an oil tanker named after her. Thanks to Halliburton, former Chief Executive Officer and current U.S. Vice President Dick Cheney receives millions in retirement benefits. Thanks to Dick Ashcroft is anointed with vegetable oil every time he is appointed to a political office. Unless you rank with U.S. Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas or Ashcroft's late father, you will not be doing the honors. This bizarre act in today's world can only be explained by an even more bizarre persona exemplified by his ardently patriotic songwriting.

In an official debut one year ago, Ashcroft let fly his rousing, jingoistic tune, "Let the Eagle Soar." Rhyming "wings" with "kings" and "shore" with "soar," his poetic prose and harmonic genius allowed Ashcroft to belt out a triumphant four-minute masterpiece. A go-getter, Ashcroft distributed the lyrics so others could sing along, even asking his Hispanic employees to develop a Spanish translation. Despite language, "Let the Eagle Soar" has indeed made a resounding impression.

"Have you heard the song? It really sucks" said one U.S. Department lawyer according to The Guardian. In case you have not heard the song, go online and judge for yourself.

Songwriting aside, Ashcroft does actually find the time to work. Just last week Ashcroft ordered a substantial retooling of the justice system.

Though it will make the justice system more "uniform" in scope, Ashcroft's "order could have a huge impact on the federal justice system. In 2001, the latest year for which figures are available, 96 percent of the cases handled by federal prosecutors resulted in plea deals," according to The Guardian. This goes hand-in-hand with Ashcroft's order last month, deciding to track, some say blacklist, lenient federal judges.

With these levels of charisma, it is high time Ashcroft auditions for Fox network's American Idol.

These orders' impacts are tremendous. With cases already backlogged, reducing plea-bargains means more time and more money spent in court. Uniform sentencing circumscribes a federal prosecutor's room for legal maneuvering, effectively transforming active justice into a merely passive, rubber-stamp process. Worse, the order implicitly demands that the most severe sentence be applied to every case. In many cases then, the death penalty will be the only viable option because a lesser sentence cannot be negotiated. Indeed, Ashcroft's order promotes uniform enforcement, but at its most extreme, it benefits no one.

Already fallen to Ashcroft's agenda are the Lady of Justice and Majesty of Law statues. Realizing that the statues are nude, Ashcroft had them shrouded in curtains. A powerful metaphor in and of itself, Ashcroft has tailor-made justice to reflect a vengeful intolerance congruent to his own worldview. Ashcroft's high-handedness and unreasonable limits on an already overwhelmed system are unacceptable burdens. Justice and law must be freed, and only then can law achieve its lofty goals of unimpeded and unbiased justice.

Ashcroft should take a hint and get out of politics. After all, he lost the Missouri governorship to a dead man, his employees don't like his songs and he's lost sight of what it means to be fair and impartial. With these levels of charisma, it is high time Ashcroft auditions for Fox network's "American Idol." And when that flops, go work for Crisco.

Off-campus living should be allowed

By KEVIN BROWN
Writer

For the last few years, the administration has been discussing the possibility of eliminating the option of living off campus. Although the status of this plan and the time frame over which it would be implemented seems unclear, one proposed policy to this effect is bad for students.

Requiring all students to live on-campus means that shows a paternal attitude that the administration shares toward a student body made up of people old enough to operate heavy machinery, vote in elections, serve in the military and, in some cases, imbibe alcohol.

Students can learn a valuable lesson from paying bills, shopping for food and otherwise surviving on their own. Not all students desire this independence, but many take advantage of it and feel that it rounds out a college education with valuable life skills. The University already decides who is responsible enough to live off campus by having each student apply for this right; there is no need to go any further than this regulation.

Along with stifling the growth of young adults, a policy that keeps students out of downtown segregates students from the town they are a part of for four years. While some students who live off campus are loud, unruly and disrespectful to their neighbors, most get along fine with their non-student neighbors.

Enacting a policy that completely restricts the choice students have in determining where they live is clearly a negative decision that all students should be against.

College students' diets lack good nutrition

By JORDY LEISER
Writer

As I walked into my apartment after a long day of classes, I found one of my roommates sitting on the couch watching the always-exciting afternoon program, "ESPN."

Unusual? Absolutely not. What stuck me as a bit odd, however, was that he was snipping on a beer. Don't get me wrong, I've seen my roommates consume a few alcoholic beverages here and there, but not at 3 pm on a Tuesday.

I asked why he was drinking at such an odd hour, and he replied with the stereotypical, "frat-tastic," college kid response: "Dude, I just got home, I made myself a snack and I got thirsty. I opened up our fridge, and all we have is beer and margarita mix."

Something is wrong with this picture. He should have opened the freezer, because he would have then found the left-over Jose Cuervo, with which he could have made himself a refreshing margarita.

Seriously though, the diet of a college student is not something to joke about. Well, maybe we can make a few jokes. A friend from home who came back from his first semester at college casually threw on about 25 pounds. The kid looked like a bloated goldfish holding its breath.

One obvious reason why college kids gain so much weight is because they eat too much food. So why do we eat so much? Let's take the University Dining Services for example. It's no secret that Dining Services and I don't get along.

One of my biggest complaints is that all the food tastes the same. Burritos, pasta, wraps, hoagies. What's the difference? Mexican night at the caf may as well be Thai night because it uses the same tasteless spices and styrofoam ingredients no matter what country the food is supposedly from. Since everything tastes like nothing and you feel that you have to eat more and more to get full because you don't remember that you have eaten anything at all.

Another major factor that weighs in on the weight-gain effect of college life is alcohol. Who would have thought drinking a liquid could turn you chunky? Doesn't it seem logical that liquid just goes in and then comes out about an hour later? It's clearly evident that I didn't pay much attention in Baby Bio last year. Also, people who drink Michelob Light because it's "healthier" are idiots. They see those commercials with extremely toned people doing 200 crunches and think if they drink some Michelob Light, they'll look like those body builders. I got news for you people: if you're drinking as much as you inevitably will, it doesn't matter if you're pounding Amstel or Michelob—you're going to take in a few calories.

It has been said that the "freshman fifteen" is a common occurrence in the life of a college student. If you ask me, whoever came up with that idea left out a crucial variable necessary in that equation: the remaining three years of college. I think it should be called the "four-year flubber."

Some argue that the rules of gaining weight at college don't apply to University students due to our incredibly fit campus. The University has to have one of the most athletic student bodies of any school in the United States. With so many students participating in varsity athletics and club sports, it's no wonder there are only a few of us who look like Notorious B.I.G.

But what about general nutrition? It's not like if I work out three times a week my nutrition will all of the sudden not matter. I'm surprised my veins aren't already completely clogged with the remnants of bison burgers and cali-mex burritos. It's a miracle that blood actually finds a way to circulate through my body.

I had the pleasure of visiting a friend last year at Cornell University, and one night we ate dinner at one of their cafeterias. I realize that Cornell is about eight times as big as Bucknell, but should that automatically mean those students can enjoy fresh sushi and authentic wonton soup, while we fight in line over plastic French fries and thousand island dressing-soaked basil wraps? (90 percent of which is made of lettuce).

It's hard to make a case for fitness and nutrition on a college campus. With a little drive and will-power, maybe we can up the nutrition factor, if even just slightly. From this day forward, I vow to always have something other than beer and water in my refrigerator. Somebody pass the egg nog.

Living wage necessary

By PHIL MARTOMA
Senior Writer

The living wage, much like every other social justice issue at the University, is overlooked because of apathy. Students don't like to read Catalyst bulletins filled with facts supporting a proposed increased wage for staff workers because they are apparently too boring, or do not appear to apply to them. I would like to remind everyone of the human face of this cause which can be found in the stories of our staff workers, many of whom I would consider my friends.

Through the gloomy desert of our cafeteria, they have helped me to find foods suitable for vegan consumption. These same people are going home after working their long hours, not having made enough money to support themselves or to allow their families to live comfortably.

If, like me, you have ever had a service job, you know that it is not easy. Though it may not take great intelligence, it does require much stamina. With that in mind, think about how you treat people. After they devote so much time to one job, they come home with wages that force them to stretch their budgets thin.

Staff workers will certainly not be getting rich off of a living wage, but their lives will most likely improve. The system as it stands is simply not sustainable.

Anyone calling 25-cent-per-hour raises fair needs a reality check, but these are the facts of working for this University. A friend of mine with kids received a letter informing her of a raise on an hourly basis. A stamp, in this case, was worth more than the raise.

To reward staff workers for not using their sick days, the management implemented the "wooden nickel" program in which workers receive wooden nickels that they may redeem for coupons at the Susquehanna Valley mall.

Sick days were built in to encourage workers not to work when they would spread germs to other workers and decrease the productivity of the group. When labor is continually devalued to the point that the management hopes to get work out of the sick, and things have gone terribly wrong. Don't you want your wraps and sandwiches to be free of germs? Apparently, the management here would not put your health above the less than half a percent of the operating budget of the University.

Consider the Living Wage campaign not just as a social justice issue, but rather as an issue with direct application to the workers themselves as well as to their fellow University students.

Christophe Richard—The Bucknellian

FEATURES

Pennsylvania state parks—something for everyone

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Though situated in a valley full of dairy farms and cornfields, the University is only a few miles from many excellent state forests and parks. You'll be hard-pressed to find any jaw-dropping scenery, but you can find many beautiful areas that offer fresh air, occasional solitude and the chance for outdoor recreation.

Pennsylvania state forests offer something for everyone. The state parks found within these forests, though sometimes lacking in solitude, are great places to spend a day or an afternoon. The following review covers some of the more popular state parks that allow for camping and more.

Raymond B. Winter State Park (R.B. Winter): The closest and most widely known state park to University students is R.B. Winter, or Half-way Dam, as locals call it. Less than 20 miles west, with a 1,000-foot elevation gain, the park provides a cool retreat into the Bald Eagle State Forest, seasonably five to 10 degrees cooler than the rest of the Susquehanna Valley. R.B. Winter is a favorite for its sandy beach, spring-fed lake and picnic facilities. The man-made beach offers a volleyball net and plenty of space to catch some sun after taking a swim in the 50°F water.

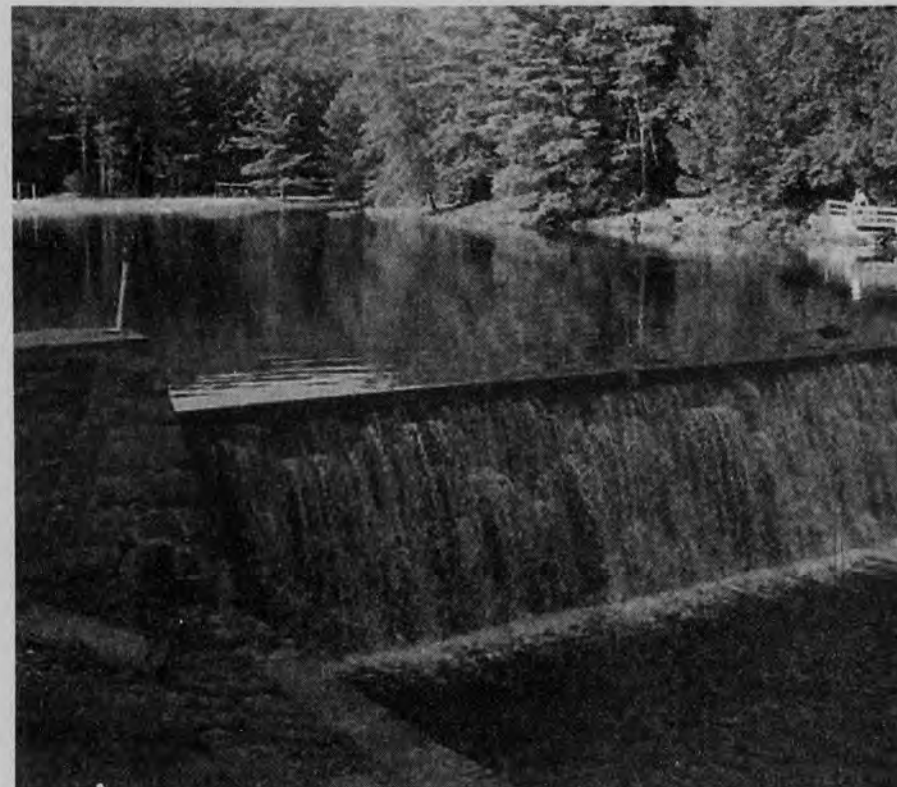

Ricketts Glen State Park (the Glen): Another long-time favorite of University students and only a 50-minute drive away is the Glen. Its draw comes mainly from a five-to-seven-mile trail that showcases more than 20 waterfalls to heights of 94 feet. What many students don't realize is that the Glen is more than just waterfalls. Like R.B. Winter, the Glen has a man-made beach, but the lake is considerably larger, much warmer and offers more than 26 miles of hiking trails. The Glen is a favorite on sunny afternoons in late fall for barbecuing and playing frisbee or football.

World's End State Park: Situated on the curvy Loyalsock River, northeast of Williamsport, World's End is in the heart of the rattlesnake and bear country of Sullivan County, although it would be difficult to find either within the confines of the park. The park offers a fantastic swimming hole on the Loyalsock and a few great short hikes that pass many overlooks. Other attractions include a rock garden offering limited bouldering and the rugged Loyalsock Trail. At 59 miles, it is quite popular for multi-day backpacking trips.

Leonard Harrison and Colton Point State Parks: Situated on opposite sides of the Pennsylvania Grand Canyon, these parks offer impressive viewpoints into the 1,000-foot Pine Creek Gorge and opportunities for some great hiking. If you've ever been to the "real" Grand Canyon, you'll be sorely disappointed; for Pennsylvania, this is as good as it gets. A "Rails to Trails," which is an abandoned railroad that has been converted into public trails, passes through the bottom of the gorge, offering 18 miles of leisurely biking. For the more adventurous, the West Rim Trail, rated highly by "Backpacker Magazine," is a 29-mile trail that offers countless viewpoints in the canyon and great areas of solitude.

Poe Valley and Poe Paddy State Parks: Located in the heart of central Pa., these parks offer some diversity and

Evan Honeyfield—The Bucknellian

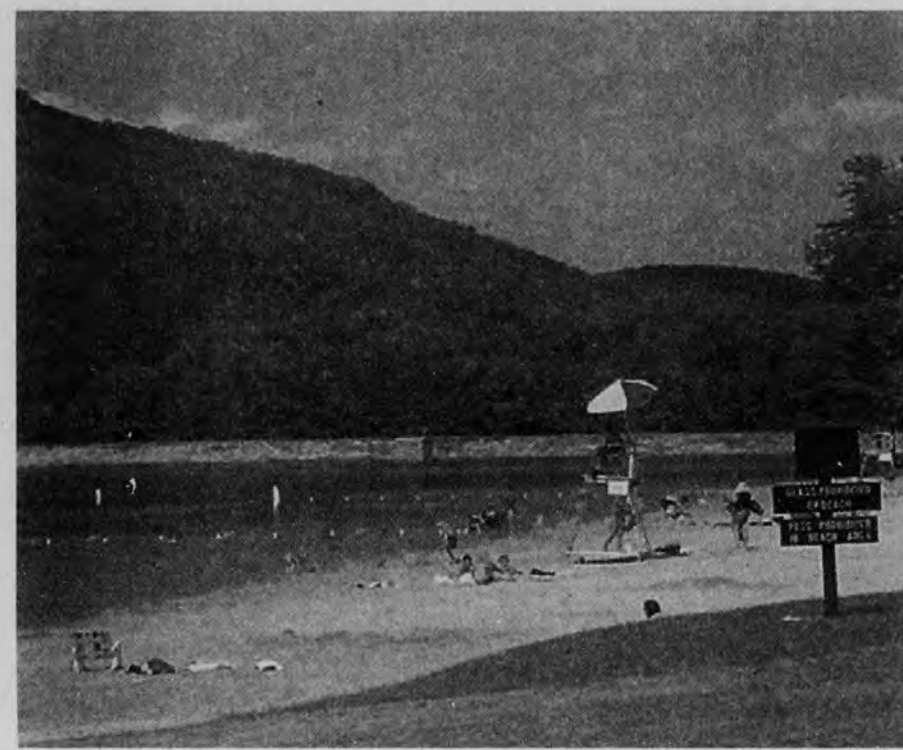

Ricketts Glen State Park is home to more than 20 beautiful waterfalls that visitors can see during a hike along any number of the trails.

yet another chance to escape the "Bucknell bubble." Poe Valley is the more developed of the two, with a large man-made lake perfect for swimming. Poe Paddy is just down the road, near Penn's Creek, which is known for its fishing. In the warmer months, the biggest draw at Poe Paddy is tubing on Penn's Creek. The creek makes bends around a mountain in the shape of a horse shoe. An old railroad tunnel through the mountain allows tubers to get back to the start with just a short walk.

Hickory Run State Park: One of the Pocono Mountains' many draws, Hickory Run State Park is probably best known for its boulder field. A field slightly larger than a football field covered in boulders might sound fairly mundane, but, surprisingly, it's quite impressive. Dropped by a glacier at the end of the ice age, the boulders are piled two-to-six feet deep and range from centimeters to meters in size. If the boulder fields, the many short hiking trails or the lake and ponds don't spark any interest, you'll be only minutes from Skirmish U.S.A., one of the largest and highest-rated paintball play facilities in the United States.

For more information, including driving directions on any of Pennsylvania's State Parks, visit www.dcnr.state.pa.us. The best advice when visiting any of these parks is to make friends with a local and find out how to discover the secret spots hidden in each park.

Evan Honeyfield—The Bucknellian

World's End State Park, located northeast of Williamsport, offers guests an opportunity to go for a refreshing swim at its appealing beaches.

Riding the rapids is an invigorating experience

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Staff Writer

Just because the University is located within the confines of central Pennsylvania does not mean that we are excluded from the adventures of "wild, more distant" destinations. This week's "adventure" takes us to the relatively local Jim Thorpe, Pa., for a day of white-water rafting.

Jim Thorpe is located approximately an hour and a half from campus and is home to Pocono White-water Rafting, along with several other outdoor recreation centers.

In the past, this small town has been the second-largest tourist attraction on the East Coast. With small shops, restaurants and museums lining its hills, it is still called the "Switzerland of America."

The company offers many outdoor adventures for people of all interests and skill levels. Such opportunities include kayaking, white-water rafting, mountain biking, paintball and combination adventures. My group decided to try the Summer Floater, designed for beginners. Despite its innocent name, the floater was not the "lazy river;" we encountered our fair share of rapids on the Lehigh River.

"I had never gone rafting before and I thought that it was fabulous. The river was higher and moving much faster than the usual that day, and we were able to go over some nice rapids," Meghan Peace '04 said. She was not the only one who thoroughly enjoyed her trip, as all members of our party found the experience invigorating.

"At first I was skeptical of how great rafting could be in Pennsylvania since I've been rafting back home on the Colorado rapids, but it turned out to be quite an exciting ride," Emily Thede '04 said.

It took about three hours to complete the eight-mile floater, though it was shorter than usual due to the speed and height of the river. The upper-level white-water rafting is a longer trip, like the excursions to the Hudson and Moose Rivers also sponsored by Pocono White-water. Prior to embarking on the river, rafters receive training from river guides provided by the company. These same guides accompany all trips in kayaks.

"I thought the guides were very well prepared. I only wish we were on the water longer," Katie Kleissas '04 said.

During the three hours on the river, our group battled rapids, stopped for lunch and just spent time enjoying the company and scenery. The guides even allow rafters to take a swim in the water during the calmer portions of the trip.

Courtesy of Pocono White-water Rafting

About one hour and a-half from campus in Jim Thorpe, Pa., white-water rafting adventures by Pocono White-water Rafting awaits even the most timid.

"Pennsylvania is beautiful, especially on the river, and it's the best opportunity you'll get to push your best friends off a boat!" Jessica Orsulik '05 said.

College students are eligible for Pocono White-water's lower-rate youth price, and large groups receive an even bigger discount. A full list of prices for the various activities is available at its Web site, www.whitewater rafting.com.

If white-water rafting on the Lehigh River is too far away or too rigorous for you, there are several closer and more toned down options that are available. Both Canoe Susquehanna in Lewisburg and Bub's Canoe Rental near Williamsport offer canoe rental trips for large or small groups.

Either option is sure to provide a well-deserved break from classes and work.

"It was a great stress reliever," Sarah Gudenkauf '04 said.

You can reach the rafting company by taking Route 15-north, until you merge onto Route 80-east. After about one hour, look for Exit 284-Blakeslee. Turn right onto Route 115 and follow it for two miles. At this point, turn right onto Route 903. After about 10 miles, you should see Pocono White-water Rafting on your right.

FEATURES

Newest members of Greek community flourish

University chapters of Tau Kappa Epsilon and Zeta Phi Beta return with high hopes for the future

By LAUREN MINACAPPELLI
Writer

While it may seem that the number of Greek organizations at the University is decreasing, two chapters are being welcomed back on campus. Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority both regained their charters after being absent on campus since 1998 and 1980, respectively.

Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity (TKE), was founded in 1899 at Wesleyan College. On Dec. 6, 1947, the Beta Mu chapter was started at Bucknell. In 1998, the alumni board revoked its charter.

"[It claimed] the fraternity was not productive, [and that we] weren't fulfilling what we were supposed to be doing," TKE member Duff Weber '05 said.

Four years later, national representatives decided that the Beta Mu chapter should be permitted to renew its charter. The two representatives recruited nine men during recruitment of Fall 2002. TKE President Jeff Puro '05 and Weber were among those nine, and they continued a rolling recruitment process all year long.

By the end of the fall semester, 28 men were recruited, putting them over the 20 men required to form a colony. At the end of spring semester the total was up to 40, which allowed the brothers to petition for a charter. They did so on March 31 and were granted a charter two months later.

Getting started wasn't as easy as some might think.

"[It was a] tough start last year," Puro said.

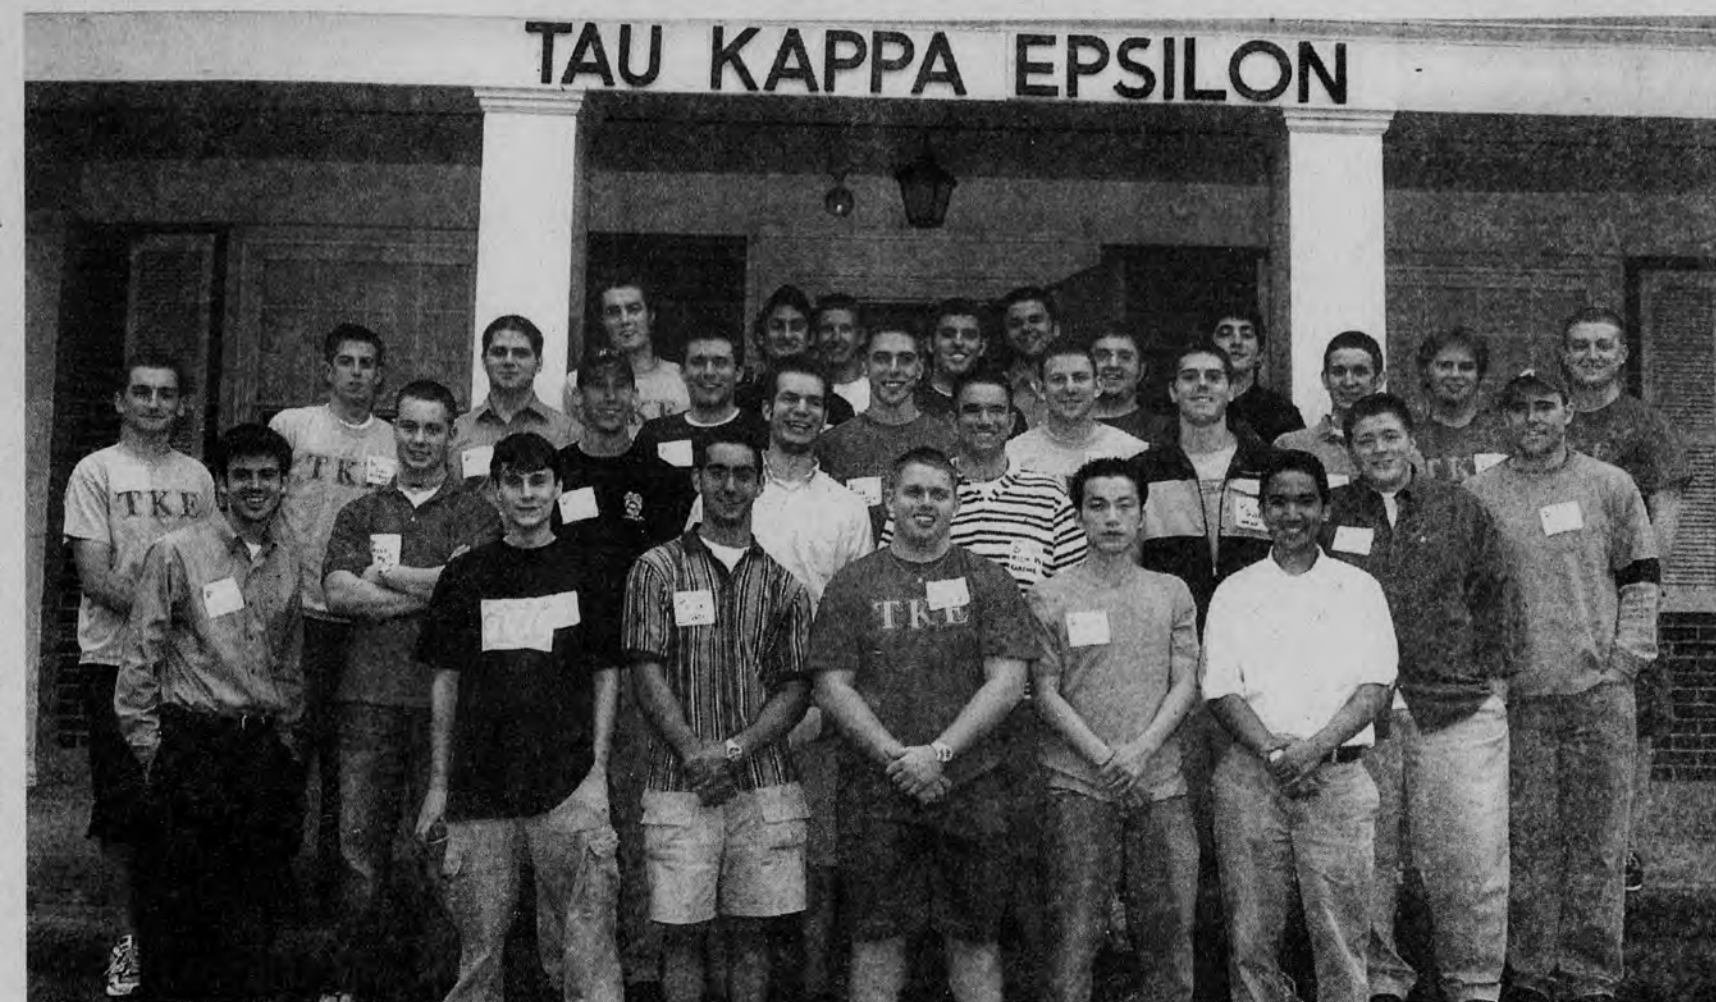

"[Lack of] name recognition didn't help, but as the numbers grew, word started to spread."

Recruitment also presented a problem because the current brothers never went through the process themselves. It went pretty well though, according to Puro. This year TKE had a pledge class of 15. While they expected a larger number, they will continue with rolling recruitment and will hold a spring recruitment as well.

"[We are] happy with our guys. We want to be stalwart on this campus," Puro said.

He is confident that TKE will be a brotherhood of progression and growth.

To accomplish this, TKE will host weekly dinners with sororities, sponsor non-alcoholic dance parties and sell roses for formals. It will participate in philanthropic events, such as helping with Habitat for Humanity, adopting a 2-mile stretch of

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity, who moved back into its house on Fraternity Row this semester, has many plans for the upcoming year. Another addition to Greek life, the newest sorority Zeta Phi Beta has hopes of moving into Hunt Hall in the upcoming semesters.

Route 15 and working to raise money for their national philanthropy, the Alzheimer's Association.

For women on campus, the newest option in sororities is Zeta Phi Beta. Founded in 1920 at Howard University in Washington, D.C., the Gamma Iota chapter of Zeta Phi Beta was brought to Bucknell in 1979. After 1980, all members had graduated and left no new class to continue the chapter. The chapter was reactivated last spring.

"Once we were accepted by Panhellenic and approved by the Council on Greek Life and the Committee for Complementary Activities on behalf of the University, the Gamma Iota chapter could charter new members or become active" said

Alisha Lang '05, president of the current Gamma Iota chapter.

Since Zeta Phi Beta is not part of National Panhellenic Council, it has no formal recruitment. Women who wish to become new members must go through a membership-intake process. As of yet, no new members have been accepted this year.

"We take pride in chapters of several extraordinary women over the large chapters associated with Panhellenic Recruitment or IFC's Rush," Lang said.

The chapter's plans for this year include a gift auction, participation in the Plan for Prominence, a Holiday Celebration Ball and "Drop Beats Not Bombs." And to celebrate the sorority's principle of "Finer Womanhood," they will have Finer Womanhood Week.

"[Our long-term goal is to uphold] the sorority's principles of scholarship, service, sisterly love and finer womanhood," Lang said.

Hunt Hall, reopened last year after a massive renovation, has one suite remaining for a sorority to inhabit.

"[We] hope to claim the last suite in Hunt," said Assistant Director for Fraternity and Sorority Affairs, Shauna Irwin.

Irwin, also a member of Zeta Phi Beta, recognizes that the Gamma Iota chapter has a lot of work ahead, but feels that this year will be good for it.

Economist Robert Shiller wonders why we have such faith in the utter rationality of markets when we ourselves can be kinda, you know, irrational.

Bad judgment, lousy information, half-baked strategies—there are times when money brings out the worst in people. That's why Prof. Shiller's retirement dollars are invested with a company whose levelheaded thinking stands out in a world where impulse and intuition are bucking intelligence and insight.

Log on for ideas, advice, and results.
TIAA-CREF.org or call 800.842.1924

Retirement | Insurance | Mutual Funds | College Savings | Trusts | Investment Management

Robert Shiller became a participant in 1975. TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc., and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc., distribute securities products. ©2002 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association—College Retirement Equities Fund (TIAA-CREF), New York, NY. A charitable donation was made on behalf of Robert Shiller.

FREE Ticket to Paradise
with every Spring Break package!
Limited time offer. Check our website for details.
www.studentexpress.com
Call NOW: 1.800.787.3787

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Travel Operator
CANCUN
ACAPULCO
JAMAICA
BARBADOS
FLORIDA
Sell Flights, Rent Cars, Get Free New Hiking Call for group discounts!
1-800-443-4347 / www.ststravel.com

HARVEST HOUSE
CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP
GO Vertical
310 Market St.
Downtown Lewisburg
Under CVS
Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL

Mondays - Monday Night Football on 50+ TVs
$5 All You Can Eat Wings!

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm
8 pm Trivia Contest! Win $30 gift cert.!

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings -- $5!!!
10 pm-2 am - Live band in The Vault

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak -- $12.99!!!
9 pm - 2 am -- Karaoke Night!!!

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell!! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Half-Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 pm

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $18.99
Hip Hop DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm
All Request DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
16+ Dance Club with Hip Hop DJ!

Now Hiring**
Wait Staff and Bartenders**

WANTED: LEADERS/PILOTS
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER IN OUR COMPANY,
THIS COULD BE YOUR OFFICE.

Few people will ever set foot in an office like this. But then, few people have what it takes to be a Marine Officer. Officer Candidate School (OCS) is the first step towards preparing you for a future beyond anything you could imagine.

- Attend a PAID INTERNSHIP during the summer in Quantico, VA
- NO OBLIGATION
- Unparalleled LEADERSHIP TRAINING
- TUITION ASSISTANCE is available

For more information contact us @:
1-800-544-2259
or osowh@aol.com

www.MarineOfficer.com

Market Street PHOTO

We like picky people!

We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.

523-1543

M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5; 24 hour drop box
120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Salads for every occasion since 1961!

Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs

www.DorDays.com
570-524-7481

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro

Come see what's new and exciting. Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts

August 24th
11:00 AM to 2:00 PM

Wednesday-Saturday Bakery 10-2
Lunch 11:30 - 2, Dinner 5-9
www.elizabethsbistro.com

412 Market St. Lewisburg
570-523-8088

FEATURES

Students exercising is a common sight at the University fitness center. Every day students devote many hours to achieving the "perfect" figure, the ideal of which is actually unhealthy and unnatural.

Do these jeans make me look fat?

The pressures on University students to make the weight

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

COMMENTARY

Eating disorders are no longer unheard of in society. It is likely that each of us knows someone, diagnosed or not, who suffers from some form of an eating disorder. Be it anorexia, bulimia or any combination of the two, it is something that has sadly become a regular occurrence in modern society.

Despite the fact that we are all well-educated on the existence and detrimental effects of eating disorders we often ignore them. You may think that's impossible, as you'd most certainly be the first to confront a friend or loved one you suspected had a problem. All across this campus, however, students are depriving and over-exercising their bodies to achieve the may contribute to the development of an eating disorder, including low self-esteem, depression, a quest for perfection or a history of abuse. The most prevalent factor in the development of a disorder in college students stems from a need for acceptance.

"Eating disorders are generated by cultural pressures that glorify thinness and place value on obtaining the 'perfect body,'" according to PBS.com.

Who decides what the perfect body is? In our society, a lot of that decision-making is put in the hands of the media. By being constantly exposed to models and beautiful people, society's image of "normal" has become drastically distorted.

"Most fashion models are thinner than 98 percent of American women," according to PBS.com.

Despite the obviously unhealthy nature of these models, it is the picture many people hold of the "ideal" figure.

The University is not immune to, and is actually a haven for, the pressure to be one of these "beautiful people." One look at the fitness center on any afternoon is enough to realize that fact; nearly every machine is occupied. University students and faculty alike know the emphasis placed on physical fitness, yet rarely is it brought to anyone's attention.

"I watch my roommate eat nothing but salad and fat-free frozen yogurt at dinner, and then spend hours at the gym burning off calories she didn't eat. But I don't know how to say anything to her because I don't want to upset her," a junior student who would like to remain anonymous said.

Students will devote hours to their workout, jumping from machine to machine, oftentimes burning more calories than they've consumed in the day. This practice, which according to mirror-mirror.org is considered a form of bulimia as it physically "purges" all calories consumed from a person's body, is usually ignored and the problem continues to grow.

"Eating disorders are fairly common on campus," Director of the Women's Resource Center (WRC) Molly Dragiewicz said.

Although that fact is obvious to Most fashion models are thinner than 98 percent American women.

—PBS.com

anyone who takes one look across the quad, it is harder to know where to find help. The University is beginning to take steps towards both treatment and prevention of eating disorders, but students are often unaware of the disorder or unwilling to go for help.

"The Women's Resource Center is developing a new peer-education program on body image that will focus on the social construction of unhealthy and restrictive norms for body shape and size, their implications and how they change over time," Dragiewicz said.

In addition, the WRC is hosting a film series titled "Slim Hopes" on Nov. 3, which will be repeated again in the spring semester. They will also be distributing flyers throughout the year promoting a healthy body image.

The WRC is not the only service on campus trying to take a stand against the eating disorders among students.

Psychological Services has recently established "The Eating Issues Support Group," which is a small group that will meet once a week to discuss distorted body images and unhealthy eating practices and how to overcome them.

"In my experience as a therapist, every student who suffers with an eating disorder is an individual with a very unique and personal story that needs addressing," Nancy Grant M.Ed. L.P.C. of Psychological Services said.

The Health Center website provides information on how to help a friend with an eating disorder, and the Sirens, a women's issues group on campus, will be hosting multiple body-image events and activities from Oct. 10-15.

Are support groups and body-image forums enough to do away with these problems? Of the students that were willing to discuss the issue most agreed that the problem runs deeper than the administration realizes.

"While we all wish to be the croissant of our morning breakfast, shapely and simply irresistible, this is not an easy delicacy to become. Here at Bucknell, the typical body image is seen as a gourmet delight constructed out of extreme exercise, starving oneself and creating a fantasy in which we call ourselves healthy," she said. "However, the recipe for truth is that we are neglecting our body of nutrition and overexerting ourselves with exercise, and succeed only in falling down the rabbit hole and into the wonderland of disaster."

Obviously, weight and body image are problems affecting University students, and certainly not new ones. Years have not brought about changes in behaviors and beliefs necessary to seriously change University "ab"-norms. Ignoring the problem will only propagate it further. So, next time you watch your roommate, friend or even a complete stranger deprive themselves of food or exercise in excess, say something. One person can make all the difference.

Another titillating edition brought to you by...

Sex and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My boyfriend and I have been together for over a year now and things have been going really well. However, my one complaint with him and with our relationship is that he has become a lot less affectionate. During the first few months of our relationship he was always holding my hand, rubbing my back or kissing me. Now, I'm lucky if I get a pat on the back or a handshake. Does this mean it's time to end the relationship, or is this something we can fix?

—M

Dear "M,"
I don't want to sound like I am trivializing your problem, because I know that it is upsetting, but this could be quite easy to fix. First, I would advise you not to end the relationship yet, unless there are additional factors that you are unhappy about but weren't included in your letter. It would be unfair to break up with your guy without giving him a chance to try to fix the situation. That being said, I would say that there are three basic steps you should follow.

Step One: Lead By Example. Show him how you want to be treated by treating him to a little TLC. Perhaps he is feeling neglected in that department, too. I would recommend grabbing his hand the next time you are walking somewhere together and holding it. This simple gesture will let him know that you are happy to be hanging out with him and that you care. The next time the two of you are watching TV or studying, try to maintain some kind of physical contact. Prop your legs across his or let him lean on you. This will make you feel closer as you veg out or work. You can also try lightly brushing your fingers up and down the inside of his arm (this is where it is most sensitive). This action will have a very soothing effect on both him and you as you do it. The point of these exercises is to hopefully get your guy to notice how much more affectionate you are being and for him to reciprocate some of this behavior.

Step Two: Tell Him What You Like. Don't worry; this is not as scary as it sounds. Try slipping little recommendations into conversations with your guy. You can do this by saying "I love it when you (fill in affectionate gesture of your choice)." "It feels so good when you (fill in affectionate gesture of your choice)" or "I would love it if you would try (fill in the affectionate gesture of your choice)." This leaves no doubt in his mind about exactly what you like. He is not a mind reader and may have no idea that you love it when he rubs the soles of your feet or plays with your hair. Now you are ready for...

Step Three: Compliments and Flattery. When your guy does something you like or is affectionate, tell him how great he is and how much you enjoyed whatever it is that he did. It's like Ms. O always says: Positive reinforcement and compliments will get you EVERYWHERE!

I guarantee you that these three steps will have the two of you feeling as giddy as you did when you first started dating! So enjoy each other and don't be afraid to be affectionate!

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell: Tell me about your date from Hell.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

October 3, 2003

inside

Volume 132, Number 5

Sports:

The men's cross country team finished fifth at the Iona Meet of Champions, while the women placed 12th.

See page B2

Bison edge out defending PL Champions

With an impressive 3-2 win over Lafayette, the Bison improve to 5-1 overall and 2-1 in the Patriot League

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell field hockey team has wasted little time in returning to its winning ways, piling up another pair of victories against UMBC and Lafayette. Three days after suffering their first loss, the Bison defeated UMBC 4-1 on the road and then returned home to edge out defending Patriot League Champion Lafayette 3-2. The team is now 5-1 overall and 2-1 against Patriot League competition.

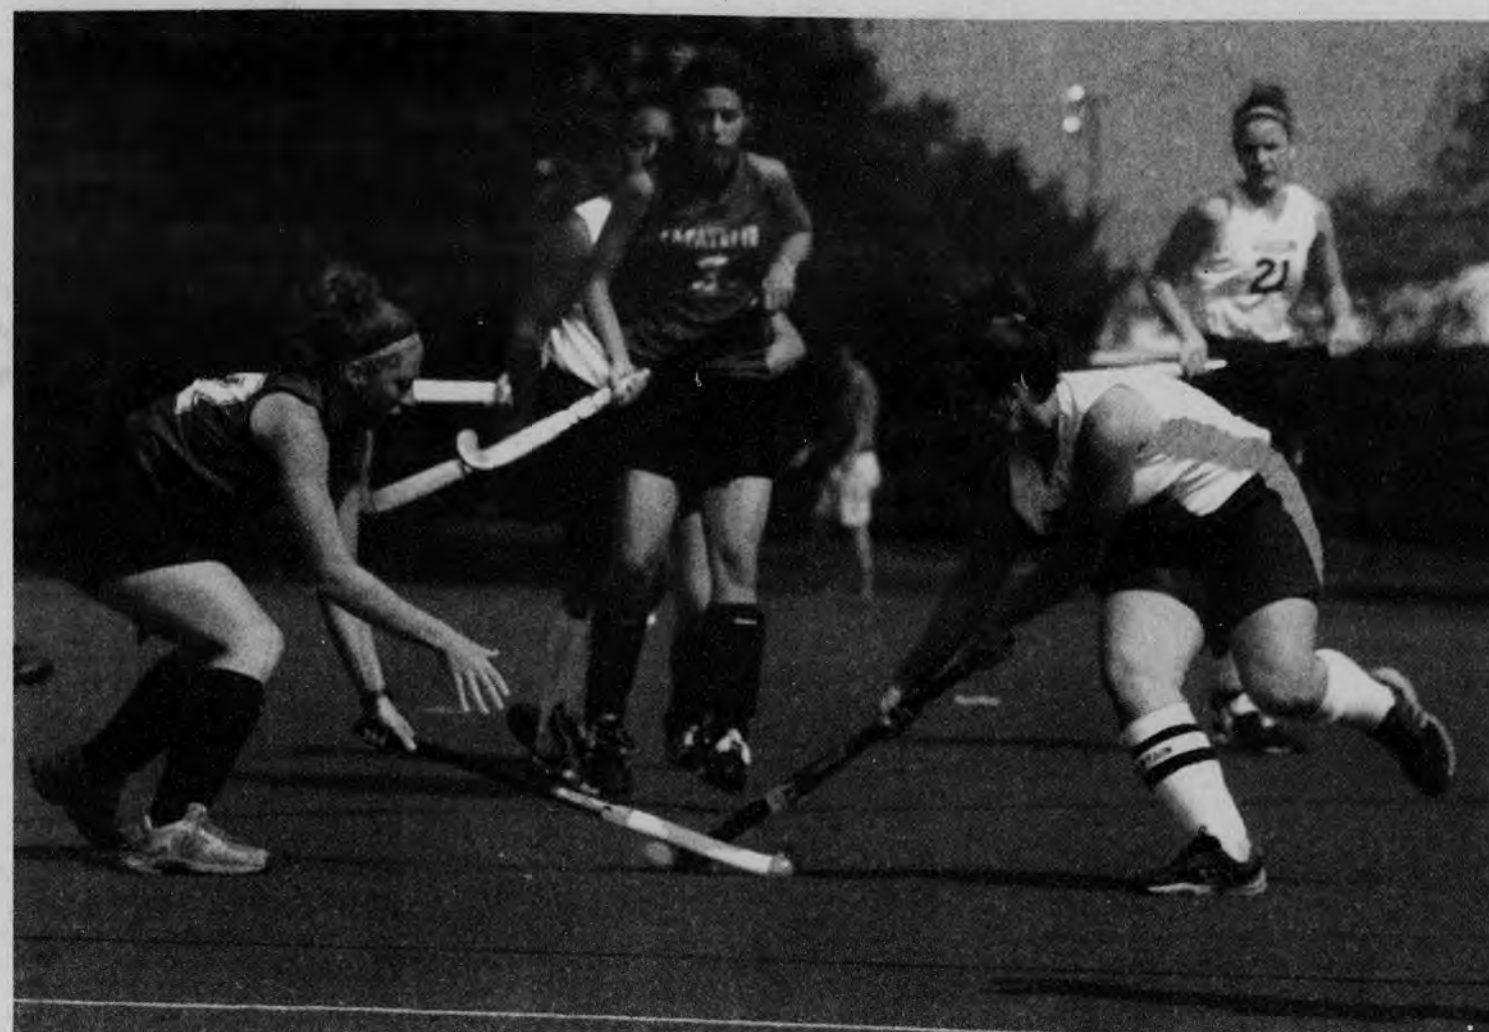

The Bison bumped their league record over the 500 mark on Saturday after recording their first win on Graham Field. The victory's impact went far beyond the standings, as it represented a tremendous team effort against a daunting rival.

"This Lafayette win is what we have been training all spring, summer and fall for. The feeling we felt after the game is the reason we play intercollegiate sports," Kirsten Nilsen '06 said. "We accomplished something that few thought we could and we did it together, as a team."

The win showcased the team's character, solidifying its status as a major challenger in the league.

"I think we all are aware that collectively as a team we are capable of winning against the odds and have a great shot at the Patriot League Championship," Kate Ruda '04 said.

Goalie Liz Jordan '06 was also aware of the message that the Bison sent out with the win.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Lindsey Gentel '04 maneuvers around a Lafayette player during the Bison's 3-2 victory on Saturday at Graham Field. The win over the defending Patriot League Champions was the team's first victory on the new field, and advanced the Bison's record to 5-1.

"The game, in my opinion, was just more proof that our team is a serious competitor and will be hard to beat this season," Jordan said.

Kelly O'Brien '06 led the scoring with two goals for the Orange and Blue, while Meiko Boynton '05 chipped in with a goal as well.

O'Brien gave the Bison a quick lead when she tallied her first goal of the day, an unassisted shot 12 minutes, 18 seconds into the game. The Leopards managed to knot the game at 1-1 with a goal of their own just under 20 minutes into the game.

Entering the second half with the score still tied, the Bison snatched the lead again when Boynton sliced a goal past the Lafayette defense at 13:49. Lindsey Gentel '04 picked up the assist on the play.

O'Brien padded the lead a bit when she drove home her second goal of the day and fourth goal of the season at 14:42. The goal, assisted by Nilsen, gave the Bison a 3-1 lead.

Lafayette narrowed the deficit to 3-2 with a goal off a penalty shot, but ultimately fell short as Bucknell's defense dominated again, and the Bison left the field with their second league victory of the season.

Head Coach Heather Lewis was impressed with her team's Bison fall in last 21 seconds

By JOSH HERWITT
Staff Writer

Looking to rebound from its last-minute loss against Cornell, the Bucknell football team traveled to Columbia on Saturday, only to face another devastating loss in the final seconds.

With 21 seconds left in regulation, Columbia quarterback Jeff Otis hit Travis Chmelka with a 5-yard touchdown pass to lead the Lions to a 19-16 victory over the Bison.

After Columbia (1-1) lost an early 12-0 lead, Otis navigated a 73-yard drive with 3 minutes, 27 seconds left, completing eight of 10 passes for 69 yards with five ending up in the arms of Chmelka. Otis threw for a total of 236 yards on 25 of 46 passes including two touchdowns.

The Columbia offensive attack was balanced with running back Ayo Oluwole's 110 yards on 21 carries and one touchdown, but the Bison defense played tough for the majority of the game.

"Columbia was very balanced and did a nice job keeping us off balance," Head Coach Tim Landis said. "However, if you take away the final 73-yard drive, our defense held them under 300 yards of total offense on the day. We are

See FOOTBALL, page B2

Volleyball stays undefeated in Patriot League

By BRENT BUTLER
Sports Editor

With a 3-0 victory over Patriot League foe Holy Cross on Saturday at Davis Gym, the Bucknell volleyball team was able to maintain its perfect Patriot League record. Just a day after an impressive three-game win over Army, the Bison came out strong and defeated the Crusaders in three quick games.

"Both teams were good last year," Chelsea Anderson '06 said. "I really think that the reason we have won the Patriot League games is that we have played well together as a team. We had a really hard preseason and now everyone is just pumped to start league play."

The Orange and Blue started off game one with a 30-17 win in which Holy Cross could not put together an offensive drive. The Crusaders had a .000 hitting percentage for the game, and the Bison exploited Holy Cross' weakness and hit .275. The Bison kept the momentum going into game two hitting an impressive .349 on the game, and winning by the score of 30-20.

"Based on our scouting reports and watching tapes of their games, they looked a lot better than how they played against us. They didn't play their best game that night," Anderson said.

The Crusaders put up a tough defense in the third game;

however Bucknell was able to complete the sweep with a 30-26 victory.

"We performed really well throughout the match. We served tough and played consistent as a whole," Anderson said.

The Bison offensive was once again lead by Jackie Leahy '05 with 14 kills on the night and Jennie Smith's '07 13 kills.

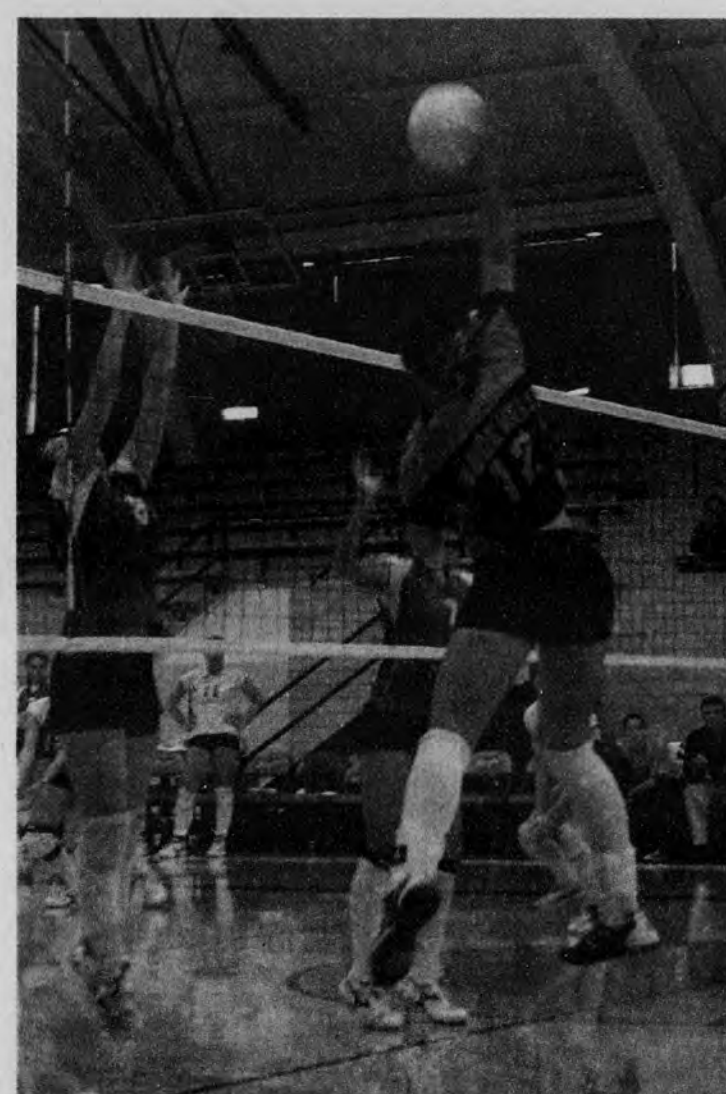

The Bison defense performed extremely well, holding Holy Cross to an overall hitting percentage of .061. The defense and blocking were vital to the Bison victory, with nine blocks to Holy Cross' one. The Orange and Blue were able to maintain a .270 hitting percentage for the match.

"It's nice to complete a Patriot League weekend by getting that second win and the sweep. We had balanced scoring with Leahy and Smith, and our defense was solid with four players in double-digit digs, and I'm pleased with how our blocking is coming along," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said.

Anderson and Brandi Trapasso '04 lead the team with 15 digs a piece in the match. Chelsea Robertson '05 added 11 digs and Breean Trapasso '04 had 10 digs to help the Bison victory.

The Bison have attributed much of their success to the intense preseason competition and training they received earlier in the year.

"Playing tough competition

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Jackie Leahy '05 leaps up to spike the ball against Holy Cross on Saturday. Leahy led the offense with 14 kills on the day.

during preseason just makes us stronger when we play the teams in our league," Anderson said. "After starting 2-0, I am really excited about our season."

See SOCCER, page B4

Café Latte celebrates 10 successful years

A month-long celebration, including the musical talents of owner Jay Shank, will help ring in the decade

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Downtown Lewisburg is well-known by students and residents alike for the quaint and cozy establishments lining Market Street. Among them, tucked discretely behind CVS at 21 N. 3rd Street, is Café Latte, a coffee shop celebrating its 10th anniversary on Oct. 22.

Café Latte opened Oct. 22, 1993, and offers its customers both a friendly atmosphere and a wonderful cup of coffee.

"We have a whole collection of regulars. They keep their mugs here, on a shelf on the wall," said Jay Shank, Café Latte owner and operator.

That shelf hangs in the original part of Café Latte, which was expanded about five years ago into an adjacent apartment to accommodate the increasing clientele. The doors are open 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. on weekdays, and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. on weekends, giving coffee, junkies enough opportunity to get in and have their daily fix.

"I roast all my own coffee, and feature exotic and flavored blends," Shank said. In addition to a wide selection of coffee and beverages, Café Latte also offers pastries and breads, along with a list of sandwich options.

On a technological note, the Café recently added wireless capabilities, so it is now an even more perfect environment for students to escape from the antics of campus and still be able to get all their work done.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Café Latte is a cozy place to sip some coffee or get some work done.

Shank and his employees do not plan on letting the Café's upcoming 10th anniversary go unnoticed and have plans in the works for the entire month of October. From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. every weekday, Café Latte will be featuring a program they call "Chautauquas," or "Ask the Experts." Experts of varying specialties will be in to discuss their areas of expertise and answer questions customers may have. Topics discussed will range from legal advice from Marty Wilson on Oct. 10, to Paul Mauger discussing his complete hiking of the Appalachian Trail on Oct. 15.

Also featured during their month-long celebration are the musical stylings of "Me and Two Old Guys," a band featuring Shank. This "concert" will be from 7-10 p.m. on Oct. 10. Throughout the official anniversary week there will be daily trivia in which a correct answer will win you either a pound of Café Latte coffee or an umbrella. And on the official birthday, Oct. 22, there will be cake served all day, compliments of Shank.

It's obvious from the shelf of mugs donated to all the regulars that Café Latte has entertained a great deal of success in the past decade. It is Shank's hope that the next 10 will be just as wonderful. And with so much to offer its customers, from a delicious cup of coffee to a quiet environment to do work, the future looks very bright.

Poetry Slam

The University's first slam of the semester hit the 7th Street Café on Saturday.

See page B7

Bucknell Student Government Meeting

Dean of Students Richard Ferraro addressed concerns for the number of alcohol and drug related incidents at the University this year.

See page B8

Theater preview

"Dinner with Friends" examines the nuances of relationships.

See page B6

Sports

Men finish fifth at Iona Meet of Champions

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The men's cross country team took a step toward the consistency it lacked last season by running to a fifth-place finish at the Iona Meet of Champions. The Gaels, ranked eighth in the most recent poll, played the part of host well, winning with an impressively low score of 37 points.

Graduate student Greg Costello, who led the Bison with his 16th-place finish, was upbeat about the team's performance and his own, but realizes it's still very early in the season.

"I was very pleased with how I finished," Costello said. "However, I have a lot of work to do in order to be where I want to at the end of the season. As for the team, I thought it was a great race overall. We still have a good amount of work to do with the second part of our races."

A slow start to the race caused by hot, humid and windy conditions allowed the Bison to get near to the front of the pack of 19 schools before the major hills began.

Head Coach Kevin Donner was pleased that the men established themselves early in the race and with the individual efforts put forth.

"Greg Costello is starting to look like the Greg of old before his injury, so I was very happy for him. Wes Reinhardt '04 ran another solid race for us, and I was very pleased with Aaron Hanlon '04 and Doug Creveling '05."

Costello also expressed his enthusiasm for Hanlon and Creveling.

"People like Doug and Aaron really stepped up and made the race for our team," Costello said.

The women didn't fare quite as well, finishing 12th out of 18 schools. The most positive aspect of the weekend was giving the young team experience in big meets and a chance to work together.

The Bison's top five runners finished nine places, seven seconds apart from one another, which kept Donner optimistic.

"If we can get that pack of five about 20 seconds faster between now and Leagues, we will do very well," Donner said.

Jenny Stevens '07, the women's top finisher, placed 60th and keyed off of Leanna Nastase '07, Lauren Bricker '07, Alison Cole '06 and Julie Jakoboski '06.

Stevens was happy to see the pack increase, after finishing with Nastase and Bricker at the Detroit Invitational two weeks ago.

"It really helped to have Allison and Julie with us. We were all running and working together up the hills in the woods," Stevens said.

Although the team ran well together, it was by no means a perfectly executed race.

"Our women got out way too slow and had to work very hard to catch up during the race," Donner said. "We are very young and inexperienced so we learned our lesson."

In Nastase's, Bricker's and Stevens' first 6-kilometer race ever, many lessons were learned.

"I think both individually and as a team it was a learning experience," Stevens said. "We worked our way up well during the second half of the race but were too conservative during the first mile."

Doug Creveling '05 races during the Iona Meet of Champions at Van Courtland Park in N.Y. Creveling was the fourth Bison to cross the line, while Bucknell placed fifth in the team scoring.

Berthod breaks record

By PAT EVANS
Sports Editor

Bison women's tennis player Samantha Berthod '04 won her 50th singles match at the University over the weekend, tying the all-time record as she and her teammates defeated Delaware, 6-1. The men lost a close match 4-3, but both men and women swept St. Francis earlier in the week 7-0.

The Bison women got things started early against Delaware by sweeping doubles play as Veronica Brown '06 and Tanya Sichko '05 won 8-5, while Berthod and Rheanna Gaskin '06 took their match easily 8-2. Rebecca Kral '06 teamed up with Chelsea Mills '06 to win the third doubles match 8-3.

In singles play, Berthod's record-tying win came over deGraffenreid, 6-0. 6-1, on court four one of five singles matches the Bison won on the afternoon.

"It says a lot about how far our program has come when records like this are broken," Head Coach Rebecca Helt said. "No one deserved it more than Sam; she's a great competitor and she's played every spot in this lineup."

The Bison dominated the rest of singles play as Brown won her sets 6-0, 6-2 on court one, Gaskin won 6-2, 6-0 on court three and Mills took her sets 6-1, 6-1 on court five. In the last match of a competition that took approximately four and a half hours to complete, Kral won in overtime 7-5, 4-6, (10-1) on court six. Delaware picked up a point on court two when Sichko fell 6-2, 6-4, but the Bison won the match overall 6-1.

"It was a very solid win for us," Helt said. "We gave up very few games, and we've been playing very well in singles, so I was pleased."

On the men's side, Joe Menezes '05 improved to 8-0 in singles, squeaking out a 7-6(5), 7-6(5) victory over Delaware's Josh Ditman on court four as one of two singles matches the Bison won over the Blue Hens, dropping the overall match 4-3. Matt Pikus '07 was Bucknell's other winner, beating Philip Wayne 6-4, 2-6, 6-4 on court six.

Asher Salam '06 was the last Bison on the court in a match that ended up tipping the win to Delaware. Sanjay Khindri's win clinched the team victory for Delaware, 4-6, 7-5, 7-6(4). Other Blue Hen wins came on court one, where John Tully beat Nick Deneff '05 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, as well as on court three, where Gerald DiChiara '05 fell to Adam Liebman 7-5, 6-4, and on court five, where Aaron Saperstein '06 lost to Mike Riisen 7-6(5), 6-4.

Bucknell won the doubles point, necessitating Delaware's four singles wins to take the match. On court one, Deneff and Pikus beat Tully and Khindri, 9-7, while Salam and Menezes beat Ditman and Ari Zweig, 8-4 on court two; DiChiara and Don Whaley '06 beat Riisen and Mike Austin 8-6 on court three. In exhibition play, Brian Cohen '07 and Dave Eckelberger '05 beat Liebman and Wayne 8-6.

"We could have won the match and I thought we should have won the match," Helt said. "We had our chances to win, but there were some bright spots and we have better playing ahead."

The Bucknell men will take a trip to Pittsburgh next weekend, where they will face Duquesne on Saturday at 10 a.m. and Robert Morris on Sunday at 10 a.m. The Bison women will compete in the ECAC Tournament on Saturday and Sunday at Army.

"We're going to be without some players because of academic conflicts, so we're looking forward to getting some players' tough match experience to prepare for Patriot League play," Helt said.

Columbia defeats Bison in final seconds

FOOTBALL from page B1

getting better each week, and we just need to continue to improve."

Bucknell (2-2) answered the Columbia scoring threat with 16 points, taking a 13-12 lead on a 12-yard run into the end zone by Antwan Kennedy '05. Placekicker Ryan Korn '07 added three more points with a 25-yard field goal in the fourth quarter. Korn also made field goals from 28 and 22 yards in the first half and was named Patriot League Rookie of the Month for his performance.

With the rushing offense heavily defended, the Bison were productive in the passing department as Bison quarterback Daris Wilson '05 completed 10 of 14 passes for 205 yards, including a 62-yard completion to wide receiver Albert Marquardt '04.

"Teams that want to crowd the box to stop our running game should be vulnerable to the pass, and we have been able to take advantage of that in recent weeks," Landis said.

Although the Bison outscored the Lions in almost every statistical category on Saturday, Columbia was able to execute its plays in timely fashion to win the game.

"We won the statistical battle in just about all areas of the game, however, we came out on the short end of things in the end," Landis said. "When it really counted, Columbia made the plays necessary to win and we did not."

The Bucknell football team will try to avenge its two-game losing streak next week at Fordham (3-1) in the first of several upcoming Patriot League games. The Bison look to continue their steady offensive production and use strong defense to fend off the Rams tomorrow at 1 p.m.

"We need to continue to build on the good things we are doing and there are plenty of those," Landis said. "Offensively, we are moving the ball very well. Now we need to find that end zone more frequently. On defense we need to tackle better and put more pressure on the quarterback. Finally, we need to finish our opponents off when we have that opportunity."

The Bison defensive line prepares for a play during an earlier game at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium. The defense was strong against Columbia, but the Bison fell short of a win.

Cinema Center
Sollittgrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall • 374-2040
Play Dates: October 3-9, 2003
Out of time (R)	School of Rock (PG-13)	12:40, 2:20, 7:45, 10:15
2:40, 7:15, 9:50
Roundup (PG-13)	Secondhand Lion (PG)	12:45, 4:05, 9:20
1:15, 4:15, 6:45, 9:15
Under World (R)	Duplex (PG-13)	1:30, 5:10, 7:30, 9:45
1:45, 1:15, 7:40
Cabin Fever (R)	Match Stick (PG-13)	1:35, 5:15, 7:15, 9:15
Cold Creek Manor (R)	Pirates of the Caribbean (PG-13)	12:40, 3:30
1:45, 4:30, 7:10, 9:40
Once Upon a Time in Mexico (R)	Under the Tuscan Sun (PG-13)	12:45, 4:20, 8:50
1:15, 3:30, 7:20
Lost in Translation (R)
1:45, 4:50, 7:20, 9:30
Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

SPRING BREAK-
Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489! Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More!
Organize Small Group- Earn Free Trips plus Commission!
Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

USA SPRING BREAK.com
Cancun, Bahamas, Acapulco, Jamaica & More!
Don't be fooled! Go with Quality and Experience!
28 years in business!
Largest Student Tour Operator
(Division of USA Student Travel)
Call Toll Free: 1-877-460-6077
Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $$

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

It's heroes versus goats in Chicago

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Since my column last week detailed the frequent misdoings of the Boston Red Sox, I consider it appropriate to center this one on the other half of history's ineptitude exacta. If the Red Sox have one failsafe year after year, it is this: they aren't the Cubs.

Say what you will about the Red Sox, but the Chicago Cubs simply corner the market on perennial frustration. They haven't dragged a World Series title into the windy city for 95 years—and they haven't even been to the World Series since 1945.

There was a time, if one digs deep enough into history, that the Cubbies were not synonymous with perpetual doom. In the first decade of the 20th century, Chicago's National League troop was a postseason mainstay, a team that always gave Northsiders a reason to stand up from their 50-cent seats and doff their dapper straw hats and berbies.

Out of the first five World Series, the Cubs appeared in three of them and won two. In fact, they became the first team to win two consecutive championships after downing the Detroit Tigers in 1907 and 1908. Between 1906 and 1908, the team averaged 107 wins per season, including a record 116 wins in 1906 that stood until the 2001 Mariners broke it.

There wasn't much to complain about in that era. From their poetically immortalized twin-killing trio to their digitally challenged ace, the Cubs exuded class and adroitness from one end of the diamond to the other.

The next three decades produced a smattering of pennants, all of which they failed to convert into World Championships—still, seven league titles in 30 years isn't really any cause for abhorrence or embarrassment.

Then came 1945 and, with the passing of that year, the beginning of an epic stagnancy that is for the most part unrivaled in the sport.

That season was a pleasant return to glory for the franchise, as they won 98 games and a berth in the World Series against—for the fourth time—the Detroit Tigers. After the first three games of the series, all was well in the land of Wrigley, as the Cubbies shut out Detroit twice and snagged a 2-1 advantage in the best-of-seven set.

Unbeknownst to Chicagoans, fate was about to contaminate the rest of the story with a tradition of unpleasantry.

Like all good baseball stories, the Cubs' pathogenesis began with a goat.

Legend has it that the Chicago Cubs have fallen victim to the curse of a disgruntled goat-owner and his barnyard companion since 1945. The Cubs will try to unseat the curse this October.

Only this goat had nothing to do with errors or blunders or bad decisions. He was, quite literally, a goat—horns, fur, cloven hooves, indiscriminate appetite, the whole deal.

This particular artiodactyl, named "Murphy," had managed to procure a ticket to game four of the series, courtesy of his owner can the Cubs, announcing that this team would never again win—or see—a World Series.

friendly at all to furry ticketholders.

Sianis wasn't about to let the Cubs get away with such heinous species discrimination and left the franchise with a little present upon his departure. With the type of backwoods articulation one would expect from a man who takes a goat to a baseball game, Sianis dropped a hex on the Cubs, announcing that this team would never again win—or see—a World Series.

Sianis' threat didn't exactly strike fear into the hearts of incredulous Cubs fans, even after the Tigers struck back that day to even the series at two games apiece and then downed the Cubs again in game five. The Cubs set aside any pending barnyard curses in game six, scraping out an 8-7 victory in the 12th inning.

Then the Tigers steamrolled the Cubs in game seven, denying them the World Series title. The Cubbies' fans would just have to wait until next season.

Or the next season. Or maybe the next. Or maybe 58 years.

Murphy and his bitter owner, it turned out, have had the last laugh all along. The Cubs haven't won so much as a pennant since Billy Goat Sianis and his hairy pal begrudgingly stormed out of P.K. Wrigley's ballpark.

Fans have tried—and with perhaps a smidgen of success—to lift the curse. Even Sianis' son tried to help deactivate the wretched spell, dragging his own goat to Wrigley in 1984 in an effort to exorcise the barnyard demons of the past. That was good enough to get Chicago into the National League Championship Series for the first time in nearly 40 years, but Murphy reared his bearded head again, and the Cubs were knocked out of pennant contention.

It was a similar story in 1989, when Will Clark and the Giants dismantled the Cubbies in the NLCS, and again in 1998, when the wild-card Cubs were swept by expatriate pitcher Greg Maddux and his Braves in the NLDS.

That brings the Cubs and their unflappable fans to 2003, where they will try once again to buck the curse.

A grizzly starting rotation may finally give the Cubs the advantage over the little ungulate's nasty hex. Cubs pitchers are terrifying. If they don't get you from the mound, they'll mow you down elsewhere (just ask Marcus Giles, Paul Wilson or Hee Seop Choi).

It's a commonly stated credo that great pitching beats great hitting, but God only knows whether great pitching can triumph over stubborn billy goat ghosts.

If I had to put my dollar somewhere, it would have to be against that wily goat.

Everyone knows Ol' Murph can't hit the slurve worth a damn, anyway.

Offensive line is at the heart of NFL success

By MIKE ORTA
Contributing Writer

Today we're going to take a look at a few of the remaining undefeated teams. Let's see who they are.

Well, we have the Kansas City Chiefs, who appear ready to go back to being a perennial playoff contender. We have Minnesota, who seems to have gotten back to its high-scoring ways. We have the Seahawks, who are quietly becoming one of the best teams in football. We have the Broncos, who seem to be adjusting to Jake "The Snake" Plummer. Up in Indianapolis we've got the Colts, where the triplets are no longer the big story. Then down in Carolina, the Panthers seem to be ready to ride their running back and their defense as far as they'll take them.

The best teams in football so far this year are teams that seem to have exceeded everyone's expectations. Come on, would you honestly have picked the Panthers to beat the Bucs in week two and stay undefeated into October? Did you honestly believe that the Chiefs' defense would be so good, and that a guy named Dante would be putting special teams coaches into a frenzy? If you don't get the pun, don't worry; it's not that funny to begin with. Back to the point. The answer is a resounding "no."

Most people would've picked teams like the Bucs, Giants, Dolphins, Bills and Eagles to be undefeated at this point. Let's ask ourselves why these undefeated teams seem to be doing so well. What could it be? How about superior offensive or defensive line play? The most successful teams right now are the ones who are doing just this.

The Chiefs have one of the most dynamic offenses in the NFL right now. They've got a solid passing game and a running game that strikes fear into coaches around the league. Pair that with a vastly improved defensive front and you've got a team that controls the line of scrimmage. This is one of the oldest adages in the NFL. Win the line, win the game. If you can control the line of scrimmage, then you basically dictate the play-calling of the other team and force them to play into your hands. Easier said than done.

Dick Vermeil is a coach who understands what it takes to be a winner. Give the man your team and within a few years, you'll be in the playoffs. What we see with the Chiefs is a team that knows how to block and how to shed blocks. We see it on offense where Priest Holmes can run and catch all over the field. We see it on defense where guys like Vonnie Holiday are getting sacks and forcing picks. And just as importantly, we see blocking ability on special teams, where Dante Hall is scoring touchdowns on returns like nobody's business.

When we think of the Broncos, we generally think of running backs. This is because they've been finding diamonds in the rough for about a decade at this point. Just as importantly though, their offensive line has built a reputation as one that opens holes in defenses like Fat Albert opens a bag of chips. You can't stop them. Remember Elway's first Super Bowl win? The clip you most frequently see is the one where Terrell Davis is running into the endzone through a hole the size of a Mack truck. This is what I'm talking about. They have an athletic offensive line that has the strength to take on a bull rush and the athleticism to pull on sweeps.

Now some people will say that the Broncos play dirty and use leg whips and high lows occasionally to make defensive tackles and ends hesitant and slower off the line. Personally, I've seen them do it one too many times for me to discount it as coincidence, but it's been effective, and there hasn't been a crackdown on them so I'm not to win games.

While I've focused on offensive lines for the past two teams, Carolina has been winning mainly because of its defensive front. Its scheme requires the majority of the pressure on the quarterback to be applied by the

Think about it, that's 15 points that they denied other teams. This is how they beat Tampa. If they keep doing it, they'll win a lot more games too. On the offensive front, the O-line is also giving the quarterbacks enough time to find the open guy downfield, who most often happens to be named Randy Moss. So with a solid O-line, and an improved D-line, the Vikings look like they can go far this season.

The Colts play cover-two and on offense they change the play at the line a lot. That's basically the extent of my knowledge of their team at this point. Just kidding. They've got a stud D-lineman in Freeman and a solid O-line which has allowed Peyton Manning to throw for over 4,000 yards the past four seasons. They are a team on the rise in my book, and it starts with pressure on defense and protection on offense.

These teams happen to be able to do things other than what I've mentioned, i.e. deliver the ball to receivers, but basically it comes down to this: These teams can run the ball on offense and stop the run on defense. Being able to do these two things well is generally an indicator of how good a team is. Granted, sometimes a team can do these things and lose, but in these cases the team often has a horrendous quarterback or secondary.

The foundation of winning is built at the line. Some people have lines like the Great Wall of China; others have picket fences that are missing planks. So next time you're watching your favorite team, or any team for that matter, watch the big daddies up front and you'll get a good idea of who's going to win. This is of course presupposing that your coach isn't overrated, and the team didn't blow the line's salaries on an over-priced quarterback.

Denver Broncos guard Dan Neil helps clear the way as running back Clinton Portis dives into the endzone. Offensive linemen like Neil play a crucial role in the success of any team's offense.

going to bust their chops. Back to the point. The Broncos have high expectations on them every year because of their ability to open holes on the O-line. It finally appears that they've got a quarterback who is able to take advantage of the gift of a great running game. As much as I dislike Mike Shanahan, I have to give him credit for being able to consistently field an O-line that will give them the opportunity front four. This allows the other seven defenders to fly to the ball, make the tackles and make interceptions. With Jenkins, Rucker, Buckner and Peppers, it appears the Panthers have the tools necessary to play their scheme to perfection. Not only do these guys pour on the heat on defense, but they do it on special teams too.

The Panthers have blocked roughly five field goals this year.

Sports

Hockey keeps rolling with big win

HOCKEY from page B1

The win allowed the squad to become the first Bucknell field hockey team since 1984 to start a season with five wins in its first six games.

The fourth win of the season came Tuesday, Sept. 23 at UMBC, where the Bison romped to a 4-0 victory. Four different players scored for the Orange and Blue, while Jordan held strong in the goal for her second shutout of the season.

The only goal scored in the first half came from O'Brien, who grabbed a pass from Callista Costopoulos '07 and drove it into the goal at 33:30. After a quiet half from both teams, the Bison came out firing in the second half and pulled away from the Retrievers.

At 10:22 into the half, Ruda gave the Bison a 2-0 lead off an assist from Boynton, and at 19:23, Jenni Turner '05 opened the gap to 3-0, scoring a goal after a pass from Nilsen. Boynton turned the game into a blowout when she scored the team's fourth goal of the afternoon at 24:07.

The UMBC game was the first mid-week road game for the Bison and allowed them to realize some more of their strengths.

"I thought we responded well to the travel," Lewis said. "More importantly, we realized that we can be a dangerous scoring unit with our penalty corners ... we connected on three of six opportunities. The execution of those set pieces has been a focal point of our practices leading up to the game, and the attacking penalty corner unit responded very well."

The game also gave several players more playing time than they would otherwise see, experience which will benefit them later in the year.

"The UMBC game also allowed us to play a good number of people, and we were able to watch some of our younger players in a competitive situation," Lewis said. "Those types of experiences can only help you down the road as the season progresses."

Although not against a Patriot League rival, the victory over UMBC was important for the Bison coming off of their heart-wrenching loss to Holy Cross on Sept. 20. The UMBC game launched Bucknell's winning streak again.

"It was important for Bucknell as a team to come out against UMBC with our heads up, with the thought in mind that the season is far from over," Ruda said.

The Bison are now one of only two teams in the Patriot League with two wins, and a Sept. 6 win over Colgate gives Bucknell the nod in the standings. The Bison get a chance to advance their record to 6-1 overall and 3-1 in the league when they face Lehigh at 1 p.m. tomorrow in Bethlehem, Pa.

They plan to continue working on their consistency and keep up the strong team unity that has driven them to success so far.

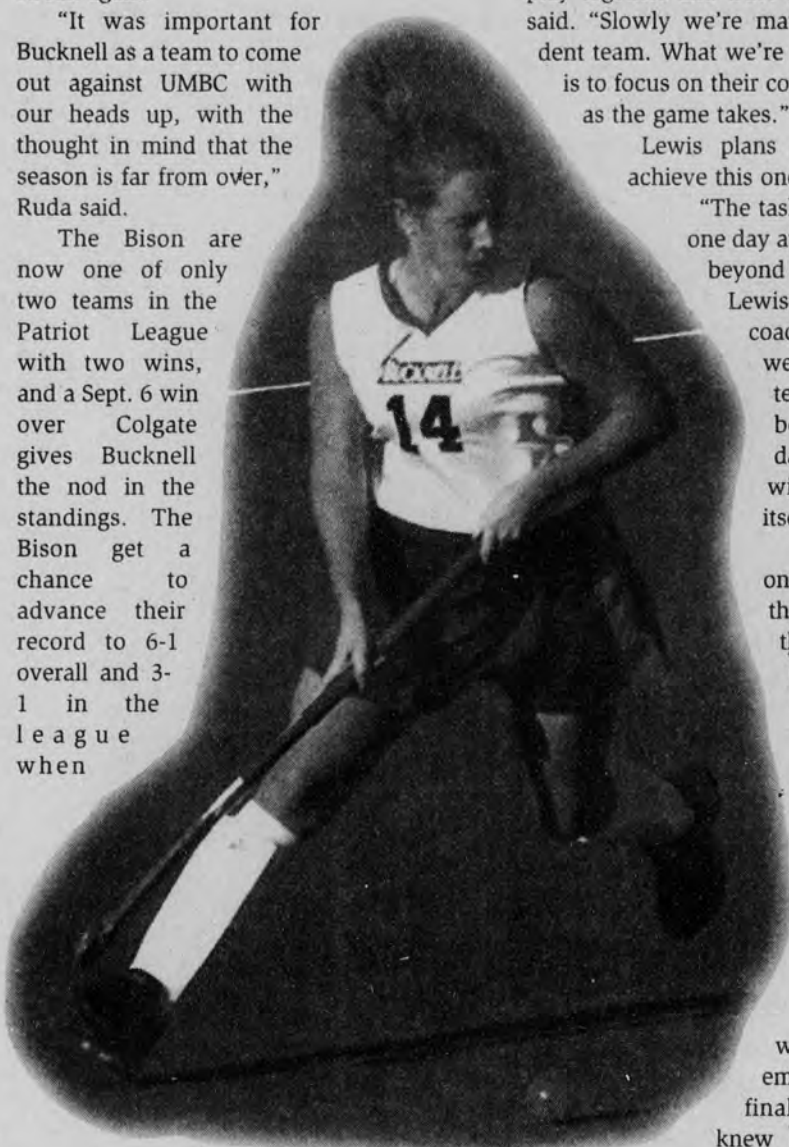

"Our success depends on how well we play together and trust one another," Lewis said. "Slowly we're maturing into a confident team. What we're asking of them now is to focus on their consistency for as long as the game takes."

Lewis plans to help the Bison achieve this one day at a time.

"The task at hand is to focus one day at a time and not look beyond our next opponent," Lewis said. "Our job as coaches is to make sure we're challenging this team to get a little bit better every single day. The end results will take care of itself."

Even as they move on to other opponents, the Bison will enjoy the impact of their triumph over Lafayette for a long time and are ready to channel the jubilation into a momentum that will hopefully take them all the way to the league's championship.

"Personally, it was hard to keep my emotions in after the final whistle blew. I knew we did it," Nilsen said. "We beat the defending Patriot League Champions, and now it's our turn."

Chris Vonnemeyer—The Bucknellian

Jenni Turner '05 takes the ball downfield against Lafayette. The Bison are now 2-1 in the Patriot League.

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Clinical Psychology Understanding the Mind and Human Behavior

Widener University's Institute for Graduate Clinical Psychology offers a five-year, full-time program that leads to the Doctor of Psychology (Psy.D.) degree.

- A highly reputed, clinically focused program
- Extensive and varied field experience through integrated clinical internship

- Fully accredited by the American Psychological Association (APA)
- Dual degree programs available with law, business, criminal justice, human sexuality education, and public administration
- Neubauer Family Foundation Scholarship available

610-499-1206 • Graduate.Psychology@widener.edu
1-888-WIDENER • www.widener.edu

Institute for Graduate Clinical Psychology
WIDENER UNIVERSITY
School of Human Service Professions

OPEN HOUSE: Thursday, October 16, 4:00-6:30 p.m.
University Center, 14th Street, Chester, PA 19013

Maria Soda,
Psy.D. '98
Psychologist,
Albert Einstein
Medical Center,
Philadelphia, PA

"Thanks to Widener,
I was able to start
my own clinical practice, which has been a true turning point in my life."

PFB1003

Men's Water Polo plays at ECACs

By KATIE COLGAN
Contributing Writer

The men's water polo team placed sixth in the ECAC Championships hosted by Brown University over the weekend, losing 7-6 to Navy and defeating Iona 9-6 on Saturday and then falling to Brown 11-7. The Bison moved their record to 3-11.

The squad's first match-up of the weekend was against a strong Navy team on Saturday morning. The No. 12 Midshipmen didn't know what hit them when an early aggressive offensive effort from the Bison made the score 4-0 at the end of the first quarter.

Navy scored a pair of goals before the half to make the score 4-2, and then fought back in the third quarter to make the score 6-4. The Bison didn't give up, scoring two more goals before the end of the game, but Navy also tallied a goal in the fourth quarter, which was enough to hold off the Bison for the 7-6 win.

After coming within one goal of upsetting Navy, the Bison knew what they were capable of and were ready to dominate their next opponent. The Bison didn't give No. 17 Iona a chance from the start of the game.

"Right from the start we came out with a good attitude, pretty fired up," Bradley Roslyn '06, who had 3 goals in the game, said. "We shut them down with our defense and converted on offense when we needed to."

Also scoring three goals in the game, Jay Danforth '05 was impressive all weekend. Co-captain Scott Afzal '04 and Nick Ferring '05 each added a goal in the game. Mark Stevenosky '06, Ferring and Co-captain Aaron Platshon '05 each had two assists. Platshon also kept Iona's strong centers in line with his stellar defense throughout the game. Goalie Trevor Mullins '06 shattered any chances of Iona catching up, making nine saves overall and six saves in the fourth quarter alone.

In its final game of the weekend, Bucknell fell to Brown 11-7. In a high-scoring game with a lot of fouls, the Bison were ultimately unable to score when they needed to. After scoring three goals in the third quarter to narrow the score to 8-6, the Orange and Blue were able to convert only one shot in the fourth quarter, allowing Brown to pull away with a three-goal final frame. Platshon lead all scorers with three goals and two assists, and Danforth again proved himself an offensive threat with three goals. Roslyn also added a goal and Ferring handed out two assists.

Entering the tournament seeded eighth, the Bison finished out the weekend with a sixth-place showing. The team is now fully aware of its potential and knows that with continued improvement they can compete with tough opponents. Afzal feels that the win over Iona holds promise for the Bison in terms of the outlook for the rest of the season.

"It was the first game of the season where we were able to keep our offense and defense up to beat a team of Iona's caliber," Afzal said. "We have a lot of confidence that we can beat any team in our conference after seeing what we could do this past weekend."

The Bison will have a well-deserved weekend of rest before they travel to California on Oct. 10, 11 and 13 and then to New Jersey for the League Games the following weekend.

During the off-week, Bucknell is hosting a Programs for Athletes and Coaches Education (P.A.C.E.) clinic for athletes and coaches in Kinney Natatorium. Members of the World Champion women's U.S. team and staff will work with water polo players of all ages and abilities this Saturday and Sunday, providing a unique learning opportunity for athletes and coaches.

SOCCER from page B1

ball before Beekman could shoot, but Bucknell was awarded a penalty kick after Beekman was taken down in the box. Hemmert was selected to take the shot and cracked the ball into the goal.

The second half began in what Assistant Coach Brian Suskiewicz described as a "torrential downpour," but the Bison stayed focused.

"Our team stayed very composed and adjusted to the elements well, finishing out the game strong and allowing Monmouth limited opportunities at goal," Suskiewicz said.

The Hawks had four shots in the second half, three of which were saved by the Bison's goalkeeper Adam Edwards '06. The fourth was saved by a Bison defender in the closest call of the game from a corner kick. This was Edwards' 14th shutout in less than two seasons. This ties him for ninth on the Patriot League's All-Time Top 10 list for career shutouts.

Suskiewicz pointed out that this is particularly impressive since Edwards is only a sophomore.

Army was the first opponent that the Bison faced within its league. With a new coach and a young team, Army was left with a newfound understanding of what it means to compete in the league. This game brought Army to 2-4-2 overall and 0-1 in Patriot League play.

"We all knew it was a must win to get the Patriot season started and we performed well," Brunton said.

The Bison got into the swing of things when Scott Vinsic '06 scored the first goal 19 minutes into the game. As soon as Co-captain Michael Lookingland '05 and Brunton gave him a few passes, Vinsic made his breakthrough. Lookingland was named to the College Soccer News National Team of the Week for his effort.

Just before halftime, Brunton and Hemmert assisted Vinsic to score the second goal of the game. Vinsic took his shot five yards from the goal, earning him his sixth goal of the season and ninth goal of his career.

Four minutes into the second half, Hemmert set up an opportunity for Beekman to score the third goal of the game. It was Hemmert's 14th assist, putting him at eighth place on the University's career assists list.

"We have faith that our defense and goalkeeper will be able to keep the shutout, so it is that much more important that we can catch a break and capitalize on the first goal," Hemmert said.

The Bison's next game will be in Hamilton, N.Y., against Patriot League rival Colgate. Hopefully, the team will keep its undefeated status in the conference.

BISON PROPERTIES

• The Best Off-Campus
Rentals at the Best Prices!

• Professionally Managed and Maintained

• High Speed Internet Available

• Two to Eight Bedrooms

• Units and Individual Rooms
Available for '04-'05

• Now Accepting Applications for '05-'06

Call or E-mail Scott Bank '91
for more information

610-506-6676

bison.properties@comcast.net

you accidentally knock
your roommate's
toothbrush into the toilet.
he's not home. what do
you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others.
explore what matters
at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Arts & Entertainment

Cromwell hosts "Dinner with Friends"

By DAVID ALLEN
Staff Writer

Cap and Dagger, the University's student-run theater company, presents "Dinner with Friends" by Donald Margulies, the Pulitzer Prize winner for Drama in 2000, at 8 p.m. tonight and tomorrow at the Tustin Blackbox Theater. The production is directed by Lee Cromwell '05, who hopes to use his directorship of the play as a stepping stone toward undertaking a main-stage production next year.

The production has had a short rehearsal period of less than four weeks. The featured players are Chad North '06 (Gabe), Mallory Sweeney '07 (Karen), Jon Ginn '07 (Tom) and Kristen Habacht '05 (Beth).

The cast is divided into two married couples: Gabe and Karen and Tom and Beth. Gabe and Tom are best friends from college, and Tom was introduced to Beth by Gabe and Karen. Consequently, there is a very strong bond among the four of them. They frequently have dinner together, a routine that gives the play its title.

At the play's beginning, the audience learns that Tom is leaving Beth after having an extra-marital affair.

As Gabe and Karen help their friends with these problems, they start to see trouble with their own marriage. Over the course of the play, the relationships between husbands and wives and among close friends are tested.

Cromwell selected the script himself after he first encountered the play during his senior year of high school and "fell in love with it."

"I love it because it's so honest. It's about love, intimacy and friendship, between both friends and couples. It doesn't try to cover up or fake it," Cromwell said. The members of the cast seem very well-connected, both on- and off-stage. The play is based on close, personal relationships and the cast members have built friendships with one another to establish greater chemistry onstage. The camaraderie that the characters have onstage is visible when talking to the actors offstage.

North auditioned for the production as a result of his experience working under Cromwell's direction in a Cocktail theatre production last year.

"I think Lee is very in touch with the play's surface and its subtext. He's very good at directing subtleties. He's really great to work with," North said.

All the cast members had a slightly different interpretation of what the play is about. "I see it as a window into people's everyday lives," Sweeney said.

"To me, it's really just a slice of life," Habacht said.

"I think it's a poignant commentary on staying committed," Ginn said.

High-toned dialogue about wine and weekend vacations confirms the viewpoint of all of the cast members that the characters played are "puppies." The characters are also supposed to be about 40 years of age, and there are references to having children (though none are ever seen), menopause and the couples' sex lives.

"It's a challenge to act outside of your age," Habacht said.

Despite the age gap between the cast and the characters they play, all of the actors inhabit their roles very nicely, acting with natural and appropriate emotions.

This is Ginn and Sweeney's first University production.

With the play's depictions of relationship troubles and divorce, Cromwell and several of the cast members feel that it will strike a chord with many audience members.

"Everyone has been in or seen these kinds of fights," Habacht said.

The show promises to be a very moving, emotional production. The bonds among cast members translate very nicely into strong relationships onstage, and Cromwell has done an admirable job in selecting such a terrific work and directing the actors with great attention to detail.

Cromwell is assisted by Carl Haines '05 as the stage manager and Mike Mellas '05 as the production assistant. Tickets are 2 dollars and are available at the door.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Cromwell (above) directs (left to right) Sweeney and Habacht in "Dinner with Friends" at the Tustin Blackbox Theater.

New rock albums from The Raveonettes and Fingertight

By CHAD FLOOD
Staff Writer

CD REVIEW

Reviewing bands for the first time can be a critic's worst nightmare. On one hand, we have no frame of reference for comparison and can review the album as a singular piece of art instead of the next link in a chain of releases.

On the other hand, I could be held fully responsible for a reader deciding to take a listen or to just move on to something else. That said, the new albums from Fingertight and The Raveonettes, neither of which had ever made its way into my CD player before this week, are both worth checking out ... depending on your taste, of course.

Before popping in "Chain Gang of Love," the newest release from the coed Danish duo The Raveonettes, I noticed the cover's glaring message: "This is WHIPLASH Rock'n'Roll." It's hard to know what to expect from such a bold statement, but I took it with a grain of salt. What I discovered were 13 tracks in just over 30 minutes, each flowing with a characteristic Beatles-era sound, overlaid with heavy distortion and hooks that even the most anti-pop fan would notice.

Each track is unique in its own way—lyrically, musically or effects-wise. At times, the added sounds can detract from the disc, prompting a listener to try and adjust levels due to heavy static or hissing, but each noise seems to be carefully placed and chosen in a serious attempt at turning straightforward rock into a more avant-garde endeavor. In The Raveonettes' case, it works quite well, and a clearly defined arrangement of sound stands out.

The other artist I was introduced to, Fingertight, is a must-listen for any fan of solid, hard rock. Paying homage to the early works of some of rock's greatest bands, including the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Incubus and countless early '90s underground punk rock groups, Fingertight's latest release, "In the Name of Progress," is an aural assault from start to finish. They leave nothing in the studio and expose themselves as truly as any heavy mainstream act in recent memory.

Coupling the heavy drum beats and metal-esque guitar riffs with melodic, meaningful lyrics, Fingertight seems to have found the perfect balance that so many acts never reach. Bloechl agrees that issues of gender and race are important to the University curriculum. "Issues of race and gender need to be emphasized at Bucknell because it is still a predominantly white institution and it is still male-dominated at a structural level. These structures take a long time to change, but they can begin to be changed by involving undergraduates in research on gender and race," Bloechl said.

The other six lectures who spoke on Saturday also explored race, gender and class issues through '60s girl singers. Jacqueline Warwick from Dalhousie University in Canada gave a lecture entitled, "He Hit Me and I Was Glad": Violence, Masculinity and Anger in Girl Group Music." She spoke about how middle-class girls in the '60s conformed to the image of the "nice girl," and how this was reflected through the body language of '60s girl groups.

Warwick explained that body language is a form of body discipline transmitted through the media (such as television) to young girls. When dealing with anger, girls felt pressured to suppress it to keep their "nice girl" image intact.

Laurie Stras of the University of Southampton in the United Kingdom also spoke about body discipline in her lecture, "Voice of the Beehive: Vocal Techniques at the turn of the '60s." Her lecture was about how young '60s girl singers aged their voices with vocal tricks, which in some cases did permanent damage to the voice.

The speakers at the 1960s Girl Singers Symposium were researching this topic individually before they found each other through various contacts at the Society for American Music conference in March 2002. They presented the topic on 1960s Girl Singers at the International Association for the Studies of Popular Music in Cleveland last year.

"We only had two hours to present all of the papers and wanted more time to expand on these issues," Randall said.

The essays presented at Saturday's symposium are going to be collected into a book and edited by Stras. The speakers will present these essays in a study session panel at the American Musicological Society's annual conference in Houston this November.

attempt at turning straightforward rock into a more avant-garde endeavor. In The Raveonettes' case, it works quite well, and a clearly defined arrangement of sound stands out.

The Raveonettes' new album "Chain Gang of Love" (above) takes straightforward rock and makes it avant-garde.

Courtesy of amazon.com

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

EXTREME VACATIONS, INC 1-800-336-2260

Sell Spring Break Trips! Guaranteed Best Buy

1 free trip for every 10 paid OR cash starting with first booking.

EXTREME Party Packages! Protection of American Express Worldwide www.xxvacations.com

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN

1-5 Bedroom Units Houses or Apartments for 2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska Villager GMAC Real Estate

521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837

570-523-3244

'60s Singers featured at Symposium

By TYLER CAROLINE MILLS
Contributing Writer

Wigs and music history might seem to be an unusual combination, but if pushed to a conclusion, most people would eventually think of Mozart's powdered wig, not beehives. Music scholars from across the globe spoke at Saturday's day-long Symposium on 1960s Girl Singers. Their lectures focused on how issues such as gender, race and class are woven through music of this genre.

"Some of us [the lecturers] lived through the 1960s and are now seeing its popular music historicized in a way that is incomplete. The 1960s isn't just about the Beatles and the Rolling Stones," said Annie J. Randall, associate professor of music and coordinator of the event.

Randall's lecture, "Dusty's Hair," focused on '60s pop star, Dusty Springfield. She is probably best known today as the voice in "Son of a Preacher Man." For listeners of the 1960s, Springfield's large blond wig and dark eye makeup were inseparable from her voice.

"Girl groups performed a kind of hyper-femininity, much in the way contemporary male artists like Eminem or Snoop Doggy Dogg perform a hyper-masculinity," said Olivia Bloechl, visiting assistant professor of music at the University who attended the lecture.

Young girls in the '60s copied Springfield's hyper-feminine image the way young girls today try to copy Britney Spears. Randall's third grade memory of older girls standing over the bathroom sinks at her Catholic school washing off their dark eye makeup is an example of this.

Matt Vanderhoof '05 commented on how issues presented at the 1960s Girl Singers Symposium are relevant to pop stars of today.

"I found it really fascinating how the sound of '60s girl music can be related to artists of today, and how the progression in style of girl singers in the 1960s parallels today's artists such as Madonna or even Britney Spears," he said.

Randall also spoke about Springfield's "masquerade of images," which involved both her voice and her stage presence. One of these images was the "Motown Dusty." Springfield covered Motown songs and trained her voice to achieve a Motown sound. The media called her the "White Queen of Soul."

Randall is teaching a class this semester on American popular music that delves into the issues presented at Saturday's lecture. "Issues of race, gender and class come up almost every day in some form or other. It is completely false to talk about American popular music without taking these aspects into consideration," Randall said.

Elena Gregorio '05 is a music student at the University who attended the symposium. "I'm really fascinated by the music of this era and I think it's unfortunate that we don't offer many courses in this subject matter. I think it's great Professor Randall was able to bring all of these people together," Gregorio said.

Bloechl agrees that issues of gender and race are important to the University curriculum.

"Issues of race and gender need to be emphasized at Bucknell because it is still a predominantly white institution and it is still male-dominated at a structural level. These structures take a long time to change, but they can begin to be changed by involving undergraduates in research on gender and race," Bloechl said.

The other six lectures who spoke on Saturday also explored race, gender and class issues through '60s girl singers. Jacqueline Warwick from Dalhousie University in Canada gave a lecture entitled, "He Hit Me and I Was Glad": Violence, Masculinity and Anger in Girl Group Music." She spoke about how middle-class girls in the '60s conformed to the image of the "nice girl," and how this was reflected through the body language of '60s girl groups.

Warwick explained that body language is a form of body discipline transmitted through the media (such as television) to young girls. When dealing with anger, girls felt pressured to suppress it to keep their "nice girl" image intact.

Laurie Stras of the University of Southampton in the United Kingdom also spoke about body discipline in her lecture, "Voice of the Beehive: Vocal Techniques at the turn of the '60s." Her lecture was about how young '60s girl singers aged their voices with vocal tricks, which in some cases did permanent damage to the voice.

The speakers at the 1960s Girl Singers Symposium were researching this topic individually before they found each other through various contacts at the Society for American Music conference in March 2002. They presented the topic on 1960s Girl Singers at the International Association for the Studies of Popular Music in Cleveland last year.

"We only had two hours to present all of the papers and wanted more time to expand on these issues," Randall said.

The essays presented at Saturday's symposium are going to be collected into a book and edited by Stras. The speakers will present these essays in a study session panel at the American Musicological Society's annual conference in Houston this November.

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trauman associates, inc.
promotional products - fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards - trophies - business gifts

800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.taapromoproducts.com

Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Ursu's poems speak of beauty

By STEPHANIE MALENICH
Writer

POETRY READING REVIEW

Rustling through the pile of loose papers of poetry so new that they not yet are published, Lilianna Ursu searched for her wristwatch. Realizing that she was just about out of time, she said, "How beautiful to have your time covered by poetry."

No doubt, all who attended Ursu's reading of her original works Sunday evening in Bucknell Hall would agree that the hour "covered" by listening to her poetry was indeed beautiful.

She explained the origins of many of her poems, allowing the audience to experience the meanings of her works more intensely.

Ursu, a native of Romania, joined the University community as the Stadler Center for Poetry's Poet-in-Residence. This position involves her teaching a poetry workshop for University students, who Ursu was touched to see in attendance on Sunday.

An internationally-acclaimed poet, Ursu is the author of many books of poetry including "The Sky Behind the Forest: Selected Poems," "Angel Riding a Beast" and "Goldsmiths Market," all three of which have been translated to English from Romanian. Her works have also been showcased in several prestigious publications including "The New Yorker" and the "American Poetry Review."

Shara McCallum, director of the Stadler Center, began the event with an account of Ursu's experience in the sphere of poetry. McCallum praised Ursu, calling her poetry a "testament to the resilience of the human spirit."

Ursu indeed held true to her belief that being a poet involves "sharing your life with other people."

She explained the origins of many of her poems, allowing the audience to experience the meanings of her works more intensely. This highlighted the personal nature of many of Ursu's works in connection with specific events in her life, revealing deeper truths and beauties of the world in which these experiences occurred.

In one story, she recounted her observation of a sign that proclaimed "Europe for sale" and her subsequent need to compose "a poem to save Europe ... and America." Far-reaching as it may be, these poems illustrate both the noble and gracious nature of her poetry.

Throughout her reading, it was refreshing to hear Ursu express her love for the United States and for Pennsylvania, places that we, as natives, largely take for granted. She explained that upon arriving at the University and throughout her residency thus far, she has taken the time to "make friends with and questioned various people in the large crowd of students, alumni and faculty. Carney stayed for the entire student competition,

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian
Lilianna Ursu, the Stadler Center's Poet-in-Residence, read her poetry and shared her personal experiences last Sunday.

Lewisburg." This is something she seems to have accomplished, since she has been inspired to write seven poems, two of them in English (her first poems were in English). She went so far as to share a hope, in part a prediction, and told the audience to be on the lookout for the publishing of a Lewisburg anthology.

The impact Lewisburg has had upon Ursu is reciprocal; her work has left quite an impression on those in attendance on Sunday. Her presence will continue to be felt here, both by her students and by the campus at large, as she enhances the tradition of poetry here on campus.

"As long as in our lives there is poetry, you will have something special in your lives," Ursu said.

Carney scores 10 at University Slam

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Staff Writer

The first poetry slam of the semester brought the underground scene of performance poetry to campus, featuring professional slam poet Jason Carney and performances from University students on Saturday evening in the Seventh Street Café.

Slam poetry, a type of spoken-word poetry based upon performance and filled with politically and emotionally charged messages, emerged as an art form in the 1980s in the Chicago area and has since spread across the country as its popularity among the nation's youth has increased.

Christina MacMillan '05, head of the University's Slam Committee, hosted the event. It started with an "open-mic" session for students to volunteer readings of their poetry. Several students participated, reading their own poetry, and one even read Thoreau at the end of the half-hour.

Carney started at 9 p.m., warning the audience that there would be plenty of candid confessions and Texas jokes before commencing with a religiously-themed slam about the depraved state of the world. Carney, an ex-skinhead, ex-porn-store employee, feminist, recovered drug addict, Protestant and single father, drew on his past experiences to encourage those present not to make the same mistakes he had. Emphasizing the importance of personal opinion as honest knowledge, Carney challenged people to refute him, and to seek their own form of knowledge. The pieces he chose to perform all dealt with controversial issues of race, gender, sexuality and religion, and Carney made no apologies about it.

"I should just walk around with a disclaimer sign over my head that says: 'What I have to say may offend you,'" Carney said.

At times quiet and serene, at other points loud and speaking with the fervent rapidity of one entranced, Carney held his audience's attention throughout his hour-long performance.

Making an effort to get to know select audience members between pieces, Carney ridiculed

Emphasizing the importance of personal opinion as honest knowledge, Carney challenged people to refute him, and to seek their own form of knowledge.

commending the student poets, and encouraging audience members to meet with him afterward. University students had their chance to prove their poetic prowess when the Slam Competition started at 10 p.m., with six contestants and teams competing for the illustrious prize of a furry, toy-horse play-set. Several audience members were selected to judge the competition on a scale of 1 to 10.

Aaron Derosa '03 served as "sacrificial poet," helping to prepare judges' to award fair scores. The team and individual entrants competed for two rounds, eliminating the three lowest-scoring participants before the final round.

Despite one of the closest competitions in recent history, with a mere 0.32 points separating the winners from the runners-up, the Gay Superheros and Friends Theroft team won over the Ultimate Funkmasters, a rivalry that has been building since last February. Emily Izbicki '05 placed third overall.

The Gay Superheros, a team effort from Phil Martoma '05, Josh Fisher '04, Chad Freilino '06, and Daisy Buranasombhop '04, were presented with the Slam Hammer, a hammer that has the names of previous slam champions immortalized on it in permanent marker. Their slams were centered on gender and race messages, while the Funkmaster team of Rebecca Wadlinger '06 and Mary Pancost '06 focused more on form and style.

This Poetry Slam was the first of several scheduled throughout the coming school year.

Study In English Abroad

The Swedish Program

STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY

Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film
Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies

COME TO AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING

OCTOBER 6, 2003 4:00 P.M. TAYLOR HALL LOUNGE, ROOM 115

If you are unable to attend this meeting, please contact your Study Abroad Advisor or The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323 (315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

EXTREME VACATIONS, INC 1-800-336-2260

Sell Spring Break Trips! Guaranteed Best Buy

1 free trip for every 10 paid OR cash starting with first booking.

EXTREME Party Packages! Protection of American Express Worldwide www.xxvacations.com

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN

1-5 Bedroom Units Houses or Apartments for 2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska Villager GMAC Real Estate

521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837

570-523-3244

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trauman associates, inc.
promotional products - fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards - trophies - business gifts

800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.taapromoproducts.com

Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 2001/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester Units Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

BRYNWOOD Rentals

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS

Ain't nuthin' but $12.99 baby.

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS... FIT FOR A KING

Meaty St. Louis-cut ribs, dry-rubbed with our special seasonings, basted with our own bold flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce, and pit smoked right here with Applewood. Served with hickory smoked baked beans, BJ's skillet potato cakes, freshly baked sourdough bread, and cornbread with honey butter. Plus... a FREE non-alcoholic beverage.

Served all day Monday thru Wednesday, 11am until closing.

17 North Market Street
Schlimgrove
291 Mill Street, Danville
Sun-Th: 11am-Midnight
F-S: 11am-2am
www.bjssrbs.com

BUSINESS & POLITICS

DEATH PENALTY FORUM HELD

Photos by Melissa Pauling—The Bucknellian

Top: PACE officers (left to right) Laura Zuber '06, Lindsey Gentel '04, and Patricia Hohl '06 lead a lively death penalty discussion in the L.C. Forum with two of the participants Phil Martoma '05 and Lina Nandy '04 (left).

BSG poised to tackle issues

BY MATTHEW HINSON
Senior Writer

Bucknell Student Government (BSG) had a lively discussion with Dean of Students Richard Ferraro about alcohol and downtown policy Sunday. After a short introduction about what his job entails, Ferraro moved on to detailing what has been done regarding alcohol policy during his tenure and received the thoughts and questions of BSG members.

Ferraro stated that when he came onboard, the school was considering fairly Draconian standards with regard to alcohol, including suggestions pushing for a dry campus. He pointed out that with the introduction of the point system, as well as partial amnesty in certain circumstances and forgiveness of points in the senior year, problems have become less serious than before, and so a tone of moderation was coming back into discussions.

Pub Nights at Uptown have been introduced, where a limited number of legal-age students may go to enjoy alcohol on campus in a non-fraternity setting.

Ferraro noted with some sadness and chagrin that this year seems to be different from previous years. He said that to date there have already been some 10 hospitalization for

To date there have already been some 10 hospitalization for alcohol over-consumption which, if the trend continues means that this year some 90 people will potentially require hospitalization.

alcohol over-consumption which, if the trend continues, means that this year some 90 people will potentially require hospitalization. Given the emphasis with which he spoke on the subject, more troubling to Ferraro are the six DUIs and two cases of date-rape drugs, ingested by males, that have occurred this year.

Ferraro fielded questions about town-gown relations among students, Public Safety and the local police. Suggestions were made regarding holding a forum run by students as a corollary to traditional town-run meetings with the aim of improving relations between the University and the town.

Other thoughts were aired about the idea of being able to work off alcohol points and about voluntary breathalyzer tests for students in the presence of alcohol but not neces-

Bush petitions United Nations

BY DEVIN GANGI
Contributing Writer

In an attempt to gain more international support in the form of troops and money for Iraq, U.S. President George W. Bush addressed the United Nations on Tuesday. According to various MSNBC polls, Bush has been under pressure from home and abroad to allow more foreign involvement in post-war Iraq strategy and reconstruction.

Bush's main agenda in the speech was to promote a worldwide call to arms and encourage nations that wish to fight terrorism to aid the United States.

According to CNN, Bush's speech implied that resisting Iraqis personally declared war on the United Nations.

"Terrorists brought the war to the U.N. itself. ... The U.N. headquarters that stood in Baghdad stood for order ... and the terrorists decided it must be destroyed," Bush said.

Bush appealed to sympathy as well, saying "Every young democracy needs the help of friends. Now the nation of Iraq deserves our aid, and every nation of good will should step forward."

While the president received polite applause, the speech appeared to have little effect on the world leaders gathered. One of the reasons the speech was so poorly received was that Bush did not make any attempt to reconcile the bitter differences over the U.S.-led war against Iraq. The address to this decidedly international forum seemed to have been constructed for a domestic audience.

"Every young democracy needs the help of friends. Now the nation of Iraq deserves our aid, and every nation of good will should step forward."

—George W. Bush, president of the United States

Bush's often unilateral attitude was exemplified by several remarks, such as "I recognize that some of the sovereign nations of this assembly disagreed with our actions ... so let us move forward," with no further comment or conciliation.

Bush did not promise any contributing nations a more prominent role in decision-making as Iraq rebuilds, something that many governments, like France and Germany, have demanded.

Bush stood by his original arguments for going to war, the accusations that Saddam Hussein had Al-Qaeda ties and that Iraq possessed illegal weapons of mass destruction.

This defiant stance could not have impressed much of the rest of the world with either its dedication or its validity, considering that U.S. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld recently went on record declaring that Hussein had absolutely nothing to do with the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

It was reported by Time that an upcoming interim report by leading CIA U.S. Weapons Inspector David Kay will reveal that four months after the end of major conflict there is no conclusive evidence that such weapons ever existed in Iraq.

Bush's speech at the U.N. was a major opportunity for his administration to win back some international support. With the request of $87 billion for Iraq that drew gasps even from Republicans, major ally Tony Blair's government in crisis and his own ratings being the lowest since Sept. 12, Bush needs to acquire some backing from abroad through the United Nations, both financially and politically.

Money forces Grasso to submit resignation

GRASSO from page A1

The immediate response was from the federal Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). Chairman William Donaldson reprimanded the NYSE board for extending Grasso's contract before a review of the company's governance procedures could be completed, and then launched an investigation into where Grasso's salary was coming from—specifically, if the funds could have been put towards the exchange's oversight programs.

"[The NYSE is] a public service position," said Charles Elson of the University of Delaware to USA Today. "It's like the head of the Fed saying that 'the economy did great this year because I cut interest rates, so I think I'll take a cut in the recovery.'"

"If Wall Street can't stomach this compensation package then something must be wrong. [Resignation is] the only way confidence of institutional investors can be restored," said California Treasurer Phil Anglides to CBS in mid-September, calling for Grasso's resignation.

The announcement of the lump-sum payment to Grasso, huge by any standard, set off a wave of disgust among investors—a reaction that should have been predictable since, popular opinion has been swinging against the stereotype of overpaid executives for years, according to Newsweek.

"When the institution that symbolizes the integrity of the U.S. financial markets is exposed as a conflicted, chaotic, cash machine for its leader, the only way to even begin to restore credibility is to completely clean house at the board level," said David Callaway, editor-in-chief of "CBS MarketWatch."

Grasso himself led the charge, pushing for the "transparency" policy that requires NYSE-traded companies to make the salaries and bonuses of their executives available to the public. The NYSE, though a private company, later agreed to work under those same rules. With transparency in place, Grasso's payment would have become public knowledge quickly even if he hadn't announced it himself.

"Dick Grasso's decision to resign was the right one. It's best for the New York Stock Exchange," said Alan Hevesi, New York comptroller, to CNN.

The week before Grasso's retirement, Hevesi joined the call for Grasso to leave the NYSE.

"In an era of corporate scandals, you can't have the regulator of the world's largest stock exchange take tens of millions of dollars in remuneration from the people he's regulating," Hevesi said to The Associated Press. "That's a conflict of interest."

The final vote to request Grasso's resignation was 13-7, according to CBS, with Kenneth Langone '57, a sitting member on the University Board of Trustees, as well as the NYSE board, among those who supported Grasso.

"This is a sad day for the NYSE and Dick Grasso and for people who have worked so hard for the American investor. This is not a triumph for anyone," said Art Cashin, head of floor trading at UBS Paine Webber, to CNN.

"The issue is not just Mr. Grasso. The issue is making fundamental reforms at the stock exchange to restore investor confidence [and] establish a model of good corporate governance, accountability and disclosure. Now that Mr. Grasso has stepped down, we can move forward with those reforms," Hevesi said, according to Reuters.

In the wake of Grasso's resignation, two other members of the board have left the exchange—Carl McCall, who headed the committee that awarded Grasso his $140 million, and Daimler-Chrysler Chief Executive Officer Juergen Schremp.

Jim Leahy—The Bucknellian

Ex-chairman of the NYSE, Dick Grasso, visited the University in April of 2002 to give a talk about the state of the economy after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Grasso recently came under attack for accepting money offered to him by the Board of Directors of the NYSE earlier this year.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

October 10, 2003

http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

inside Volume 132 Number 6

Sports:

University teams go 8-0 after an incredible weekend.

See page B1

Sklar receives honor from Walling Society

BY MEGHAN FOX
Senior Writer

Martin Sklar, professor of history at the University, is being recognized today in Washington for his work in the historical studies of socialism and capitalism in 20th-century United States. Today and tomorrow, Sklar will be the guest of honor at the Walling Society Conference held at George Washington University and will be leading a discussion on imperialism, post-imperialism and the American Century.

"My work has been studying both capitalism and socialism, and not just socialist government, but in the business system itself," Sklar said. "In the late 19th- and early 20th-centuries, capitalism and socialism were unifying and intersecting in the marketplace itself, as well as in government policies."

According to Sklar, our whole society is a blending of both socialism and capitalism, which permeates into the economic, political and social realms of society. Sklar believes that China, Russia, India and a number of other nations are also currently adopting a mixture of the two as well.

The Walling Society, consists of an estimated 30 members, most of whom were former students or colleagues of Sklar, the society's current vice president.

According to the organization's founding statement, the society is open to scholars and graduate students willing to study and publish works on "the social, democratic political tradition in America and the modern world, along with the economic and social developments, popular movements and leading figures who gave rise to it."

Although this organization was formed only a few years before, Sklar said he believes they are becoming more influential.

"My views are unsettling to both the left and right [wings], but it is empirically justified. There is a mixing of capitalism

See SKLAR, page A2

Measures taken to ensure pedestrian safety on campus

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

A new crosswalk was recently implemented on Seventh Street outside Smith Hall, with a goal to make the University a more pedestrian-friendly campus.

BY JULIE LESKO
Contributing Writer

Recent measures to ensure pedestrian safety on campus have been implemented this year, including the installation of a new crosswalk outside Smith Hall on Seventh Street, due to concerns about pedestrian safety. One of these issues was realized Monday night, when a car allegedly hit a student on Moore Avenue across from the Langone Center.

Professor of Civil and Environmental Engineering, Richard McGinnis, who also serves on the Borough of Lewisburg Traffic Committee, sent a campus-wide e-mail on Oct. 1 to remind all faculty, staff and students of the new crosswalk installed. This cross walk was implemented to accommodate the increase in pedestrian traffic to the new fieldhouse. McGinnis emphasized the importance of stopping vehicles at all crosswalks for safety purposes.

"Right now, people speed up and down that hill," McGinnis said. "In the past we have had people hit. No one has been

See TRAFFIC, page A4

Town holds meeting to discuss development

BY KAREN GRABOWSKI
Writer

Business owners and community members met to discuss the continuation of downtown development in Lewisburg on Tuesday at Brynwood on Sixth Street.

Four years ago, the first town meeting addressing key issues facing Lewisburg was held and resulted in a grant, which encourages the historic preservation of storefronts, plans that reduced store vacancies, an increase in the number of volunteers and several other economic and social improvements. Tuesday's meeting concerned building on the past to continue the development of Lewisburg.

"Downtown is stable at the moment, and while we love stability, we want a downtown Lewisburg that is flourishing," said Charles Pollock '70, president of the partnership board and vice-president for student affairs.

Main concerns expressed about downtown include traffic and congestion, shop diversification, communication, marketing, signage, river access, parking, public restrooms, public phones and uniform shop hours.

"As a student, the main issue I would like to see addressed concerns the students and I think [downtown] can focus a little more on accommodating the student population," said Bucknell Student Government President Katy Tiner '04. "I would like to see the town and the Market Street area be more than a place I take my mom on Parents Weekend, but be somewhere I go for myself to eat, shop and walk around."

The community members

See MEETING, page A2

HOMECOMING HOSTS AND HOSTESSES ANNOUNCED

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

The hosts and hostesses for Homecoming, Oct. 17-19, were selected by the campus community. Pictured left to right are Bill Anderson, Tricia Elseroad, Gary Thaniel, Meredith Field, Breean Trapasso, Pat Alfano, Kim Cocoros and Travis Martin.

See page A10 for a feature on the hosts and hostesses

Colby murder raises concerns about safety

BY BRIANNA EVANS
Contributing Writer

Twenty-one-year-old Colby College student Dawn Rossignol was abducted by a stranger and killed on Sept. 16. The murder at the small college in Maine has left the University community wondering about its own safety.

Rossignol's murder is being called a "random act of violence" by the police.

Until this incident, the students at Colby felt as if the school were under a protective bubble. The idea of this bubble is something felt by students at the University as well, and students are concerned with the fact that a murder could happen on a similar campus.

"Anytime you have a murder, it's a tragedy. The fact that it occurred at a small campus is even more upsetting," Nicole Tomlin '04 said. "It disturbs me that it could happen at a campus with a similar culture as Bucknell."

According to Director of Public Safety Vince DeCerio, it is hard to control who comes onto campus, an open campus much like the University.

"We're an open campus,

See MURDER, page A2

Houston Opera Company visits campus

The University's music department hosted the company for one week

Courtesy of houstongrandopera.org

The Houston Grand Opera performs Mozart's "Swan Lake." The company will come for a week-long residency at the University to work with student musicians.

BY JOSIE CETTA
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The University music department started worshopping Jack Heggie's new opera "The End of the Affair" on Monday. Known for composing the opera "Dead Man Walking," Heggie has been commissioned by Houston Grand Opera to premiere "The End of the Affair" this March.

"The End of the Affair," based on the novel written by Graham Greene, will be directed by Leonard Foglia. Students and the University community will workshop with San Francisco Opera conductor, Judith Yan, librettist Heather McDonald and six internationally recognized singers (Katherine Ciesinski, John Packard, Joseph Evans, Robert Orth, Nicole Folland, and David Okerlund) to learn from this work.

"It's an extraordinary opportunity for us. This is a rare chance for students to gain valuable knowledge in performance skills and to be part of a remarkable creative process and for the community to watch performance history being made," Associate Professor of Music and Director of the Bucknell Opera Company Catherine Payn said, according to a press release.

According to Heggie's Web site, his music "is championed by some of the world's most noted performers."

Throughout this week, classes and lectures were held in the Rooke Recital Hall of the Weiss Music Building. These classes included an advanced conducting class led by Yan, a discussion on becoming a modern-day professional singer and the experience of preparing the first hearing of a new work and an explanation of the process of creating an opera.

Last night, University music students had an informal masterclass with Heggie and had the opportunity to discussion of the composer's songs. This class, which was open to the University community, was a rare opportunity allowed stu-

See OPERA, page A3

Mini-Baja

University mechanical engineers take their education for a spin as they design their own dune-buggies.

See page B8

Poetry Reading

Pulitzer-prize winning poet Stephen Dunn will burst the intellectual bubble of poetry with his meaningful and accessible works during his poetry reading at the University.

See page B7

Feminist Speech

Catherine MacKinnon, a prominent individual in feminist legal thought, offers a controversial view on international law and violence toward women.

See page A9

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Sept. 28

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / PUBLIC URINATION—Public Safety observed a student urinating outside of Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity. The student was cited for disorderly conduct and public urination.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety identified a student walking in front of Smith Hall who was observed having trouble walking. The student admitted to drinking alcohol although under the age of 21. A citation issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a very intoxicated person. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified a female student who admitted to drinking alcohol although under the age of 21. The student was cited for underage consumption and public drunkenness and turned over to the RA for observation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall for the report of an ill student. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified a female as a student who admitted to drinking alcohol although under the age of 21. The student was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for a fire alarm. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the alarm was caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station for no reason. The incident is under investigation.

ACT 64 DRUG VIOLATION (Unfounded)—A student reported to Public Safety that someone may have been smoking marijuana at Swartz Hall. Upon arrival, Public Safety was unable to determine an odor in the hallway. The report to determined to be unfounded.

HARRASSING PHONE CALL—A student reported to Public Safety that she received a harassing phone call in Bucknell West. The individual reported that the caller asked survey type questions and then made obscene comments. The student wanted the information filed for a record should there be future incidents. The student was advised as to proper response to such calls.

Monday, Sept. 29

MISSING PROPERTY—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed a foot-ball table from Harris Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Tuesday, Sept. 30

FOUND PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall to meet with employees who found a live round of rifle ammunition in the parking area. The bullet was removed to Public Safety for proper disposal.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) stuffed an orange in the tailpipe and smeared a banana on the door handle of his vehicle while parked in front of Swartz Hall. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an ill student. A Student Health Services driver transported and transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment. The individual later returned to campus.

Wednesday, Oct. 1

MISSING PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that her parking decal was removed from her car while the vehicle was parked near Larison Hall. The incident is under investigation.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to Gateway Malesard for a fire alarm activation. Upon arrival, Public Safety found that candles had been burning in the room. The students occupying the room were cited for possession of candles in a residence hall room and false alarm activation.

Thursday, Oct. 2

FAILURE TO VACATE BUILDING DURING FIRE ALARM—Public Safety responded to Gateway Kalman-Posner for a fire alarm activation and discovered, in a search of the building, that two students failed to exit the building when the alarm sounded. Citations were issued for failure to vacate the building during a fire alarm.

THEFT BY UNLAWFUL TAKING—A student reported to Public Safety that the license plate on his car was removed while the vehicle was parked on South Seventh Street. The student was advised to report the incident to Lewisburg Police because it occurred off campus.

Friday, Oct. 3

ACT 64 DRUG VIOLATION / TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Bucknell West. Upon arrival, it was determined that the alarm was reset by one of the residents. Public Safety detected the odor of marijuana in the room. During a plain view search Public Safety identified two students in the room and observed marijuana lying on a dresser and several open, empty and unopened bottles of beer. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. At the request of East Buffalo Township Police Department, one of the students was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for blood and urine samples. Citations were issued for possession of controlled substance, possession of alcohol by an underage person, tampering with fire equipment,

FAILURE TO VACATE BUILDING DURING FIRE ALARM / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for a fire alarm activation and discovered, in a search of the building, that two students failed to exit the building when the alarm sounded. Citations were issued for failure to vacate the building during a fire alarm and disorderly conduct.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window in Swartz Hall. The incident is under investigation.

presence of empty alcohol containers in a room of an underage person, and presence of alcohol in the room of an underage person.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / INSTITUTIONAL VANDALISM—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report that unknown person(s) threw a trash can through a window. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / INSTITUTIONAL VANDALISM—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report that unknown person(s) threw a piece of cinder block through a window. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / INSTITUTIONAL VANDALISM—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) threw bricks through two door windows in the Langone Center. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / TRESPASSING—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) cut the wire retention clips to the construction fence across from Delta Upsilon Fraternity and enter the construction site. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, Oct. 4

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Roberts Hall for the report that unknown person(s) broke a window pane in a exterior door. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male walking with a traffic cone behind Vedder Hall heading toward Smith Hall. Upon investigation, the student admitted to taking the cone from the construction site behind Vedder. A citation was issued for a property violation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to the hospital for treatment of an eye problem. A Student Health Services driver transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and she later returned to campus.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety identified a student walking in front of the Rooke Chemistry Building who was observed walking with a staggered gait. Citation issued for public drunkenness.

FAILURE TO VACATE BUILDING DURING FIRE ALARM / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for a fire alarm activation and discovered, in a search of the building, that two students failed to exit the building when the alarm sounded. Citations were issued for failure to vacate the building during a fire alarm and disorderly conduct.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window in Swartz Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Students question safety in light of murder at Colby

MURDER From page A1

open to the public; therefore we are limited in terms of what we can do to prevent who visits our campus," DeCerio said.

In general, the University is safe, according to DeCerio, with the exception of minor incidents of theft and disorderly conduct, including occasional fights. There have not been any violent crimes on campus in the 13 years DeCerio has been at the University.

"The most violent occurrences on campus are fistfights, generally when people get drunk and argue at parties, but [these types of violence] are not your typical predator incidences you see in big cities," Dean of Students Richard Ferraro said.

Living in what has been called the Bucknell "bubble" has contributed to students' feelings of security on campus. Because the University community is separated from the outside world, many students said they rarely question their safety.

"I feel safer in a naïve way because I don't know everything," Ellie Stewart '07 said.

These types of sentiments could leave students unprotected if something were to happen on campus.

"Students become complacent at times, whether it is traveling at night or not locking doors, and they shouldn't, because we never know," DeCerio said.

The University is its own community, set within a small rural town. DeCerio said being located in such a small town only compounds the falsehood that the University community is protected from dangers such as murder.

"The Bucknell 'bubble' has added to my false sense of security," Rick Donovan '07 said. "We perceive ourselves as surrounded by nothing, not like in a city where murders actually happen."

Colby students interviewed said they felt a sense of security before the murder of Rossignol. Her death now reminds them of what can happen.

Certain precautionary measures have been taken at Colby to prevent incidents like this from happening in the future. Director of Security at Colby, Peter Chenevert, has listed key safety tips on the college's Web site in light of the recent events.

"Be safety-conscious and aware of potential dangers in your daily activities. Remain alert for suspicious activity and conditions that may present a hazard to you or the community. Use the buddy system when moving around campus. Report any and all incidents of criminal or suspicious activity to Security," the Web site said.

Similar precautions are taken at the University. Ferraro suggests standard common sense precautions to students: lock your doors at night, always carry your key, always travel with a buddy or a group at night and use the safe-ride or escort service if you feel it is necessary.

"If a community is extremely safe, people generally do not take precautions," Ferraro said.

Ferraro warns against such behavior and offers advice.

"Use common sense and be vigilant," Ferraro said. "Be careful not to be that oddball statistic because it [violence] feels the same whether you are here at Bucknell or in a big city."

Both safety personnel at Colby and the University advise that being aware of your surroundings is one of the most important things you can do.

"Awareness is the best thing we can do to prevent these kinds of things," Stewart said.

Other students agree with Stewart.

"If you take care of yourself and are aware, not oblivious, you should be okay," Patricia Hohl '06 said.

According to DeCerio, no community is crime-free; even on the safest campus in the country, crime can still occur.

"The best thing students can do is establish habits that protect themselves. I can't protect all 5,000 people on campus each day, so people have to use common sense to protect themselves. All we can do to prevent this is to be prepared with the best crime prevention techniques we know," DeCerio said.

The University has very specific policies for dealing with emergencies, whether they are violent or not, DeCerio said.

The overall feeling on campus is one of safety, despite recent events.

"Does this type of thing worry me? No, it doesn't. Maybe I should be worried, but I'm not," Donovan said. "I feel extremely safe here."

Sklar honored at GW University for his work on socialism and capitalism and socialism going on," Sklar said. "It's just a conflict in the world over how much capitalism and how much socialism."

SKLAR From page A1

Sklar expects about 20 people to attend this specific conference, which allows for each member to actively participate in every session. Presentations will be given by a number of speakers within this society, who will be presenting their own work, in addition to drawing upon the work of Sklar. Sklar will also lead an open discussion on Saturday, which will address imperialism and post-imperialism over the past century.

Although currently on sabbatical, Sklar is a full-time history professor at the University with a number of published works on capitalism, socialism and imperialism.

Community members discuss development downtown present at the meeting expressed the desire to have more student involvement in volunteering and in town.

TOWN MEETING From page A1

Diversifying merchandise and lengthening business hours for students were also addressed.

"Two years ago, Homecoming and the Woolly Worm Festival occurred on the same weekend, and this brought [the campus community] and the town together, which increased attendance and the festival's success," Timer said.

Solutions compiled by the members of the meeting focus on visibility and accessibility. Bike lanes, mass transit, public utilities and signs indicating major item of the agenda—enhancing communication between the University, the town and visitors, with both signage and open relations.

"We need to have open lines of communication so that we can work together in making Lewisburg a place where people would want to visit and live," Senior Class President Jessica Briski said. "I'm sure we know that it's a wonderful place, we just need to work on getting the word out."

Additional solutions compiled by the members of the meeting focus on visibility and accessibility. Bike lanes, a boat house, mass transit, public utilities and signs indicating businesses are among the desired goals.

Communication was a

Ammon's murder featured on ABC

Danny Pelosi, who married the late trustee's wife, gave his side of the story to Primetime last Thursday

ALYSON WALKER
Managing Editor

The late Ted Ammon, former University trustee, was in the national spotlight once again when his widow's second husband spilled all to ABC's Primetime News program. The program, "Murder at the Mansion," aired 10 p.m. on Thursday, Oct. 2. Cynthia McFadden, senior legal correspondent, interviewed Danny Pelosi, the second husband of the late Generosa Ammon Pelosi, the first time his side of the story has been aired on network television.

"It was a classic love triangle, and it had a violent murder. Only the boyfriend, Danny Pelosi, remains to tell the tale."

—Charles Gibson, Primetime news anchor charges. He is currently being investigated by the grand jury as a suspect in Ammon's murder, but the jury has not indicted anyone yet.

Michael Dowd, Generosa and Pelosi's defense attorney, hired shortly after Ammon's murder, expressed his feeling one took a shower afterwards to wash off the blood. You really associate that kind of killing with passion, someone who knew the victim," Shnayerson said.

Shnayerson said that in his discussions with eight to 10 of Ammon's business associates, all of them felt that Generosa was involved in the murder.

It may be difficult to solve Ammon's murder due to missing evidence. During her separation from Ammon, Generosa asked Pelosi to hire a company to install security cameras in their East Hampton house. She used these cameras to spy on Ammon, using her laptop to see what was going on at the house. Meanwhile, she stayed with Pelosi and her two children, adopted by her and Ammon. Ammon paid for their lodging at the Stanhope Hotel—a total sum of approximately $70,000 per month.

The tapes, however, do not show Ammon's murder. The laptop was not only a device used to spy on Ammon, according to the grand jury investigation it could also turn off the security system of the East Hampton home. Pelosi stated that he was unaware of this ability because he did not understand technology that well and could barely use e-mail.

To determine if the laptop turned off the security system, the company would need the laptop, which was burned when a fire struck Coverwood, Generosa's estate in England. Pelosi discussed how he met Generosa. Pelosi said that he often commented to his co-workers on his drive into New York City that somewhere in the city was a rich, single, beautiful woman who he was meant to be with. Instead, he found Generosa, who was rich and beautiful, but married, as was Pelosi. They met at her East Hampton home in the summer of 2000, where he had been hired to do electrical work.

Generosa and Ammon were having marital problems that summer. Generosa believed that Ammon was cheating on her, and she filed for divorce. The divorce turned bitter over custody disputes and settlement costs. Generosa eventually bartered with Ammon for a $25 million divorce settlement.

Pelosi commented that his employees did not want him to have an affair with Generosa because she would fire them. He ignored their advice and pursued her, and they went out for drinks at the Stanhope Hotel in New York City.

"I went from a guy who walked into an electrical job to becoming a boss," Pelosi said.

When McFadden asked what Generosa saw in him, Pelosi said that being from two different worlds was important to their relationship.

"I was her man with a manent guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue in his white sneakers because it was not proper.

Pelosi and Generosa married three months after Ammon's murder. Shortly after, she discovered she had breast cancer. She passed away in August 2003.

At the time of her death, Generosa and Pelosi were separated. In a will dated June 2002, Pelosi would have been her sole beneficiary, but her revised will leaves her children as the major beneficiaries and their nanny as their personal guardian. Pelosi receives nothing, except for the $2 million from his post-nuptial agreement signed July 1, 2003.

Pelosi is challenging Generosa's will. When asked why by McFadden, he responded that it was for jus-

rich man couldn't," Pelosi said.

Pelosi also told Primetime that Generosa was an extreme perfectionist, making his workers rip up floors after finishing it, costing $25,000. He also said she would not allow him to walk down Madison Avenue

News

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme
Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Do-not-call program moving forward

DENVER—The U.S. Federal Trade Commission can enforce the national Do-Not-Call Registry while an appeals court considers whether it violates telemarketers' free-speech rights, according to a court order released Tuesday.

Clark's campaign manager quits

WASHINGTON—Wesley Clark's campaign manager quit Tuesday in a dispute over the direction of the Democratic presidential bid, exposing a rift between the former general's Washington-based advisers and his three-week-old Arkansas campaign team, associates said.

Obesity worsening diabetes epidemic

CHICAGO—One in three Americans born in the year 2000 will develop adult-onset diabetes, a worsening epidemic that disproportionately affects women and minorities, federal researchers said Tuesday.

Sharon: Israel ready to hit enemies

Prime Minister Ariel Sharon said Tuesday that Israel was ready to "hit its enemies any place and in any way" amid a flare-up on its border with Lebanon two days after an Israeli raid in Syria. Earlier, Syrian President Bashar al-Assad accused Israel of trying to drag his country and the rest of the Middle East into a wider conflict.

White House to screen leak material

WASHINGTON—White House lawyers will spend up to two weeks screening responses turned in by roughly 2,000 staff members who were asked what, if anything, they knew about the unauthorized disclosure of an undercover CIA officer's identity. But President Bush voiced some doubt Tuesday that the source of the leak would ever be found.

Three soldiers, interpreter killed in Iraq

BAGHDAD, Iraq—Three U.S. soldiers and an Iraqi interpreter were killed and three other service members were wounded in a pair of roadside bombings in central Iraq, the U.S. military said Tuesday.

Hospital complications take huge toll

CHICAGO—Postoperative infections, surgical wounds accidentally opening and other often-preventable complications lead to more than 32,000 U.S. hospital deaths and more than $9 billion in extra costs annually, a report suggests.

Trio wins Nobel Prize in physics

STOCKHOLM, Sweden—Two American citizens and a Russian won the 2003 Nobel Prize in physics Tuesday for theories about how matter can show bizarre behavior at extremely low temperatures. The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences cited Alexei Abrikosov, Anthony Leggett and Vitaly Ginzburg for their work concerning two phenomena called superconductivity and superfluidity.

Amazon joins Microsoft's Office

Microsoft announced a partnership Tuesday with retail giant Amazon.com under which the software giant will add links to Amazon services within its new Office applications.

Painting of Madonna traveling across Europe

ROME—A centuries-old Russian Orthodox painting of the Madonna and Child rests in the apartment of Pope John Paul II, the last stop so far in a journey through Europe from its home in Kazan, a city east of Moscow.

China adds wind to its energy mix

KORLA, China—Nestled in a blasted valley below the Tianshan mountains of China's westernmost Xinjiang region are 172 stark white windmills that may hold the key to the country's quest for clean energy to power its booming economy. Wind power — inexhaustible and widely distributed — might eventually help wean China off smog-spewing coal and crude oil from the volatile Middle East, officials say.

Bear activist killed by Alaska grizzly

ANCHORAGE, Alaska—A self-taught bear enthusiast who once called Alaska's brown bears harmless was one of two people fatally mauled in a bear attack in the Katmai National Park and Preserve.

Peaceful sleep may restore memories

Getting a good night's sleep before a big exam might be better than pulling an all-nighter. A study found that sleep apparently restores memories that were lost during a hectic day.

Traffic Study recommends keeping Seventh Street open killed yet, but it could happen any time."

TRAFFIC From page A1

Pennsylvania law requires all drivers to yield to pedestrians in all crosswalks.

"If each pedestrian and driver makes a conscious effort to walk and drive in a safe and courteous manner, we will improve safety and reduce anxiety," McGinnis said.

Monday night a car crossing the intersection of 7th Street and Moore Avenue across from the Langone Center hit a pedestrian, according to Rourke Day '07, a member of Student Emergency Response Volunteers (SERV). Emergency vehicles were called to the scene to evaluate the extent of the incident.

McGinnis' civil engineering class "Introduction to Transportation," researched the possible 2010 University Plan that calls for closure of part of 7th Street, last spring. Students counted cars and found in a 55 minute study that 77 percent of thru traffic on 7th Street was Bucknell-related.

"The students in the class also studied speed and found that the average speed on campus was faster than the speed limit posted on the roads. This included student, faculty, and emergency vehicles. According to Public Safety, there have been 27 speeding violations this academic year. In the past two years, there have been 76 speeding violations.

The engineering students found that the University's maintenance staff would need to find a new way to operate on a "walking campus."

The class concluded their study with a presentation to University officials and recommended not to close 7th Street until traffic demand was reduced because of the difficult problems that would arise. They suggested means of making the street more aesthetically pleasing like resurfacing the road and planning trees, but did not find the immediate closure necessary.

This long-range plan to alter traffic patterns on campus is a part of the continuing transformation of campus, including the additional green space added between O'Leary Center and Dana Engineering, and the partial closure of Fraternity Road to allow space for the new Breakiron Engineering Building. Associate Dean of Students Gerald Commerford said he warns against altering the landscape when additions are made to campus.

"When adding new buildings, we need to watch the grass to brick ratio. Otherwise we will see a transformation to an urban campus," Commerford said.

If streets were closed, safety vehicles would encounter complications with uphill emergencies.

"I'm concerned about safety. What if they need to get a firetruck uphill?" said Public Safety Officer Ian Rollin said.

Students involved in SERV on campus feel especially compelled to address the safety issues that arise. "Seventh Street is a main artery for anything uphill. A change in traffic patterns would increase response time," SERV volunteer Joe Mitchell '05 said.

Others see this change as positive.

"This is a good thing that should be done. It seems inevitable when looking at the other changes that are occurring on campus," Carmon Hufford '04 said.

Lance Lippencott, a project manager from the Physical Plant leading a current study of campus traffic pattern, refutes that argument with the use of alternative solutions to the problem of emergency vehicle access.

"Bollards [poles] on pathways make areas more accessible to emergency vehicles. These posts are removable and are coordinated directly with the emergency crews. The crews carry keys on their trucks for changes to campus.

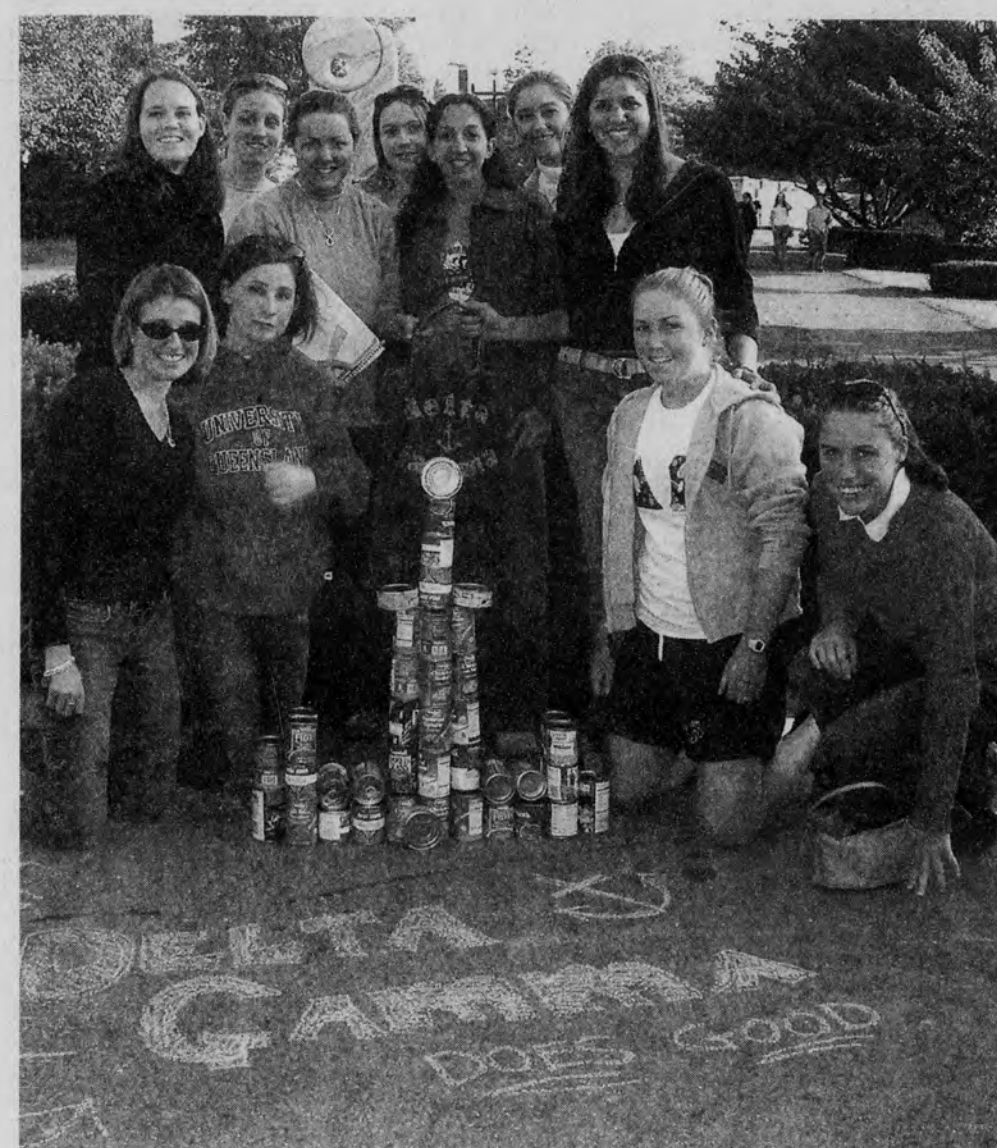

"Bucknell's plan to make it a 'walking campus' is just a ploy to raise its ranking in the US News and World Report," Aaron McCollough '04 said. Lippencott stresses the importance of the "long-range planning effort" being made, and that no final conclusions can be reached until proper data analysis is presented.

"We are currently in the process of studying overall traffic on campus and trying to get an idea of what to do for future plans," Lippencott said.

"When adding new buildings we need to watch the grass to brick ratio. Otherwise we will see a transformation to an urban campus."

—Gerald Commerford, Associate Dean of Students

Can you sculpt?

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

The "Can You Sculpt" project had high attendance on Wednesday. Students created sculptures with donated cans of food. The "I Serve" volunteer campaign is now entering its second year, as the administration attempts to encourage more students to participate in volunteer activities.

News

STUDENT PULSE

"I'm taking the GRE on Saturday and studying frantically on Friday."

—Stephanie Chin '04

"I'll be sleeping and eating."

—Mimi Prabhu '07

"I'm going to go home and I am going to go to Philly."

—Jenna Tesaro '07

"Were both going home."

—Phil Futrick '06 and Chris Grandizo '06

"I'm going to a leadership conference in Massachusetts."

—Reuben Quansah '06

"I'm going home and seeing my friends."

—Rani Bhalodig '07

"I'm going to hang out with my mom. I'm also getting my hair done."

—Danielle Todman '06

What are you doing this fall break?

Compiled by Meghan Ball and Elisabeth Salemme

October	October	Homecoming
FRI 17	SUN 19	FRI 19
Bucknell Homecoming 2003 Inner Beauty Pageant Langone Center Bison 6:30 p.m. "A Chef in Love" Vaughn Lit 100 Auditorium 8 p.m. "Office Space" Langone Center Forum 10:30 p.m. Open Mic Night 7th Street Cafe 11 p.m.	Bucknell Homecoming 2003 Quaker Services Vaughn Lit (Willard Smith Library) 10 a.m. Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 11 a.m. Two Past Midnight Langone Center 276 (Terrace Room) 1 p.m. Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel (Main Sanctuary) 4 p.m. Poetry Reading: Stephen Dunn Bucknell Hall 100 (Recital Hall) 8 p.m. Catholic Mass Hunt Hall Living Room 101 10 p.m. Men's Soccer vs. Lehigh Women's Soccer Field 3 p.m. "2 Fast 2 Furious" Vaughn Lit (Auditorium) 10:30 p.m.	Admissions Interviews Freas Hall 9 a.m. - 3:30 p.m. Homecoming Welcome Center Elaine Langone Ground Floor 10 a.m. - 8 p.m. Information Services Tours Bertrand Library 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. Campus Tours Freas Hall 9:30 a.m.; 10:30 a.m.; 11:15 a.m.; 1:15 p.m.; 2:15 p.m.; 3:30 p.m. Craft Center Open House Noon - 5 p.m. Alumni Network Meet Hatter's Tea Party Hunt Hall Ground Floor, Room 01 4:30 p.m. - 5:30 p.m. Breakiron Engineering Building Groundbreaking 5:30 p.m. Bison Club Breakfast and Hall of Fame Induction LC - Bottwick Cafeteria 8:30 a.m. Homecoming Welcome Center LC - Ground Floor 9 a.m. - 2 p.m. Admissions Interviews Admissions Office - Freas Hall 9 a.m. - 11:15 a.m. Artist Bradley Shoemaker LC - Ground Floor Mall area 10 a.m. - 2 p.m. Tailgate Luncheon Terrace Room - Langone Center 11:30 a.m. - 1 p.m. Post-game Celebration Football Practice Field 4 p.m. Association for the Arts Brunch and Fall Meeting Arches Lounge Langone Center 9 a.m.

Send calendar submissions to bucknellian@bucknell.edu with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

BISON PROPERTIES

- The Best Off-Campus Rentals at the Best Prices!
- Professionally Managed and Maintained
- High Speed Internet Available
- Two to Eight Bedrooms
- Units and Individual Rooms Available for '04-'05
- Now Accepting Applications for '05-'06

Call or E-mail Scott Bank '91
for more information

610-506-6676

bison.properties@comcast.net

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 132, Number 6
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor
Michelle Dornbeck '05

Managing Editor
Alyson Walker '04

Business Manager
Stephen Santulli '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubenstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04

News Editors
Elsabeth Salemme '06
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kecley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Homan '05
Chris Stries '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Pat Evans '04
Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Julianne Pietak '04
Josie Cetta '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photo Editors
Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout
Nick Kupenski '07

Chief Copy Editors
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
John Heekin '05
Davaish Malhotra '06

Marketing Directors
Joseph Giordano '05
Alexander Kanaris '05

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorial board of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PHYSICAL INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFO

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Pedestrian safety problems can be reduced

Please be careful when reading the paper this week, especially if you are crossing any streets on campus. For a college that promotes the virtues of a walking campus and is located in a small town, we seem to have an unreasonable pedestrian safety problem.

The safety of students walking around campus can no longer be ignored or relegated to a campus-wide e-mail warning us to refrain from throwing ourselves in front of cars when going for a run.

Just days ago, a student was struck by a car outside the Langone Center. The safety of students walking around campus can no longer be ignored or relegated to a campus-wide e-mail warning us to refrain from throwing ourselves in front of cars when going for a run.

Like many problems on campus, the solutions to this problem require action and understanding by all members of our community. Only through a cooperative environment in which groups are not afraid to adjust their policies and attitudes can the necessary improvements be made.

The easiest and most direct improvement in pedestrian safety can come from students walking on campus. Walkers need to be cognizant when crossing the street, especially at night.

It is much easier for a person to see a car coming down the road than it is for the car to see the person. When possible, as dictated by fashion and weather, students should wear light-colored or reflective clothing at night. Finally, despite the traffic laws and signals, students need to not assume that a car will stop at a stop sign or slow down at a crosswalk.

A similarly simple adjustment needs to be made by people driving through and around campus. Students, faculty, staff and visitors from town all need to be more aware of students hurrying to class, to lunch and to socialize at night.

It cannot be a surprise to drivers on this campus that there is much of pedestrian traffic. The area most in need of improvement concerns the speed of vehicles on Seventh Street,

Moore Avenue and Dent Drive.

Another group responsible for improving pedestrian safety is Public Safety. We have noticed increased interest in policing the four- and three-way stops around campus, but this focus seems to occur only on Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights.

This decision is no doubt an attempt to look for intoxicated drivers and is certainly warranted and welcomed by the majority of campus. We think it is no less important for Public Safety to be on the look out for dangerous drivers during the other days of the week.

Public Safety operates with a finite amount of resources and we acknowledge their inability to be everywhere all the time. A solution is to adjust the relative focus on parking enforcement and safety enforcement.

We are not asking Public Safety to overlook parking violations; we are simply pointing out the improvements in campus safety that can be had by increasing the focus on speeding and other kinds of dangerous driving instead of parking.

If the primary job of Public Safety is to keep our campus safe for students, faculty, staff and visitors, then it surely follows that discouraging speeding should be a higher priority than discouraging students from backing into parking spots.

Over the past two full years, Public Safety has issued over 6,000 parking violations and only 76 moving violations. This ratio reflects a misguided focus that endangers students walking on campus. Illegally parked cars are rarely a safety hazard; Public Safety needs to reprioritize and shift part of its focus back to creating a safe campus.

Over the past two full years, Public Safety has issued over 6,000 parking violations and only 76 moving violations. This ratio reflects a misguided focus that endangers students walking on campus.

Let us all be a little more careful and considerate now, before a need- less tragedy occurs.

Rogers addresses drinking issues

To the Editor:

While cleaning out old papers from my previous position as acting president and provost at another university, I found clippings from the student newspaper that contained obituaries of students killed in alcohol-related incidents.

The rush of emotions and gut-wrenching sorrow I felt rereading those old articles surprised me. The shock, extreme sense of loss, unbelievable sobs of classmates and, worst of all, parents' grief-stricken faces all came back to me as fresh as the day they happened. An obituary can summarize the facts of death; it cannot begin to summarize the richness of life lost or the sorrow of those bereaved.

In the first five weeks of this academic year there have been 121 alcohol-related charges and almost 40 disorderly gathering citations. At least five individuals have had their privileges to live in town revoked. You might want to credit this surge in violations over last year's numbers to increased enforcement, but to do so would require ignoring the most dangerous and self-inflicted events — 10 hospitalizations for alcohol poisoning and four DUIs. So far, we have escaped the ultimate consequence, but consider the odds if this trend continues.

Baseball team not cursed by goat

To the Editor:

I am from Chicago. I know about baseball curses. I come from a family of White Sox fans, but I know all about that goat that cursed the Cubs for the past 95 years. I also know all about the poor Red Sox, cursed by the Great Bambino himself. With that said, I don't believe in curses. I believe in bad management and bad breaks, but not curses.

This season there is hope for both these loveable losers. Everyone is talking about the possibility of the Cubs and Red Sox playing each other in this year's World Series, the dream series becoming a reality. I got to thinking about what if this happens. I mean, if these supposed curses really do exist, neither team can possibly win. What exactly does that mean? I see a few possibilities, none of them pretty. A huge earthquake could hit during the fifth inning of game 2 at Fenway. Maybe the planes carrying the two teams to Chicago for games three and four mysteriously crash, killing the whole roster. Or maybe game seven would just never end, continuing inning after inning straight into spring training. The apocalypse doesn't seem out of the question either ... well, that might be a little drastic, and the others morbid. If you believe in curses, you have to admit there cannot possibly be a winner of this hypothetical, but very possible, series. So maybe we should all stop worrying about the "curses" and mistakes of the past and focus on the future of these two teams that have been playing some great baseball. I'd like nothing more for the Red Sox and Cubs to play each other in the Championship series; I just like to think it would be played without any disasters befalling the human race.

Sincerely,

Steffen Rogers
University President

Haley Kerr '07

Students feel connected on campus

By TAMANNA HYE
Writer

It is a very frightening transition to go from high school to college level. There is so much pressure to excel in every way. Being a first-year student in this day and age is not the most pleasant experience in the world to the average 18-year-old, nor is it something to be forgotten.

The upperclassmen all have their own stories of their first year and the many wonders of living "the college experience." There are the friends, the classes, and being in the middle of nowhere—which can be both refreshing and very annoying.

There are many expectations that are fulfilled. You can feel displaced and, at the same time, feel very connected to this great University that we call "home."

One of the first thoughts of first-year students entering the University is how they are ever going to manage a life in this great place.

As one first-year student said, the University seemed to be so beautiful that she didn't think she belonged here. Coming from a very small town in upstate New York where there were a lot of rednecks, she didn't think that this quaint, clean and very personal town in central Pennsylvania was for her.

She didn't think she would feel quite herself here and worried everyone might shun her. In fact, she was very surprised that the University admitted her and she was profoundly taken aback. It is the innocence, the not knowing the place and where one fits in, that keeps many people from even going away to college.

For the many who do leave their comfortable nest to explore the world, it is a very courageous thing to do. As another first-year student told me, many of her friends decided to stay at home, and only a few of her friends wanted to leave for college. This student is truly enjoying her experiences here. She always imagined the college life to be this way and always pictured a college campus that looked like the University.

This student's first impression of the University was that it was beautiful. In fact, it struck her as being the most beautiful college campus she had ever seen. Coming from a city, she had never experienced being in such a small town.

The high school she graduated from had a larger student body than the University. She is still trying to get used to the fact that almost everyone she has met during Orientation still remembers her name. Being in a small place does have its advantages.

One thing that many first-year students have to deal with is not being allowed to

The University seemed to be so beautiful that she didn't think she belonged here have a car on campus. It causes many people to feel very isolated and secluded from the rest of the world.

Some really like the small, close-knit atmosphere of the University that they wouldn't find if they went to a larger school.

Many first-year students have told me that since they came to campus they haven't really left it at all. Some of them have done volunteer work through the Community Service Office, while others have had the pleasure of going to the Susquehanna Valley Mall. However, few have really "left" the University. Is that a problem for them?

It is hard to believe that the Class of 2007 has only been here for a little over five weeks, but many feel like it has been much longer. Is it because the students are too busy with their college lives to notice the time pass by? Or are they just bonding with their halls and teammates? Or is it because since there is no way of getting off campus, they feel like they have been stuck here forever? Maybe it is a combination of all of these things.

As one first-year student said, "I love my hall and since I am stuck here, I love them even more."

Another first-year student told me that he hasn't watched television since he has arrived here. When asked why he hasn't kept up with current events, he simply said that he didn't feel the need to here. He explained that since he is here to have fun, why should he worry about what is going on in the world? It is as if this guy has been infected with the "bubble" syndrome without even knowing it.

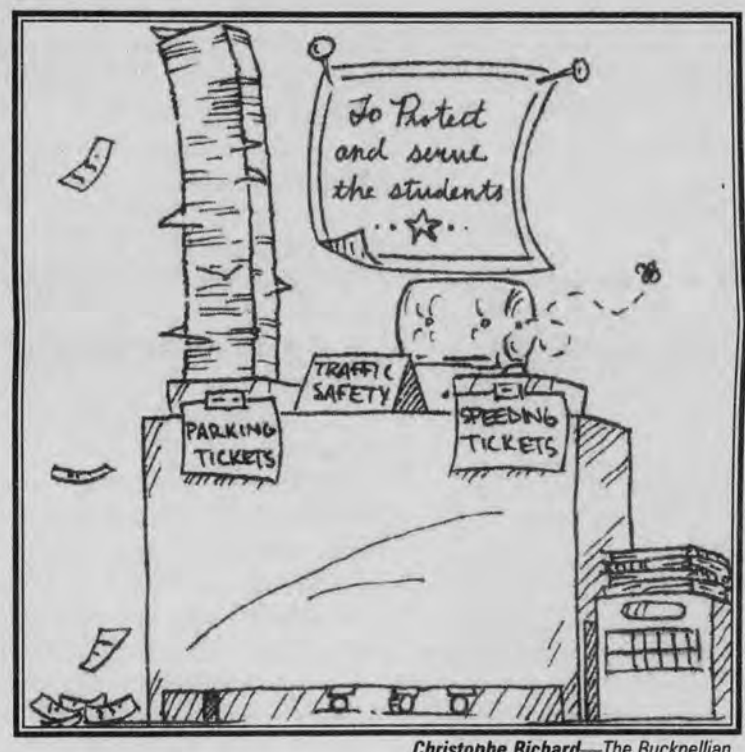

One of the most surprising statements was made by a first-year international student. Her impression of the University when she compared it to many other colleges she visited was that the University was the ideal place to make friends.

She really felt that everyone was helpful and personable. She quickly made friends from the International Student Orientation. She was here before anyone else on her hall and so she was able to get to know her Resident Assistant (RA) very well. Her RA really helped her with her transition to college in a new country. She realized that everything was going to be great because everyone was there supporting each other. Even in her native country, this girl knew that college students were not this supportive and caring.

Some people say that first impressions make lasting impressions. In all the stories mentioned here, from shared dinner conversations to the love to talk about, it shows that the University does have its charm. To be living without any immediate family members nearby does cause you to focus on yourself as a person, individual, community member and part of the University.

The first-year students have no choice but to feel connected to something, but first impressions aren't necessarily the truths that are revealed. It is often in the waiting and seeking that they can overcome their own personal images and see what college life is like in reality.

Christophe Richard—The Bucknellian

United States offends United Nations

By JOSH FISHER
Senior Writer

"Events during the past two years have set before us the clearest of divides," U.S. President George W. Bush said last week, petitioning the United Nations for military aid the increasingly chaotic and tumultuous Iraq.

This stark divide, Bush said, exists between "those who seek order and those who spread chaos, between those who work for peaceful change and those who adopt the methods of gangsters, between those who honor the rights of man and those who deliberately take the lives of men and women and children, without mercy or shame."

Saturated with a sort of sad irony, this statement comes from a man whose cowboy diplomacy has defied the basic principles of international law and rebuked the voices within the United States and the international community who seek peaceful alternatives.

Only four times in recent history have nations convened to reorder the world: the Peace of Westphalia in 1648 after the Thirty Years' War, the Congress of Vienna in 1815 after the Napoleonic Wars, in 1919 after World War I and in 1945 after World War II. Each time, the world collapsed into a maelstrom of violence. We find ourselves in a similar position again, and now more than ever, we need to be willing to compromise and cooperate for our mutual interests.

Conversely, the Bush administration, has tossed aside or stalled at least 11 major international treaties, including the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty (threatening to resume testing nuclear weapons), the Convention of Small Arms, the Convention on Biological and Chemical Weapons, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the ratification of the International Criminal Court.

Accustomed to being the world's superpower and most influential economic engine, the United States has developed horrible myopia when it comes to world events and the effect on people outside the United States. Bush's recent speech to the United Nations epitomizes this problem.

"Saddam Hussein's monuments have been removed and not only his statues," Bush said. "The true monuments of his rule and his character, the torture chambers and the rape rooms and the prison cells for innocent children, are closed. And as we discover the killing fields and mass graves of Iraq, the true scale of Saddam's cruelty is being revealed."

But yet at the peak of Hussein's cruelty—the use of chemical weapons against Iraq's own citizens, for example—the United States was in fact backing Iraq and supplying it with weapons to fight Iran.

"I also recognize that some of the sovereign nations of this assembly disagreed with our actions," Bush later said. "Yet there was, and there remains, unity among us on the fundamental principles and objectives of the United Nations. We are dedicated to the defense of our collective security and to the advance of human rights."

It was not even six months ago, I recall, that Bush and many right-wing demagogues in the United States were unremittingly denigrating the United Nations as a bloated, anti-American and worthless international organization. Now the Bush administration, in light of the foreseen human and monetary costs to the United States for occupying Iraq, comes groveling back.

Recently, one of Bush's appointees, Richard Perle, publicly denounced the United Nations as ineffectual as the League of Nations. And this last spring, the United States brazenly bypassed the U.N. Security Council, violating international law—to invade on the grounds that Iraq had violated international law.

In reality though, the Bush administration has forever regarded the role of the United Nations in the world as a vehicle for advancing U.S. foreign policy, as opposed to a structure of international law designed to build international consensus and promote collective security against aggression, one that seeks non-military solutions to this sort of conflict security.

"These permanent commitments call us to great work in the world, work we must do together. So let us move forward," Bush said.

Well, that certainly sounds nice, but statements like these are frequently framed in the "do what we say" mentality. Former U.S. President Bill Clinton's ambassador to the United Nations and former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright stated that the United States "will act multilaterally when we can and unilaterally when we must."

Unfortunately, the Bush administration has relied primarily on unilateralism, promulgating a doctrine of preventative war that allows the United States to go into battle whenever and against whoever it decides, regardless of international opinion.

If the United States wishes to steer international opinion away from out-and-out anti-Americanism, perhaps the Bush administration should consider eschewing this lone-wolf, moral-arbitrator-of-the-world persona and start considering the fact that international stability rests in the promise of effective international law.

The United Nations' many weaknesses are no excuse for taking on international ventures alone; only with increased cooperation can the United States work to stop bloodshed, police conflicts and promote human rights.

The stark divide between those who seek order and those who spread chaos, between those who seek peaceful change and those who adopt the methods of vigilante gangsters, can only be bridged through building bridges of diplomatic communication, not burning them.

Now, more than ever, the United States needs to empower the United Nations and international law, to which we subject ourselves as well.

University imposes double jeopardy

Municipality and University collaborate to punish students

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

What makes your day? For some of us, it's knowing that the University and local municipal police departments feel the University has the right to be involved in our off-campus legal affairs as if they were our giant, nosy disciplinarian parents.

This annoyance manifests itself most frequently in their correspondence when students get in trouble off campus. It's not enough that municipal law punishes lawbreakers for their crimes; somebody must call on "Mom and Dad University" to administer an additional slap on the wrist.

The University believes the common law by which our society abides and functions is inadequate. Due process, court dates, fines, probation, jail time, etc. are not acceptable consequences for lawbreakers, despite the fact that civilization has used these to deal with criminals for centuries. According to the University, we must receive points!

According to "our neighboring municipal police departments, the University does indeed assume the role of our legal guardian. When we were arrested in high school, the cops would show up at our parents' doors, accompanied by our sorry, teenage, law-breaking selves.

Now that we are, for the most part, over the age of 18, and many of us are 21 or older, one might assume that circumstances would change to reflect our maturity and legal status; however, this is hardly the case. When we are caught breaking municipal law downtown, out of the jurisdiction of the University's department of Public Safety, the municipal police contact our "parent University" to tell on us. They don't even call our real parents!

This is not solely the fault of the local police departments. Behaving similarly to stereotypical teen gossip queens, the University accepts all information from the municipality that it shouldn't have, then goes a step further to punish us for something for which legitimate, democratic society has already punished us. This is, of course, double jeopardy. But who cares about the U.S. Constitution?

As if this isn't absurd enough, our information is continually shared among various departments at the University. In some cases, this means the Office of Housing and Residential Life or the Office of Off-Campus Living collaborating to find ways to further penalize students sanctioned for municipal law violations by restricting their housing privileges.

In other instances, members of the University community will anonymously propagate information by means of dropping off notes in mailboxes or gossiping in hopes that students can receive third and fourth penalties for their actions. Although this seems ridiculous, it actually happens and it's actually ridiculous.

In a small, tightly-knit community, character is easily impugned by gossip. The nature of gossip, however, is generally such that more defamation is conveyed than truth. In spite of this, some University professionals do gossip about students' legal affairs.

Students can learn a great deal from municipal penalties after breaking laws downtown. The experience of appearing before a magistrate and feeling the power of the law is a jarring one.

Behaving similarly to stereotypical teen gossip queens, the University accepts all information from the municipality that it shouldn't have Paying fines, spending time in jail or doing laborious community service can become more serious situations in reality than they seem when discussed hypothetically.

These experiences are shameful and often have a strong impact on those who have endured them, save hardened criminals for whom such punishment is a frequent and thus trivial occurrence.

That said, the University's double-jeopardy policies are inherently presumptuous. The fact that the University sees fit to punish students on its own, on top of municipal sanctions, is a slap in the face to the institution of U.S. common law; it suggests that the University believes common law should not apply to its students or is ineffective in some way.

The institution of common law is democratically legitimated, and we depend upon it to regulate society. None of us should be exempt from it. Likewise, none of us should be subjected to extrajural penalties created by the University as a result of its ludicrous assumption that common law is not enough punishment for its students.

The experience of appearing before a magistrate and feeling the power of the law is a jarring one.

When students break municipal laws off campus, their incidents become public information. As a result, neither the municipal police departments nor the University are breaking any laws by sharing information. Their actions, however, are entirely unethical.

In addition to double jeopardy, which is blatantly wrong, the sharing of students' legal information undermines the responsibility of our true parents and legal guardians to morally educate us and places the University in that role instead. After we are disciplined by municipal law and, should we share our affairs with our parents, chastised by them for our moral ineptitude, do we really need the University to be involved? I signed up for an education, not another parent.

Let your voice be heard!

Write us a letter—

Bucknellian@bucknell.edu or Box C3952

NATIONAL COMING OUT DAY

Faculty, staff and administrators support lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered students

Steffen Rogers, President
Athena Rogers
Janice Mann, Office of the President
Stephen Bowen, Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs
Charles Pollock, Vice President of Student Affairs
Kurt M. Thiede, Vice President of Enrollment Management
Robert J. Kallin, Vice President of Development/University Relations
James Rice, Asst. Vice President of Academic Affairs/Development
Wayne Bromfield, General Counsel/Department of Management
Eugenia Gerdes, Dean, College of Arts and Sciences
Robert M. Midkiff, Associate Dean, College of Arts and Sciences
Elaine Garrett, Associate Dean, College of Arts and Sciences
Beth Cunningham, Associate Dean, College of Arts and Sciences
Christopher J. Zappe, Associate Dean of Faculty & Professor of Management
Karen Marosi, Associate Dean, College of Engineering
Richard Ferraro, Dean of Students
Linda Thomas-Buchanan, Associate Dean of Students
Gerald Commerford, Associate Dean of Students
Amy Badal, Assistant Dean of Students
Chip Marrara, Assistant Dean of Students
Shauna Irwin, Assistant Director of Fraternity & Sorority Affairs
Kari Conrad, Associate Dean, Campus Activities and Programs
Kim Henry, Campus Activities and Programs
Tasha Henderson, Campus Activities and Programs
Steven Klinger, Campus Activities and Programs
Mary Beth Shively, Dean of Students Office
Daniel Remley, Assistant Dean, Housing and Residential Life
Mike Purcell, Housing and Residential Life
Bonnie Ahlers, Housing and Residential Life
Stephen Apanel, Housing and Residential Life
Victor Arcelus, Housing and Residential Life
Kyle Audette, Housing and Residential Life
Jennifer Domagal, Housing and Residential Life
Jaifai Lewis, Housing and Residential Life
Fran McDaniel, Coordinator, Office of LGBT Awareness
Janice Butler, Director, Office of Service-Learning
Molly Dragiewicz, Director, Women's Resource Center
Debra Wilson, Women's Resource Center/Office of LGBT Awareness
Linda Locher, Director, Psychological Services
Eric Affsprung, Associate Director, Psychological Services
Renée Cardone, Psychological Services
Nancy Grant, Psychological Services
Arlene Hoyt, Psychological Services
Vicki Benion, Director, Bookstore
Dennis Hopple, Associate Registrar, Office of the Registrar
Glenda Durso, Manager, Seventh Street Café
Shirley Erb, Seventh Street Café
Steven Klinger, Seventh Street Café/Uptown
Gretchen Heuges, Craft Center
Amy Merena, Director, Multicultural Student Services
Paula Cogan, Director, International Student Services
Erik Krauss, Associate Director, International Student Services
Vince DeCercchio, Director, Public Safety Office
Don Wirick, Public Safety Office
Lt. James R. Middleton, Public Safety Office
Dawn Clark, Public Safety Office
Kathy Kron, Public Safety Office
Selena Mull, Public Safety Office
Bill Boswell, Director of Cultural Events
Iris Rifkin-Gainer, Weis Center
Susan Brundage, Office of Vice President for Finance and Administration
Mark Davies, Dean of Admissions
Gayle Pollock, Senior Associate Director of Admissions
Gil Villanueva, Associate Director of Admissions
Carol Gadd, Associate Director of Admissions
Tania M. Johnson, Assistant Director of Admissions

Pam Glass, Office of Admissions
Kate Peltz, Office of Admissions
Jim Shaynak, Office of Admissions
Brad Ward, Office of Admissions
Tulu Bayar-Sakman, Department of Art and Art History
Rosalyn Richards, Department of Art and Art History
Roger Rothman, Department of Art and Art History
Warren Abrahamson, Department of Biology
Mitchell Chernin, Department of Biology
Ken Field, Department of Biology
Mary Howe, Department of Biology
Steve Jordan, Department of Biology
Matthew E. McTammany, Department of Biology
Marie Pizzorno, Department of Biology
Gary Sojka, Department of Biology
Elizabeth Capaldi, Department of Biology
Donald Dearborn, Department of Biology
Dee Casteel, Department of Chemistry
Molly M. McGuire, Department of Chemistry
Timothy Raymond, Department of Chemical Engineering
Margot Vigeant, Department of Chemical Engineering
T. Michael Toole, Department of Civil and Environmental Engineering
Kevin Daly, Department of Classics
Greta Ham, Department of Classics
Janet Jones, Department of Classics
Stephanie Larson, Department of Classics
Katherine M. Faull, Departments of Comparative Humanities/Foreign Languages, German
John Hunter, Department of Comparative Humanities
Slava Yastremski, Departments of Comparative Humanities/Foreign Languages, Russian Patricia Wenner, Department of Computer Science
Rick Zaccane, Department of Computer Science
Elizabeth L. Armstrong, Department of East Asian Studies
Erik Lofgren, Department of East Asian Studies
James J. Orr, Department of East Asian Studies
Nina Banks, Department of Economics
David Kristjansson-Gural, Department of Economics
Amy Carney, Department of Education
Abe Feuerstein, Department of Education
Rosaria Gabriele, Department of Education
Sue-Ellen Henry, Department of Education
Katharyne Nottis, Department of Education
Libby Vesilind, Department of Education
Susan Baish, Department of Electrical Engineering
David F. Kelley, Department of Electrical Engineering
Sara Kelley, Department of Electrical Engineering
Glynis Carr, Department of English
Norlisha Crawford, Department of English
Michael Drexler, Department of English
Sherri Geller, Department of English
Ghislaine McDayter, Department of English
Ronald Mohring, Department of English
Sandra Morris, Department of English
Marilyn Mumford, Department of English, Emerita
Jean Peterson, Department of English
Harriet Pollack, Department of English
Meenakshi Ponnuswami, Department of English
John Rickard, Department of English
Robert Taylor, Department of English
Peter Wilhausen, Department of Environmental Studies
Francisco Fernandez, Department of Foreign Languages, Spanish
Renee Gosson, Department of Foreign Languages, French
Elisabeth Guerrero, Department of Foreign Languages, Spanish
James Lavine, Department of Foreign Languages, Russian
Helen Morris-Keitel, Department of Foreign Languages, German
Ben Marsh, Departments of Geography/Environmental Studies
Karin Morin, Department of Geography
Adrian Mulligan, Department of Geography
Paul Susman, Department of Geography
Amy Day-Lewis, Department of Geology
Frederick Day-Lewis, Department of Geology
Mary Beth Gray, Department of Geology

Carl Kirby, Department of Geology
Heleen Mathias, Department of Geology
Peter Sak, Department of Geology
Sharon Gerarge, Department of History
Jay Goodale, Department of History
Ann Tlusty, Department of History
Martha Verbrugge, Department of History
David Mitchell, Departments of International Relations/Political Science
Emek Ucarer, Department of International Relations
Doug Allen, Department of Management
Jordi Cormas, Department of Management
Jamie Hendry, Department of Management
Tammy Hiller, Department of Management
Nancy Weida, Department of Management
Stephen Zappe, Department of Management
Mary Lynn Breyfogle, Department of Mathematics
George Exner, Department of Mathematics
Pete Goetz, Department of Mathematics
Amy Miko, Department of Mathematics
Alexander Richman, Department of Mathematics
Allen Schweinsberg, Department of Mathematics
Rich Weida, Department of Mathematics
Olivia Bloechl, Department of Music
Bill Kenny, Department of Music
Georgia A. Newlin, Department of Music
Christopher Para, Department of Music
Catherine Payn, Department of Music
William Payn, Department of Music
Gillian Barker, Department of Philosophy
Anne Eaton, Department of Philosophy
David Schoepf, Department of Physics
Ben Vollmayr-Lee, Department of Physics
Katharina Vollmayr-Lee, Department of Physics
Michael James, Department of Political Science
Amy McCreedy, Department of Political Science
John Peeler, Department of Political Science
Andrea Stevenson Sanjian, Department of Political Science
Kim Daubman, Department of Psychology
David Evans, Department of Psychology
William Flack, Department of Psychology
Kevin Meyers, Department of Psychology
Thomas Ellis, Department of Religion
Eric Mazur, Department of Religion
Doug Sturm, Departments of Religion and Political Science, Emeritus
Rivka Ulmer, Department of Religion, Jewish Studies
Carol White, Departments of Religion/Comparative Humanities
Deborah Abowitz, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Tony Butto, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Elizabeth Crespo, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Pawan Dhingra, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Michelle Johnson, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Carl Milofsky, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Yvonne Roadarmel, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Matthew Silberman, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
Paula Davis-Larson, Department of Theater and Dance
David Fillmore, Department of Theater and Dance
Bob Gainer, Department of Theater and Dance
Gary Grant, Department of Theater and Dance
Rachel Schuldenfrei, Department of Theater and Dance
Elaine Williams, Department of Theater and Dance
Coralynn Davis, Women's Studies Program
Sue Mathias, Women's Studies Program
Rabbi Serena Fujita, Ziegler Student Health Center
Ian Oliver, University Chaplain
Linda Godfrey, Office of Chaplains and Religious Life
Marcia Hoffman, Director, Personnel Services
Cindy Bilger, Associate Director, Personnel Services
Lisa Sanford, Associate Director, Personnel Services
Dan Mills, Samek Art Gallery
Cindy Peltier, Samek Art Gallery
Deirdre O'Connor, Co-Director, Writing Center
Margaret Cronin, Writing Center
Sabrina Kirby, Writing Center

Mary Wyeth, Writing Center
Steve Styers, Writing Center
Shara McCallum, Director, Stadler Center for Poetry
Susan A. Reed, Co-Director, Race/Gender Resource Center
Martha Shaunessy, Race/Gender Resource Center
Laura Denbow, Director, Career Development Center
Sarah Bell, Career Development Center
Shannon Bradford, Career Development Center
Pat Longley, Career Development Center
Kathy Kennedy, Bucknell Public Interest Program
Mariette van Tilburg, Office of International Education
Gene Spencer, Assistant Vice President of Information Services and Resources
Keelan Cleary, Information Services and Resources
Rob Guissanie, Information Services and Resources
Bud Hiller, Information Services and Resources
Martha Holland, Information Services and Resources
Ryan LeBreton, Information Services and Resources
Rita Mallick, Information Services and Resources
Don Rea, Information Services and Resources
Pam Ross, Information Services and Resources
Melissa E. Rycroft, Information Services and Resources
Jason Snyder, Information Services and Resources
Mary Ann Willard, Information Services and Resources
Tim Pavlechko, Senior Associate Director, Department of Athletics
Amanda Backus, Associate Director, Department of Athletics
Janelle Breneman, Department of Athletics
Errol Carter, Department of Athletics
Paige Cull, Department of Athletics
Chrissy Findlay, Department of Athletics
Tara Herrmann, Department of Athletics
Laura Kamienski, Department of Athletics
Stephen Kish, Department of Athletics
Heather Lewis, Department of Athletics
Cindy Opalski, Department of Athletics
Judy Mickanlis, Director, Reservation, Information and Conference Services
Jeanna Hafer, Reservation, Information and Conference Services
Pat Ringkamp, Reservation, Information and Conference Services
Ruta Karelis, Administrative Services
Maureen Murphy, Retired, College of Arts and Sciences
David Finchbaugh, Director, Office of Alumni, Parents and Volunteers
Kristin J. Woods, Assistant Director, Office of Alumni, Parents and Volunteers
Shannon Bradford, Alumni Career Services
Scott Rosevear, Director of Capital Giving Aurilla Fusco, Capital Giving
Kathleen Graham, Planned Giving Office
Ann DiStefano, Director for the Annual Fund/Parents Fund Steve Blake, Major Gifts
Suellen Haddon, University Relations Services
Shelby McClintock, University Relations, Advancement and Information Services
Rick Rosenberg, Director, Corporate and Foundation Relations
Megan Adams, Corporate and Foundation Relations
Kelly Finley, Program Coordinator, Residential Colleges
D.W. Stechschulte, Medical Director, Ziegler Student Health Center
Bob Thomas, Ziegler Student Health Center
Rozalyn Yannaccone, Ziegler Student Health Center
Tracy Shaynak, Director, Community Health Promotion
Kate Stillin, Dining Services
Vicki Benian, Director, Bookstore
Kathryn Kopchik, Public Relations and Publications
Sharon Poff, Public Relations and Publications
Deb Slade, Public Relations and Publications
Gigi Marino, Editor, Bucknell World
Sabrina Kirby, Writing Center

INFORMATION COMPILED AND PROVIDED BY THE OFFICE OF LGBT AWARENESS

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Spielman Lecture Series welcomes MacKinnon

A leader in feminist political theory, MacKinnon gave a speech that offered a unique way of thinking.

Catharine MacKinnon visited the University as part of the Spielman Lecture Series. MacKinnon's lecture focused on offering new perspectives on international law and violence toward women.

By COURTNEY HOMAN
 Business & Politics Editor

"[Terrorism's] common elements include premeditation rather than spontaneous rage, ideological and politically criminal motive, civilian targets—sometimes termed innocents—and sub-national group agents. So just what is it about violence against women that fails to qualify as terrorism?" Catharine MacKinnon asked during her lecture entitled "Women's September 11th: Rethinking International Law."

MacKinnon, a prominent individual in feminist legal thought, came Sept. 25 to campus as a participant in the Ralph Spielman Memorial Lecture Series.

According to the lecture program, "as lead counsel in Kadic vs. Karadzic (2000), she and her co-counsel won a $745 million jury award for Bosnian and Croatian women and children subjected to rape and other sexual attacks, affirming that rape is a war policy as a form of genocide within international law."

This lecture fit in well with the purpose of the Spielman Lecture Series.

"The objective of the Spielman Series is to impact discussion on campus, for students and faculty alike. It is meant to create dialogue," said Professor of Anthropology Thomas Greaves. "[MacKinnon] is very controversial and she reaches conclusions that not everyone agrees with. This is good for the University."

Not all students agreed with Greaves. "I really didn't get anything out of the lecture. I didn't understand what she had to say and it was very dragged out," Rebecca Choi '06 said.

"MacKinnon offered a different way of thinking. One student came to me and said the lecture was an eye-opener for her. If one person can become more open to different points of view, then the lecture had a significant impact."

—Matthew Silberman, professor of sociology

MacKinnon's points offered a fresh point of view on this often distressing topic.

"MacKinnon offered a different way of thinking. One student came to me and said the lecture was an eye-opener for her. If one person can become more open to different points of view, then the lecture had a significant impact," said Matthew Silberman, professor of sociology.

In her speech, MacKinnon described the war that is being waged on women throughout the world. The plight of women is not recognized by international law for many reasons.

Violent crimes against women are considered 'everyday' crimes in the United States. MacKinnon asks pertinent questions relating to the eradication of this phenomenon. When will opposition to violence against women be responded to in the true structure of international law? When will the United States and international law stop ignoring this problem and eradicate its causes? MacKinnon delved into the reasons why these questions have not yet been answered.

"The reasons are exposed as excuses for women's expendability. Violence against women does not threaten men," MacKinnon said.

Is this violence against women truly terrorism? MacKinnon thinks it is.

"Much of it is planned, including many gang rapes, serial murders, stalking, sexual harassment and making of pornography. Are women somehow not innocent, one wonders? What is it about women's status to men that is not political? If sex is one way power is organized, creating sexual politics, sexual violence is surely a practice of that politics, and misogyny is its ideology and philosophy."

Education prices keep pace

By DAVID LAROSS
 Senior Writer

Education is priceless. As Americans and as students, we've had that concept drilled into us all our lives, from the day we entered kindergarten to after-school specials and college recruiters. Of course, as any college student knows, "priceless" doesn't mean "free." And University students, especially those who have seen school fees increase by a total of 13.4 percent since 2001, know that it doesn't mean "cheap," either.

The University is far from the only school to increase tuition fees recently. Education is becoming more expensive everywhere, and some schools are going beyond the normal rate of tuition increases in order to make up for losses in endowments caused by the flagging national economy. As a result, students are seeing significant increases in tuition without a corresponding impact on the University itself.

"I'd just like to know where it's all going," Adam Smolic '04 said. "Prices have gone up, and we haven't gotten a lot out of it."

In addition to the new buildings under construction (which may or may not be of use to any given student), financial aid awards are up—the average package for an incoming first-year student was almost $18,000 this year.

The average tuition increase nationwide for private universities in the past year was 5.8 percent, according to the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities—0.4 percent more than the University's most recent increase. It is also above the rate of inflation, the baseline for any increase in fees. However, this average has held at the same value over the past two years, while the University's 2002-2003 fees showed an 8 percent increase. Where it matters, University fees have still kept pace with other private colleges.

"Except for Penn State, all the schools I looked at were about as expensive as Bucknell," Kathleen Hennessy '07 said.

However, Penn State and other public universities, dependent on waning government funds, are facing their own financial problems. According to a report by the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia, the average tuition increase for state colleges nationwide is expected to be in the double digits next year. There is a proposal in Maryland for state universities to double their tuition in order to reduce their dependence on the state government.

"We are not going to have a tax increase in this state [Maryland]. That's not going to happen. So we've got to take it on ourselves," said Board of Regents member Richard E. Hug, who proposed the idea on Thursday to The Washington Post.

Meanwhile, state-instituted prepayment programs, which allow parents to invest in a fund that will be used to automatically pay for four years of tuition at a public university, are weakening. Colorado's program is already warning participants that future payments may not fully cover tuition, and Florida is considering scaling back its program, according to The Wall Street Journal.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see more Colorados," accountant Joseph Hurley said to The Wall Street Journal. The real test for tuition is whether the school is worth the cost.

"I think I'm getting my money's worth," Joe Lambert '07 said. "So far, everything's been worth it."

Widener Law prepares you for the future

- Full-time and part-time programs.
- Clinical and externship opportunities.
- Certificate programs in corporate law, trial advocacy, law and government, and health law.
- Four international summer abroad programs.

OPEN HOUSE

Saturday, October 18, 2003
 Registration: 9:45 a.m. • Program 10:00 a.m.

Call to confirm your attendance at either campus:
 Delaware (302) 477-2162
 Harrisburg (717) 541-3903

WIDENER UNIVERSITY
 School of Law

6801 Concord Pike, Wilmington, DE • 3800 Varton Way, Harrisburg, PA
 www.law.widener.edu • 1-800-WIDENER

Market Street PHOTO

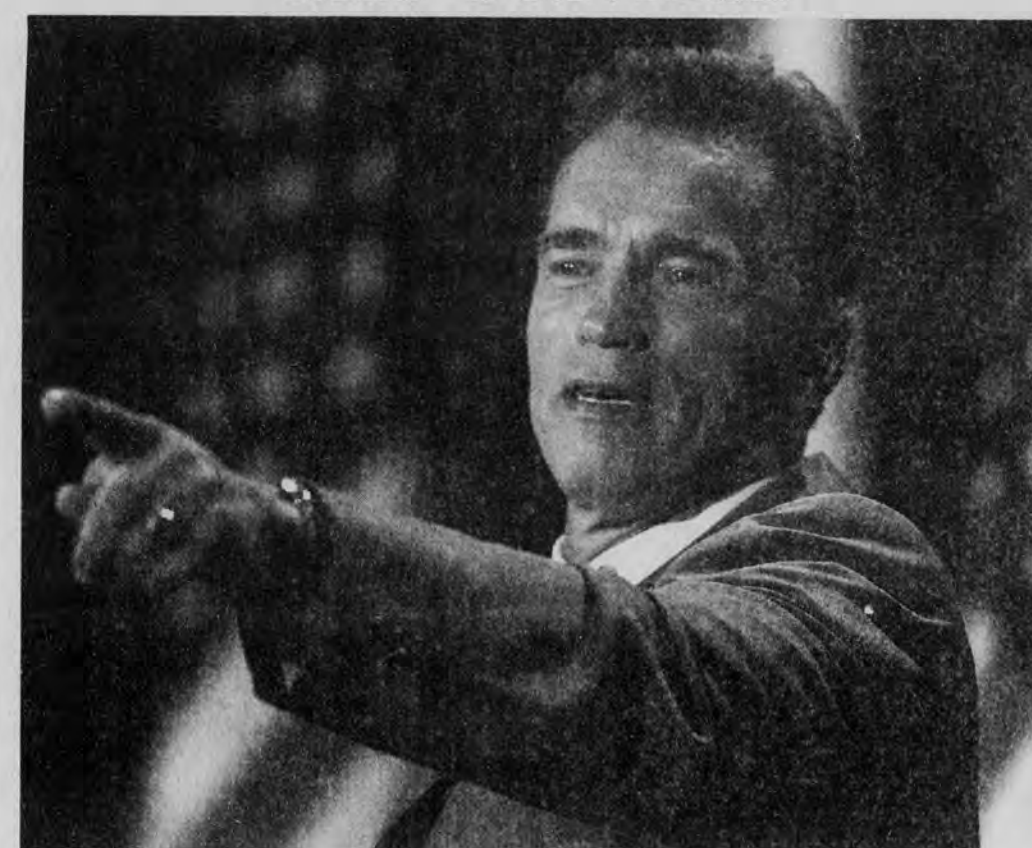

We like picky people!

We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.

523-1543

M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5; 24 hour drop box
 120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

THE WEIGHT OF GOVERNING CALIFORNIA NOW RESTS ON THE SHOULDERS OF MR. UNIVERSE

Arnold Schwarzenegger replaced Gray Davis as California's governor when 55 percent of voters chose to recall Davis. Approximately 50 percent voted for Schwarzenegger to replace him.

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
 On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
 -Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
 Call to start your service now!
 (570)524-9839

Elizabeth's

An American Bistro

Come see what's new and exciting. Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts

August 24th

11:00 AM to 2:00 PM

Wednesday-Saturday Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2, Dinner 5-9

412 Market St. Lewisburg
 570-523-8088

www.elizabethsbistro.com

HOSTS AND HOSTESSES

GARY THANIEL

Major: Business Management and Religion

"The thing I love most about Bucknell is the people and the campus. The people I interact with on a daily basis are awesome people and the beauty of the campus speaks for itself."

Gary, last year's Mr. Bucknell, is the Station Manager of the University's radio station WVBV, the Resident Assistant of Seventh Street House, the President of Couture Culture, the University's fashion club, is Co-Chairperson of the Senior Gift Drive and sits on numerous committees throughout campus. His hobbies include music, shopping, basketball, weight lifting and playing video games.

Gary's future plans include to work and go to graduate school part-time. His ultimate goal is to become Chief Executive Officer of a Fortune 500 corporation.

"Always be happy, Never be satisfied."

TRICIA ELSEROAD

Major: Chemistry

"I love the sense of community created by a university campus in a small town. The relationships I've made here will be unforgettable, not only with my fellow students, but with faculty and staff as well. I have learned so much inside and outside the classroom that I will keep with me for the rest of my life." Tricia is a varsity cheerleader, a member of Two Past Midnight, the assistant vice president for education for Alpha Chi Omega Sorority, a new student orientation coordinator, a shift manager for the student dining program and an admissions intern. Tricia won the good sportsman award for cheerleading in 2002. Her hobbies include cooking, music, singing in the shower and watching The Learning Channel.

Tricia hopes to be a teacher and a "number one mom," and will possibly pursue a career in pharmaceutical sales.

"Make connections. Meet new people every day. Get involved with the things you are truly interested in, not just what you think might look good on a resume. Here lies the chance to meet people who share your passions, and form relationships that will last far beyond your years at Bucknell."

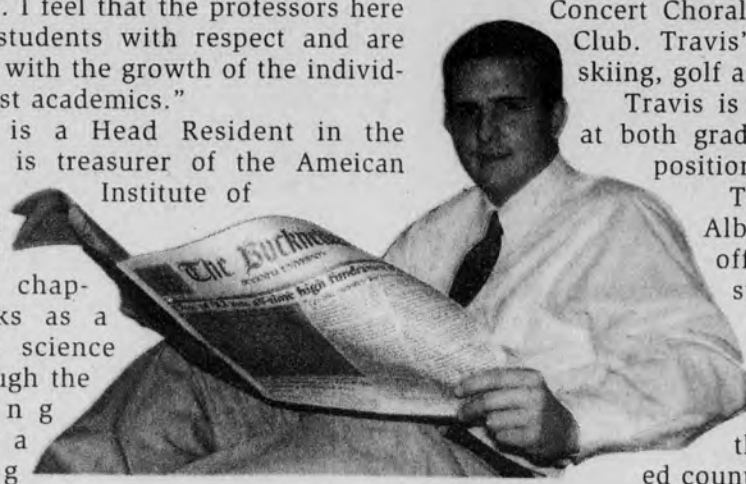

TRAVIS MARTIN

Major: Chemical Engineering

"My favorite aspect of Bucknell is the relationship that the students have with the faculty. I feel that the professors here treat the students with respect and are concerned with the growth of the individual, not just academics."

Travis is a Head Resident in the Gateways, is treasurer of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers (Bucknell chapter), works as a math and science tutor through the Writing Center, is a teaching assistant for the Chemical Engineering Department and is a member of the Concert Choral and the Outing Club. Travis' hobbies include skiing, golf and racquetball.

Travis is currently looking at both graduate schools and positions in industry.

Travis quoted Albert Einstein on offering advice to students: "Not everything that counts can be counted, and not everything that can be counted counts."

BREEAN TRAPASSO

Major: Mathematics

"I love the community atmosphere Bucknell offers its students. Also, the combination of a high standard in academics along with an excellent athletic program and reputation makes Bucknell the perfect place for me."

Breean is a member of the varsity volleyball team and Alpha Chi Omega Sorority. She is the recipient of the President's Award for Distinguished Academic Achievement and the Charles F. White Memorial Prize for excellence in academics and athletics. She is a member of the Kappa Delta Pi Honor Society and Pi Mu Epsilon Honor Society. She has made the Dean's list every semester she has attended the University and was named a Verizon academic all-American. Breean has won numerous volleyball awards, including all tournament team selections and a 2002 selection as Patriot League Player of the Week.

Breean hopes to find a teaching job in high school mathematics to start out, then plans to go to graduate school and possibly pursue a career in the field of mathematics.

"My advice to Bucknell students would be to enjoy every second you have at Bucknell but work hard at the same time. It's extremely important to prioritize your academic life and get things done, but you can't forget to have fun in the process. I would also tell [students] not to stress over things and situations that they can't control. If you put forth your best effort and hold nothing back then be satisfied with the outcome even if it doesn't work out perfectly."

MEREDITH FIELD

Major: Environmental Studies

Meredith is the president of the Environmental Club, the vice president of administration for Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority, the awareness chair for the Panhellenic Executive Board and is a member of the Multicultural Council of Presidents, V-Day Bucknell, the Community Judicial Board, the Board of Academic Review and the Hearing Board on Sexual Assault.

Meredith is also the student manager at Bertrand Library, an intern at the Lewisburg Prison Project and is a student employee at the Bucknell Greenhouse. Her hobbies include cooking, hiking, camping, skiing and gardening.

Meredith hopes to join the Peace

Corps and spend two years in another country working to improve health and environmental conditions there in her future.

Meredith loves the amazing faculty and staff at the University, and her favorite places on campus are the Grove and Bucknell Hall.

"Do not weigh too heavily on the actions and beliefs of your peers. I know that sounds cliché but it is especially important now. College is the time when you can really begin to become independent and figure out who you are and what you want out of life. The best way to do this is to get involved in as many activities as possible and try everything once. This way you will begin to recognize what you are truly passionate about and what makes you happy."

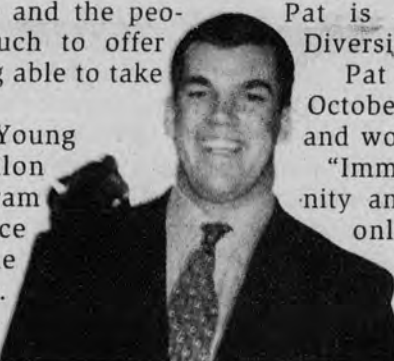

PAT ALFANO

Major: Business Management

"I love the atmosphere and the people. Bucknell has so much to offer everyone, and I enjoy being able to take part in the experience."

Pat is involved with Young Life, Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity, the 1 in 4 Program for the Women's Resource Center and he works at the Women's Resource Center. His hobbies include mountain biking and camping.

Pat is a recipient of Bucknell's Diversity Award. Pat plans to get married in October 2004, and hopes to live and work in the Philadelphia area. "Immerse yourself in the community and overall experience. You only have this opportunity once, but if you make the most of it you will benefit from the time you've spent here."

KIM COCOROS

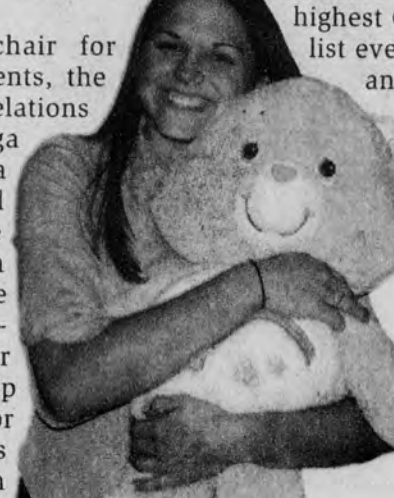

Major: Mathematics

"[I love] the way Bucknell fosters a sense of community. From the moment you get here until long after you've left, you feel connected to the people around you—fellow students, faculty and staff. The people I have met along the way have been nothing short of amazing and I attribute my love for this school to them."

Kim is the comedy chair for Activities and Campus Events, the vice president of chapter relations for Alpha Chi Omega Sorority, has been a Residential Assistant and Head Resident for three years, was a member of a residential college for one year and a residential college residential assistant for two years, a calculus help session tutor, a grader for the mathematics and physics departments and a reunion weekend student ambassador. Kim is a member of the Alpha Lambda Honor Society, the Pi Mu Epsilon Mathematics Honor Society, the Phi Beta Kappa Honor Society and the Mortarboard Honor Society. She won the Jeffrey James Harold Prize, which is awarded to the first-year student electrical engineer with the highest GPA, has been on the Dean's list every semester at the University and won the President's Award for Distinguished Academic Achievement in 2001 and 2002.

Kim will graduate this fall and substitute teach in the spring. "Do what makes you happy. As simple as that sounds, most people don't follow it. Life is too short to be caught up in its trivialities."

BILL ANDERSON

Major: Biology B.S./ Pre-med

"My favorite part of Bucknell are the students here. I know 20 years from now I am not going to remember every detail of what I learned in class, but I will remember the time I spent with my friends."

Bill is the president of Activities and Campus Events, the Bucknell Student Government senior class vice president, the treasurer of Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity, an admissions office intern and former tour guide, a Catholic Campus Ministries lecturer, a 2001 Building on Foundations counselor and a member of the Premedical society, Alpha Lambda Delta Honor Society, Omicron Delta Kappa Honor Society and the Mortarboard Honor Society. Bill is a recipient of the President's Award for Distinguished Academic Achievement and of the Leon J. Rhodes Scholarship.

Bill does research in the biology department and spent this past summer working in the Bone Marrow Transplant Unit of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. He plans to attend medical school.

Bill said his best advice for students is to get involved on campus.

"If you are involved with campus activities and organizations, you will meet many more people, make a difference on the Bucknell community and get far more out of your college experience."

—Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme, Adam Wilcox, Eric Graham and Sarah Gainer

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

October 10, 2003

inside

Volume 132, Number 6

Postseason picks:

Bucknellian editors weigh in on major-league baseball's playoffs.

See page B6

BISON COMBINE FOR A PERFECT 8-0 RECORD

By BRENT BUTLER
Sports Editor

This past weekend Bucknell Athletics put together one of the best fall weekends in recent memory. The Bison combined for a perfect 8-0 record in head-to-head competition. With the addition of a pair of first place finishes from the men's and women's cross country teams and a few record breaking golf and tennis performances the Orange and Blue finished with one of the most impressive weekends in history.

On Saturday the Bison football team grabbed an exciting 31-10 upset over the defending Patriot League champion and NECA quarterback, Davis Wilson '05 lead the team with 199 yards rushing, the most ever by a Bucknell quarterback. With the win the herd improved to 3-2 overall and 1-1 in the Patriot League.

With their most recent win over Lehigh the Bucknell women's field hockey team have improved their record to 7-1 overall and 3-1 in the Patriot League. Lead by Kate Ruda '04 the Bison have started off this season with their best start in nearly three decades.

The Bison volleyball team has improved to 4-0 in the Patriot League with two impressive wins over Lehigh and Lafayette. After sweeping both games Bucknell has maintained their remarkable record of not allowing a single game to four conference matches. Today the Bison take on two-time defending Patriot League champion American. American is undefeated in the league, and this match could possibly set supremacy for the rest of the season.

The Bison runners swept the Gulden Invitational on Friday evening. The men's team dominated the competition with seven top-10 finishers with Dan Lounsbery '05 leading the way. The women scored 26 points, which helped lead the Bison to a complete sweep of the invitational. The Orange and Blue had five runners cross the finish line in the top eight. Julie Jakoboski '06 was the top finisher for the Bison with a third place finish.

The men's soccer team has improved to 2-0 in the Patriot League after a difficult win over Colgate. After a 0-0 tie in regulation, Scott Viscio '06 scored the "golden goal" in the seventh minute of overtime to lead the Bison to victory. Viscio leads the team with seven goals on the year. This Saturday at 2 p.m. the Bison host Lafayette in an important game which has serious consequences for the rest of the league season.

After a disappointing start of the season, the Bison women's soccer team grabbed a much needed win over Lehigh. Bucknell will try for another key Patriot League win next Friday against Army.

The men's tennis team completed a 6-1 sweep of both Robert Morris and Duquesne. The Orange and Blue will play in the Patriot League Individual Championships at Army next weekend.

After all of these impressive victories the Bison look forward to next week to improve on this already record breaking weekend.

Field Hockey

Field hockey team rolls over Lehigh and St. Francis (Pa.), advancing record to 3-1 in the Patriot League.

See page B5

Cross Country

Bison men's and women's cross country teams sweep the Gulden Invitational with dominating performances over visiting teams.

See page B2

Football

Bison football scores an upset victory over defending Patriot League Champion Fordham.

See page B2

Sports

Bison defeat PL Champs

By BRENT BUTLER
Sports Editor

Following the lead of quarterback Daris Wilson '05, the Bucknell football team upset 14th-ranked and defending Patriot League champion Fordham. The Bison defense forced seven turnovers in the 31-10 victory.

With the win, the Orange and Blue have improved to 3-2 overall and have captured the Patriot League opener. This win snapped a nine-game losing streak in the Patriot League.

With Bucknell's option offense, Wilson ran for 199 yards and two touchdowns. Wilson's 199 rushing yards was the most ever by a Bucknell quarterback and the 11th-highest single-game rushing effort in school history.

The Bison defense produced seven turnovers including five interceptions off of Fordham's All-Patriot League quarterback Kevin Eakin. Eakin started the game with a 12-1 touchdown to interception ratio, and he finished off the game 23 of 42 for 257 yards and no touchdowns.

The Bison dominated the majority of the first half, gaining 293 yards to the Rams 173. Wilson captured 150 of Bucknell's 249 first half ground yards and put the Orange and Blue on the board with a 13 play drive in which he ran for 62 yards, including a one yard touchdown run.

The Bison offense was stifled slightly in the second half, however the defense picked up the slack picking up five second half turnovers.

Fordham picked up 412 yards on the evening to the Bucknell's 378. 334 of the Bison's yards came on the ground with key rushes coming from Wilson, Blamah Sarnor '06, and Tim Johnson '04.

At 12:30 p.m. on Saturday, the Bison finish off their five-game road trip against Penn.

Blamah Sarnor '06 runs for a gain in an earlier game. Sarnor finished with 81 rushing yards in the victory over Fordham. The Bison had 334 rushing yards on the night.

Eric Graham — The Bucknellian

Women capture 1-0 win

With the win the Bison improve to 5-3-1 overall and 1-1-1 in PL

By TERI SCHLANG
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's soccer team overcame Lehigh 1-0 Sunday on home turf.

The Orange and Blue scored the only goal of the game with their sole shot on goal. The Bison improved their season standings to 5-3-1 overall and 1-1-1 in the Patriot League.

Kerry Fitz-Patrick '06 scored the single goal of the game after 51 minutes of play, with an assist from Meghann Chipko '05. This was Fitz-Patrick's first goal of the season, and there was not a better time for it to happen.

"Meghann Chipko never gave up and did all that she could to keep the ball in bounds and served a great cross," Head Coach Chrissey Findlay said.

"Kerry Fitz-Patrick and Megan Farrell did a great job of framing the goal. I had a good feeling after Chipko crossed it that it was going to be dangerous. Kerry Fitz-Patrick has been itching for a goal all season, and I could not ask for a better time for her to score," Findlay said.

"The game this weekend was the first time I felt like the entire team came together mentally and was there for each other," Chipko said. "We were going to ground, sprinting our butts off, cheering and supporting and working the ball forward very well together."

It appeared that Lehigh dominated play throughout the first half of the game, as they took five shots on goal, but none of the shots got past goalkeeper Samantha Hecht '06.

During the second half Lehigh took four shots on goal, none of which passed Hecht either. This was her third shutout game of the season.

The team's effort was visible in more than just the goal and the play of the forward positions.

There was a solid team effort everywhere, especially with the solid defensive coverage all over the field.

"The game this weekend was the first time I felt like the entire team came together mentally and was there for each other. We were going to ground, sprinting our butts off, cheering and supporting, and working the ball forward very well together."

—Meghann Chipko '05

"[The girls] finished a quality serve," Findlay said. "It takes a real team effort to play quality soccer and finish the opportunities that you are presented with."

After their solid performance this past weekend, the women return to action tonight to challenge conference rival Army.

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Years prior to Prior, Cubbies had Maddux

Wrigley Field. Sportswriters usually do backflips across the pressbox over matchups like this.

And as journalists tend to do, they had the presses rolling with histrionic musings about the showdown that would transpire at Wrigley on Oct. 3.

The Chicago Cubs probably had an idea of what they were losing when they watched their 26-year-old Cy Young winner waltz off to the Atlanta Braves after the 1992 season.

They knew they were losing a good one. It wouldn't take any grand feat of erudition to figure out that a guy who had just gone 20-10 with a 2.18 ERA was a solid asset. But Greg Maddux had his sights set on Atlanta, where the Braves were setting the foundation for a delightful young staff.

The Cubs decided, in the end, that Maddux just wasn't worth any more bait than the $27.5 million they had already dropped in front of him.

He kicked the offer aside, and the Cubs, uninterested in persisting through an evidentially futile pursuit, took their cash and bid a displeased farewell to the crafty right-hander, eight years after they had drafted him as a twiggy, unpollished 18-year-old with their second pick in the amateur draft.

The Braves ended up with Maddux, signing him for $28 million. The Cubs settled for $14.35 million second-tier free agent Jose Guzman.

Maddux knew what he wanted, and it wasn't the Cubbies' cash. Or the $34 million that the New York Yankees had dangled in front of him. He wanted championships, and Atlanta—where he was awaited by a rotation that already included John Smoltz, Tom Glavine and Steve Avery—looked to be the place to find them.

So maybe the Cubs couldn't have done a damn thing about it. Wherever the blame belongs, that was how Chicago lost its stake in the best pitcher of the last decade. It was 11 years ago, though, and the Cubs haven't wasted time with laments of ancient woulda-coulda-shouldas. Still, it would have been hard to ignore historical undertones last Friday, as they sent the pride of their future to the mound against the escaped promise of their past.

The 2003 National League Division Series pitted the runaway NL East Champion Braves against the latecoming NL Central Champion Cubs. After the clubs split the first two contests of the best-of-five affair, Friday night offered a game-three pairing that left pitching enthusiasts salivating in anticipation.

Prior vs. Maddux. One man's postseason debut, the other's 29th playoff effort. Prime time.

For the Cubs, it was a chance to scrape out a bit of vindication—for what they let go 11 years ago, or even for what they couldn't get done in 1998 when Maddux shut down the wild-card Cubs in the last leg of a three-game Atlanta sweep.

This year would be different.

For Maddux, it might end up being the tailpiece of a postseason career that had always paled in light of his regular season brilliance, and this was perhaps his last chance to paint the sunset a little brighter.

It's not that he was ever an abject failure in October—his postseason ERA with the Braves was just under 2.80 before this year. But his 11-13 record—coupled with his team's failure to win more than one World Series in ten straight post-season cameos since he joined the staff—left a bit of irresolution on his sparkling resume.

And then there was Maddux's opponent, a 23-year-old bulldog named Mark Prior, a 6-foot, 5-inch, 225-pound prodigy whom the franchise an, and so is his command. He throws a devilish breaking ball. He's intense. He's unbesmirchable. And he's smart.

Smart enough, at least, to realize that pitching opposite of Maddux was a fine opportunity to absorb the professionalism that the future Hall of Famer, even in the twilight of his career, still emanated.

However fervently Prior's accomplishments have been extolled by the smitten media, he still had the humility to recognize the value of watching—and learning from—Maddux.

Prior watched as his Cubs dumped a pair of runs on Maddux early. He watched as Maddux calmly broke down and reclaimed command of the inning.

And then the two pitchers swapped zeroes for the next five innings, until the Braves told their hurler to take a seat and turned the mound over to the bullpen.

Prior stayed in, determinedly buzzsawing his way through what was left of the Atlanta lineup. Years removed from the last of the six-plus seasons he had spent in the Cubs' dugout, Maddux watched from the opposite bench as his Braves sent the heart of their order to the plate in the ninth inning. The Cubs watched the same thing from their own side of the field.

In between the two dugouts, atop Wrigley's sienna pedestal of dirt, the Cubbies' young starter was still standing—115-pitch count and all—ready to plug away through the final frame.

Amid the aural backdrop provided by impressively synchronal chants of "Let's go Prii-or" that rang through the chilly Chicago air, Prior finished what he started—a two-hit, one-run, seven-strikeout complete game victory.

Two days later, the Cubs would clinch the series, sending the Braves home in the wake of what will likely be construed as another squandering of potential.

To call Maddux a bust for his anticlimactic post-seasons would be, of course, quite ludicrous. To reduce the Cubs' triumph to a vengeance drama would be equally tasteless, and perhaps a little insane. And that's not how the showdown between Prior and Maddux will be remembered.

In the end, it was really just a chance for Chicago fans to salute, on a single evening in a single ballpark, two grand athletes—one who is (for the Cubs, at least) a reminder of what future have been, and the other a glance of what promises to be a glistering future.

It isn't hard to appreciate either one.

Illustration by Cecily Cairns

NFL running backs take a beating, pay the price

By MIKE ORTA
Contributing Writer

Today we're going to talk about running backs. They come in all shapes and sizes. Some are big, some are small, but if they don't produce, they won't last at all. Kind of catchy, huh?

Playing running back is not for the weary. You'll spend more time in the ice than the Abominable Snowman. Seriously, these guys are tough. Not "Hell's Angels—we listen to hard rock" tough. They are "Hit me as hard as you can, and I'll keep going" tough. They are closer to boxers than football players. Well, bad boxers who do nothing but get hit. While this can be a badge of honor to some running backs, it is also their downfall.

You can see the miles on these guys, and it's sad to watch the engine break down. What might've previously run like a Porsche Turbo eventually starts to look more like a Yugo in need of a new transmission. Once these guys have had too many carries, bam—they're done. They may stick around for a while and get just a couple of yards every carry; heck, they might even get the occasional ten-yard run, but in your heart you know they're finished. So, who are these guys, those who keep running as if they can escape their fate?

In the past we had Thurman Thomas, who finished a great career with the Bills by signing with the Fins and injuring his spleen. We have Terrell Davis, who technically isn't retired, but we knew he was done two years ago after ruining his knees for life.

But this isn't just something of the past, it's something that's going on right now, and the victims are well-known. Emmitt Smith, Eddie George, Curtis Martin, Jerome Bettis. These are the guys who are still hanging around. The name and numbers on their jerseys are the same, but the guy wearing the jersey isn't. We all know what it looks like; he gets up from tackles a little slower, his legs don't seem to ment. Jerome has averaged over four yards a carry only once in the past six years, including this one. The year he did accomplish this, he didn't even play a full season. The Steelers have been trying to phase him out as they turn toward a more balanced offense. In the long run, this would be a smart move. Nobody is jacked. But being jacked doesn't hide the fact that his best average was 3.4 yards a carry in the past three seasons. He has almost fallen off the map in terms of production since 2000. The Titans/Oilers ran the boy too much. Funny thing is, McNair only began to harness his potential for greatness after Eddie was, but his workload was still pretty high. Then last year he began to look different. Injuries that he could persevere through in the past seemed to be slowing him down. Oddly enough, he had recently been rewarded a huge contract extension. Now I'm not saying that he's dogging it. I'm just noting the irony that they decide to pay the man, but too late.

I love Emmitt, the greatest player that the University of Florida has sent to the NFL. Mind you, I didn't say he's the greatest player they've had—that honor might go to Spurrier. Back to the point: Emmitt loves football and he was a great player. You could count on him for 10 touchdowns and 1,400 yards almost every season through his first five years. But that was then. This is now. Emmitt now wears Cardinal Red. Emmitt had negative rushing yards in his return to big D last weekend. Emmitt has a broken shoulder blade. Emmitt has stayed too long. I believe that a man has a right to do whatever he wants with his life. At the same time, watching Emmitt wearing that sling, crying at the postgame news conference, it broke my heart. No man deserves to go through that. It was pitiful. My heart goes out to the man. The problem is, he did it to himself. He broke Payton's record; he is the most productive runner in NFL history. So why in God's name would you subject yourself to further punishment by signing with a no-hope team? It's just sad; anyone could see that he wasn't the same running back the past few seasons. We all just wanted him to get the record, then fade into the Texas desert.

It isn't always like this with running backs. We've seen a couple of good ones leave the game early. Most recently we have Robert Smith and Barry Sanders. Rob Smith seemed to have it all. He was on a good team in Minnesota, he was a productive runner and he was coming up on a big contract. Then he quit. The aches and pains of the punishing position caught up with him. What it came down to was this; he didn't want to look like a punched-out Jack La Motta, so he left the game with what many would perceive as a few good years left in the tank.

Barry Sanders was the greatest running back ever. Not the most productive, the greatest. Anybody who ever watched him play in person knows this. Nobody had the agility. Nobody had the quickness. Nobody had the cuts. Barry could've had Payton's record if he wanted it. Fact is, he didn't. He left the game shortly before training camp and never looked back.

So what is the lesson here? Move on. Letting go of your livelihood is probably the hardest thing a man can do. Don't do it for the fans. Don't do it for the coaches or the owners. Do it for yourself. These guys give their heart and soul every week, just to carry the ball over that goal line. They sacrifice their health in future years for glory in the present. It catches up with them, a lot quicker than you'd think. One day the engine is running fine; the next it's like 100,000 miles; was put on it overnight. What the NFL stands for is "Not For Long." This is the dark secret of professional football. These guys, come out loud and clear, then it's like their voice gets softer, as they trail off mid-sentence. We all know what they guys would figure it out sooner, and walk away from the game, instead of limping away.

Courtesy of Reuters

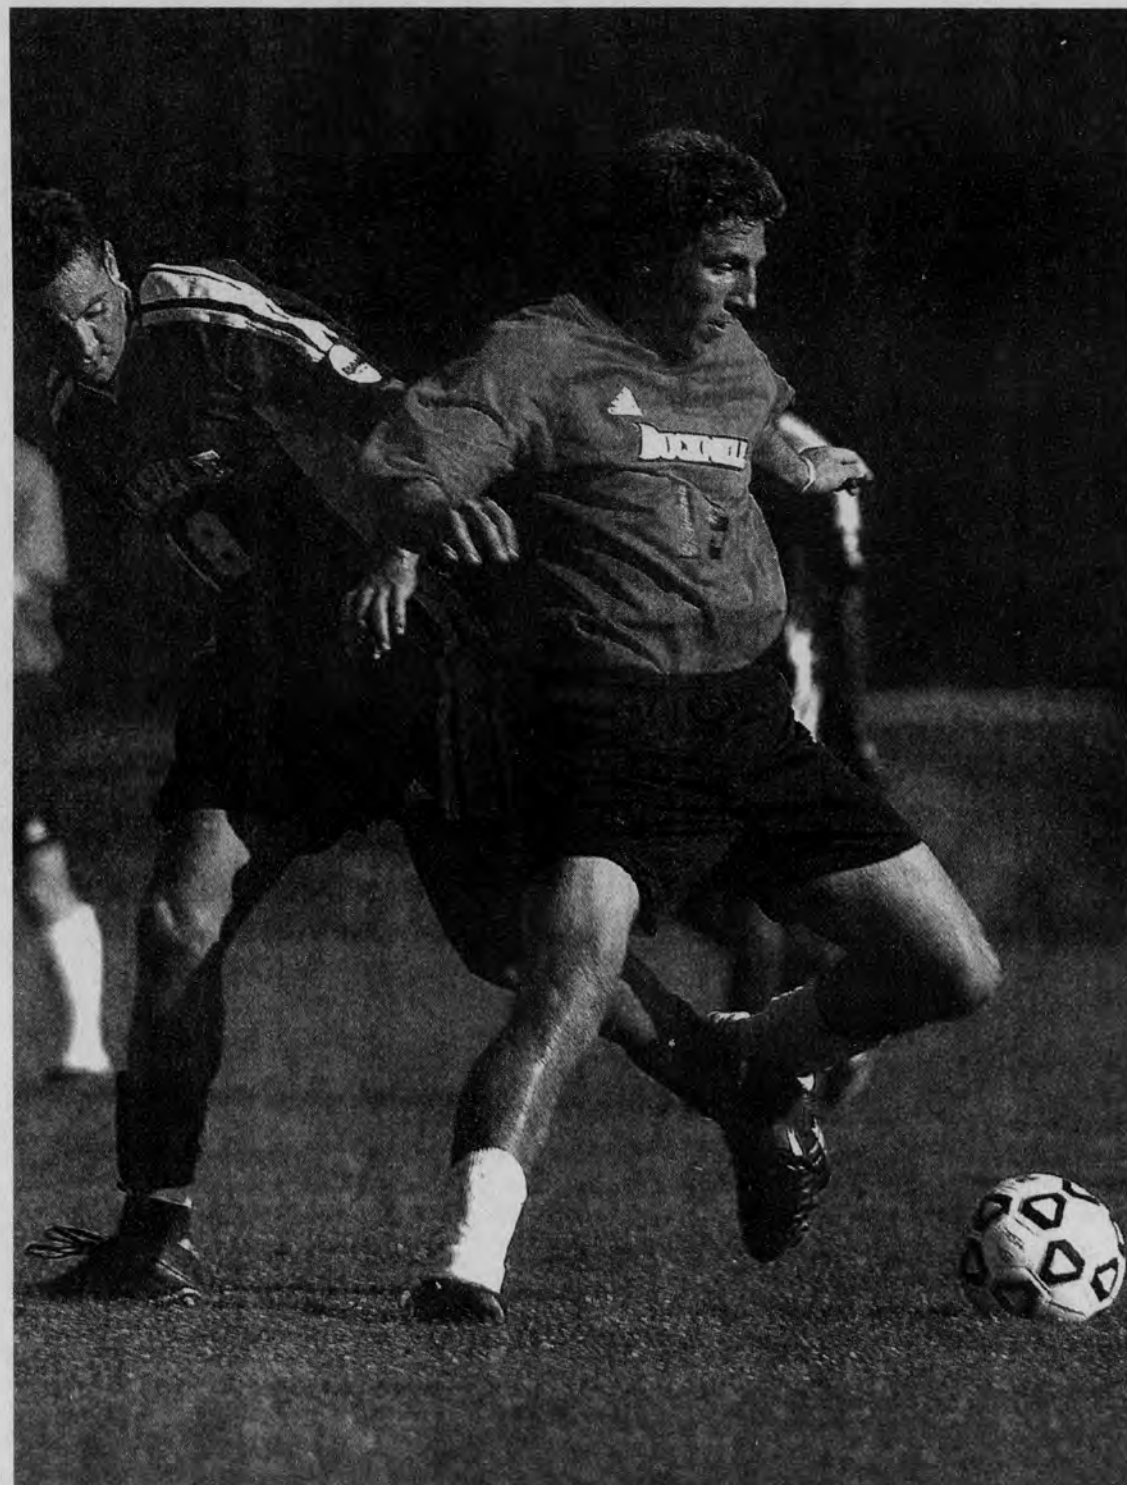

Arizona Cardinal Emmitt Smith walks off the field during a game against his old team, the Dallas Cowboys. Smith is one of several running backs who may have taken one too many hard hits.

pump as hard, the lines on his face are a little more pronounced. What do we have here? An epidemic of advanced aging? No. These are guys who've lost the tread on their tires.

Let's run through the suspects. Jerome Bettis is the most productive "big back" the NFL has ever seen. He was the poster boy of the Steelers for most of the late '90s. The trouble is, being big means there are more places to get hit. And with more places to get hit comes more punishment.

likes to watch a big guy stumble forward for three yards and get creamed in the process. Besides, it just doesn't facilitate winning anymore.

Eddie George has looked like he's been finished for a while now. The man is a true warrior though, sticking with it like he has. He carried the ball for an average of over 350 times per season in his first five years. That's a lot of hits. And it shows. Eddie is huge; I mean, have you ever seen his biceps? The man is

Adam Wilcox — The Bucknellian

Defender Otto Tancraitor III '05 traps a pass in a recent game. Tancraitor's defense has been a vital part of the Bison's success this season. This week the team tries to remain perfect in the Patriot League when they take on St. Francis and league rival American.

Cross Country Sweeps up at Gulden Invite

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Running in honor of the late Art Gulden, Bucknell's men's and women's cross country teams rolled through the competition last Friday at the Gulden Invitational. Racing in front of a home crowd, the men scored a meet low of 23 points, while the women won with 26 points in the field of nine teams.

Placing second overall, Bucknell's top finisher, Dan Lounsbury '05, was excited by the outcome.

"[Today] was the first time this season I have felt smooth and powerful in a race so I was able to run to my potential," Lounsbury said.

Lounsbury, the Bison's third different top-finisher in three weeks, was impressed with the rest of the team as Lock Haven was distant second with 83 points.

"The team ran a very solid race," Lounsbury said. "Just about everyone set personal records and ran well in large packs with less than a 40-second spread between our first and seventh runners."

Wes Reinhardt '04 finished third, right in front of a pack of Bison placing fifth through tenth. The pack included a big breakthrough for both Sean McCarthy '04 and K.C. Brown '06.

Head Coach Kevin Donner was pleased with the men's effort.

See RUNNING, page B4

Bucknell grabs third straight win

Now 6-4 overall and 2-0 in PL, the Bison have posted shut-outs in last three contests

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell men's soccer team tallied its third straight victory on Saturday, defeating Patriot League rival Colgate 1-0 in overtime. Scott Visnic '06 provided the game-winning goal as the Bison improved their record to 6-4 overall and 2-0-0 in the league.

Emerging from the contest with a road win was especially important for the Bison. "Colgate is always a tough place to play," Head Coach Brendan Nash said. "So for us to go on the road and get the win, we are happy."

Both defenses held strong throughout regulation play, sending a 0-0 deadlock into overtime. Bucknell outshot the Raiders definitively in the contest, attempting 20 shots while Colgate only fired off nine. The Bison also had an 11-5 edge in corner kicks.

Goalkeeper Adam Edwards '06 continued to impress in the net, stopping four shots and recording his second shutout in as many Patriot League games and his fifth shutout overall.

Visnic broke up the scoreless game 6 minutes, 36 seconds into overtime, collecting a pass from Ori Adrabi '05 and driving it into the net. It was Visnic's team-leading seventh goal of the year and Adrabi's third assist.

Visnic's timely goal broke up the frustrating scoring drought that had lasted through regulation time. Bucknell outshot the Raiders 20-9, but the team could not capitalize on any of the scoring opportunities until Visnic drove home his shot in overtime.

"Scott Visnic had been dangerous all day with his speed, but he was getting frustrated with not scoring," Nash said. "So it was fitting he scored the game winner in overtime."

It was a highly competitive game in which both teams challenged one another to the end.

"It was a typical Patriot League game," Nash said. "Both teams had chances to win, and the result could have gone either way."

The win helped earn the Bison a spot in the regional rankings, moving into the number 10 spot on the list. Lafayette and Lehigh are the only other Patriot League teams in the top-10, with respective rankings of third and seventh in the poll.

While the team was pleased with the victory, it will focus on maintaining the undefeated league record and continues to have high expectations for the rest of the season.

"The team at this point has a lot of confidence, but we felt we should be 2-0 in the conference," Nash said. "The team is coming off a long road trip, so we are looking forward to playing in front of our home crowds again."

The team will try to remain perfect in Patriot League competition as they face off against Lafayette at 3 p.m. on Oct. 11. The game marks the start of a three-game homestand for the team, during which it will also face St. Francis and league rival American.

Sports

Field hockey starts off best season in two decades

The wins over St. Francis and Lehigh improve the Bison's record to 7-1 overall and 3-1 in the league

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell field hockey team continued to soar through its spectacular season, nailing down another pair of wins last week. The squad easily outgunned St. Francis (Pa.) in a 6-2 win on Tuesday, Sept. 30, at Graham Field and then defeated Patriot League opponent Lehigh 3-1 on Saturday in Bethlehem, Pa.

The two wins improve the Bison's record to 7-1 overall and 3-1 in the league.

"Any time you can go on the road and beat a league rival on their home field, it's a very good win," Head Coach Heather Lewis said. "I thought we played solid in all areas and executed very well in our penalty corner set pieces."

Kate Ruda '04 started off the scoring for the Orange and Blue against Lehigh, dumping an unassisted rebound shot in the goal 15 minutes, 35 seconds into the game. Kelly O'Brien '06 opened the lead up to 2-0 with a rebound shot of her own at 30:38. Ruda and O'Brien now share the team lead for goals this season with six apiece.

Just over 10 minutes into the second half, Lehigh's Blaire Goodwin struck back to narrow the Bison's lead to 2-1, scoring the only goal allowed by goalie Liz Jordan '06 during the game.

Ruda gave the Bison some breathing room just five minutes later, driving home a pass from Kirsten Nilsen '06 to make the score 3-1. It was another solid outing for an offense that has proved somewhat perplexing to opponents all season.

"What's great about the team this year is we're able to spread out our scoring," Lewis said. "Therefore teams cannot key on just one person as we're able to attack you, offensively, from a number of different positions."

Jordan recorded four saves in the effort, while both teams took 10 shots on the goal. Lewis felt that the entire defense put forward a superb

Chris Vonnemeyer—The Bucknellian

Midfielder Jennie Turner '05 tries to steal the ball from an opposing player in an earlier match. With the two wins over Lehigh and St. Francis this past weekend the Bison have improved to an overall record of 7-1 and a Patriot League record of 3-1.

effort.

"Defensively, we're playing very well as a unit," Lewis said. "We're allowing few 'quality' shots on goal and when they do get there Liz is doing a great job of keeping them out of the net."

The shooting statistics were not as balanced when the Bison faced off against the St. Francis (Pa.) Red Flash on Sept. 30. The Orange and Blue out-shot their opponent 39-5, with six different Bison scored in the rout.

Ruda scored off of a pass from Nilsen at 6:41, followed quickly by an unassisted goal by Nilsen to open up a 2-0 Bucknell lead. Carli Cataldo '06 broke the game open with a shot off of another Nilsen assist at 25:04.

The Red Flash managed to scrape out a goal before halftime, when Jill Neary scored off a penalty corner to make the score 3-1.

A set of penalty strokes

"Any time you can go on the road and beat a league rival on their home field, it's a good win ... we played solid in all areas."

—Head Coach
Heather Lewis

allowed the Bison to pull away from St. Francis early in the second half of the game, as O'Brien scored the team's fourth goal at 43:57.

The comfortable 4-1 lead allowed the Bison to give some valuable experience to younger players, resulting in two career-first goals.

At 58:50, Heather Rogers '07 scored the first goal of her collegiate career when she drove home a penalty shot to give the Bison a healthy 5-1 advantage. Haley Rosengarten '07 quickly followed up Rogers' shot with her first goal, an assisted shot off a Nilsen pass at 61:43.

The Red Flash managed to narrow the lead to 6-2 with a last-effort shot at 70:00, but could not make a significant dent in the Bison's powerful lead.

The Bison stay on the road for another pair of games, facing non-conference Yale and Quinnipiac before heading back to Graham Field to play Georgetown on Oct. 18.

Lewis is looking forward to the challenge.

"We're going to be tested on Sunday against a very good Yale team. We're going to find out a lot about our character and our resolve," Lewis said. "I believe in this group and expect them to step on the field and be prepared to battle for as long as it takes against Yale. They'll be a great test for us at this time of year."

Although it will be a test for the Bison, Lewis feels they are ready to keep doing what they've been doing all season.

"The schedule is set up to challenge this team to bring out its best, and I feel confident that we're going to see some great 'Bucknell Hockey' in the next couple of outings," Lewis said.

Chris Vonnemeyer—The Bucknellian

Jennie Turner '05 stands ready at a recent game. The Bison will have to be ready for the difficult competition ahead.

RUNNING From page B2

"Our men have been so much more consistent this year than last year," Donner said. "Our training is much more consistent, and we have not had the huge shakeups in our lineup like last year. I am very proud and happy with the first half of the season."

Donner was equally impressed by the women, as they handily beat two teams ranked in the top 20 for Division II, Indiana University of Pennsylvania and Bloomsburg University. Donner was especially happy with two returning all-league performers who have been off to a slow start.

"Our depth is now starting to develop as people like Jamie Gow and Kayla Halloran start to improve on their fitness levels," Donner said.

Finishing third through sixth in the women's race were Julie Jakoboski '06, Lauren Bricker '07, Leanna Nastase '07 and Alison Cole '06, respectively.

"Each runner contributed something to the team's race," Jakoboski said. "A lot of girls had great individual and team races this weekend."

Although the top seven runners include six first-year students and sophomores, Jakoboski isn't worried about lack of leadership.

"We have the potential to do very well even though we are a young team," Jakoboski said. "Our team depth is beginning to come together, and I believe we can be very successful in the coming meets. We've got a tight pack which is very willing to work together."

Donner felt optimistic about how the win bodes for the future.

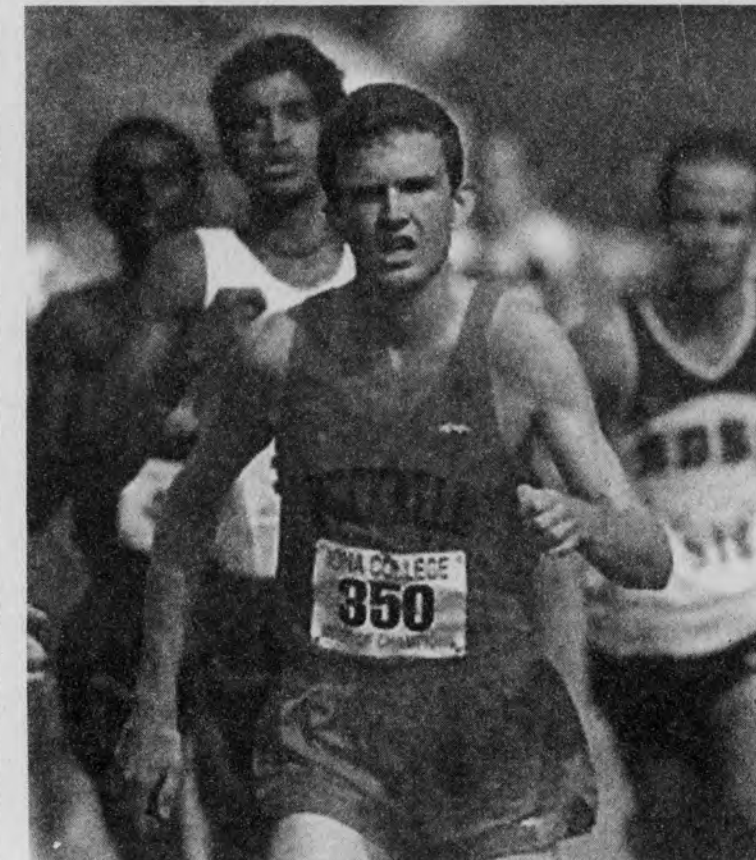

"Our women made a big breakthrough last year after winning the Golden Invitational, and we hope for the same this year," Donner said.

Jakoboski is also enthusiastic about upcoming meets.

"I am very excited for the next couple of weeks," Jakoboski said. "To get to the next level, we've got to get our pack farther up in races by working on race strategy."

Looking ahead, Lounsbury expressed a cautious optimism.

"The team is pretty much in great shape, but we still have a lot of work ahead of us," Lounsbury said. "This meet was a nice confidence booster as we head into the important meets in the second half of the season. Our next race is the pre-national

Courtesy of Mensrunning.com

With a first place finish at the Invitational Dan Lounsbury '05 became the Bison's third different top finisher in three weeks.

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Travel Operator
CANCUN
ACAPULCO
JAMAICA
BARBADOS
FLORIDA
Call Rick today, Rick Hummel
Call for group discounts
1-800-443-4249 / www.ststravel.com

EXTREME VACATIONS, INC. 1-800-336-2260
Sell Spring Break Trips!
Guaranteed Best Buy
1 free trip for every 10 paid
OR
cash starting with first booking.
Exxtreme Party Packages!
Protection of American Express Worldwide
www.xvacations.com

What's that Robin?

Write for Sports?
Good idea...
e-mail ccairns@ or bbutler@

THE LITTLE RED HEN™ EATERY
Famous for it's All-Purpose Dipping Mustard and Gourmet Foods
Lewisburg Roller Mills - 400 Antique Shops
Market Place Eatery, 517 Saint Marys St.
Lewisburg, PA Phone (717) 523-0009
11AM - 3PM 7 DAYS A WEEK
DAVID W. REED (OWNER)
HOME (717) 966-0457
The Little Red Hen™, c/o Hen House Gourmet Foods
642 Walnut Street, Mifflinburg, PA 17844

Sports

Bison stay undefeated in Patriot League

By BRENT BUTLER
Sports Editor

The Bucknell women's volleyball team swept Lafayette in convincing fashion one day after an exciting three game sweep against Lehigh on Friday. This is the Bison's fourth straight win in conference play. With the two wins, the Bison have improved to 8-8 overall and 4-0 in the Patriot League.

The Bison dominated the whole match, winning 30-20, 30-15, and 30-17. As a team the Bison had its best hitting percentage of the year with .299, while Lafayette was held to just a .055 hitting percentage.

Brandi Trapasso '04 led the Bison with 13 kills while Jackie Leahy '05 had 11 and Jennie Smith '07 added eight to the winning effort. The Orange and Blue had three people in double digits defensively, as Breean Trapasso '04 had 16 digs, Brandi Trapasso had 10, and Chelsea Anderson '06 added 10 to help the Bison take out the Leopards.

"We see a definite strength in our ability to incorporate different people in our offense and we're getting everyone involved. Defensively, we were able to neutralize just one person, and that made the difference," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said.

In Bucknell's victory over Lehigh the Bison had four players hit over 300 in the three game sweep.

Leahy had 15 kills on the night while Brandi Trapasso and Sarah Groman '07 added eight kills to the Bison effort.

The Bison finished off the Mountain Hawks 30-23, 30-19 and 30-26 in the three respective games. Lehigh hit

.128 for the second match but hit below .100 in games one and three. Anderson piled up 18 digs on the night, a season high for a three-game match.

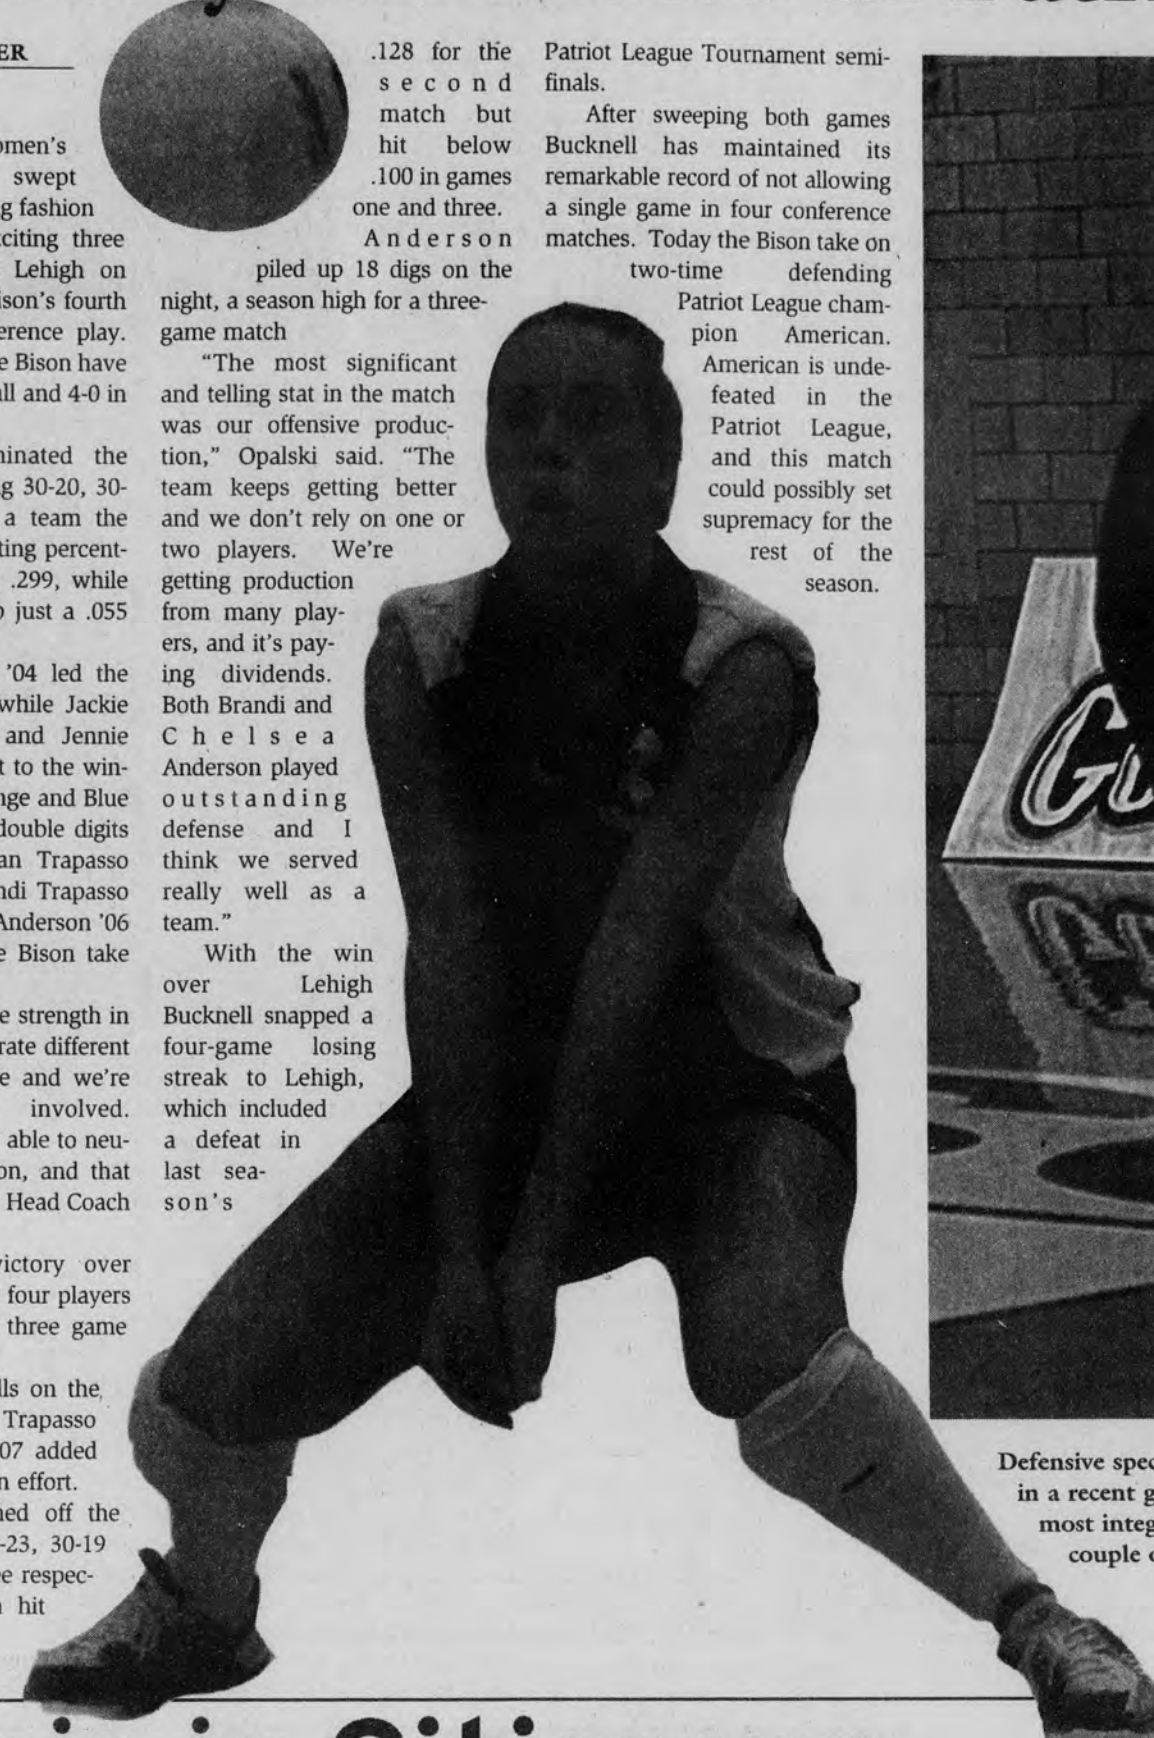

"The most significant and telling stat in the match was our offensive production," Opalski said. "The team keeps getting better and we don't rely on one or two players. We're getting production from many players, and it's paying dividends. Both Brandi and Chelsea Anderson played outstanding defense and I think we served really well as a team."

With the win over Lehigh Bucknell snapped a four-game losing streak to Lehigh, which included a defeat in last season's Patriot League semi-finals.

After sweeping both games Bucknell has maintained its remarkable record of not allowing a single game in four conference matches. Today the Bison take on two-time defending Patriot League champion American. American is undefeated in the Patriot League, and this match could possibly set supremacy for the rest of the season.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Defensive specialist Carolyn Dougherty '05 serves the ball in a recent game. The defense has become one of the most integral parts of the Bison's success over the past couple of weeks.

>This is Citigroup.

Apply online at Citigroup.com

Last year, Janice's research on Emily Brontë earned her top academic honors.

This year, her research helped launch a new business model in biotech.

At Citigroup, we can make careers happen—sometimes very quickly. That's because, as the world's leading financial services firm, we value talent and innovative thinking. The choices at Citigroup are only as limited as your aspirations and imagination. To find out more, go to Citigroup.com.

citigroup

© 2003 Citigroup Global Markets Inc. Member SIPC. CITIGROUP and the Umbrella Device are trademarks and service marks of Citicorp or its affiliates and are used and registered throughout the world. Citigroup Global Markets Inc. and Citibank are affiliated companies under the common control of Citicorp. Citibank and Citigroup Global Markets Inc. are equal opportunity employers M/F/D/V. Names and images do not reflect actual employees of Citigroup, Citigroup Global Markets Inc. or Citibank.

HARVEST HOUSE
CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP
GO Vertical

310 Market St.
Downtown Lewisburg
Under CVS
Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

ART.
ASK FOR MORE.

For more information about the importance of art education, please contact www.AmericansForTheArts.org beach life

SPRING BREAK 2004!
Travel with Beach Life Vacations! America's best student tour operator!
Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco,
Bahamas, Florida.
Sell trips, earn cash, travel free! Hurry - Book Now!
Call 1-800-733-6347
www.beachlifevacations.com

Before last weekend
The only thing held your hand was a CD.

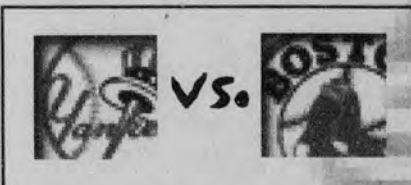

Sports

Editor's major-league baseball postseason picks

Cecily Cairns Sports Editor	Brent Butler Sports Editor	Michelle Dombeck Assoc. Editor	Peter Hackeman Editor-in-Chief	Adam Wilcox Photo Editor	Jason Rubinstein Senior Editor
 WS winner: Chicago Cubs I have a soft spot for the Red Sox as a franchise, but when called upon for consultation, the life-size poster of Mark Prior on my wall "recommends" to me that I stick with the Cubs. Ultimately, I feel compelled to adhere to the request, because damn, that guy is big.	 WS winner: Boston Red Sox HULK SMASH!	 WS winner: New York Yankees Michelle's method of selection: Yankees over Red Sox "because I'm from New England." Cubs over Marlins "because a bear would eat a bird." Sports Editors' note: we're confused, too...	 WS winner: Chicago Cubs Despite my fervent hope that the Red Sox could finally win a World Series, I'm taking the unbeatable pitching of the Cubs over the Red Sox' impressive hitting. Plus, the injury to Johnny Damon cripples the Red Sox offense.	 WS winner: ... I don't like baseball.	 WS winner: New York Yankees On a more educated level, I really just think the Yankees will win. Sports Editors' note: we're sorry that Jason is so "educated."

League Championship Schedule

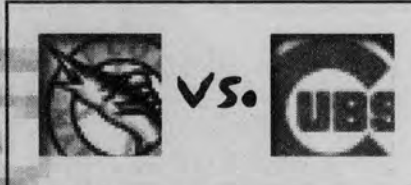

American League Championship Series

Boston leads series 1-0 (as of Oct. 8)

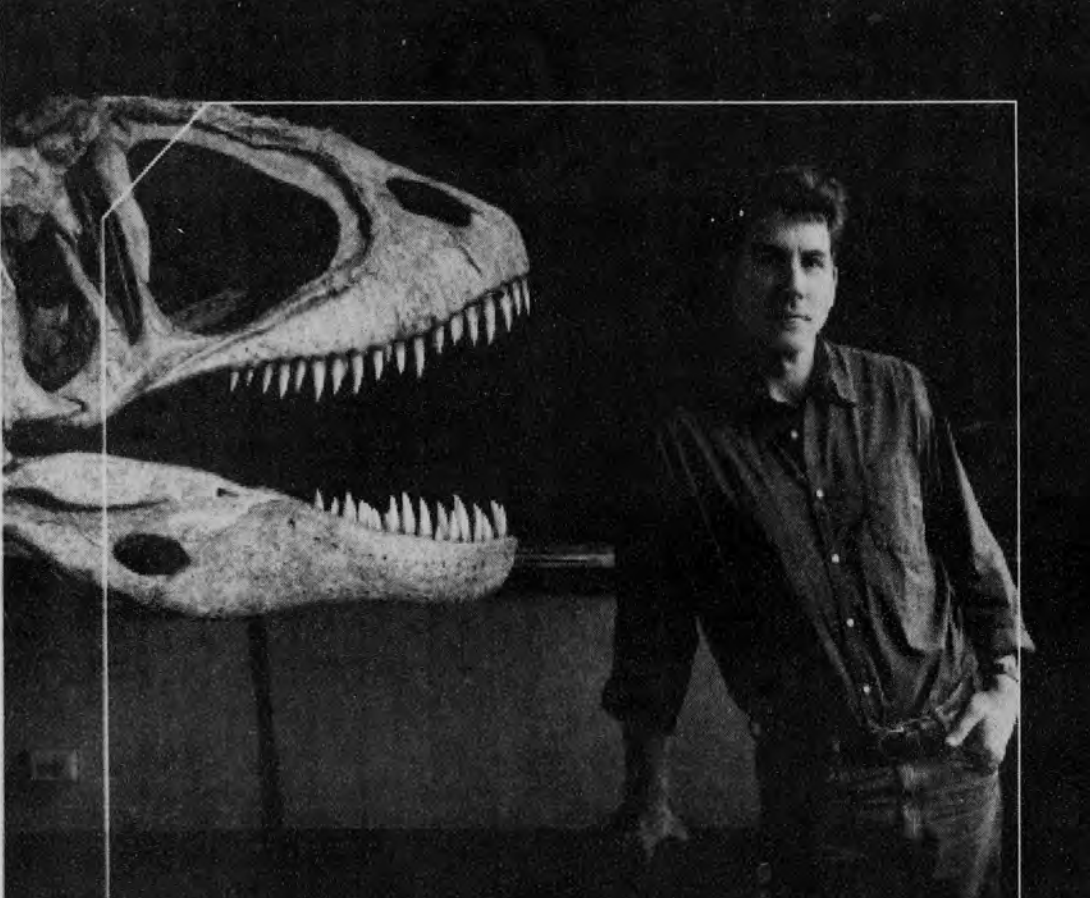

G1: Red Sox @ Yankees 2
G2: Red Sox @ Yankees, Oct. 9, 8 p.m.
G3: Yankees @ Red Sox, Oct. 11, 4 p.m.
G4: Yankees @ Red Sox, Oct. 12, 7:30 p.m.
G5: Yankees @ Red Sox, Oct. 13, 8 p.m.
G6: Red Sox @ Yankees, Oct. 15, 4 p.m.
G7: Red Sox @ Yankees, Oct. 16, 8 p.m.

National League Championship Series

Series tied, 1-1 (as of Oct. 8)

G1: Marlins @ Cubs 8
G2: Marlins @ Cubs 12
G3: Cubs @ Marlins, Oct. 10, 8 p.m.
G4: Cubs @ Marlins, Oct. 11, 7:30 p.m.
G5: Cubs @ Marlins, Oct. 12, 4 p.m.
G6: Marlins @ Cubs, Oct. 14, 8 p.m.
G7: Marlins @ Cubs, Oct. 15, 8 p.m.

Paleontologist Paul Sereno has encountered some of the weirdest creatures that ever walked the earth. Yet some of the scariest things he's discovered aren't likely to become extinct anytime soon. Sad to say, investment fees and expenses will probably outlast us all. That's why Dr. Sereno was afraid of getting eaten alive.

So he turned to a company famous for keeping costs down. That meant more money for him and less for the monsters.

Log on for ideas, advice, and results. TIAA-CREF.org or call 800-842-2776

TIAA CREF Managing money for people with other things to think about.

RETIREMENT | INSURANCE | MUTUAL FUNDS | COLLEGE SAVINGS | TRUSTS | INVESTMENT MANAGEMENT

Paul Sereno became a paleontologist in 1967. TIAA-CREF is a member of the American International Group, Inc., and American International Life Insurance Company, Inc. © 2003 American International Group, Inc. All rights reserved. TIAA-CREF, New York, N.Y. is a subsidiary of American International Group, Inc. TIAA-CREF is not a broker-dealer and does not sell securities.

Study In English Abroad

The Swedish Program

STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY

Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film
Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies

COME TO AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING

OCTOBER 6, 2003 4:00 P.M. TAYLOR HALL LOUNGE, ROOM 115

If you are unable to attend this meeting, please contact your Study Abroad Advisor or The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323 (315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

SPRING BREAK: Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489! Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More!
Organize Small Group- Earn Free Trips plus Commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM
Mondays - Monday Night Football on 50+ TVs
$5 All You Can Eat Wings!
Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $18.99
Hip Hop DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials

THE Night Club VAULT
Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm
8 pm Trivia Contest! Win $30 gift cert!
Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm
All Request DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am
Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings -- $5!!!
10 pm-2 am - Live band in The Vault
Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
16+ Dance Club with Hip Hop DJ!

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak -- $12.99!!!
9 pm - 2 am -- Karaoke Night!

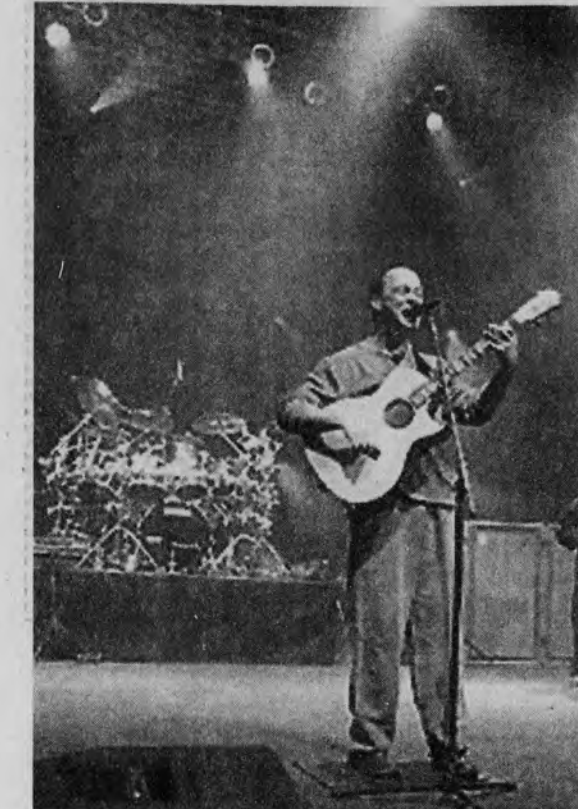

Now Hiring
Wait Staff and Bartenders

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Arts & Entertainment

Dave Matthews' solo album follows the beat of a different drummer

"Some Devil" experiments with a new drummer, new style and new sound

Courtesy of daveandband.com
Dave Matthews performs songs from his latest album "Some Devil." The CD features singles "Gravedigger" and "Stay or Leave."

BY CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

The biggest fear in the eyes of any music fan comes when any member of a band decides to work on a solo project. "It must mean the band is breaking up," he thinks. "All the music that I love is soon to be gone." When Boyd Tinsley of the Dave Matthews Band (DMB) recorded and released "True Reflections" this summer, fears weren't as high as they could have been, since the solo album was incomparable to the work that DMB had released to date. When it was announced that Matthews would be releasing "Some Devil," a solo effort involving a new drummer, bassist and special guests Trey Anastasio (Phish) and solo guitarist Tim Reynolds, there was a bit of a stir among DMB fans, frightened that their favorite front man was soon moving in a very new direction. Luckily, Matthews has repeatedly denied breakup rumors over the past few months, because this album—while not quite on DMB's level—comes very close to greatness.

It would be impossible for Matthews to mimic the sound that DMB as a whole has created over the past decade or so. Its uncharacteristic lineup, including a violin and saxophone, melts together in a completely unplanned fashion. Had Matthews attempted to find that magic with new collaborators, he would have been hard-pressed to even come close.

"Some Devil" is Matthews' album, complete with his trademark mumbles, falsetto and unique guitar work that have made him, and his band, one of the most recognizable names in popular music. While Matthews discourages people from thinking that it's actually "his" band, fans can now finally refer to an album as "Dave's" and they should feel very proud to do so.

"Dodo," the first track, explores the ideas of evolution and modern society, with light lyrics floating over a collection of acoustic guitar and a mellow horn section that adds a perfect touch to the airiness of the tune. "Gravedigger," the album's first single, and "Stay or Leave," were both debuted live prior to the album's release, but are definitely worth checking out as well.

"Stay or Leave" has strayed from its acoustic origin to include a David Gray-esque backdrop to accompany Matthews' vocal scatting before a string piece and drums enter the picture. In "Gravedigger," Matthews adds a drum line that is so close to being offbeat that it's almost painful to listen to, but at the same time, adds a uniqueness and experimental feel that so many artists are too afraid to try (for all the purists out there, he also includes an acoustic version that mirrors the original).

Matthews, for the first time, has also recorded a version of his solo classic "Little Thing" in the form of "An' Another Thing," the album's slowest and most drawn-out piece, featuring Dave singing the line, "Rain down on me," almost entirely in falsetto.

The album's true mastery comes in the fact that Matthews is able to stray from his DMB roots and offer sounds not heard before by the band. Several tracks feature orchestral arrangements, and guests Reynolds and Anastasio offer electric guitar work far beyond any included on Matthews' previous releases. Also, the experimental approach that Matthews seemingly takes with many of his songs appear to represent the sense of freedom that he had in recording the album, not having to adhere to any preset standards set by the success of DMB.

Along those lines, the title track stands out as the most striking, it's just vocals over an electric guitar, with no effects, guests or studio magic of any kind. One can almost see a forlorn Matthew, sitting in the corner of a smoky bar, as he laments, "Unbroken, don't break me, when I hit the ground/Some devil, some angel, has got me to the bones."

While I was definitely excited for the release of "Some Devil," I had mixed expectations with regards to how good of an album it would be. Departing from the magic that DMB had is comparable to seeing Robert Plant outside of Led Zeppelin—while it's great to see a legend do his own thing, the thought of the supporting cast with him lingers with every note. While not quite a legend yet, Matthews shows on his solo debut album that he is on the right path.

Pulitzer Prize winner and poet Stephen Dunn to give reading at Bucknell Hall

BY STEPHANIE MALENICH
Writer

When talking to most students on campus, mention the word "poetry," and you don't have to wait very long for the groan that is sure to follow. You can see them actually tense up, preparing themselves to run far, far away. Anywhere this mystic art form exists they see an intellectual bubble, only to be penetrated by the purest of "scholars" and "free thinkers."

The University's Stadler Center for Poetry will squash this misconception by introducing a reading by famed poet Stephen Dunn at 8 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 19 at Bucknell Hall.

Dunn is the current Sojka Visiting Poet, a title he was built on the composition of works that are deeply meaningful, yet accessible at the same time.

Stadler Fellow Rebecca Warner says that Dunn is a writer that has been "persistent in the writing world" and has garnered "a lifetime of writing."

What really excites the Stadler Center about showcasing Dunn and his talent at the University is that his work will appeal to both the students and faculty.

All those who normally tense up at the mere mention of poetry will not only delight in built on the composition of works that are deeply meaningful, yet accessible at the same time.

Stadler Fellow Rebecca Warner says that Dunn is a writer that has been "persistent in the writing world" and has garnered "a lifetime of writing."

What really excites the Stadler Center about showcasing Dunn and his talent at the University is that his work will appeal to both the students and faculty.

All those who normally tense up at the mere mention of poetry will not only delight in

Courtesy of barnesandnoble.com
Dunn received the 2001 Pulitzer Prize for "Different Hours." He will be visiting The University October 19th.

it, but also engage themselves in a new form of expression if they attend Dunn's reading.

Keeley's Cheap Chic

BY KEELEY PATTERSON
Contributing Writer

In reflection on past "bubble"-bound years, I have often felt deprived of adequate retail variety and simultaneously discouraged, also witnessing the steady drain of my financial resources. Gradually, I have developed means of adapting to these archaic, collective conditions; I maintain a devout appreciation for the thrill of the thrifty treasure hunt, I value functionality, affordability and uniqueness and I am always willing to rummage for simple, economical ways to look and feel fabulous. After three arduous years of keeping my secrets hidden, I am finally ready to share the wealth, presenting the first installment of my weekly column, "Cheap Chic."

I have scoured the greater Lewisburg area to bring you the finest central Pa. has to offer in low-cost accessories. Dollar General, most notably located adjacent to Original Italian Pizza and Subs in Plaza 15 on Route 15, is known for providing basement, bargain prices on household staples. However, in order to score a true "find," one must look hard and look often.

This week's featured item is a carelessly hidden at the end of the aisle, hung on a flimsy, disposable holder. The Undee Bandz headband, designed to replicate the elastic of men's briefs, is machine-washable and is one-size-fits-all.

Sold in a variety of colors, my personal favorite is the white with pink and blue stripes. At just 1 dollar per band, keep Undee Bandz in mind for Big/Little Week gifts or, perhaps, a well-deserved reward for surviving midterms!

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS

Ain't nuthin' but $12.99 baby.

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS... FIT FOR A KING

Meaty St. Louis-cut ribs, dry-rubbed with our special seasonings, basted with our own bold flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce, and pit smoked right here with Applewood. Served with hickory smoked baked beans, B's skillet potato cakes, freshly baked sourdough bread, and combred with honey butter. Plus... a FREE non-alcoholic beverage.

Served all day Monday thru Wednesday, 11am until closing.

Steak 'n Rib House
17 North Market Street
Sellinggrove
291 Mill Street, Danville
Sun-Thr 11am-Midnight
F-S 11am-2am
www.bjssrbs.com

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN

1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 3001.05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester/Daily Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

T BRYNWOOD Rentals

Buffalo Bill's
TEX-MEX GRILLE & SALOON

Monday 5-9
Jumbo Hamburger & Fries & Large Soda---$3.99

Tuesday 5-9
12 Jumbo Wings & Fries & Soda--$3.99

Wednesday 5-9
Vegetarian Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price

Thursday 5-9
Mexican Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price

Lewisburg • 523-8900

FEATURES

Education

Management 101 benefits students and community

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Contributing Writer

College is consumed by taking classes, studying for exams and writing papers, but it might not feel like all this work is serving a purpose. Many students have wondered how and when they will be able to apply their education to the real world and, at the same time, make a difference in the community. University students who take Management 101 (MGMT 101) are involved in a course project involving just that.

This project involves developing companies with real management experiences and customers. The class creates the companies, setting their own service and business missions, designing their own organization structures and delegating jobs to their own staff. The idea of the companies' missions is to make a difference in the community through "service-learning."

"Management 101 companies work with real services and products, real jobs, real people and real money; they experience real conflicts, real complications, real challenges and real successes and failures—including the possibility of bankruptcy," said Tammy Hiller, associate professor of business management.

The MGMT 101 course runs a company project every semester. This semester's project involves four different company groups: Company A (A Pint Above the Rest) selling pint glasses, Company B (Big Time Teeze) selling University T-shirts, Company C (Cool Shirt, Hansel) selling University T-shirts and Company D (Dude, Where's your Hat?) selling University hats.

The project seems to be progressing well according to Hiller.

"So far, each company has brainstormed possible mission ideas, investigated those ideas through conducting market research and strategic analyses, debated and decided on company missions, debated and decided on a top-level organization design and nominated and elected company officers," Hiller said.

The ultimate goal of this project is to use the education gained to enhance students' learning with real situations, at the same time giving back to the community. Company A's objective is to help build the Habitat for Humanity house in Milfordburg. Company B will build a library for the S.I.M.O.N. house (an alternative learning lab for Lewisburg High School's learning disabled students), conduct a book drive for the library, teach the learning-disabled students how to run their new library and renovate a room in the S.I.M.O.N. house to be a "hotel room" where the students can learn to clean hotel rooms and hold events to interact with students. Company C's objective is to accomplish renovation work in building a Y.M.C.A. Arts House in Sunbury. Company D will cook and serve meals to families of critically-ill children living in the Ronald McDonald House in Danville.

This project requires students to engage in collaboration and experience and to assess some of what it takes to organize, manage and grapple with the question of what's worth managing.

"MGMT 101 is designed to serve as a liberating experience in organization and management," Hiller said.

Students of MGMT 101 believe this project provides personal growth in the management field and overall serve as a great experience.

"The students get a chance to use the new knowledge that they have gained through their business and service projects within the local Bucknell community," said Taylor Yeaton '06, chief executive officer (CEO) of Company B.

Though companies are forced to compete with one another for the University student's dollar, all feel that such competition only adds to the real-life feel of the whole experience.

"In this management company, the education from the textbook meshes itself with real situations, and that leads to a substantial gain in retention of the ideas, not because the theories are read and instinctively regurgitated on an exam, but rather because you live the ideas in a real-life working environment," said Matt Talbot '06, CEO of Company D.

Students agree that this type of project is different from any others in which they have been involved.

"The biggest difference that I have experienced thus far in the company that is different than anything that I have experienced in any other class is the necessary ability for me to be able to think on my feet," Talbot said.

It appears that students are developing increased understanding about themselves and their capabilities in taking leadership roles through MGMT 101.

"I am tremendously expanding on my leadership skills. This position calls for me to envision the overall big picture of the company, and in doing so, also realize the obstacles that need to be overcome in the process," said Matt Dunningan '06, CEO of Company C. "I am also developing important political and social skills. These skills involve interacting with all company members on a regular basis to facilitate smooth operations and a strong sense of community."

Not only are they expanding on their intellectual and interpersonal abilities, students also beginning to see how every business in a community can help one another, embracing the service learning aspect of MGMT 101.

"It is important to understand that many of the decisions that you make will ultimately affect a lot of other people that you might not have a personal connection with," Yeaton said. "This is a very important concept that you should keep in mind throughout the developing phases of your company."

University students involved in this project apply their skills and knowledge of class material to the real business world. The responsibilities, decisions and goals each company member contributes will have an effect on the productivity and final success or failure of the project. Students are testing their abilities, but at the same time, enjoying putting their education to work here at the University.

Photos by Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Matthew "Vassar" Pierce '06 gives instructions to members of his company during a meeting.

Mini-Baja team gears up for competition

Mechanical engineers' senior project gives them speed behind the wheel

By LEAH CUNNINGHAM
Senior Writer

You thought "Baja" described a Mexican burrito offered at the Bison, but it's actually an off-road vehicle which can take you, at 25 miles per hour, straight into a pond without sinking. This vehicle is the automotive creation that has a group of University mechanical engineers geared up for the annual Mini-Baja Competition.

The Mini-Baja program is an inter-collegiate engineering design competition for undergraduate and graduate engineering students. The object of the competition is to simulate real-world engineering design projects and their related challenges, while students function as a team to design, build, test and finally compete with their vehicle.

"Our goal is to build an off-road vehicle dune-buggy," Nate Inrore '04 said. "The basis is to build a car that can drive on anything, even amphibious—it must drive on any terrain."

Complete with an 84-page book of competition rules, the Mini-Baja competition is embraced by both national and international engineering students.

A group of 12 University students, most of whom are senior mechanical engineers undertaking this task as their senior design projects, are diligently working on their design and mini-baja vehicle. They will compete in this spring's Mini-Baja East Competition held in Montreal, hosted by Ecole de Technologie Supérieure. The project is first offered as a capstone experience to mechanical engineers and then opened up to anyone else on campus who would like to help.

"I chose this project for my senior design because I am interested in pursuing a career in the automotive industry as a mechanical engineer. I am also interested with Professor Stryker on Bucknell's Hybrid Electric Powertrain and am most likely staying two more years to work on that for my master's degree," Mike DeVita '04 said.

Though anxious and excited for the Mini-Baja contest, this year's team has some stiff competition. The University has ranked in the top 10 the past three years and has last years second-place mini-baja and look for design ideas and support.

"Most of us have experiences with design work, but this time we have full control," said Mini-baja Competition team captain, Alex Shellhammer '04. "We are usually given guidelines to make a design, but this time we are given the answer and we have to find out how to get there."

Many of the students involved are taken aback by how much they're actually able to accomplish on their own, as most have never encountered anything quite like this before.

"I think the entire process is amazing, how you can start with a problem or idea, think of ways to solve them and design, test and build something to do what you want it to do. Obviously the best part is seeing your design actually work," DeVita said.

Team advisor, Peter Stryker, associate professor of mechanical engineering, says that although it is early in the design process, he has been impressed with the team members' willingness to explore the alternatives to the design and to accept the responsibility of doing the necessary homework.

Stryker explained that his main goal is to make sure the students function as a team to build a successful car. Sometimes the teams need little direc-

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
After every run the team notes problems and makes corrections, all in an effort to create a gold-medal machine. The team practices every Friday.

tion, other times they may need more.

Working closely with George Waltman and Tim Baker of the Project Development Lab, Stryker helps to make sure all the students have a positive learning experience with this project.

"I enjoy all aspects of the process. The competition is a four-day adrenaline rush, and watching the design become a complete car is very rewarding. I also enjoy seeing the students rewarded for the effort they put into this project. I see my job as making sure the students stay focused and work at the level they are capable of," Stryker said.

The Mini-Baja team is facing the challenges and working toward making the most effective and hopefully successful Mini-Baja possible. Although last year's vehicle came in second-place, this year's group must prove at least one major re-design.

"One of our major strengths is that we work well as a team and we have a top car from last year to look at and analyze. One of our challenges is going to be coming up with our own ideas without completely mimicking last year's car to make a new one which finishes in the top three," Christian Decker '04 said.

The University's Mini-Baja team is funded by the Engineering Department and donations. Looking forward to an intense competition this spring in Montreal, the team will continue to work diligently in designing, building and testing the vehicle with aspirations of perfection. Stryker said that the parents who come to watch and the alumni who have participated in the competition say it is very exciting and definitely a University experience they will remember. The team also invites anyone interested to observe the test drives behind the Art Barn every Friday afternoon.

"We want to straight up dominate at the competition," Charles Markey '04 said. "I want to bring the trophy back to Bucknell and show everyone here why mechanical engineering is the best discipline. I am not worried about the competition at all as long as we continue to work hard as a team. We aren't afraid to get dirty."

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
As the designs for the dune-buggy have to survive all terrains, the test-drivers make sure to sample all obstacles.

FEATURES

in Action

Education 341 turns students into teachers

As a part of the curriculum, University students employ their knowledge and teach reading to children

By SARA STEFANI
Contributing Writer

What is reading? How do children learn to read? How do I teach reading to children? These are the three dominant questions that Education 341, The Teaching of Reading, strives to answer. Students who take this class do not just learn the answers to these questions during class; armed with intensive classroom training, they go beyond the confines of the classroom and spend 12 hours over the course of the semester tutoring elementary school children with learning disabilities.

This year, most of the Education 341 students are involved in a new project with Kelly Elementary School. Before they begin tutoring, they go through a six-hour basic training program taught by both University staff and Kelly Elementary School teachers.

Teachers from the elementary school provide the students with a sheet that indicates the specific areas where the child needs help. From this information, they are required to plan reading lessons for their students and administer tests to see how they progress over time.

"We get to know their abilities and learn their situation, and they feel comfortable with us," Carrie Todd '06 said.

Last year, when Brown was enrolled in Education 341, a tutor was assigned to a different child each session.

"It would have been better to teach the same child because we could have seen their progression and we would have had more to go on when we tested them," Brown said.

As well as keeping the tutors paired with the same children

"Topics included reading, math, social skills training, professionalism, special education, etc. During the training, teachers went over the types of activities that students could do with the children in the tutoring setting," said Assistant Professor of education Aimee Wolanski.

In her class, Wolanski also teaches her students further strategies and techniques to help beginning readers.

"Reading is very complex, and there are so many effective strategies that the tutors can use to help their struggling students," Wolanski said.

Students work with the same child or small group of children throughout the semester. Teachers from the elementary school provide the students with a sheet that indicates the specific areas where the child needs help. From this information, they are required to plan reading lessons for their students and administer tests to see how they progress over time.

"We get to know their abilities and learn their situation, and they feel comfortable with us," Carrie Todd '06 said.

Last year, when Brown was enrolled in Education 341, a tutor was assigned to a different child each session.

"It would have been better to teach the same child because we could have seen their progression and we would have had more to go on when we tested them," Brown said.

As well as keeping the tutors paired with the same children

Elizabeth Decker '06, who is enrolled in the course, explains some of the disabilities that children have.

"There are some serious problems with phonics, like in decoding letters, among the younger children who may not know how to read yet. Older kids may have problems with comprehension. They can read, but they don't remember what they read. These are the two ends of the spectrum," Decker said.

According to Megan Brown '06, who took the course during Fall 2002, other children may be dyslexic or have trouble pronouncing short or long vowels.

Most agree that repeated exposure to the same group of children allows the tutors to have a more intimate knowledge of their needs, as well as allowing the child to become more comfortable with the student.

"It's better to have one student because we can work on the problems that they had the week before; we can familiarize ourselves with them," Kristin Bassett '06 said.

"We get to know their abilities and learn their situation, and they feel comfortable with us," Carrie Todd '06 said.

Last year, when Brown was enrolled in Education 341, a tutor was assigned to a different child each session.

"It would have been better to teach the same child because we could have seen their progression and we would have had more to go on when we tested them," Brown said.

As well as keeping the tutors paired with the same children for each visit, Wolanski has made several other changes to the course this year; based on student feedback, she believes that they have been positive. While Brown says that the class doesn't teach her strategies necessary to teach, most current students disagree.

"Professor Wolanski does a great job of teaching us what resources are available and the strategies of teaching reading," Todd said.

Todd, Bassett and Katie Mulrine '06 all assert that when the time came to begin tutoring, they felt prepared.

"The sessions really helped with getting a feeling for how the kids would be because it was their teachers who were teaching us," Mulrine said.

Overall, Wolanski is more pleased with the success of the student tutors this year than ever before.

"I don't think that the students have a hard time adjusting to the tutoring situation," Wolanski said. "Certainly as the semester progresses, the students will be able to apply the strategies that they have learned in the classroom with real children. I think this certainly enhances their experience by having the field placement component with the course."

Wolanski also holds sharing sessions, in which students discuss their tutoring sessions and share their successes and/or concerns.

"I think that students learn a lot from other students' experiences and can bring neat ideas from other classrooms to share

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Carrie Todd '06 enjoys the opportunity Education 341 gives her to employ her education, as well as the one-on-one contact with children.

with their peers," Wolanski said.

Wolanski feels that the program is also beneficial for the elementary school children. Her students agree and add that the children respond well to their youth and excitement about teaching.

"It provides an opportunity for children to have extra assistance in an area in which they struggle... I think the one-on-one attention is extremely positive for the children," Wolanski said.

"The kids liked doing it a lot. They responded better and weren't as afraid to make mistakes in front of us because we're still students too," Brown said.

Bassett recognizes how well the students she works with respond to her youth and interest in teaching them.

"It's also exciting for them. They know we're younger, and it's fun," Bassett said.

Overall, students agree that the hands-on experience is an important and effective one in their educational training.

"It's beneficial because we're being put in a school environment," Todd said.

At Kelly Elementary School, they learn to apply what they have been studying in books to a real-life situation.

"It's a really good experience," Bassett said. "If you want to teach, anything working with kids is wonderful."

Philip Roth '54 continues his literary success

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

While the University prides itself on graduating men and women bound for success, it is not every day that those individuals earn national recognition. Occasionally, however, the University is privileged to sing the praises of one of its own, as is the case with Philip Roth '54.

Roth's name, which has been proudly attached to prefixes such as "Pulitzer prize winning," "two-time National Book Critics Circle Award-winner" and "National Book Award for Fiction winner," has earned acclaim once again as one of his novels, "The Human Stain," was recently made into a movie starring Nicole Kidman and Anthony Hopkins. Yet some feel that "The Human Stain," originally published in 2000 and released on film in U.S. theaters Oct. 3, does not quite manage to encompass the literary genius of Roth's novel.

"Without the sardonic rant of Philip Roth, upon whose novel the film is based, the material plays as stale or preposterous," according to the Film Journal International.

It is the belief of many writers and critics that Roth's work, while undeniably powerful on paper, is exceedingly difficult to translate to the screen.

"His characters are complex... and much of the action is recounted through interior monologues—hardly guarantees of box-office success," according to The New York Times.

This is not the first time Roth's work has been transformed for the big screen. "Portnoy's Complaint" and "Goodbye, Columbus," two of his earliest novels, were also adapted for film. And similar to "The Human Stain," neither received reviews equivalent to that of their literary counterpart.

Yet despite some less-than-flattering movie reviews, Roth's work as an author has earned the praises of University faculty and alumni for years.

His successes began in 1959, only five years after his graduation from the University, with his first novel entitled "Goodbye, Columbus," and have entertained powerful staying power since then.

"[The University] did not make him into the writer he is. He would have been great no matter what. But we didn't ruin him as a writer," said friend of Roth and retired University faculty member Jack Wheatcroft. "In the world of letters, he is the most prominent [writer] Bucknell has produced."

Robert Taylor, professor of English at the University, is equally impressed with Roth's work over the years.

"He's one of the most important writers of his generation," Taylor said. "His past six novels constitute a body of literary work that is as great as anyone in the U.S. in the 20th century," Wheatcroft said.

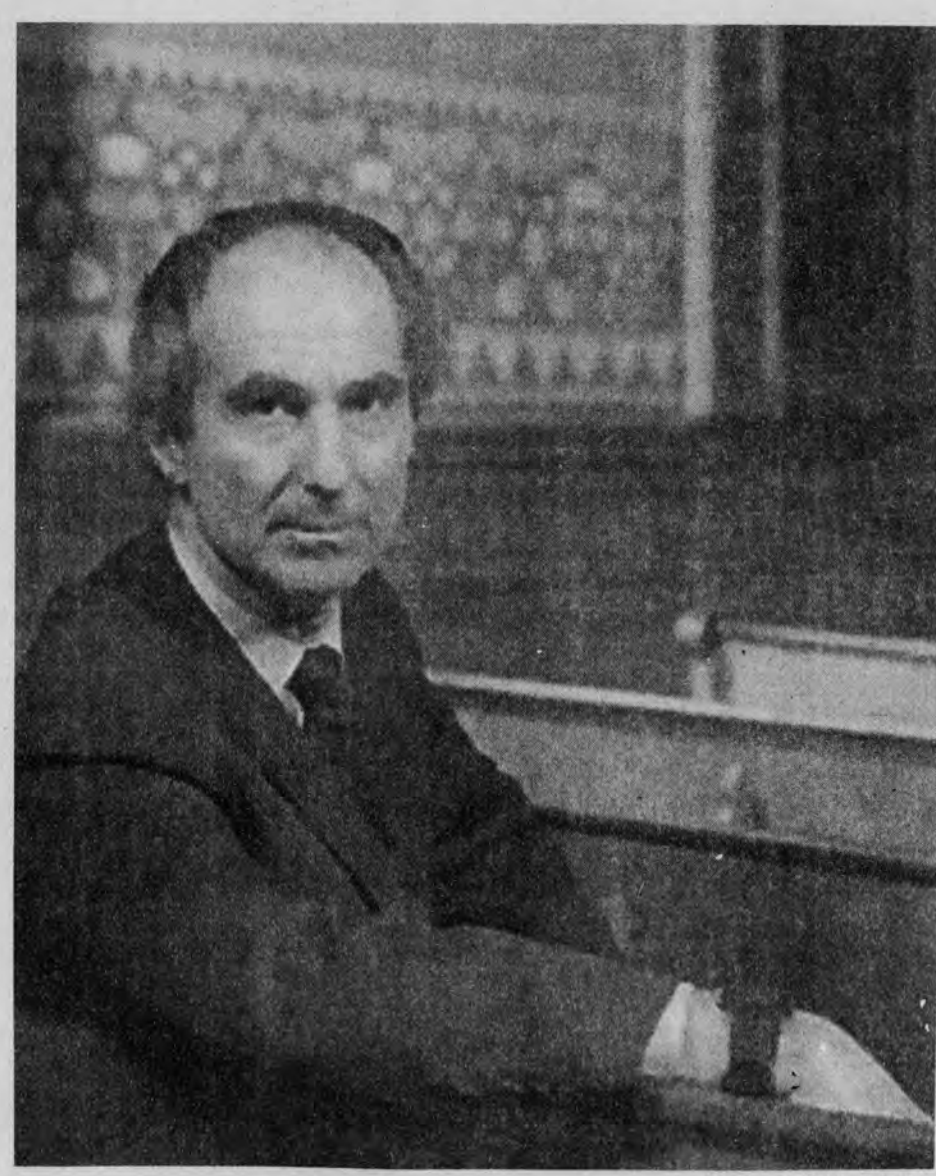

"Human Stain," though perhaps not of Academy Award caliber as a movie, is one of Roth's most recent novels and is already earning the accolades of readers.

"It's very original and well-crafted. I especially enjoy the way Roth creates deep personal histories for his characters, making them complex and even contradictory," University Professor of English John Rickard said.

Due to his overwhelming success in the literary world and, as those closest to him would agree, because of his innately private nature, Roth has been known to keep a low profile. However in early 1990 Roth returned to the University to speak at the dedication of the Mildred Martin Library at the Stadler Poetry Center. Martin, a professor of English at the University from 1940 until 1972, had Roth as a student during his time here. Roth has said that he greatly values the lessons he learned from Martin, and thus recognized her at the dedication with a reading from one of his books.

Roth is not only a favorite of University faculty and students, but also avid readers worldwide. A true indicator of Roth's success, the "Philip Roth Society" was founded in 2002.

"The Philip Roth Society is an organization devoted to the study and the appreciation of the writings of Philip Roth. Its goal is to encourage the exchange of ideas and texts concerning this most significant author through discussions, panel presentations at scholarly conferences and journal publications," according to the society's Web site.

Courtesy of Public Relations
Philip Roth '54, Pulitzer Prize winner and University alumnus, recently had one of his newest novels turned into a major motion picture.

They circulate a newsletter, as well as organize conferences concerning both Roth's work and his Jewish-American heritage, as it has been a huge influence in many of his publications.

Obviously Roth has earned the praises he enjoys, through a lifetime of dedication to and a true love for the written word. The University community is proud to count him among one of its most famous alumni, and will be able to do so for years to come as Roth shows no signs of slowing in his successes.

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Cinema Center

Solmesgrove • State College Valley Mall • 274-2949

Play Dates: October 10-16, 2003

Out of Time (R)	Indelible Crotty (PG-13)
2:43/7:15, 9:45	1:45, 4:30, 7:30
Roundup (PG-13)	Secondhand Lion (PG)
1:15, 4:15, 6:45, 9:15	1:45, 4:30, 7:10
Underworld (R)	Duplex (PG-13)
1:15, 6:20	4:15, 8:45
Cabin Fever (R)	Kill Bill (R)
9:40	2:44, 7:30, 10
Cold Creek Manor (R)	Lost in Translation (PG-13)
1:30, 4:30, 7:10, 9:40	1:45, 4:50, 7:20
House of the Dead (R)	Under the Tuscan Sun (PG-13)
1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:40, 9:50	12:45, 3:15, 6:15, 8:50
Good Boy! (PG)	School of Rock (PG-13)
12:30, 3:5, 7:10, 9:20	12:40, 3:7, 10:20
Matinees before 3 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

FREE Ticket to Paradise
with every Spring Break package!
Limited time offer. Check our website for details!
www.studentexpress.com
Call NOW: 1.800.787.3787

FEATURES

A lazy day on the Susquehanna

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Imagine that it's 1900 and you're a passenger on a paddle-wheel riverboat. After cruising along the Susquehanna River for a few hours, taking in the scenery along the shore, the riverboat docks in Williamsport, Pa. Tourists and several families, including your own, disembark where you will enjoy a pleasant afternoon picnic along the shore.

Now, fast forward a century. This snapshot can still be enjoyed in the Hiawatha Paddle Wheel Riverboat.

"It was named after the original," Captain Gary Gardner said. The first Hiawatha was destroyed in an ice jam on the Susquehanna in 1914. In 1982, the Williamsport Chamber of Commerce collected money for a new riverboat and launched the boat that year.

"Today's boat is a replica. The original ran from the Market Street Bridge to Silden Dale Park," said Katie Tinney, director of public relations for the boat.

These and other details can be heard on Hiawatha's public cruises.

"On the boat
What to do
in the middle
of NOWHERE

they tell you the history of the river and the boat," Gardner said. "They have a narration during the cruise."

Public cruises leave from Susquehanna State Park at 1 p.m., 2:30 p.m. and 4 p.m. each Saturday and Sunday, May through October. They run more frequently during the boat's peak summer season.

The Hiawatha Riverboat offers attractions beyond narrated public cruises as well. These include Friday night dinners, Sunday brunches, Karaoke cruises and sunset concert cruises.

"For the dinner cruises, we load people [onto the boat]," Gardner said. "Then they have dinner at the Antlers Country Club—they have a big buffet there. Then they get back on the boat, and the trolley takes them back to their cars."

Private charters are also available on the Hiawatha.

"You can have a private charter for a party. It's different to be out on the river because the scenery is always changing," Gardner said.

This shift of surroundings is what has kept Gardner in the business of running the riverboat.

"The water relaxes me," Gardner said.

During his four years as captain, he has encountered several difficulties that come with running a boat such as the Hiawatha.

"A boat's not like a car,"

The Hiawatha takes passengers on a lazy ride down the Susquehanna River, which includes a brief history of the boat.

Gardner said. "When something happens, you can't just pull it over. If there are people there, you have to make it look good too."

Gardner has a few frightening tales from his boating days, including one excursion as a new captain when he had to dock the boat in 25-mile-per-hour winds after losing transmission. Despite its troubles at "sea," the Hiawatha continues to run strong and is a popular way to enjoy an afternoon on the river.

"We operate May through October and average about 25,000 people per year," Tinney said. "This is a unique attraction that not many places have... It's very relaxing, especially with the leaves turning color. It is beautiful."

Students can enjoy any of the boat's multiple attractions. "We went on the Hiawatha Riverboat on the last day of international student orientation. We listened to music and danced. The sun was setting, and the scenery was lovely. It was a perfect way to end an enjoyable week with my friends," Meghann Peace '04 said.

Such a cruise is an enjoyment for families and locals alike. There are even picnics after the rides, as there have been throughout the Hiawatha's history.

"I like the snacks," said Jacob Hite, one of Hiawatha's youngest fans.

"It's cool," said Amanda Hite, another young rider and Jacob's older sister.

The paddle-wheel boat can be reached by traveling north to Williamsport on Route 15. Follow signs for U.S. Route 220-South and after merging onto 220, take the Williamsport Reach Road Exit. Brown signs will then direct you toward Susquehanna State Park and the riverboat.

Bleu Plate Café's staff, mostly composed of family members, has enjoyed a year of success.

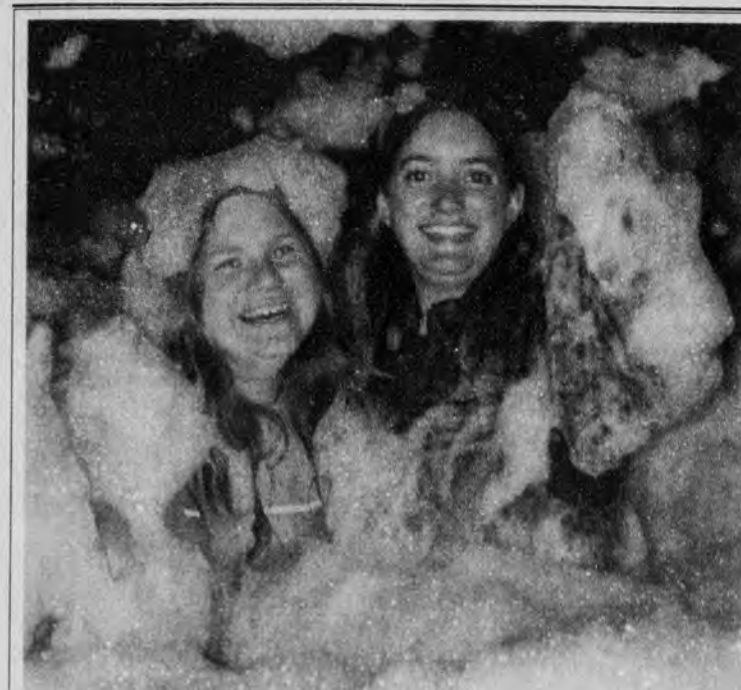

available during all restaurant hours, along with sandwiches and salads, the Café also offers a dinner menu with more substantial meal options. The Bleu Plate also has a vegetarian and low-carb special everyday, so there's something for absolutely everyone. This week they're premiering a new fall menu, including some more exotic and cultural dishes.

In the year it's been open, the Bleu Plate has entertained a great deal of success. This is clear to anyone who's tried to get lunch there at noon.

"It gets a little busy at lunch, especially between 12 p.m. and 12:30 p.m. We're really, really, packed," Storb said.

Along with its new Sunday late-night hours, the Bleu Plate features musicians every Thursday from 7-10 p.m. Yesterday, coupled

Janet Forney '04 (left) and Louise Welling '04 enjoyed playing in a sea of bubbles at the foam dance party last weekend, sponsored by A.C.E.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Another titillating edition brought to you by...

Ms.

Sex and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I had been dating the same guy since high school. Recently, I decided that I needed some space and asked him if he could give me a little bit of breathing room. So now, we are on a "break."

In the meantime I have been spending a lot of time with this other guy who I thought was just a friend. But then the other night he kissed me! Now he is pursuing a relationship with me too! I'm so confused. I don't know who or what I want. Please tell me what to do!

-S'

Dear S',

This definitely sounds like a very confusing situation for you. The first thing that I would advise you to do is to step back from both boys. I am more concerned with your feelings and emotional state right now than with theirs. From what you have told me, I think that you might really need to be on your own for a little while. You have just come out of a long-term relationship and it could be dangerous to enter into a new one so soon.

You should also really think about your motives for getting involved with this new boy who you say is your friend. I want you to make sure that you are getting involved with him for the right reasons and not just out of loneliness, especially because he is your friend.

I know that it can be really difficult to be alone when you are used to being in a relationship. This guy friend of yours could just be someone that you are subconsciously using to fill an emotional void, and I am sure you do not want to hurt him by doing that. This is why I would advise you to take some time before you get involved with ANYONE!

You have been a part of a couple for so long that I wonder if you remember how great it can be to be single. It is important to remember that you do not need a boyfriend to be happy.

College is a great time for self-exploration, and it can be difficult to do that when you are always in a relationship. Right now is the perfect time for you to figure out what YOU want and what will make YOU happy.

Now, don't get me wrong. I am not saying that you should run off and start having wild "hook-ups" or anything like that. I am just advising you to be careful and really do some thinking before you commit yourself to either boy. If you are really meant to be with either guy, then they will both respect the fact that you need some time to think. Stepping back will help to put perspective on the situation and will help you decide who and what you want. You may even surprise yourself and discover that you like being single so much you may not want either guy!

-Ms. O

This week I was overwhelmed by the number of break-up stories and questions that I received in my e-mail account. It sounds like there are a lot of newly single people on campus... this could be trouble! And when there is trouble, there is always Ms. O, so please continue to e-mail me!

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell:

What is the worst pickup line that you have ever heard?

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

October 24, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 7

News:

Professor Amy Wolaver speaks on how drinking affects women's grades more than men's.

Students shot

Four students shot with pellet gun by unknown assailant

By SANDI-JO GALATI & JASON RUBINSTEIN
Senior Editors

At least four University students have been the victims of an unidentified shooter or shooters since Tuesday. Three of the students were hit and two suffered injuries. University officials suspect the weapon used was a pellet gun or rifle.

According to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, one student was shot in the back and the other was shot in the shoulder. Although neither case was life-threatening, the pellets are lodged in muscle tissue and cannot be removed. Physicians attended to both students, and they returned to campus.

The incident involving these students occurred in the quad area between Larison Hall, Vedder Hall and Harris Hall at approximately 4:30 p.m. on Tuesday.

"My heart goes out to them," Ferraro said. "I think they have been very understanding throughout the situation."

After reading an e-mail sent by Ferraro on Wednesday alerting the campus about the incident involving the two injured students, Michael Rossos '07 reported to University officials that he had also been shot on Tuesday afternoon while walking between Larison Hall and Vedder Hall. The pellet hit Rossos' belt, but did not penetrate his skin.

Rossos was not initially concerned about the incident until he realized that it was not an isolated incident and he may in fact have been a target.

"I did not think anything of it," Rossos said.

See SHOOTING page A4

Peter Hackman—The Bucknellian
This hole is where a pellet hit the wall in Larison Hall, nearly striking a University student. The shot was one of the four confirmed shots fired since Tuesday.

Jones speaks about affirmative action

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Writer

The entertainer, entrepreneur and libertarian speaker Reginald Jones challenged affirmative action, addressing specifically black students, in a speech hosted by the Bucknell Conservative Club on Tuesday.

"Affirmative action takes away the natural competitive [attitude]," Jones said. "[And instead] encourages the attitude that the fortune of blacks is left to others."

Jones presented historical contexts, current events and his personal experiences to support his lecture on the detrimental effects of affirmative action on blacks and encourages students to make their own "fortune."

See JONES, page A4

ILTM HOLDS PANEL DISCUSSION

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

The Institute for Leadership in Technology and Management celebrated their 10th anniversary with a series of events during Homecoming Weekend.

RALPH NADER

to speak at Commencement

By ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

The University announced yesterday that the Commencement speaker for the Class of 2004 is consumer advocate, author and lawyer Ralph Nader. Nader's address, entitled "Civic Engagement" will be held on May 23 at the annual Commencement exercises.

"I think Ralph Nader is a great choice. His address is an important aspiration of a Bucknell education. Regardless of your personal views about him, you would be hard-pressed to find an individual who has committed more of his or her life to broadening fundamental democratic values in this country than Nader," said Assistant Vice President of Academic Affairs and Chair of the University Commencement Speaker Selection Committee Jim Rice.

Many seniors expressed their satisfaction with the selection of Nader as this year's speaker.

"While not everyone may agree with the political views of Ralph Nader, I feel that the devotion and endurance he has shown to his cause are noteworthy and traits we, as graduating seniors, should strive to possess in our

Ralph Nader, who was the 2000 presidential candidate for the Green Party, will serve as University Commencement speaker.

See NADER, page A3

University addresses rise in alcohol abuse

Pollock sends e-mail to students regarding downtown citation issues

By MEGHAN FOX
Senior Writer

The issues of alcohol abuse and downtown disturbances surfaced again in a campus-wide e-mail sent to students on October 16. In the letter, Charles Pollock '70, vice president of student affairs, addressed the increased alcohol violations and disorderly conduct occurring off campus. He said the University will not abandon its current regulations and may in fact increase restrictions if improvements are not made.

"What the real issue is, is drinking having negative effects on students at Bucknell and on the academic enterprise at Bucknell. Certainly there will always be interface, but right now we think there is too much," Pollock wrote.

According to statistics kept by the University, binge drinking and cited disorderly conduct had been on the decline in the past two years. This fall, the administration claims a new trend of an increase in these two offenses is beginning.

"There is no question that more partying is taking place downtown, or that it too often oversteps the bounds of being a responsible neighbor," Pollock wrote in the letter. "The University cannot ignore these trends. Rather, we must increase efforts to prevent abuse of alcohol and limit truly offensive conduct—physical assaults, public urination, foul language yelled in the middle of the night, massive littering and more—in the off-campus neighborhoods."

Not all students agree that the amount of downtown partying has increased, and cite other explanations for the increased citations and violations.

"I personally do not believe that there are more parties downtown than there have been in the past; I simply believe that there are more police breaking up parties," said Ryan Bondroff '04, who is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity and is a downtown resident. "For better or worse, Lewisburg police have taken to foot this school year and are actively seeking out individuals who might have consumed alcohol."

The Lewisburg Police Department currently maintains a zero tolerance policy, which essentially calls for a citation to be given upon discovery of a violation without warning. This policy was enacted about six years ago to include alcohol related infractions. Students and administrators have recently come to recognize that this policy is being applied in a stricter sense.

"It appears that the Borough is applying zero tolerance to disorderly gatherings, as well," Pollock said. "They have acknowledged that when they get a complaint, they cite."

Last week, meetings were held

See LETTER, page A2

First-year student to run for school board

By ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

University student Michael McGuire '07 is running for the Lewisburg School Board as a write-in candidate. The election will take place on Nov. 4.

McGuire is 19 years old and was raised in Lewisburg. He has attended schools in the Lewisburg school district throughout his life and is a 2003 graduate of Lewisburg High School.

"I was Student Representative to the Lewisburg School Board for three and a half years when I was in high school. I spoke out on several issues and always voiced my opinion, and I served on two Lewisburg School Board committees, both dealing with the district's food service," McGuire said.

See MCGUIRE, page A4

Online registration an option for spring semester

By JULIE LESKO
Contributing Writer

The Registrar's Office will offer online class registration to all undergraduate students for registration for the spring 2004 semester.

"By making the option available, we will please the most people. We want to do what the students want," Associate Registrar Melissa Weber said.

After meeting with their advisers, students will have the option to use Banner Web to register for all spring classes.

Students cannot register online if they wish to take a class that requires permission, if they wish to take an overload or underload of courses or wish to audit a class. Anything that requires manual intervention also must be handled at the Registrar's Office in person.

Students will be able to view all closed courses and make changes to their schedule online. If there is a problem with one of the courses a student submitted, this course will be listed at the bottom of the page, and an error message will appear in the "Status" column.

The Registrar's Office has been working in past years to address all faculty concerns before implementing the system on campus. Faculty concerns included ensuring continued, personal advising for all students. Now students are required to have an alternate Personal Identification Number (PIN) to ensure that all students meet with their advisers, because the PIN is only available to students who meet with their advisers.

Beginning Monday, students will meet with their faculty advisers to receive their PINs. This number can be used anytime during the registration time period after each student's assigned time. Advisers will be able to view students' selected schedules online after their registration has been processed.

Bucknell Student Government (BSG) was a major catalyst in the implementation of on-line registration. BSG President Katy Tiner '04 said she can remember the idea mentioned in the 2000-2001 school year.

"BANNER Web has really changed and developed over the years and it is really exciting that the system can now offer on-line registration as a service for students," Tiner said.

The pilot program for online registration was run for the Class of 2006 last spring. Although less than half of the current sophomores used the program, the overall response was positive, according to the Registrar's office.

"Last year the first year students had the option to register on-line for the spring semester as a trial period. That went really well which allowed us to have the registration fully implement for all classes this semester," Tiner said.

See REGISTRATION, page A3

RoadTrip Nation

The lime-green RV returns to the University, encouraging students to find their own roads.

See page B10

One Nation, Under God

With the Supreme Court to rule on the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance, members of the University community take stances on this piece of American history.

See page B7

Glass Menagerie

Using student-created film and live music, student actors portray the story of a Southern family.

See page A10

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Oct. 12	CRIMINAL MISCHIEF —A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed the hood ornament from his vehicle while it was parked in the upper stadium lot. The incident is under investigation.	INELIGIBLE VEHICLE ON CAMPUS —While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a vehicle parked in the 7th Street Lot without a parking decal. Upon investigation, it was determined that the vehicle belonged to a first-year student who did not have permission to have a car on campus. Two parking citations were issued.	Friday, Oct. 18	PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT —Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of an unconscious male. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified the male as a student who was in need of medical attention. The student was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room and cited for public drunkenness.
Monday, Oct. 14	DISORDERLY CONDUCT / OBSCENE LANGUAGE —An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) wrote obscene language on the walkway in front of the Bertrand Library. The incident is under investigation.	INFORMATION / VEHICLE ACCIDENT —An outside contractor reported to Public Safety that he had backed into a vehicle parked on Moore Ave. There were no injuries and only minor damage to the parked car. Insurance information was provided.	INFORMATION / FIRE —Public Safety responded to a fire alarm activation in a Bucknell West mod caused by unattended cooking. The residents in the mod were still present and did not know who had left the food cooking on the stove. Citation issued for failure to evacuate a room during a fire alarm.
Tuesday, Oct. 15	INFORMATION / VEHICLE DAMAGE —An employee reported to Public Safety that strong wind broke a tree limb causing it to strike two vehicles parked in the Orchard Lot. The owners of the vehicles were notified.	MEDICAL TRANSPORT —A student requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room to be treated for migraine headache symptoms. A Student Health Services driver responded and transported the student who later returned to campus.	CRIMINAL MISCHIEF —A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke out a door window at Roser Hall. The incident is under investigation.
	INFORMATION / VEHICLE DAMAGE —A student employee reported to Public Safety that the passenger side mirror came off a University vehicle while he was backing it out of the Student Health Service's garage.	THURSDAY, OCT. 17	HIT & RUN ACCIDENT —Public Safety responded to University Ave for the report of a vehicle backing up the street at a high rate of speed and striking a tree and a parked car almost striking an alumnus walking in the area. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the operator of the vehicle was a resident of 64 University Ave. Lewisburg Police Department responded. Lewisburg Police Department transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for a blood/alcohol test. Citations issued for recklessly endangering well-being or safety of others, creating a hazardous condition, undergar consumption and a traffic citation for operating a vehicle recklessly.
Wednesday, Oct. 16	UNDERGAR CONSUMPTION —While providing a safe escort to a female student, Public Safety observed she had a strong odor of alcohol and slurred speech. Upon investigation, the student admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. She was cited for undergar consumption.	INFORMATION / FIRE —Public Safety responded to a fire alarm in a Bucknell West mod caused by a malfunction of a cell phone charger. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that a resident of the mod had extinguished the fire with a fire extinguisher. Physical Plant responded and determined that the electrical wiring was safe, and there was no further risk of fire.
	UNDERGAR CONSUMPTION / MEDICAL TRANSPORT —Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of an ill student. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified a female as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. The student was transported	ASSIST LEWISBURG POLICE DEPARTMENT —Public Safety responded to Taylor Street House to assist Lewisburg Police Department with the report of an individual going through a window. Upon investigation, it was determined that the student was a resident of the building. No charges were filed.	CRIMINAL MISCHIEF —A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) threw a rock through her room window at Swartz Hall. The incident is under investigation.

LETTER From page A1

between students living off campus and various deans. Student complaints were raised about this policy and suggestions were made that initial warnings be given. Pollock agreed that this issue was worth discussing with the Borough.

"The 'no tolerance' policy is not effective because it is not realistic," Bondroff said. "Arresting a college student for drinking a beer is like giving a ticket to every driver who goes one mile per hour over the speed limit. Instead of attempting to eradicate this school of all alcohol consumption, please focus efforts on the real problems, such as drunk driving and clearly out-of-control individuals."

Drunk driving was also a concern mentioned in Pollock's letter to campus.

According to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, no fewer than eight students have been involved in DUI violations this fall alone.

Part of Pollock's letter also addressed new strategies for dealing with such behavior. According to Pollock, anyone failing a field sobriety test will be given a Breathalyzer test administered by Public Safety officers. Anyone who declines to take the Breathalyzer will automatically receive five alcohol points, as it will be assumed that the student's Blood Alcohol Content is 10 or greater.

The letter also warns that additional actions may be taken to decrease dangerous drinking and disorderly behavior by increasing the number of points assigned to an individual if the situation occurs downtown.

"I think everything they're doing is reasonable. These actions are just a response to a situation that has gotten out of hand," Patrick Burke '06 said.

Students are also forewarned that they may jeopardize their privilege to live off campus as a result of disorderly behavior. Five students have already been called to live back on campus this year.

For many students, Initiative 32 also factors into the circumstances of off-campus living. This clause from the Plan for Prominence for Fraternities and Sororities holds the chapter responsible for the actions of its members both on and off campus.

"I feel personally that Initiative 32 in the Plan for Prominence cannot be used to sanctioned students living downtown. As a Panhellenic, we have our own personal issues with this initiative, but personally I feel it would cause more harm than good," said Jen Mellon '04, president of the Panhellenic Council.

"I live with three independents and an Alpha Chi Omega. If we chose to throw a party at our house and were cited who would be held responsible? Kappa? Alpha Chi? Certainly they would be held to a stricter sanctioning than my independent friends. I am not sure that is fair, especially if the party was equally thrown by all five of us," said Mellon, who is currently living off-campus and is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority.

Pollock's letter said that the Plan for Prominence will not be dissolved, although it may be edited when appropriate.

Both Pollock and Ferraro hope for a partnership with the Greek organizations and the students living downtown.

"If students will work constructively to make the downtown safer and more responsible and to eliminate dangerous drinking, new regulations will not be needed and will not be implemented," Ferraro said.

Pollock said that the University was "getting to a place where we were starting to think of less regulation."

Although the transgression this fall has caused the administration to lose sight of allowing more student jurisdiction over the social scene, Pollock said he still hopes that the University will eventually reach that point.

"In general, I believe that Bucknell students can do a better job of cleaning up after parties by throwing away cups and other litter on the lawns, respecting the noise level, etc. However, I also believe that the Lewisburg police need to meet us halfway," said Laura Nuss '04, a member of Delta Delta Delta Sorority and a downtown resident. "It is inevitable that Bucknell students are going to hold gatherings downtown, and if the police and administration aren't willing to work with us then this issue will never be resolved."

University sets community service goal for campus

By DREW CALVERT
Writer

The University Community Service Program announced its "I Serve 2" campaign, which is a challenge presented to University faculty, staff and students to serve two hours of community service this school year. The campaign is the latest advertisement for the Community Service Program as a resource for service opportunities, and it encourages those organizations already active to report their hours regularly.

"Many students already participate in community service; however, we have never had a systematic way of tracking the number of volunteer hours that Bucknell students, faculty and staff contribute. We initiated the 'I Serve 2' campaign to encourage every Bucknell student, faculty and staff member to participate in at least two hours of community service throughout the academic year," said Amy Badal, assistant dean of students.

To date, 697 hours have been reported by 213 people. Members of the program, through the new campaign, wish to consistently document this effort as well as extend it to others. The program is not a policy, but rather a drive to get the University community involved and formalize this involvement.

"We would like to be able to have accurate numbers to express to current and prospective Bucknellians and the surrounding community how much the students, faculty and staff do to 'give back' to the local area," Volunteer Services Coordinator Tina McDowell said.

The campaign also marks progress in the ongoing attempt of the Community Service Program to include all aspects of service. It has effectively maintained relationships with many local social service agencies and businesses and has offered itself as an inviting resource on campus in an effort to match volunteers with services needed.

"Our intention is to make the Community Service Program and the Volunteer Office available to anyone who wishes to use our office as a resource to access service opportunities," McDowell said.

McDowell said the "I Serve 2" campaign's push for volunteer-reported hours will prove instrumental for the organization.

"Having broad knowledge of most community service activity on campus enables us to have a clear vision of what is being done, where and by whom. This also promotes collaboration between campus groups instead of multiple groups planning similar events during the same time frame, which ultimately work against each other," McDowell said.

Thanks to such planning, the University has been able to serve the surrounding community in various ways. The new campaign hopes to recognize this.

"A positive relationship between University members and the local community is very important, and I think being able to point to the philanthropy and service of Bucknell students would be a wonderful reminder to all that we must work together," said Greg Yankee '05, an active member of the community service team.

Yankee said that seeing what other groups and individuals have done will also serve as inspiration for others to get involved.

"As for the two hours asked of each student, many organizations such as fraternities, sororities and service organizations require upward of fifteen hours a semester, so we think to ask two hours in a year of each student is not asking too much," Yankee said.

Wolaver addresses effects of drinking on students

By KIM DUNLAP
Contributing Writer

Assistant Professor of Economics Amy Wolaver gave a lecture entitled "Does Drinking Affect Grades More for Women? Gender Differences in the Effects of Heavy Episodic Drinking in College" to students and staff on Tuesday.

Wolaver's lecture addressed heavy drinking on college campuses, drinking's different effects on men and women and drinking's implications on post-graduation careers.

"Does alcohol affect men and women differently? Does heavy drinking lower grades and study habits?" Wolaver asked, as she made this question the focus of her research. "I'll use statistics to piece together the real reasons."

Wolaver found that females greatly underestimated the seriousness of their alcohol usage, as 2 percent of women actually considered themselves to be heavy drinkers. Female binge drinkers are also more likely than men to fall behind in school and miss classes, while male bingers are much more likely to vandalize private property and get in trouble with police.

Wolaver discovered that regular, heavy drinking often corresponded with a 1/3 percent drop in a student's grade point average (GPA), whether the student was male or female. With respect to this lower GPA on future careers, Wolaver could actually foresee not only a monetary drawback, but a notable difference between its effects on women and men.

"I can roughly calculate earnings and losses [after college graduation] based on drinking habits," Wolaver said. "Men tended to lose up to $230 a year, women, up to $1,600. So we see that a woman's lower GPA has the greatest toll on her economic success."

Wolaver, in addition to addressing a generally hot topic on college campuses, also had a specific purpose in its timing.

"It's very important for Alcohol Awareness Week," said Associate Professor of Russian Slava Yastrenski, who attended the lecture.

In light of the increase in

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Associate Professor of Economics Amy Wolaver presented her findings on the effects drinking has on students' grades.

recent cases of DUI incidents and hospitalizations of students this year, many professors felt this was an especially important issue.

"Luckily, we haven't had a death on campus, but I think we're all holding our breath, waiting for that situation," Wolaver said.

Wolaver said she could observe some of the effects of heavy drinking in her own classroom, noting a lack of dedication to classes on some students' parts. This, she said, is not appreciated by many professors.

"There's also an impact on the faculty," Wolaver said. "Taking an economist's approach to the issue, Wolaver studied students' definitions of binge drinking, their admitted consumption of alcohol and how it affected their lives in terms of class attendance, grades, sexual habits and run-ins with the police. She also added several probable variables concerning high school drinking habits, family income, drug use and the academic difficulty of the school."

Wolaver's lecture is part of a series of talks sponsored by the faculty-comprised University Colloquial Committee that enables professors of all different departments to share their knowledge with one another.

Nader to speak at Commencement future careers. I am quite pleased to have Ralph Nader as our commencement speaker," Emily Ostrom '04 said.

NADER From page A1

Nader visited the University in 2001 and spoke on "World Trade and Globalization." His commencement address will focus on his life and the theme of the individual's responsibilities as an engaged citizen in a democratic society.

Much of the campus community was not pleased with the selection of last year's Commencement speaker, who was news anchor Deborah Norville.

"I think the committee this year developed an appreciation for how agreed on, and we were able to take action to get him early," Commencement Speaker Selection Committee member Bill Anderson '04 said.

Senior Class President Jessica Briski '04 was another student who was a part of the selection committee. She said she thought this year's process was superior to last year's.

"I thought it went much better than in years past. It was very organized, the committee members were wonderful to work with and very well-informed. The chair, Jim Rice, was very efficient in extending offers in a timely fashion. It worked quite well because we were all open and willing to listen to each other's comments," Briski said. "A represent the students' choice in a Commencement speaker," Schwartz said. "The quality of our academic institute deserves to have a Commencement speaker on par with the top universities in the country, in which Ralph Nader really isn't."

A Commencement speaker selection committee was established by former University President William D. "Bro" Adams. The first committee determined that future Commencement speakers should exhibit the characteristics of the University's highest honor, the Bucknell Award of Merit. The Award of Merit is presented to an individual who has distinguished himself or herself inter-can't get a much better speaker for a commencement than that. I agree with him on most of his platforms, so it'll be good to hear him speak," Adam Turbett '04 said.

The members of this year's selection committee said they believe Nader is worthy of Bucknell's Award of Merit.

"I did get a chance to see Deborah Norville speak at graduation and was not impressed. I don't doubt that she is a highly educated and intelligent woman, but that did not come across in her speech and I do not think she supported Bucknell's values. 'Fake it 'til you make it' is a belief that Bucknell University does not subscribe to," Briski said. "In contrast, I know that Ralph Nader will not disappoint because he came to speak at the university our freshman year and he packed the house. Regardless of his political views, the committee selected him because we know that he is an extraordinary speaker and will represent Bucknell University to the best of his abilities."

Rice said he thinks students believe the highest criterion for the selection of a commencement speaker is how well the person is known to the general public.

"Our committee quickly arrived at the consensus that the ideal speaker would be one who is well-known and could deliver a substantive address reflective in some way of the quality of a Bucknell education. In other words, an individual in whom we could, as a community, take a measure of pride or satisfaction as a speaker," Rice said.

Kiron Chakraborty '07 said he is not very familiar with Nader and is indifferent to the fact that he will be the Commencement speaker.

"I don't really know anything about his politics, but I think I've heard of the name," Chakraborty said.

Other students are well-informed about Nader and said they are excited that he will speak.

"I think it's a great thing. I think it's really impressive that they got a speaker with the caliber of Ralph Nader. This is definitely a step up from previous year's speakers, especially last year's," said Matt Ellis '05, who said he will attend Commencement this year.

Marisa Aronson '06 said she hopes the selection of Nader will set a precedent for years to come.

"I think this is great," Aronson said. "I hope the Commencement speaker [for] our graduating year is that good."

Students who register online. In-person registration starts later for students who choose not to participate on that campus.

Lafayette College Registrar Frank Benginia, is optimistic in the quality of Bucknell's transition.

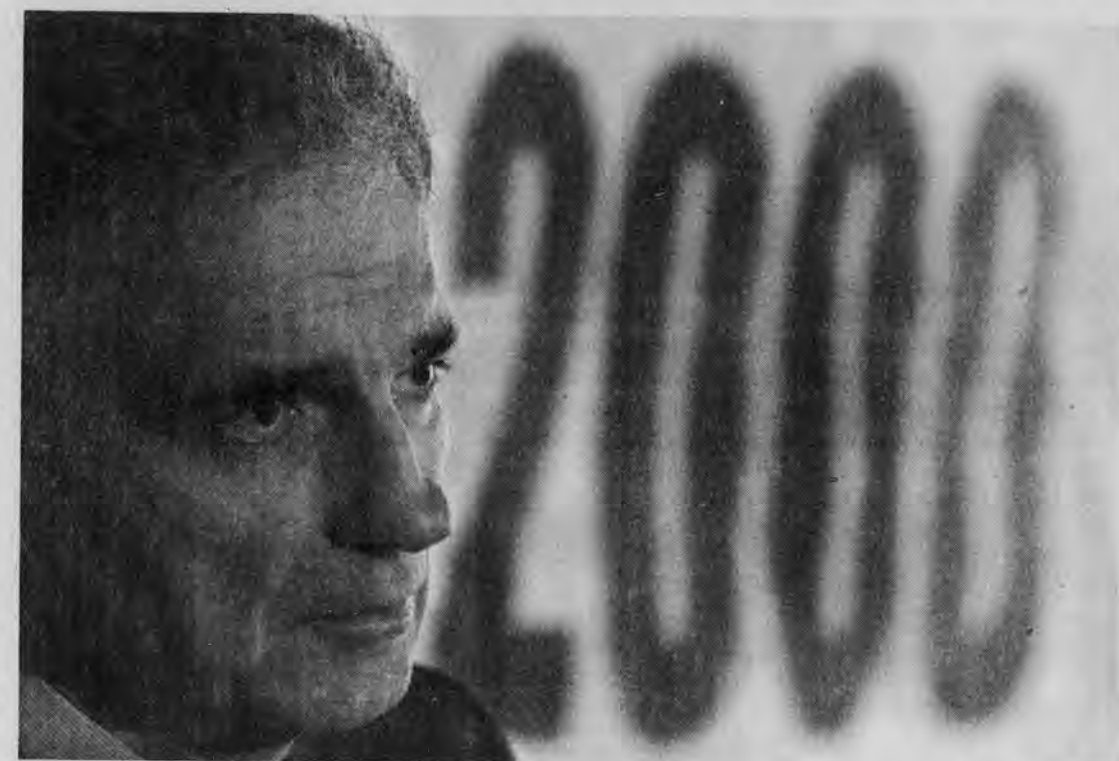

"After a few early problems with response time, our implementation has worked well, and students seem to be pleased with not having to wait in line. Bucknell uses the same administrative computing software that we do, and my knowledge of the staff there would leave me to believe that you will have a very positive experience," Benginia said.

Other colleges in the Patriot League saw positive results when introducing the program to their campus. Colgate University has been using online registration program since the fall of 1999. Colgate University Registrar Gretchen Herringer believes that flaws in the Colgate system have been worked out and that the current procedures work for all students.

"Our initial mistake was, ironically, allowing too much time for each registration group. We did not appreciate how savvy students are. After all, this is second nature to them since they have been ordering things through Amazon forever," Herringer said.

Herringer suggests that students should have many options for possible classes to take.

"Online registration requires more planning on the part of students. They are not in direct competition for time slots. We have actually had classes fill in the first five minutes of senior registration," Herringer said.

Courtesy of Reuters
Consumer advocate Ralph Nader will be the Commencement speaker for the 2004 ceremonies. Many students have expressed their approval with the selection of Nader as the speaker.

difficult selecting and securing a commencement speaker can be—there are many restrictive variables that impact the process; having said that, I do not believe Norville would have met the criteria the committee established at the onset of our work," Rice said.

For this year's selection, a new process was developed and a new committee was formed, which included three administrators, three faculty members and three students.

"I believe the Commencement speaker selection process worked much better this year than previous years. Through this process we received a well-rounded representation of opinions from the students, faculty, and administration based on mutual respect. We were able to find a candidate that we all slight change will be made to the committee next year in that one of the administrators chosen will either be the senior class advisor or someone from student life."

University President Steffen Rogers also said he thinks this year's selection process went well.

"It is very important that we have input into the selection of the commencement speaker from students, faculty and administrators. I am very pleased with the work of the selection committee and the process for this year," Rogers said.

Justin Schwartz '04 said he thinks the University was so worried after the disappointment of last year's choice of commencement speaker that it rushed into choosing whomever would accept to speak.

"I also believe that choosing Ralph Nader does not accurately nationally in the arts, sciences, letters or public service.

In addition to dissatisfaction with Norville, many University community members said they did not approve of other recent Commencement speakers including senior analyst for CNN's "Inside Politics" Jeff Greenfield in 2001 and entrepreneur and philanthropist Kenneth Langone '57 in 2002.

Anderson said that in the 80s, the president of the University was the Commencement speaker.

"Choosing Ralph Nader is a sign that Bucknell has made a forward movement since the 80s," Anderson said.

"[Nader is] much better than their pick for last year. I mean, at least people have heard of him. Unlike the speaker last year. Plus, he ran for president. I mean, you

REGISTRATION From page A1

Some sophomores said they were leery about using the system.

"I did not do online registration because the whole process seemed impersonal and plagued with difficulties in resolving conflicts," said Jeff Stoltz '06, who chose not to participate in the online trial last semester.

Mai-Lin Poon '06 also chose not to participate in the pilot test program.

"I still like the tried and proven way of standing in line," Poon said.

Other students who used the program last year said they ran into problems while scheduling their classes. West Jessup Kandle IV '06 said he experienced many difficulties in registering online and had to seek help at the Registrar's Office.

"It was ineffective because some of my courses had to be announced under some class times and labs. It also did not put you on a wait list if a class fills. So I ended up having to manually go down and talk to someone. I know I'm not the only one because two other guys on my hall had to do the same thing," Kandle said.

Mike Reynolds '06 found registering for classes online last spring very helpful.

"It sure beats standing in line at the Registrar's Office. Online registration makes it so easy to sign up for classes that it shouldn't even be legal," Reynolds said.

The pilot program showed a few glitches in the system, but the problems were handled immediately and have been fixed for the upcoming registration, according to the Registrar's Office.

Many students see positive effects to the change in the current system. John MacFeeters '07 thinks the program will benefit both students and staff.

"I like the idea of online registration. It seems to benefit both the administrators and the students by saving them paperwork and us time. The convenience of registering for classes on our own time will be a lifesaver. I won't have to worry about leaving my dorm and walking up that huge hill and breaking a sweat. I, for one, do not want to go through all that trouble to sign up for some class I don't want to take," MacFeeters said.

Some Juniors and seniors are excited for the new registration process option.

"The old way was a waste of everyone's time. Online registration will eliminate parading around in line for an hour," Brian Naumick '05 said.

Weber said she believes everyone will be able to use and comprehend the system.

"The system is very easy to use. We are trying to meet the needs of all students and are encouraging everyone to use the new system," Weber said.

Many other campuses across the country use online registration to ensure efficiency. Lafayette College, which has used online registration since 2001, offers advantages to stu-

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

Catherman's
Home Made Candy
209 North Front Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Rodney Smeltz
Phone: (570) 523-3873

RALPH NADER a brief biography

By ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

Ralph Nader was born in Winsted, Conn. on Feb. 27, 1934. His education includes a AB magna cum laude from Princeton University, which he earned in 1955 and an LLB with distinction from Harvard University in 1958.

Nader began his career as a lawyer in Hartford, Connecticut in 1959. He then became a consumer advocate and founded many organizations including the Center for Study of Responsive Law, the Public Interest Research Group, the Center for Auto Safety, Public Citizen, Clean Water Action Project, the Disability Rights Center, the Pension Rights Center, the Project for Corporate Responsibility and The Multinational Monitor (a monthly magazine). Nader is a contributing editor to "The Nader Letter", a monthly newsletter devoted to raising awareness on issues that provide consumers with a voice.

Nader lectured on history and government at the University of Hartford from 1961 to 1963. In 1967 and 1968, Nader lectured at his alma mater, and since 1968 he has lectured at colleges and universities across the nation.

In 1965, Nader authored "Unsafe at Any Speed", a book that criticized the auto industry for producing unsafe vehicles. His book had such an effect on the U.S. government that it led to congressional hearings and automobile safety laws that were passed in 1966.

In 1967, Nader was named one of ten "Outstanding Young Men of the Year" by the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Since the late 1960s, Nader gathered evidence about health, safety and economic issues, as well as environmental pollution, worker rights and excessive corporate influence and he alerted the U.S. public, Congress and the media to the many problems in these areas.

Nader and his colleagues have proposed many constructive reforms and have prompted the enactment of laws and regulations to correct these problems.

Nader is responsible for more than eight major federal consumer protection laws such as the motor vehicle safety laws and the Safe Drinking Water Act. He is also responsible for the formation of federal regulatory agencies such as the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Environment Protection Agency and Consumer Product Safety Administration. Thanks to Nader's work, millions of defective motor vehicles were recalled, and he helped provide citizens with access to the government through the Freedom of Information Act passed in 1974.

In the 2000 presidential election, Nader ran for president as the Green Party's candidate. The party was formed after the 1996 elections to fill a void in national Green politics. Its initial goal was to help existing state parties grow and promote the formation of parties in all 50 states. Now the Green Party is a national third party in the United States that is committed to environmentalism, non-violence and social justice.

CONCERT TICKETS ON SALE NOW

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Tickets for Jason Mraz and The Ataris are on sale for $20 until Nov. 1, when they can only be purchased through Ticket Master for $25. Tickets will be available for the general public to purchase on Monday.

Bucknellian corrections

An Oct. 10 article about the Houston Opera Company misrepresented the residency. Jake Heggie (commissioned by the company to compose "Dead Man Walking"), singers, a director and a composer visited campus as part of a residency. While here, they provided instruction to University students in addition to rehearsing for and taping the first recording of the opera, which will be sent to the company.

Public Safety has clarified the details of an Oct. 6 accident, which was featured in an Oct. 10 article about pedestrian safety and in the Oct. 10 editorial. The accident only involved a two-car collision.

News

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemmé
Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Senate votes to ban abortion practice

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The Senate voted to ban the practice that critics call partial birth abortion on Tuesday, sending US President George W. Bush a measure that supporters and foes alike said could alter the future of U.S. abortion rights. A court challenge is certain.

Hospital resumes coma patient's food

CLEARWATER, Fla.—Acting on orders from Governor Jeb Bush, a hospital began giving fluids to a brain-damaged woman on Tuesday, six days after her feeding tube was removed in one of the nation's longest and most bitter right-to-die battles.

New theory on death of Daniel Pearl

WASHINGTON, D.C.—American authorities investigating the killing of Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl in Pakistan now believe that he was slain by the hand of Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, the alleged mastermind of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Iran OKs tougher nuclear inspections

TEHRAN—Iran will suspend uranium enrichment and allow unrestricted inspections of its nuclear program, as sought by the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency, a senior Iranian official said Tuesday after three European foreign ministers came to Tehran to press the international community's case. Iran set no date for the steps.

N. Korea spurns U.S. security offer

SEOUL—North Korea dismissed as laughable a U.S. offer to provide multilateral security guarantees in exchange for Pyongyang ending its nuclear weapons program, saying it was not worth even considering.

Bush visits bomb-scarred Bali

BALI, Indonesia—U.S. President George W. Bush visited the front lines of the war against terrorism on Wednesday, stopping on this bomb-scarred island to support Indonesia's struggle against al-Qaida-linked groups. Security officials were nervous about Bush's safety.

Pope installs 30 new cardinals

VATICAN CITY—His health failing, Pope John Paul II added 30 names to the list of his possible successors Tuesday, installing a diverse collection of cardinals in a consistory some say may be his last. In a ritual-filled ceremony on the steps of St. Peter's Basilica, the 83-year-old pope gave the new "princes of the church" their red hats declaring them members of the elite band of churchmen who will elect the next pope.

General's comments to be probed

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The Pentagon will investigate a general's church speeches casting the war on terrorism in religious terms, U.S. Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said on Tuesday. The announcement came days after two prominent senators asked Rumsfeld to launch a probe of U.S. Army Lt. Gen. William G. Boykin.

New metals fight germs at home

LOS ANGELES—Germ-fearing homeowners take heart. Steel and appliance makers are joining battle against bacteria with antimicrobial doorknobs and coffee makers, and there is even a gleaming bug-free house on a hillside near Los Angeles to show what the future may hold in store.

China puts two satellites into orbit

BEIJING—Less than a week after putting its first astronaut into space, China rocketed two satellites into orbit Tuesday, including one jointly developed with Brazil to study Earth's surface, said the official Xinhua news agency.

Gene may set age for Alzheimer's

WASHINGTON, D.C.—U.S. researchers said on Tuesday they had found a gene that may help determine whether a patient gets Alzheimer's or Parkinson's disease late or early in life. Finding out more about the gene may help doctors devise a way to delay the two diseases, which may take decades to fully develop, the researchers said.

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL
Mondays - Monday Night Football on 50+ TVs
$5 All You Can Eat Wings!

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT
Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $18.99
$5 All You Can Eat Wings!
Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 PM
All Request DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am
Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10 PM
16+ Dance Club with Hip Hop DJ!

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell!! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Students shot with pellet gun

Top: Looking from the fourth floor of Harris to the window where a student was almost shot. Bottom: The window in Larison looking toward Harris, where it is suspected one shot originated by an unknown person using a pellet gun.

SHOOTING From page A1

Rossos and Christopher Mollica '07 also indicated that Kevin McCarthy '07 was shot at while talking on the phone near an open hall window in Larison. The pellet struck the inside window frame but did not harm McCarthy.

McGUIRE From page A1

A vacancy opened on the school board in June, when a former board member resigned. McGuire applied for the vacancy and almost won. Voting by the board members resulted in a 4-4 tie twice. The board members then adjourned into an executive session, and in the third round of voting chose the other candidate.

"This time, I'm trying to get elected by the voters," McGuire said.

McGuire said he feels much acquainted with current issues as a recent graduate of Lewisburg High School. He said he feels it is important to bring a younger perspective to the school board.

"I think the school board needs to actively promote student and citizen involvement," McGuire said. "Since I have a different background and am at a very different perspective than anyone else on the board, I could help to do that."

A University student has not run for the Lewisburg School Board in the past, but in 2001 two University students ran for local office. Nate Sorber '02 ran unsuccessfully for mayor and Matt Kasden '02 who ran for Borough Council, and was very narrowly defeated.

Five other candidates are on the ballot for the school board election, and there are five seats open. The five other candidates are Rebecca Davis Brooks, Michael

"I would hope that person would be responsible enough to turn himself in," he said. Vice President of Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 and Ferraro said although several people contacted them about the incident, there is no conclusive evidence about the identity or location of the shooter or shooters.

"The motives of the person or persons who fired the BBs or pellets are unknown, but this represents an extremely serious violation of both law and University regulations," Ferraro said.

Public Safety did not return inquiries about the status of the investigation. The Lewisburg Police Department declined to confirm whether it was investigating.

According to Pollock, all projectile weapons are forbidden on campus.

"We have had students shooting projectiles at windows, but to my knowledge in the last six years no students have been hit," Pollock said.

Like University officials, the victims are unsure of the shooter's motives.

"I think it's pretty messed up," a victim said. "Who would do something like that?"

Ferraro encourages anyone who had any information to contact either Public Safety or himself. A $750 reward is offered to any person giving information that leads to the apprehension of the perpetrator.

The Bucknellian will continue to investigate this developing situation.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Michael McGuire '07, a graduate of Lewisburg High School, is running for Lewisburg School Board as a write-in candidate.

out at the polls—elections are won with votes, not good intentions to vote. McGuire needs to get his name out there," Tabrizi said.

McGuire has not yet declared a major, considering political science. He is involved with C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S. and is a member of the Union County Red Cross Board.

"I take holding a public office and studying at Bucknell very seriously. As a full-time Bucknell student I would have as much time to dedicate to the position as other school board members with full time jobs," McGuire said. "I think this is extremely important; I don't think it will be easy, but someone from my perspective has to do it."

JONES From page A1

were inferior to the present stereotype that all blacks can slam dunk. It's bad to stereotype, but it's even worse when blacks believe [those stereotypes].

According to Jones, stereotypes and low standards only create problems.

"Lowering the accepted test scores for a certain race does not make students work harder," Jones said. "This only puts them in a position that they are not prepared or trained for."

The importance of knowledge and working hard was introduced to Jones while growing up in the projects in the Bronx and then moving on to begin his own company.

"I thought Reggie Jones made many excellent points," Matt Gabler '06 said. "I especially agree with his idea that hard work is the key to success in America."

Jones' effort resulted in his

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
The Bucknell University Conservatives Club sponsored a lecture by Reginald Jones, who spoke against affirmative action.

own business, appearances on several broadcasts including Fox News Channel, MSNBC and CNBC and the standing room only University auditorium.

"[Jones] brought a different perspective on racial preferences," Steve Wolf '07 said. "[He] came to say that by giving anyone an advantage over someone else, you are weakening that person."

News

STUDENT PULSE

"The light bulbs in the Bison booths are excessively bright and hot."

—Andrea Poisson '05

"Bring back curly fries."

—Jay Thompson-Westra '06

"Better Asian food in the cafeteria."

—Chia Yi Hou '07

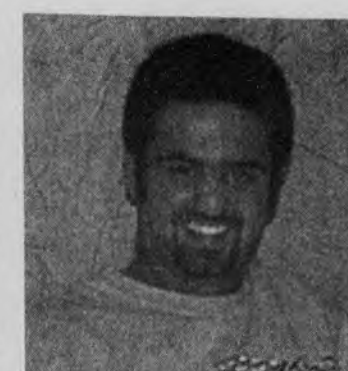

"I wish we were able to use meal credits on the weekends."

—Tom Verderame '07

"More variety, especially in the caf."

—Melissa Cook '04

"I don't like the places where the trays are in the caf."

—Fids Irani '05

What would you change about the Caf or Bison?

Bucknell Student Government and Dining Services agreed to have two trial periods for weekend meal credits in the Bison. The first trial will be this weekend and the next weekend will be Nov. 8 and 9.

"Meal credits should be worth more at the Bison."

—Caitlin Scudder '06

"I would make the caf less strict about carrying food out."

—Dustin Friedland '06

"They should have meal credits all the time."

—Iain Siery '05

"I think there should be another place to eat because lines are so long."

—Lauren Pica '05

Calendar of Events

October	October	October	October	October	October
FRI 24	SAT 25	SUN 26	MON 27	TUES 28	WED 29
Roadtrip Nation 16 Uphill Lawn 11 a.m.	Comedian: Daniel Tosh Bison 9 a.m.	Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 11 a.m.	Swim Class Naborsium 7 a.m. / 7 p.m.	Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 a.m. / 11 a.m.	Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 6 p.m.
"The Road Home" Hilltop Film Series Vaughan Lit. Auditorium 8 p.m.	Women's Soccer vs. American Univ. Varsity Soccer Field 1 p.m.	Men's Soccer vs. American Univ. Varsity Soccer Field 1 p.m.	Men's Water Polo Natatorium 3 p.m.	Qigong Class Vedder Hall Living Room noon	"Meet the Parents" Vaughan Lit. Auditorium 10:30 p.m.
Chicago Shakespeare Theater Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	Diwali Dinner Larison Hall 3 p.m.	Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel 5:30 p.m.	Catholic Mass LC 301 Gallery Theatre 12:10 p.m.	Abs Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 1 p.m.	Social Dance Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 8 p.m.
Midnight Mania Solka Pavilion 10 p.m.	Maroon 5 Uptown 9:30 p.m.	"The Italian Job" Vaughan Lit. Auditorium 10:30 p.m.	CardioKick Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m.	Pilates Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 4 p.m.	Two Past Midnight Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 9:30 p.m.
"Matrix: Reloaded" Langone Center Forum 10:30 p.m.	Meika Pauley 7th Street Café 11 p.m.	The information for these events is subject to change. Some events are open to members of an organization only.	Contemporary Worship Rooke Chapel 104 (Main Sanctuary) 7 p.m.	Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 6 p.m.

Send calendar submissions to bucknellian@bucknell.edu with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

Addressers wanted immediately!

No Experience necessary.
Work at home.
Call
405-447-6397

Cinema Center

Sellinggrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall • 376-2049

Play Dates: October 24-30, 2003

Radio (PG)

1:15, 3:30, 6:20, 9

Intolerable Cruelty (PG-13)

1:45, 4:15, 6:30, 8:50

Runaway Jury (PG-13)

12:40, 3, 5:20, 7:40, 9:50

Beyond Borders (R)

1, 3:45, 6:30, 9:20

Scary Movie 3 (PG-13)

1:30, 4:30, 6:50

Kill Bill (R)

2, 4:45, 7:30, 10

Cabin Fever (R)

9:40

Runaway Jury (PG-13)

1:15, 4, 6:45, 9:40

Under the Tuscan Sun (R)

12:45, 3:15, 6:15, 8:45

Good Boy! (PG)

12:50, 3, 5, 7, 9:10

School of Rock (PG-13)

12:50, 3, 5, 7, 9:10

Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro

Come see what's new and exciting. Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts
August 24th
11:00 AM to 2:00 PM
Wednesday-Saturday Bakery 10-2
Lunch 11:30 - 2, Dinner 5-9
www.elizabethsbistro.com

412 Market St. Lewisburg
570-523-8088

Market Street PHOTO

We like picky people!

We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.

523-1543

M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5; 24 hour drop box
120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

FALL 2003 ANTIQUE SHOW

National Guard Armory
580 US Rte. 15 South
Lewisburg, PA
Saturday November 1
10 AM - 5 PM
Exhibitors Indoors - Free Parking
- Food -
-Thousands of Antiques For Sale -

Daily Admission: $2.50
With this ad: $2.00

Show Manager - Terry Bitner

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 132, Number 7
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackenman '04
Associate Editor
Michelle Dombek '05
Managing Editor
Alyson Walker '04
Business Manager
Stephen Santulli '05
Director of Sales
Kristin Stangel '05
Senior Editors
Jason Rubenstein '04
Stacie Jo Galati '04
News Editors
Elisabeth Salemmine '06
Meghan Ball '06
Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Keeley Skow '07
Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Horan '05
Chris Styers '05
Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Pat Evans '04
Brent Butler '06
Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06
Arts & Entertainment Editors
Julianne Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07
Photo Editor
Adam Wilcox '06
Featured Layout
Nick Kupenski '07
Chief Copy Editors
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05
Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
John Heekin '05
Davash Malhotra '06
Marketing Directors
Joseph Giordano '05
Advisor
James F. Lee

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Horan '05
Chris Styers '05
Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Pat Evans '04
Brent Butler '06
Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06
Arts & Entertainment Editors
Julianne Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photo Editor
Adam Wilcox '06
Featured Layout
Nick Kupenski '07
Chief Copy Editors
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05
Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
John Heekin '05
Davash Malhotra '06
Marketing Directors
Joseph Giordano '05
Advisor
James F. Lee

OP-ED POLICY
The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes) and not be printed. Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board. Its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFO

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class by the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more than a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-3085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIALS

Online registration system shows promise

The registration process for classes has long been an exercise in patience and anger control. Students run around campus, scurrying for a myriad of signatures from professors with odd office hours, then hurry up and wait in line for a chance to be enrolled in their preferred classes, only to find out that their major-required classes are full. The new online option for class registration certainly doesn't solve all of these challenges, but it is a step in the right direction.

Bucknell Student Government continually encouraged the Registrar's Office to offer online registration. After a trial period last year for first-year students, the option to register via the Internet is now available to the entire student body. With this move, the University seems to be acknowledging the usefulness and value of intelligent student suggestions.

We are pleased that online registration is being offered as an option instead of being required.

Some students may be more comfortable registering in person instead of trusting the network and e-mail with their course schedule. Regrettably, students who require permission for courses will not be able to register online. In the future, students should be able to turn signatures into the Registrar's Office ahead of time, and then be allowed the option of registering online.

We are confident that the Registrar's Office has thought through its new system and tried to anticipate problems before they occur. We are comforted that the system is programmed to produce an error message if there are any problems with the registration. Even with these assurances, we have yet to hear what will happen if there is a network outage during a registration time. Our experience on campus leads us to believe that there is a significant likelihood of at least a partial network outage during registration, and we believe all students would be interested in hearing how this problem would be handled.

In the past, some profess students to miss part of class or practice to register. They should understand the importance of class registration and, considering the quick nature of online registration, and be more flexible of student's needs.

While not flawless, online registration may keep us safer during this hectic period.

While not flawless, online registration may keep us safer during this hectic period.

Commencement speaker worthy of Award of Merit

When Deborah Norville, news anchor for CBS's "Inside Edition," was selected last year as the Commencement speaker, the campus was greatly disappointed. Ralph Nader's selection is a great improvement over last year's, allowing the University to return to the tradition of choosing a speaker worthy of receiving the Bucknell Award of Merit.

In the Apr. 11 issue, we wrote in the editorial that "Many students and faculty members contend that Norville does not reflect the academic and intellectual nature of the University or the Commencement ceremony." She indeed did not, and despite her having some academic achievements, her speech, in which she urged graduates to "take it until they make it," did not represent our ideals and values.

Ken Langone '57, the 2002 Commencement speaker, also did not represent our ideals and values. Accused of security fraud in April, his integrity, as well as his worthiness of being a Commencement speaker, is called into question.

Norville and Langone were not worthy of the Award of Merit, which is the University's highest honor. As a consumer advocate and politician, Nader has certainly distinguished himself and deserves this award. Nader will speak to the graduating class about civic engagement, something this 2000 presidential candidate can certainly speak about. Even though some do not agree with his political philosophy, it is hard to argue that he is not a prestigious figure. Another positive aspect of this year's Commencement speaker is the timely announcement. While previous announcements have come as late as April, this year the University community wondering who the speaker will be.

The Bucknellian applauds the efforts of the Commencement Committee and its ability to secure such an eminent speaker. Unlike many of our peer institutions, which offer speakers packages that include honorary degrees and considerable monetary compensations, the University can attract speakers on our own merit.

We hope that the University can continue to have speakers of Nader's stature.

Toys for Iraqi children

To the Editor:

Whatever you may think about our war in Iraq, I feel sure we can all agree that many of the Iraqi children have suffered. Well, there's a way we can help to console them. Please join my family in sending them some toys. They're being distributed by our troops, and they need more.

Thanks to a recent issue of The Wall Street Journal, here's the address: Chief Wiggles, c/o CPA Chaplain, CPA-C2, Debriefers, APO AE 09355. You must take your package to the post office and fill out a specific form. And please use common sense: no toy guns or other violence-related items, no bikini beach Barbies and no battery-operated toys. Most of these kids are very poor. Reasonably inexpensive and appropriate items would include coloring books, crayons, water color kits, drawing pads, stuffed animals and dolls.

Many of you will recall that, when we were young, having a stuffed teddy bear or the like to hug could be comforting in times of fear or sadness. Help us give some of that comfort to some little Iraqi children. We have so much, and they have so little!

Sincerely,

Rod Bate

Students welcomed to town

To the Editor:

The night before fall semester officially began, there was a party at some of the houses behind our house. My husband and I slept right through it. We don't have hearing problems, we just had on the air conditioner, and the windows were closed. Our next-door neighbor was also home, but completely missed the party as well.

When we bought our house a year ago in the summer, people informed us that we lived in the student section. We were clueless as to what that meant, but now we know. It means happy chatter of students day and night, and energy being generated in the neighborhood through fun activities. It also means a mess on Sunday morning, although this is now being addressed by the Greeks who have fielded a clean-up crew to pick up debris in the yards and streets. We find the students to be polite and mostly cooperative. An occasional few cause problems. We love this friendly town with its intellectual spirit. One day we will move, go to bed at a quiet time and keep our doctor's appointments. But for now, we really enjoy where we live, interacting with the students.

Sincerely,

Cheryl and Dan Pehoushek

Lewisburg Residents

Bush administration criticized

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

There is a ship more leaky and in more peril than the oil tanker Prestige. Its name? George W. Bush's administration.

The Bush administration has been taking a lot of heat recently, both in national and international issues. U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft once again made headlines by leading a Justice Department probe. His job is to name and prosecute the Bush administration official who leaked a CIA agent's name to the press. Though Ashcroft promises a fair and impartial probe, there is a problem. That problem is Ashcroft's close ties to Bush, including a decade-long friendship and daily meetings.

Just for comparison's sake, when the whole Clinton/Monica scandal occurred, former U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno appointed an independent, outside investigator. Sacrificing Clinton's friendship for justice, Reno did what was right. Ideally, justice has no consideration for friendship and no conflict of interest.

Ashcroft, meanwhile, is convinced his friendship will not interfere with his investigation. Concurrently, the Bush administration faces a daily deluge of criticism for its handling of the Iraqi occupation and the war in general. For example, former U.S. ambassador to Gabon Joseph C. Wilson has been highly critical of the Bush administration.

Wilson has been highly critical of the Bush administration.

Directory cover lacks direction

By CARRIE TODD
Contributing Writer

The latest tool for stalking was delivered to our campus mailbox this week. While first-year students might be questioning this key to the outer realm, the world beyond five-digit phone numbers and four-digit box numbers, most of the upperclassmen know the black-and-blue, bruise-like book as our student directory.

This 145-page book can open the doors to a world of wonder and amazement in the universe vaguely remembered as the outside world. With it you hold the power to send gifts directly to your professor's front door and call Dining Services for the recipe for its famous M&M cookies. And though we don't all use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker, we will certainly use this handy dandy book at some point throughout the year to either look up the town where your latest hook-up came from or to hitch a ride home with someone for break.

Having agreed that the student directory is the icing on our proverbial social cake, we must make sure that the presentation is up to par. We all tore the directory out of our mailboxes in youthful anticipation, only to be met with disappointment at the modern artistic endeavor sadly attempted on the cover.

"I'll need to find someone's number I just reach for the blue book with the compassion, Russian President Vladimir Putin is a phonetically pleasing "Pootie-Poot." If this does not solve all the United States' international problems (and it won't), then what will?

Fortunately for Bush, it does not matter. The critical issues mentioned above simply do not matter. Foreigners do not matter because they cannot vote. This means that Bush does not have to bestow 300 million nicknames like "John" in order to be re-elected. Instead, all Bush has to do is sit back, relax and watch the Democratic and Republican parties make a political mockery out of democracy.

American morale in Iraq is horribly low because our troops see no end to conflict; instead, all they see is an ever-rising body count. Meanwhile, Bush's U.N. speech estranged potential international support and international military relief—the very remedy that our troops so desperately need.

To solve this crisis, Bush made a concerted effort to repair ties using a peculiar hybrid of his Texas-bred charm and uncanny wit last Sunday afternoon while mixing and mingling with international icons. During the meeting, Bush doled out some nicknames in an effort to smooth over international dislike. According to The New York Times, Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov's nickname is now "Iggy," Ghana's John Kufuor is a simplistic "John" and with belittling

And that's the catch. Incumbents have every advantage there is when it comes to elections. Bush has amassed literally tens of millions of dollars to finance his re-election and will probably exceed his goal of collecting $170 million in all. Democratic candidates have a fraction of that. Further, as soon as a Democratic candidate is chosen, the administration will kick off a campaign with the explicit purpose of systematically critiquing, ques-

"If this University was a completely science/engineering school, it would fit right in, but I guess I find it out of character or something, just kind of odd and random," Katie Mulrine '06 said.

The administrative office has gotten more calls than ever over this cover.

"It is just a picture; I hope it didn't offend anyone," Campbell said.

It's not that this cover might have offended anyone, it's just a mystery where it came from and why it was chosen.

Campbell explained that the images symbolize looking for something, and that cover is black and blue because two colors had to be chosen in order to keep down the costs.

It's amazing that the University has to be this concerned over the cost of a simple directory when our tuition bill is the size of Texas. It's as if three colors would put the University into bankruptcy. If the library was on the cover in black-and-white, this would need two colors, and it would be much more representative of the University.

If the directory were only online, this would completely eliminate the cost of the manual directory, and still allow us to have a toolbox for our super-stalking needs. So remember the next time you pick up the student directory and ponder over the cover, don't take it for granted. Without it, no matter what the cover looks like, we might lose all connection with the world outside the "bubble."

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

Use this book to advance us to the caliber of a premium, grade A stalker

Apparently determining the design for the cover is an arduous process every year. To eliminate such a difficult task, one possibility would be to have a contest for students, encouraging them to create suggestions. The cover would be original and would take the burden off the administration. Or, most would think that a simple bison or a picture of the University would be most appropriate to adorn the cover. This representative of our school would seem obvious, unlike an oversized mouse on top of a mouse.

you come home late at night in need of a snack, you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do? answer the question, compare your opinions with others, explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Arts & Entertainment

Open mic night rocks 7th Street Café

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Left to right: Paul Wolujewicz '06, Alessandro Zanelli '07 and Christophe Richard '06 perform at the semester's final Open Mic Night held Oct. 17. Open Mic Nights are sponsored by ACE and open to all University students.

BY AMY WAGNER
Contributing Writer

♦ MUSIC REVIEW

The 7th Street Café was the hot place to be for the semester's final Open Mic Night of the semester on Oct. 17. The ACE Late Night Music Committee sponsors two Open Mic Nights per semester. Student performers entertained a large crowd from 11 p.m.-1 a.m. last Friday.

The night was accented with harmonica music as well as bongo drums, in addition to acoustic guitar and vocals. All of the performers were unique in their own way as usual, and several stood out as clearly talented musicians.

One performer who added a bit of excitement and flavor to his performance was Alessandro (Dro) Zanelli '07. He performed one song entirely in Spanish with bongo drum accompaniment. He also sang "Kharma Police" by Radiohead, which completed his performance.

"He was good. He added some spice to it," Rita DeAngelo '07 said.

"Dro was very personable and got the crowd into his music," Liz Black '07 said.

Another notable performer was Mandy Hart '07, who performed several songs, including Eagle Eye Cherry's "Save Tonight." Hart played the acoustic guitar, which she has been playing for three years.

"I like to perform to see the audience's reaction, because it inspires me to write more of my own music," Hart said.

She wrote her own music in high school and "enjoys playing music I've heard on the radio."

One performer who was very enjoyable because of his harmonica skills was Brad Dorrance '07. Dorrance played the harmonica throughout his performance, as well as acoustic guitar with vocal accompaniment. Dorrance performed one original song, one Dispatch cover and one Oasis cover.

"I performed tonight because I wanted to get better at it, and it's very inspiring for me to watch other people perform like this," Dorrance said.

Mike Haile '07 was another performer who stood out throughout the night. Haile performed one original song, one Howie Day cover and one John Mayer cover. Haile's enthusiasm for performing was obvious. His voice was soothing, and the music was catchy.

Around 12:35 a.m., the mic opened up to anyone who had the desire to perform.

Until 1 a.m., the Café was entertained by an amazing duo, consisting of two of the night's performers, Brad Dorrance '07 and Noah Patrone '07. They played several covers, including "Norwegian Wood" by the Beatles, "1976" by the Smashing Pumpkins and "Paved Paradise" by the Counting Crows. Patrone and Dorrance were very impressive together. Both played acoustic guitar and sang, with Dorrance performing on his harmonica as well.

"It was an amazing balance of sounds—the guitars and harmonica," Rita Schlanger '07 said.

The whole night was enjoyed by everyone, performers and audience members alike. Megan McCormick '07, Megan Leary '07, Erin Foley '07, Katie Anderson '07 and Lesley Compton '07, all agreed that they were "having a great time."

The girls also agreed that this Open Mic Night differed from the first because there was a much bigger crowd throughout the entire night, and more original music was played.

"We're pleasantly surprised that there are so many people here. We just dropped by to get out of the cold!" Sara Close '05 and Vita Lamberson

'06 said.

Both agreed that the turnout was encouraging for the performers, and stated that they can appreciate it as performers as well.

Any student can perform at Open Mic Night, given that the line-up isn't already full. Before each Open Mic Night, a campus-wide e-mail is sent, offering the opportunity to perform. According to Laura Bender '06, the Late Night Music Committee chair, it's not unusual for the line-up to fill within five hours.

This is a popular event, and it's obvious that talented student performers are eager to show the University population exactly where that talent lies. The performers are given a specific set of rules; for example, profanity is not allowed to be used in any form, and each performance must be limited to 10 minutes.

ACE provides all technical equipment that is needed.

Open Mic Nights tend to attract one type of musician—especially an acoustic guitar player with vocals.

"Even though Open Mic Night is dominated by guys playing acoustic guitars with vocal accompaniment, I'd like to add that performers can play just about ANY instrument, sing or rap, read poetry, etc.," Bender said.

Open Mic Night is an excellent place to relax on a Friday night, and is highly recommended by most who attend.

A capella groups entertain at Parents Weekend

BY DAVID ALLEN
Staff Writer

Christy's Candlelight Entertainment is a popular event held every fall during Parents Weekend. All of the University's a capella groups—The Silhouettes, The Bison Chips, and Two Past Midnight—perform for an audience in Rooke Chapel.

The Silhouettes, the University's all-female a capella group, is composed of 14 singers this semester. The group includes new members: Paola Grande '05, Sarah Houck '06 and Dayna Carroll '07. They also welcome back Jenny Cardona '04 from a semester spent abroad.

Musical director Katie Palumbo '04 said that there will be skits to introduce and initiate the new members. The group will probably perform eight songs, including some new material.

"I don't want to give it away though," Palumbo said.

The Bison Chips, the all-male a capella group, consists of 15 gentlemen and welcomes new singers Tom Fasano '06, Chris Cuskey '07, Josh Kaehler '07 and Adam Gasiewicz '07.

Director Dan Ross '04 said the group's selections have not been determined yet. If the group's performance at Chipfest last semester is any indication, its upcoming performance will be excellent.

Two Past Midnight, the co-ed a capella group, has 15 members and welcomes seven new singers this semester. New members include Cynthia Konick '07, Karen Grabowski '07, Norey Yeboah '05, Sean Conlon '04, Kevin Mathes '07 and Patricia Elseroad '04. These new members will be performing a skit.

"They're keeping the rest of the group in suspense as to what they're doing, but it will be hilarious," Sarah Close '05 said.

Close and Lee Cromwell '05 are the group's musical directors. The group will be performing songs from their most recent album, "Can You Hear Me Now?" as well as some new material.

This year's Christy's concerts will be at 9 p.m. Friday, Oct. 31 and Saturday, Nov. 1. Tickets are $5 and are available now at the Campus Activities and Programs Center (LC 306). They will disappear fast, so get tickets for yourself and your parents today.

Dunn captivates audience at poetry reading

Pulitzer-prize winner Dunn romanced listeners with words of humor and wisdom

BY RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

♦ POETRY REVIEW

Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Stephen Dunn enthralled an entire audience with his eloquent words at his poetry reading on Sunday evening.

Invited to the University through the Sandra and Gary Sojka Visiting Poet Series that brings one prestigious poet each year to visit the campus briefly, Dunn did not disappoint his audience. After a brief introduction by Shara McCallum, the Director of the Stadler Center for Poetry, Dunn proceeded to captivate with an emotional selection of his candid poems.

While at times humorous, all the poems were relevant, cogent and deeply thought-provoking, despite Dunn's own claims.

Reading from his 12 collections of poetry, including the most recently published "Local Visitations," and one, as-yet-unpublished piece, Dunn's subject matter included solemn pre- and post-September 11 poems, disjointed relationships, suburban life and even politically correct slang for having sex.

He displayed a notable lack of pretense both in the way he read his poetry and how he addressed the audience. At one point, he commented those in attendance for missing the World Series to listen to him, then read "Grace after the 1993 World Series," which dealt with the ability to lose successfully.

While at times humorous, all the poems were relevant, cogent and deeply thought-provoking, despite Dunn's own claims.

"I will read things that make no sense... throughout the rest of the evening," Dunn said after reciting his first few poems.

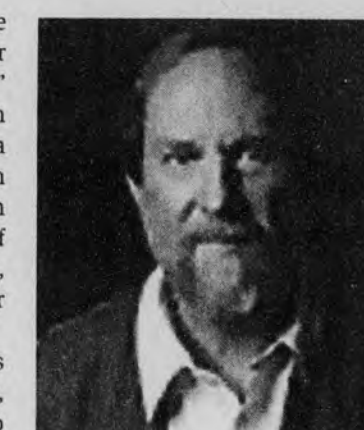

Despite the large number of students and faculty crowded into Bucknell Hall, the reading also remained intimate, thanks to his socially conscious wit.

A reception was held directly following the reading, in which the Dunn met with members of the audience and autographed their books.

Dunn won the Pulitzer in 2001 for "Different Hours," and has also been awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship and an Academy Award of Arts and Letters, among many other honors.

In addition to his volumes of poetry, he has written two prose books and is currently a professor of creative writing at Richard Stockton College of New Jersey.

Concluding his visit to the University, Dunn also held a question-and-answer session in Smith Library on Monday, where he discussed the processes and methods of creating poetry.

Courtesy of Pulitzer.org

Stephen Dunn, the Gary Sojka Visiting Poet, read a selection of poems from his latest work, "Local Visitations."

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS
FIT FOR A KING

Meaty St. Louis-cut ribs, dry-rubbed with our special seasonings, baked with our own bold flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce, and pit smoked right here with Applewood. Served with hickory smoked baked beans, 1/2" skillet potato cakes, freshly baked sourdough bread, and combined with honey butter. Plus... a FREE non-alcoholic beverage.

Served all day Monday thru Wednesday, 11am until closing

12 North Market Street
Scranton, PA
800-861-2260
www.memphisbbq.com

Widener Law prepares you for the future

- Full-time and part-time programs.
- Clinical and externship opportunities.
- Certificate programs in corporate law, trial advocacy, law and government, and health law.
- Four international summer abroad programs.

OPEN HOUSE
Saturday, October 18, 2003
Registration: 9:45 a.m. • Program 10:00 a.m.

Call to confirm your attendance at either campus:
Delaware (302) 477-2162
Harrisburg (717) 541-3903

WIDENER UNIVERSITY
School of Law
4601 Concord Pike, Wilmington, DE • 3800 Vartan Way, Harrisburg, PA
www.law.widener.edu • 1-888-WIDENER

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

beach life vacations

SPRING BREAK 2004! Travel with Beach Life Vacations! America's Best Student Tour Operator! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

SPRING BREAK
Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489! Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More!

Organize Small Group- Earn Free Trips plus Commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Travel Operator

CANCUN
ACAPULCO
JAMAICA
BAHAMAS
FLORIDA

Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Go Free! Now Hiring! Call for group discounts! 1-800-445-4849 / www.ststravel.com

EXXTREME VACATIONS, INC 1-800-336-2260
Sell Spring Break Trips! Guaranteed Best Buy 1 free trip for every 10 paid OR cash starting with first booking. Exxtreme Party Packages! Protection of American Express Worldwide www.xvacations.com

Arts & Entertainment

A new Day dawns with "Stop All the World Now"

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

The one thing a songwriter should avoid in creating a second album is simply rehashing the music he wrote the first time around, especially if that debut was well-received. This was the task facing Howie Day as he recorded "Stop All the World Now," the follow-up to his

The most notable aspect of "Stop," comes with Day's no-fear attitude in allowing his listeners to clearly hear his influences. While many artists will never let themselves be compared to others, Day seems to embrace it this time around.

The album's first single, "Perfect Time of Day," could easily be a U2 song, opening with an electronic sound, an "Eye of the Tiger" drum beat and eventually Day's voice

Day is a 19-year-old artist who has visited the University numerous times. His new album "Stop All the World Now" has an experimental new sound.

hugely successful 2002 debut, "Australia."

The first album was packed with goofy but touching lyrics, interesting guitar riffs and the occasional inclusion of vocal effects or a full band, enriching the songs in a way that his live show simply did not convey (as he would simply play alone onstage with an acoustic guitar and a handful of repeat effects).

This time around the full band is a staple, and if nothing else, "Stop" is definitely not "Australia."

The first track on the album, "Brace Yourself," is reminiscent of earlier material—a great hook to open the album that flows directly into the first verse, Day's voice, almost daring, "So you think, you can hold the world up by a string." Day even includes a new version of fan-favorite "She Says" (included on "Australia"), but the arrangement is different enough to quell any negative criticisms.

The similarities soon fade, and it's hard to ignore the musical maturation that is reflected in the creation of this record. Songs are more carefully constructed, with deliberate breaks and hooks that hold the balance between indie rock and straight pop.

A perfect example of this is "Trouble in Here," a nearly six-minute ballad that encompasses both the aspects that made Day famous and those he is experimenting with throughout the album.

In this case, the band fills out the song in a way that playing solo never could.

Songs are more carefully constructed, with deliberate breaks and hooks that hold the balance between indie rock and straight pop.

acoustic set, including bands like Live and Goo Goo Dolls, but does so in a way that admits his respect but avoids copying their styles completely.

The album's catchiest track, a trippy electric tune called "You & A Promise," is indicative of what to expect from the entire album. Starting off with a mellow beat overlaid by a wavering guitar solo Day seems to embrace everything that works on this album so far, creating a sort of masterpiece.

The track does not necessarily stand out on its own, but in conjunction with the rest of the disc, it shows that the 19-year-old kid, who has visited the University more than any other musician, has matured in a way that will not only keep his current fan base happy, but will surely expand it to those who simply appreciate good songwriting and diverse sounds.

The Glass Menagerie reflects student talent

University students have integrated an original film and score into this weekend's production of Tennessee Williams' classic Southern tale

Patrick Halley '05 and Liisa Britt '04 act out their roles as feuding mother and son, Tom and Amanda Wingfield, while Mia Fioravanti '05, playing delicate Laura Wingfield, innocently gets caught in the middle.

By KRISTEN HABACHT
Staff Writer

"The Glass Menagerie" by Tennessee Williams will breathe life into the Harvey Powers Theatre in Coleman Hall on Oct. 31 through Nov. 3. This time-honored and much beloved play is directed by Associate Professor of Theater Robert Gainer.

Williams' prolific play about gentle Southern life is brought to life by a dedicated group of student actors, composers and film makers along with a professional staff of costumers, lighting designers and vocal coach Barry Kur, a quest voice and dialect coach from Penn State University where he is master voice teacher.

"We are so fortunate in our department of theatre and dance's production of this modern classic to have a creative team of student and faculty artists who are collaborating to render Mr. Williams' poetic vision for us in our Powers Theatre on Parents Weekend," Gainer said.

"The Glass Menagerie" is a touching story of a Southern family as remembered through the oldest son's eyes. The power struggle between the overbearing mother and the rebellious son, often catches the young fragile daughter, Laura, in the middle. It is a story that can affect many people regardless of their background. The process of bringing the play to life has been intensive and yet incredibly rewarding for all involved.

This is a unique opportunity for the department to be able to incorporate film, directed by Julianna Brafa '05 and Todd Bieber, as well as original score by Ashi Day '04. This score will be performed live by Monica Hoy '04 and Mark Ulbrecht '07 on violin and keyboard.

"I wrote a simple theme that I plan to modify according to the action and emotions of the music," Day said.

The music and lighting will be manipulated along with the set to give the production the feeling of being inside the memory of Tom. The play is written as a memory and will possess a level of realism with a dream-like quality. The small cast of only four characters, performed by Liisa Britt '04, Patrick Halley '05, Mia Fioravanti '05 and Jim Nogasky '07, has allowed the cast a chance to bond and give this detailed play the attention it truly deserves.

"This production is unique for Bucknell in that it is a small cast—we have had the opportunity to work a lot more carefully with each other and the text than we do in large-cast situations. It is also rewarding to work on a play that is so well-known," Liisa Britt '04 said.

"I'd like to think that Tennessee Williams would be pleased with both our creative process and its results," Gainer said.

Fioravanti admires the glass menagerie while rehearsing her role for the play.

Maddin revives horror classic

"Dracula, Pages From a Virgin's Diary" to play at Campus Theater

By KEELEY PATTERSON
Contributing Writer

MOVIE REVIEW

The motion picture medium boasts a range of artistic expression. Filmmakers typically narrow this profusion of potentialities, incorporating just one or two mediums into their text. In "Dracula, Pages from a Virgin's Diary," Guy Maddin bravely and admirably integrates many, including plastic arts, dance, theater and song. This film will be screened at Lewisburg's Campus Theater beginning Oct. 31. The short film "Hearts of the World" will be previewed before the show.

Commissioned by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, "Dracula" is an adaptation of an adaptation. Maddin translates the Canadian Royal Winnipeg Ballet's dance interpretation of Bram Stoker's novel onto the screen. Although he records a previously existing act, Maddin showcases the display in a novel way, a full-length silent feature set to excerpts from Gustav Mahler's first and second symphonies.

"Dracula, Pages From a Virgin's Diary" takes risks in content, audience and form. Maddin has been recognized for interrogating early cinematic images and turning them into something new. In "Dracula," Maddin crafts a genuine relic from the 1920s. Drawing inspiration from silent cinema, early talkies, color-coded melodrama and film noir, Maddin uses formal devices to generate cinematic attractions and manipulates the film medium to construct his spectacle.

Maddin effectively meshes narrative structure with dance spectacle. Dance is the unequivocal star of this film, and only a movie camera is capable of capturing such fluidity. The photographic medium complements the translation of speech into physical movement. Image takes primacy over music. Maddin crafts a visual assault of the senses, teaming up the four dominant modes of attracmost expensive film ever shot on low-tech, economical and grainy Super 8 film. Maddin coordinates his photography to capture a dazzling and exaggerated contrast between light and dark. Lighting is sparse, flickering through the set from a nearby lighthouse. Colored accents (Dracula's crimson cape and cornea) and monochrome tinting further add to the attraction. Maddin manipulates color, modeling a CGI impersonation of hand-painted filmstrip.

Craving a decayed look, Maddin works backward in order to achieve digital deterioration. Almost every one of the 2,000 cuts in the film has a digital effect. Maddin also employs Maddin and his editing protégé, Deco Dawson, literally chopped up this film and pieced it back together. The pair allowed obvious mistakes in continuity editing and inserted intentional audio crackles. Littered with unnatural breaks in film action, Maddin removes pieces of filmstrip from completed shots and splices the remaining film together. "Dracula" edits are reminiscent of Magic Theater, Melies and his cinematic tricks.

Maddin's "Dracula" exploits lust of the eyes, featuring Lucy devouring babies, psychiatrists prodding Renfield's temple with knives and Dr. Von Helsing driving a shovel through "undead" Lucy's neck.

Maddin inconspicuously hits upon the repulsive and threatening elements required for the thrill. Ironically, the infamous evil Dracula is not the creature projecting this thrill. Maddin's depiction melds stereotypical extremes: the feared and loathsome Dracula and the victimized, outcast Dracula. "Dracula" explores themes of patriarchal oppression, sexual panic and the containment of female sexuality.

Maddin's texts are characteristically quirky and eccentric. He is often forced to compromise ideas in order to secure funding and prove his concepts marketable to financiers. The short film "Hearts of the World," Maddin's most acclaimed work to date, was commissioned and crafted as a six-minute prelude for the Toronto International Film Festival's 25th Anniversary. Also look for Maddin's "The Saddest Music in the World," starring Isabella Rossellini, out this year.

Courtesy of zietgeistfilms.com

tion—novelty, taboo, violence and the pleasure of looking. Featuring a ballet company, Maddin's finished product embraces a playhouse aesthetic. Highly-crafted costume, make-up and set design attract the spectator's gaze.

At 1.6 million dollars, "Dracula" is probably the various super-annulated devices, including iris shots, intertitles, lap dissolves, superimposition and Vaseline blur to achieve an antiquated look and to animate the picture.

Editing, a creative process, provides new, sequential relationships between parts.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

October 24, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 7

Field hockey:
Bison hockey picks up a win on Homecoming Weekend to improve its record to 8-4.

See page B2

Football remains undefeated in Patriot League

By JOSH HERWITT
Staff Writer

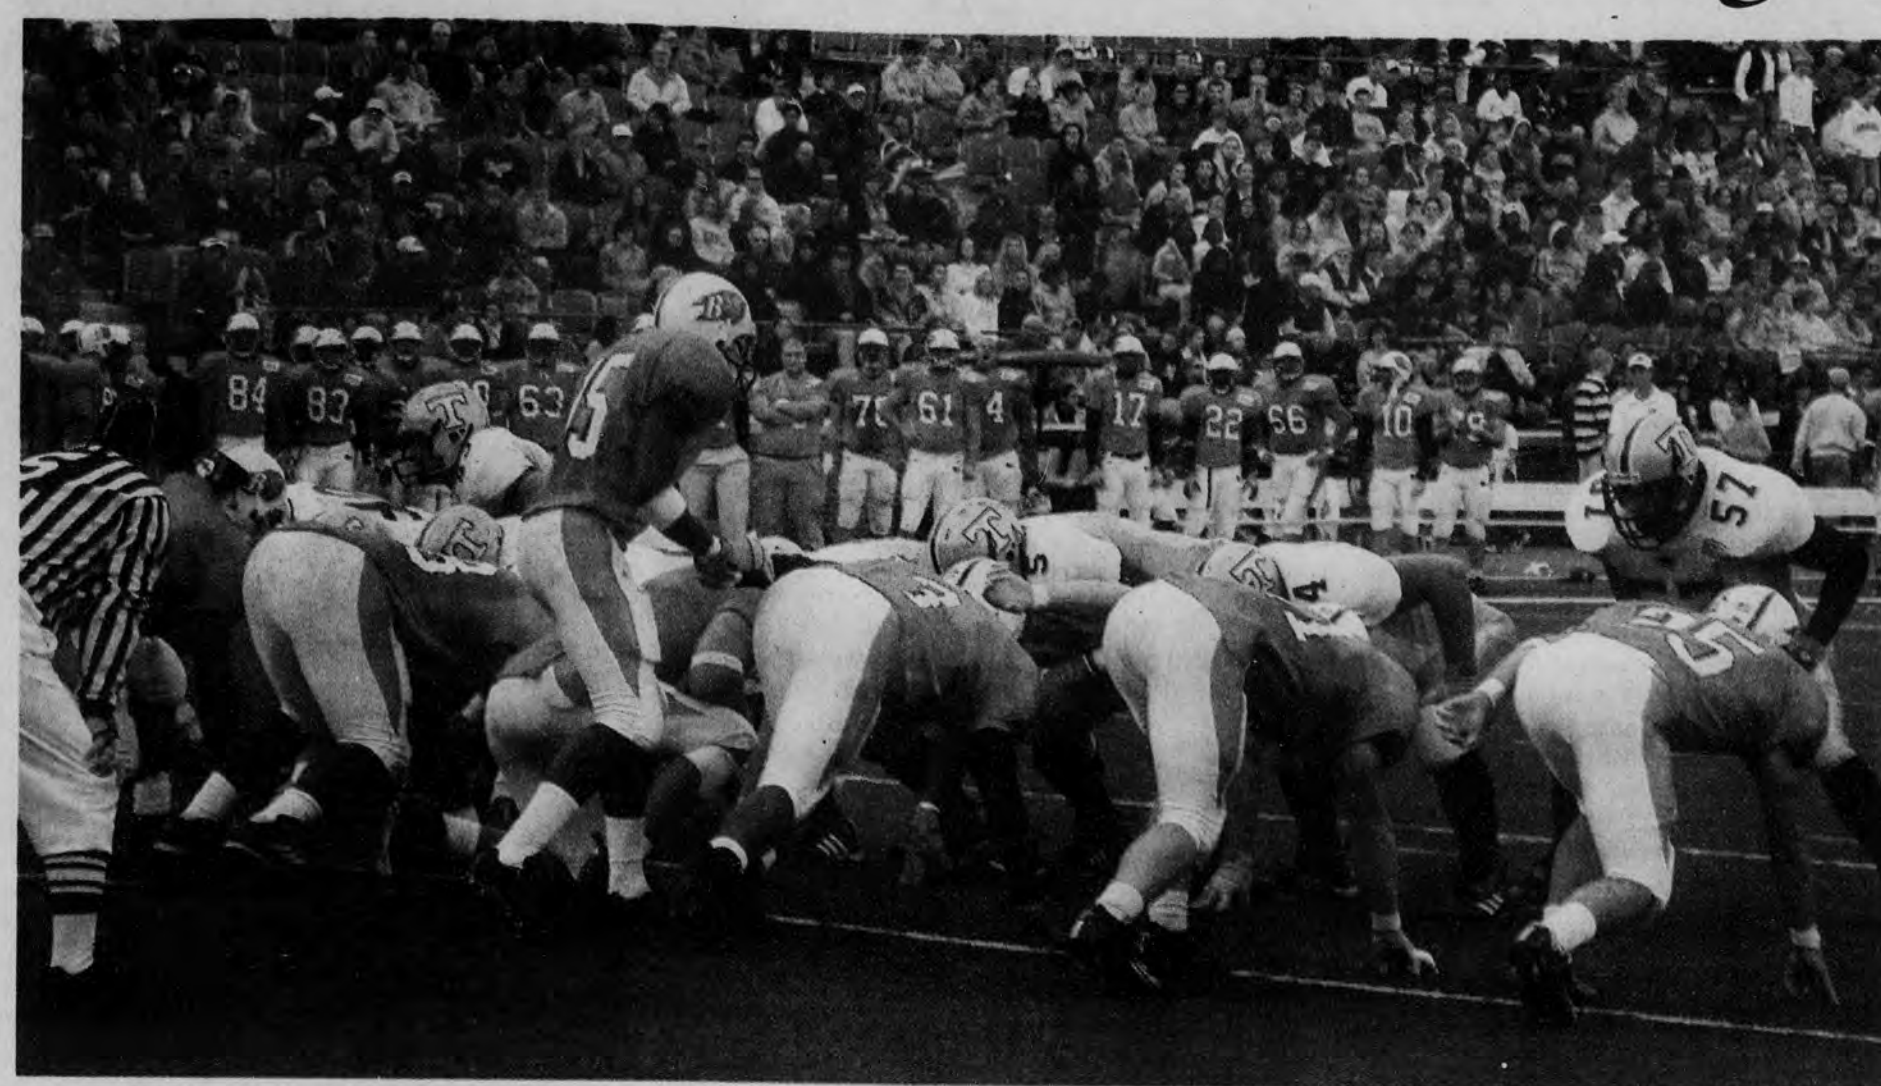

Returning home after a five-game road trip, the Bucknell football team remains unbeaten in the Patriot League with a 14-10 comeback win over league rival Towson on Saturday at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

Playing in front of a homecoming crowd, Bucknell (4-3, 2-0 Patriot League) fell behind 10-0 to the Tigers as Towson linebacker Neal Regan intercepted backup quarterback Cole Ciesnolewicz '05 at the Towson 3-yard line. The Tigers drove 84 yards in 13 plays, taking a 7-0 lead on a 4-yard run by Towson running back Mikal Lundy with just 3 minutes, 10 seconds remaining in the first quarter.

Place kicker Stephan Toth's 38-yard field goal at 10:14 in the second period made it a 10-0 game.

The Bison were also plagued in the first half with injuries to free safety Virgil Rush '05 and quarterback Daris Wilson '05, who sprained his ankle on Bucknell's third drive of the game.

Bucknell was able to overcome the injuries with solid backup play by quarterback John Henry Jackson '05, who completed nine of 11 passes for

The Bison offense lines up for a play against Towson on Saturday at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. The team, playing its first home game in six weeks, defeated the Patriot League rival Tigers 14-10 in front of an enthusiastic homecoming crowd. The win improves the team's record to 4-3 overall and 2-0 in the league.

129 yards. Complementing the Bison offensive attack was running back Blamah Sarnor '06, who rushed for 107 yards and scored both of Bucknell's touchdowns.

Defensive back Mike Leatherman '04 sparked the first Bucknell touchdown with an interception. Tim Johnson '04 connected with wideout Albert Marquardt '04 on a half-back option pass that put the Bison on the 2 yard line. Sarnor's 1-yard run into the end zone capped off a 79-yard drive in seven plays.

Sarnor's second 1-yard drive into the end zone put the Bison ahead to stay with 1:48 remaining in the third quarter. Back-to-back passes of 19 and 32 yards from Jackson to Marquardt ignited the drive.

Bucknell edged Towson on total yards with a 340-323 advantage with 171 rushing yards to the Tigers' 134 rushing yards.

Even without Rush, the Patriot League's leading tackler, in the secondary, the Bison defense shut out Towson (3-4, 2-2) in the second half, yielding only 148 total yards. Bucknell game, halting two Towson drives late in the game. With inside three minutes remaining, Towson drove to the Bucknell 23-yard line, but the defense forced a fumble by Towson had another chance to win the game on its own 36-yard line with 1:39 to play. The Tigers moved the ball to the Bucknell 36 with a 14-yard pass to Will Marcus, an 8-yard run by Lundy and a 9-yard pass to James Byroads.

Bucknell put Towson away for good when defensive back Jerome Agy '04 stepped in front of Melzi's hurried, overthrown pass for his second interception of the day.

Lundy lead the Tiger offense with 105 yards on 24 carries, and Melzi completed 14 of 29 passes for 189 yards but had three interceptions on the day.

The victory was a pleasant turn-around from a tough loss over the fall break weekend. Coming off a big win

See FOOTBALL, page B4

Soccer fights to remain undefeated in Patriot League

By CHRISTA SAWKO
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell men's soccer team maintained its status as the only undefeated Patriot League team on Saturday as it tied Lehigh. Although the team would have liked to provide the homecoming crowd with a victory, the 2-2 tie was enough to keep them undefeated in the league.

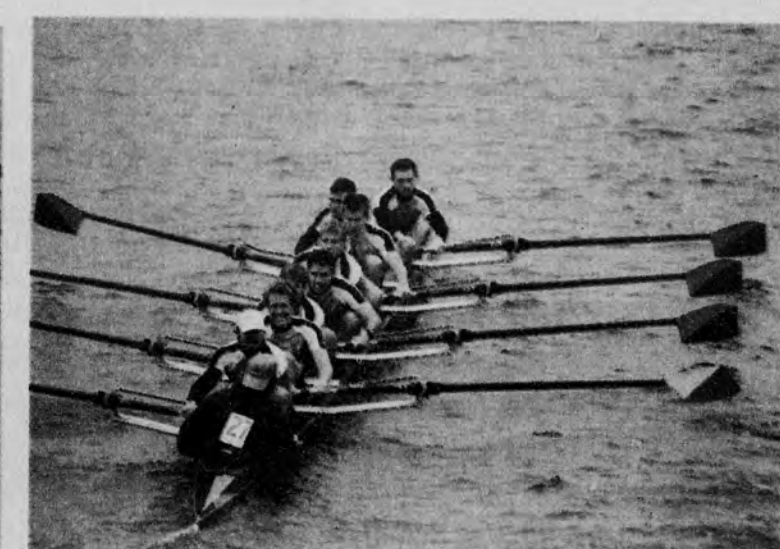

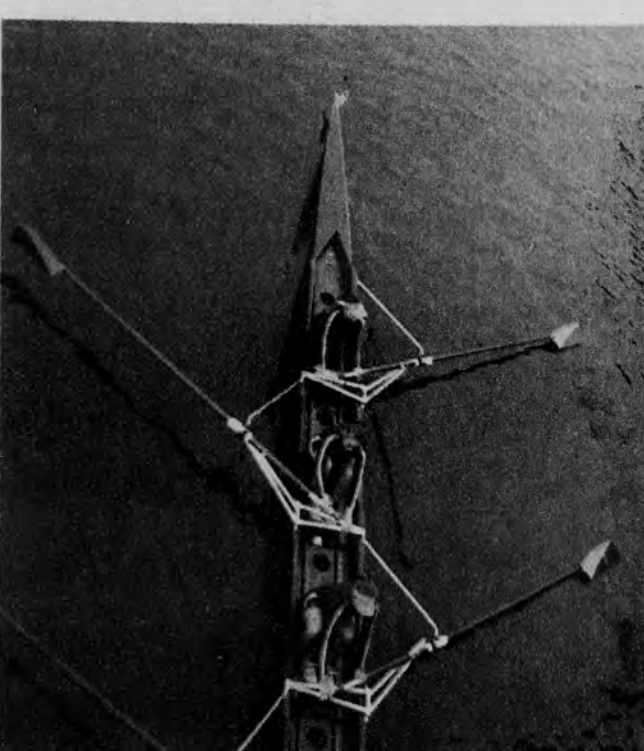

"We would have liked the win, but can settle for the tie," Head Coach Brendan Nash said. Chris Beekman '04 and Brian King '04 teamed up to get the Bison ahead of the game in the first 30 minutes. King fed a pass to Beekman, who worked around several defenders before sending the ball into the lower corner of the net. It was Beekman's fifth goal of the season, and according to Assistant Coach Brian Suskiewicz, was one of the "best goals of the year."

"Chris Beekman showed why he should be an All-Conference player this year," Nash said.

Bucknell kept the lead until six minutes remained in the first half, when Lehigh's Steve Fisher scored his eighth goal of the

See SOCCER, page B5

BISON ROWERS COMPETE AT HEAD OF THE CHARLES REGATTA

Courtesy of Anthony Fornataro '73

HEAD OF THE CHARLES
REGATTA

On Saturday Bucknell men's and women's crew competed at one of the most prestigious regattas in the world. The 6,500 rowers were expected to lure as many as 350,000 spectators, and this year marks the 39th year that the regatta has brought teams from as close as Harvard and as far as South Africa to compete on the waters of the Charles River.

Women's golf captures top performance of the season

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell women's golf team turned in its best performance of the season to wrap up its fall campaign, earning fifth place in the Rutgers Invitational. The team combined to shoot a University record-tying 319 on Saturday, following a stellar opening round of 329 on Friday.

The tournament marked one of the team's most exciting efforts in the recent seasons. "We had one of our strongest performances in two years," Head Coach Kevin Jamieson said. "We have four new players in this year's line-up, which makes our record-setting performance even more impressive."

On the first day of the 36-hole tournament, the Bison were led by Celine Herbin '05, who shot an 80 over the first 18 holes. Teri Schlang '07 and team captain Jaime Hays '05 also turned in noteworthy rounds for the Orange and Blue, each shooting an 81.

After leading the team on Friday, Herbin continued to

See GOLF, page B4

Sports

Field hockey snaps three-game losing streak

The team's record is now 8-4 following the victory, including a 3-1 mark against Patriot League opponents

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bison field hockey team reversed a three-game skid on Saturday, posting a 4-2 victory over Georgetown at Graham Field. The team's record is now 8-4 following the victory, including a 3-1 mark against Patriot League opponents.

The homecoming weekend triumph included two goals by Callista Costopoulos '07, as well as goals by Kate Ruda '04 and Kelly O'Brien '06.

The win was crucial for the Bison, as it reversed a short losing streak and put them back in gear to drive for a championship.

"The game against Georgetown provided us an opportunity to get back to playing 'Bucknell Hockey,'" Head Coach Heather Lewis said. "We had a tough stretch of games, and to come out and play as solid as the team did was very refreshing to see."

The players were also fueled by the turnaround.

"We realized that once we decide our level of play and stay committed to maintaining that, no one can keep up with us," forward Stephanie Cabral '05 said. "We needed that win to get our confidence back and hopefully now we will continue playing with that spark that was missing from previous games."

The game was a refreshing opportunity to play at home after a long road trip.

"There's no doubt this team loves playing at home, and I sensed we were quite confident from the moment we stepped on the field," Lewis said. "That's a reflection of Lindsey and Kate—our two senior captains—making sure the team was focused and ready to compete."

Ruda's eighth goal of the season, an unassisted shot 15 minutes, 55 seconds into the game, gave the Bison an early 1-0 advantage. Bucknell held its lead over the next 10 minutes before Georgetown's Leeanna Rizzo snuck the tying goal past Bison goalie Liz Jordan '06.

With just under a minute to play in the first half, Costopoulos turned a penalty corner assist from Ruda and Lindsey Gentel '04 into the team's second goal, giving the Orange and Blue a 2-1 lead.

The Bison continued to roll along in the second half, as O'Brien opened up the lead to 3-1 when she nailed a goal on a penalty shot. The goal was O'Brien's eighth of the season, leaving her and Ruda tied for the team lead in that category.

Rizzo again put Georgetown within striking distance after she scored to narrow the lead to 3-2, but the Hoyas failed to overtake the powerful Bison defense.

Costopoulos' second goal of the game gave the Bison the insurance they needed to close out the win. With 4:30 left in the contest, Costopoulos

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Kate Ruda '04 battles for the ball during an earlier game against Lafayette. Ruda, who shares the team lead for goals this season, contributed a goal during the 4-2 win over the Hoyas.

converted another penalty corner assist from Ruda and Gentel, giving Bucknell a 4-2 advantage.

"As a coach, when you can have a first-year player come in and make an impact on the game, that's a blessing," Lewis said. "Callista Costopoulos did just that on Saturday scoring two goals off of our penalty corner set piece. In addition, I thought Cali distributed the play well in our midfield and gave us a 'spark' in the second half."

Costopoulos was glad to be a part of another inspiring team effort, noting the importance of her teammates' tenacity.

"It feels great being able to play with teammates that have all the heart in the world that is needed to be a team and win, and it showed in the game against Georgetown," Costopoulos said.

The Hoyas and Bison were both aggressive offensively, taking 15 and 18 shots on goal, respectively. Jordan was again strong in the cage for the Bison, recording five saves in the effort.

The offensive effort was somewhat of a change for the usually defense-driven Bison but reflects the team's versatility.

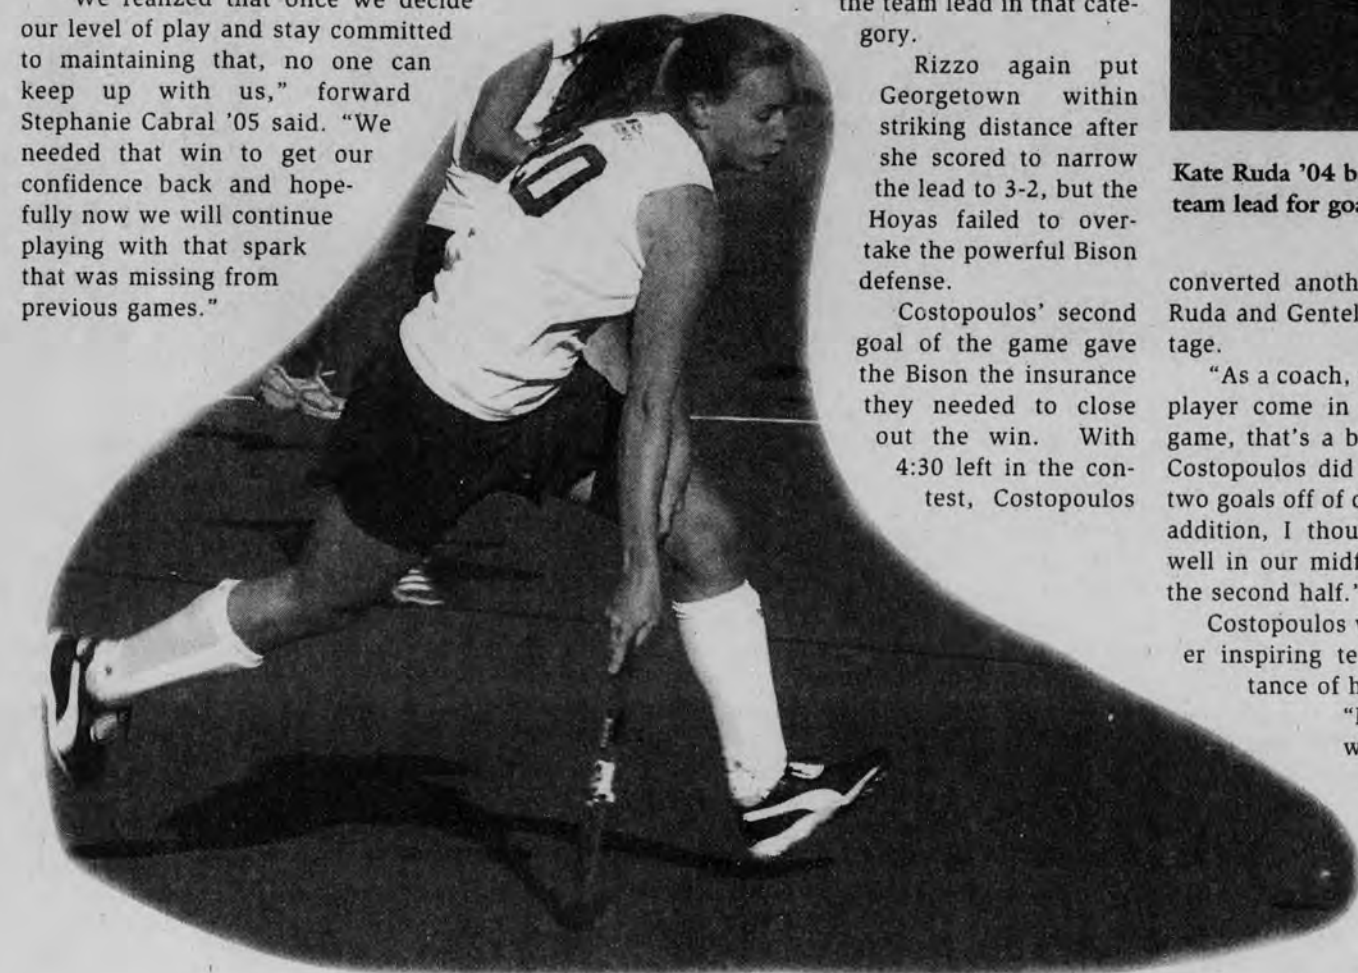

"Against Georgetown our offensive play really carried the team as we maintained possession and capitalized on our scoring opportunities," Lewis said.

The team will return to Patriot League action tomorrow when they face Fairfield on the road.

The Bison can improve their league record to 4-1 with a victory, as well as gain momentum as they roll into the final two games of the regular season against Towson and league rival American.

Lewis and her players recognize the challenge that lies ahead, but they feel confident that the team is prepared for the upcoming championship drive.

"This team recognizes they have a lot of hockey left to play. They show up every day ready to work and embrace any challenge put before them," Lewis said. "They also understand the significance this upcoming week plays in regards to the quest of becoming a Patriot League champion. It's an exciting time for Bucknell hockey, and I believe this team has put itself in a good position to meet with much success down the road."

Alex Kyzmir '07 heads for the ball during a previous game at Graham Field. After an uncharacteristic three-game losing streak, the Bison returned to their winning ways and improved their record to 8-4.

Cross country struggles at Pre-Nationals

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The Pre-National meet hosted by Northern Iowa gave Bucknell cross country a chance to assess its team compared to the rest of the country. The men finished 29th out of 35 in the men's "gold" race, while the women finished 31st of 33 teams in the women's "gold" race.

Designed to give teams a chance to preview the course used for the NCAA national meet in November, to gain valuable at-large points and to get the opportunity to compete against most of the best teams in the country, the Pre-National meet has become extremely popular. The field of teams has become so large that recently the teams are divided into two races of approximately equal size and caliber.

Stanford's men, the defending national champions and the overwhelming favorite once again, dominated the "purple" race with their top five, averaging an astounding 23:28 for the 8000-meter course. The men's gold race was won by Colorado, led by Dathan Ritzenhein in his first race back from injury after an incredible first year two falls ago.

Bucknell was led by Wes Reinhardt '04 finishing 117th in 25:16 to lead a top-five spread of only 14 seconds. Bucknell's pack included Dan Lounsbury '05 (25:18), Aaron Hanlon '04 (25:27), Greg Costello '03 (25:27) and Nick Mousetis '04 (25:30).

"I think we ran a pretty solid race. We finished pretty close to some real good teams," Reinhardt said.

Head Coach Kevin Donner was pleased with the men.

"It was probably our best race of the season," Donner said. "Our team placing was lower because we do not have a front-runner at this time. Our team depth proved to be as good as most of the teams there."

A single strong front-runner could have easily vaulted the Bison closer to 20th in the "gold" race, as the team scores were very tight for the middle-and Regionals. The [Regional] 10K will definitely be better for us."

"We are very young and we seemed a bit overwhelmed," Donner said of the women's team. "It will take some time for our young team to adjust to these bigger and more competitive national caliber meets. Our focus is on the Patriot Leagues where we will try to win the title back."

—Head Coach Kevin Donner

The women were led by Katie Pfeifer '05 in 131st place in a race won by Stanford's women. Pfeifer, who finished in 22:41, was followed by Julie and Regional. The [Regional] 10K will definitely be better for us."

"We are very young and we seemed a bit overwhelmed," Donner said of the women's team. "It will take some time for our young team to adjust to these bigger and more competitive national caliber meets. Our focus is on the Patriot Leagues where we will try to win the title back."

The women were led by Katie Pfeifer '05 in 131st place in a race won by Stanford's women. Pfeifer, who finished in 22:41, was followed by Julie and Regional. The [Regional] 10K will definitely be better for us."

"We are very young and we seemed a bit overwhelmed," Donner said of the women's team. "It will take some time for our young team to adjust to these bigger and more competitive national caliber meets. Our focus is on the Patriot Leagues where we will try to win the title back."

—Head Coach Kevin Donner

The women were led by Katie Pfeifer '05 in 131st place in a race won by Stanford's women. Pfeifer, who finished in 22:41, was followed by Julie and Regional. The [Regional] 10K will definitely be better for us."

"We are very young and we seemed a bit overwhelmed," Donner said of the women's team. "It will take some time for our young team to adjust to these bigger and more competitive national caliber meets. Our focus is on the Patriot Leagues where we will try to win the title back."

The women were led by Katie Pfeifer '05 in 131st place in a race won by Stanford's women. Pfeifer, who finished in 22:41, was followed by Julie and Regional. The [Regional] 10K will definitely be better for us."

"We are very young and we seemed a bit overwhelmed," Donner said of the women's team. "It will take some time for our young team to adjust to these bigger and more competitive national caliber meets. Our focus is on the Patriot Leagues where we will try to win the title back."

—Head Coach Kevin Donner

Golf finishes seventh in final event of the fall

By TERI SCHLANG
Contributing Writer

The Bison men's golf team competed in its sixth and final competition of the fall on Oct. 17-18 when Hofstra University hosted its men's and women's invitational at Bethpage State Park Red Course. The Bison finished seventh out of 14 teams after firing two consecutive team scores of 303 for a two-day total of 606.

Hofstra won its own invitational after shooting 590. Blake Russel of Hofstra took the medalist honors after firing a 2-under 138. Following Hofstra was Long Island (594), Lafayette, Delaware, Quinnipiac and Saint Francis, who beat the Bison by just one stroke in the second day.

The Bison took a group including four first-year students to this event. Team captain Abbie Valentine '04 led the Bison once again with a 147 and finished in a four-way tie for seventh. This was Valentine's fourth top-10 finish this season. Following Valentine was Ryan Hom '07, who shot his lowest round of the season during the second round. Hom's second round 72 after his first round 79 boosted him into 17th place for the tournament.

Rounding out the rest of the squad were Charlie Waddell '07 at 152 in a tie for 22nd after slipping from the top-10 after his first round 72, Kyle Moran '07 with a 158 finishing in 39th and Patrick Yingling '07 with a 159 finishing in 43rd.

The men's golf team returns to action next March, in preparation for the Patriot League Championships.

"We brought a fairly inexperienced team to Hofstra," Valentine said. "It was encouraging that Ryan Hom played well the second day."

The team appeared to have common concerns over the weekend of being unable to find its swing and have putts drop, and that combination made it difficult for them to achieve a low score.

"I couldn't exactly find my rhythm this weekend," Yingling said. "If only a few more putts had dropped I could have gone low."

Even though the Bison did have their first win in over 16 years earlier this season and set an all-time scoring average record, many members of the team still feel they underachieved throughout the fall season. They are looking forward to the spring season when they can play up to their potential.

"The experience that the freshman have gotten this fall should help us with our depth at the spring tournaments. We have a very solid nucleus of experienced players in Valentine, Lane, Dolle and Pellicani," Head Coach James Cotner said. "But we will need some of the freshmen to step forward and be counters in the spring if we are going to contend for the championships at the tournaments."

The men's golf team returns to action next March, in preparation for the Patriot League Championships.

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Some weeks it's easier to write a column than others.

Some weeks it seems as though there is simply nothing worth writing about, nothing worth getting excited about, nothing worth preaching, or even hoping for.

What, amid this fuming quagmire of injustice that the major-league baseball season has thrust upon us, can possibly be said to make it seem more tolerable? After a week that besieged dreamers and optimists with one nightmare after another, it doesn't seem that there is much capable of quelling the heartache.

The fact is, hope imploded for the Red Sox Nation—again—last week. It imploded in Chicago, too. The Red Sox, the Cubs and all their crestfallen supporters went home with nothing to show for their tenacity.

No pennants. No World Series berths. The cowboy has vacated the saddle. The ivy is rusting quietly on the idle outfield walls of an empty ballpark. All the cries of "reverse the curse" have faded, quite suddenly, into a sick silence of disbelief.

For both teams, this was supposed to be "the year." For both teams, it wasn't. Instead, the joyride came to a discombobulating standstill, abruptly unseating all the fantasies of redemption.

Some writers have pointed to curses—even if they didn't believe in uncanniness before, they do now. That makes the whole process cute. Blame it on the interminable whim of some ethereal being, and the agony is suddenly tempered by a romantic sense of pitiableness.

So goes the mentality of the sport-going pub-

We must be cursed, right? Victims of someone's divine grudge, punished by some force of spite from the great above. And those Yankees—that Aaron _____ing Boone—must be blessed.

The truth is, that's a bit melodramatic. After all, Babe Ruth's beery spirit probably has better ways of passing eternity than drugging around the corridors of Yankee Stadium maligning the Red Sox and their fans with one three after another.

Curse declarations wear out fast, and the fans and media will inevitably realign their fault-slinging toward whatever concrete sources appear vulnerable. And the 2003 League Championship Series—both of them—certainly donated to history more than their necessary share of fall guys and blame-sponges.

Most postseasons have one. Maybe two. A Don Denkinger, a Ralph Branca, a Johnny Pesky, a Donnie Moore. Baseball is rather unforgiving in its conviction of villains and scapegoats, just as much as it is adoring in its laudation of champions and saviors.

Mistakes, in postseason baseball, aren't mistakes. They are transgressions of the game's arbitrary code of conduct—everyone has the right to be human sometimes, but you'd better not do it in October.

And for those unfortunate enough to err beneath the bright lights of baseball's grandest stage, there awaits a rapacious firing squad of persecutors. Writers, commentators, fans, peers—their words can become searing, as if saddling some poor soul with the entire share of culpability for his team's demise will transform the turn of events into something palatable.

So goes the mentality of the sport-going public: Skewer Grady Little. Denounce Pedro Martinez. Demand the deportation of Steve Bartman. Bemoan Alex Gonzalez's gaffe. Question Prior's unflappability and Wood's worth. And ask why all those guys weren't perfect.

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

Cowboy down? Nah ...

That's not to say every flub should be ignored, euphemized or tip-toed around. These men—aside from Bartman—are professionals and they expect, as they should, to be held responsible for what transpires on the diamond.

Still, it isn't very fair or insightful to reduce an entire game, much less an entire series, of baseball to a simplistic lambasting session at the expense of one or two players or other individuals. To do so underestimates the intricacies and interplays that make the sport appealing in the first place.

Maybe simplification makes it easier to cope with. Maybe it's more comforting to believe that the Red Sox have been failed by Little, rather than by fate, Boston can chase Little into exile; Chicago can do the same to Bartman.

That's straightforward. That's easy.

That's shallow. Baseball has always been littered with miscalculations and blunders—some more glaring than others—and no amount of spite or reproving will be the least bit effective in preventing such occurrences in the future.

When all is said and done, it really just comes down to chance. Not curses, not villains—just happenstance. That's not to say that teams win championships because of luck. Smart teams win. Talented teams win. Well-managed teams win. Tough teams, too.

But sometimes, they don't win. Sometimes, after all the effort, after all the fine-tuning and resilience, after all the "cowboying up," some little quirk of fate just strolls in and steals the night away. Sometimes, even when everything seems so perfectly aligned, the bottom just falls out.

In a way, that makes it harder to tolerate. There's nothing simple that can promise or deliver justice to those who seem to have fallen harder and more often than they deserve.

And if there is no justice, no guarantee for redemption, what reason is there for the Red Sox Nation and the Wrigley faithful to keep watching? Is there anything, anything, left that these fans can say to defend their loyalties in the face of biting remarks and pitiless mockery hurled upon them by fans of more fortunate franchises?

Maybe it's this: beneath the heartache and the agony, behind the shield of guarded optimism, there is a certain nobility to investing one's heart-felt emotions in the Red Sox or Cubs. Their fans can bail from the proverbial ship anytime—but they don't. There's something admirable about that.

They're creative enough, perhaps, to realize that if coincidence alone has the capacity to kick them down so frequently, it is just as capable of doing the opposite someday.

No matter how severe the hurt becomes—and it became just about as bad as it gets last week—there is always that little glimmer of hope for salvation. If not next year, then the next one. Maybe ten years later.

When it happens—and it will—everything endured this October, and all that these fans have survived decade after decade, will have been well worth it.

Randy Moss: Harlem globetrotter or Viking?

By MIKE ORTA
Contributing Writer

After seven games of NFL football have been played, all I have to say is "wow." We have some teams that are in a nosedive, and some that are on the rise. The Raiders look old and incapable. The Vikings look dominant. Down in "big D," Bill Parcells seems to have re-awakened a football giant. Some guys are fizzling and others are sizzling. Then there is Randy Moss, who is making plays like Emeril makes Cajun food. Meanwhile, Warren Sapp is beating his chest like a rabid baboon to prove his masculinity to Paul Tagliabue.

Basically, we have yet another ridiculous NFL season well underway. So let's take a look at some of the players who are sizzling so far this season and helping keep their teams afloat.

Steve "Air" McNair is once again willing his Titans to victory. Seriously, can the man have any more fight in him? He is working with an anemic running game where the starter is averaging under three yards per carry, and a platoon of no-name receivers. Can you name the top three receivers on the Titans' depth chart?

Derrick Mason, Justin McCareins and Drew Bennett. Drew Bennett? Are you kidding me? This sounds like the name of a guy brewing espresso at Starbucks. As we established earlier, running back Eddie George is done, and rookie Chris Brown just isn't ready to tote the rock for 30 carries per game.

This is a roster that has basically been deteriorating since the Titans' last Super Bowl appearance during the 1999 season. Ever since then they've had cap trouble and have cut a guy here, a guy there, bringing in few big play-makers to replace the starters they lost. Guys like John Runyan, Randall Godfrey, Blaine Bishop and Kenny Holmes have all gone. It's all the same to McNair though. He has over 1,700 yards passing and 12 touchdowns so far this season.

He beat the Panthers in Carolina, and has three games so far this season where he has posted a passer rating of 109 or better, topping off at an astounding 148.2 against the Steelers. McNair might not have the name recognition of guys like Vick, Donovan McNabb or Brett Favre, but the fact is, McNair wins ball games. It appears that this season will be no different for McNair, as he gears up to make another playoff appearance.

Randy Moss: If this name doesn't intrigue you, then find another sport. This guy can flat out play. He's not playing football out there; he's playing street ball. It's like watching an AND1 tape of football when he's on the field. His behind the head toss to Moe Williams Sunday was quite possibly the most astounding play I have ever seen.

Moss is averaging over 110 yards per game this season, as well as a touchdown per game. Then you throw in the fact that his presence alone on the field forces a safety or another corner to give coverage support, allowing other receivers and the running backs to have one less defender to worry about. On top of that, Moss still gets open, and even if he is covered, he can still catch the ball over the heads of cornerbacks with ease.

Moss seems to have finally figured out how to have fun playing every down, and it's paying off. The Vikings are undefeated so far this season, and Moss is projected to have the best year of his career, as he is on pace to reach over 1,700 yards receiving and over a dozen touchdowns. Here's hoping he keeps these theatrics up, and his shenanigans in almost every other facet of his life to a minimum.

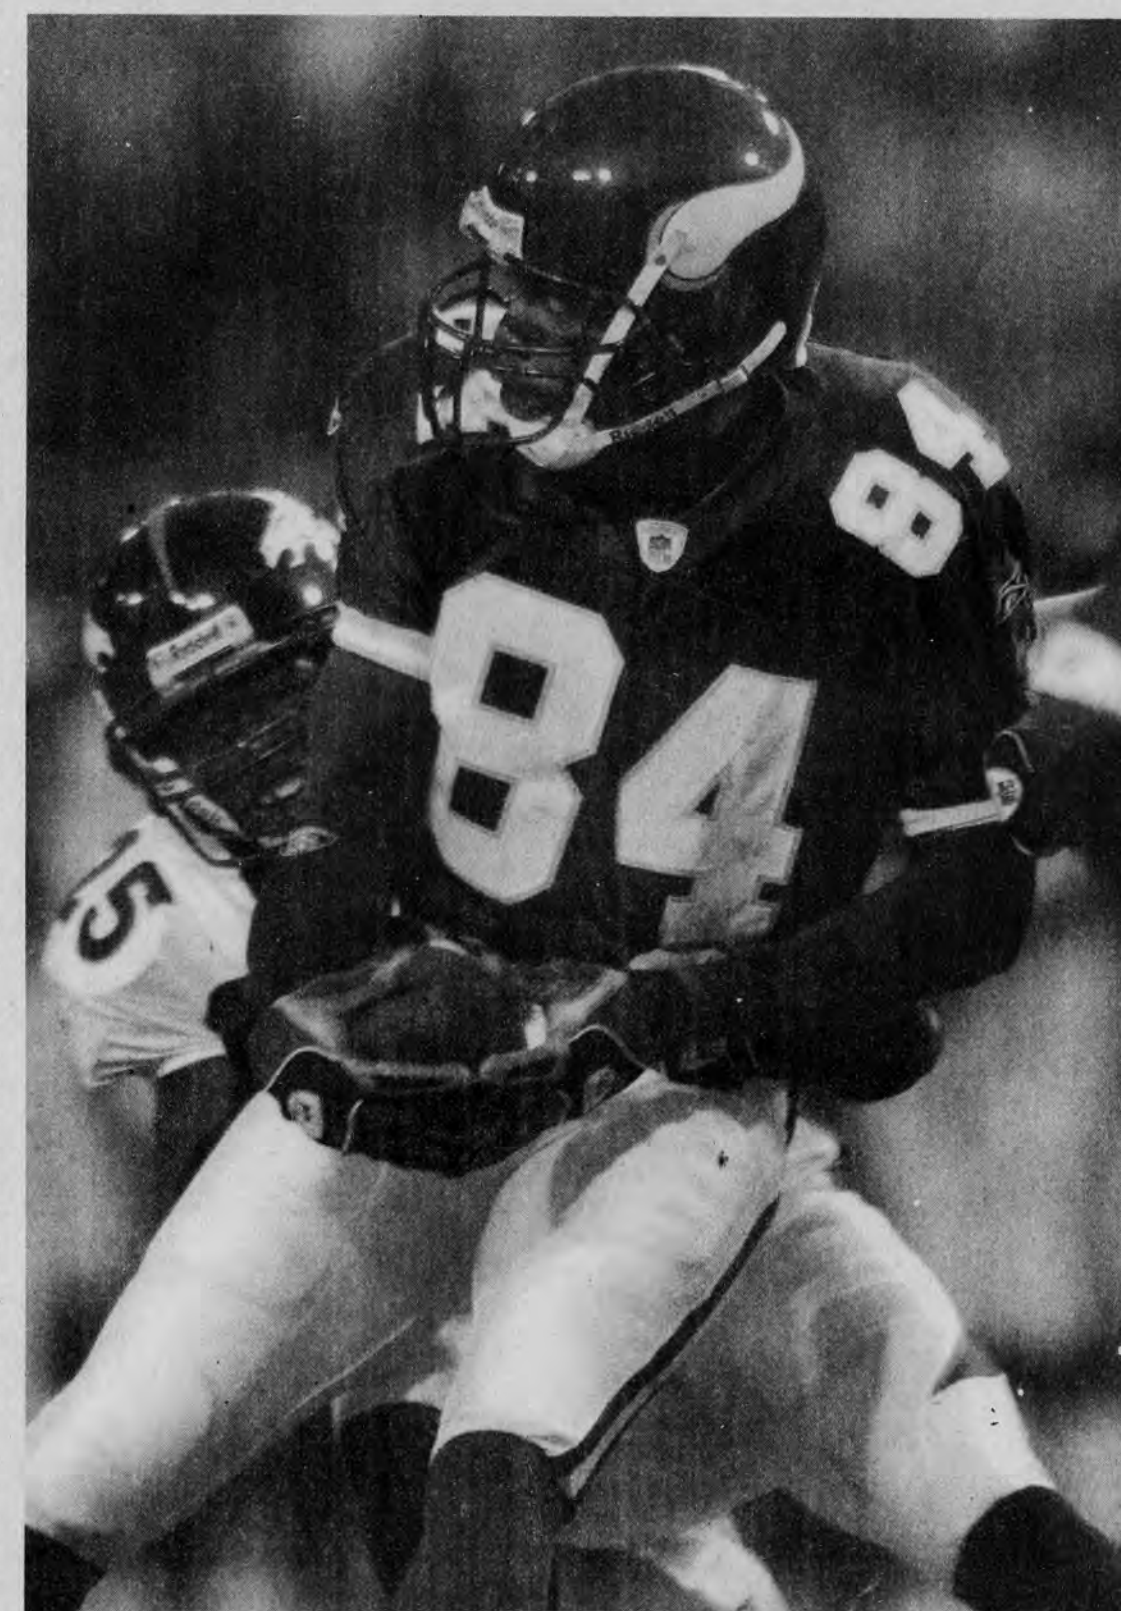

Another player who is having a great year is Peyton Manning. Manning is probably the most technically proficient quarterback in the game right now. He also happens to run one of the most difficult and demanding offenses in the league. Sure he has Marvin Harrison; sure he has Reggie Wayne, Marcus Pollard and Dallas Clark. The fact is, you could give a number of quarterbacks these weapons, and they would still look as inept as the Soviets in Afghanistan. Manning makes it work. He is directing traffic and delivering the ball. He is making the right choices at the line. In the huddle the offensive coordinator gives him roughly three plays, and Manning has to pick and a defense that can slow other teams down and keep them out of the end zone, so he doesn't have to take as many risks to win games. Fewer risky throws where he prays for the Manning is scarily good. If there is a quarterback who has the chance to pass for 5,000 yards in a season every year, Manning is it.

He isn't what you'd call a

Courtesy of Reuters
Randy Moss looks at teammate Moe Williams before firing off a lateral to Williams for a stunning touchdown pass against the Broncos. Moss continues to impress the league with his skill.

call one at the line once he's seen the defense. I assure you this is no easy task. He's well on track for another 4,000-yard season and a couple dozen passing touchdowns.

The key is that he now has completion equals fewer turnovers, and fewer turnovers equals fewer scoring opportunities for the other team, which leads to wins. You want a quarterback who compares to Marino? Well here you go.

mobile guy, since he's built in the frame of the old field general quarterbacks who take command of the offense and direct their drives from the pocket. This guy isn't going to kill you with his foot speed;

he's going to get you with his release timing, his mechanics and his incredible knowledge of his offense.

Finally, we come to Dante Hall. I just have to talk about this guy. He is that gifted. When you have a guy who is averaging over 20 yards per punt return and over 25 on kickoffs, you've got something special. This guy shortens the field for the offense and provides a scoring threat every time he steps on the field. His field awareness is uncanny. He doesn't see the seam, he feels it and then he gets there and bursts through it. His play is forcing special teams to become more of a focus for his opponents.

Teams are afraid to kick to him and kick away reason. Teams either kick good from him and risk losing a few yards in field position on punts, or they risk kicking out of bounds and taking the penalty on kick-offs. If they kick to him, it's like playing Russian roulette and hoping your luck is better than Christopher Walken's in "The Deer Hunter."

It's like having a designated hitter who bats .400 and can hit over 30 home runs a season. The guy puts his team in a position to win, and he has almost single-handedly won a few games himself this season. He ignites the flame that is the Chiefs offense. Like the great Bruce Springsteen once said, "You can't start a fire without a spark." Well here is your spark, and his name is Dante.

There are plenty of other guys out there who are exceeding the expectations placed upon them before the season, and there are other guys who are posting good numbers for yet another great year. These are the guys who I think are the keys to winning for each team.

I won't go as far as saying they are the heart and soul of their teams, but I will say this: you throw almost any other player in these guys' positions, and these teams wouldn't be where they are right now.

Hopefully these guys will continue to put up numbers in the win column and won't do anything to justify political commentators calling them overrated.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

U.N. resolution reached for Iraq

By MATT HINSON
Senior Writer

The United Nations (U.N.) Security Council last Thursday unanimously passed Resolution 1511 which stresses the temporary nature of the coalition forces' rule in Iraq and the sovereignty of Iraq through governance by its own people. The United States presented the resolution as a breakthrough in its attempts to obtain more universal backing for the reconstruction of Iraq.

The resolution calls for, according to The Washington Times, a "timetable and program for the drafting of a new constitution for Iraq and for the holding of democratic elections under that constitution so the Iraqi people will progressively take control of their own affairs."

The resolution authorizes a multinational force to contribute to the stability of the country—a provision greatly desired by the United States as an affirmation of the legitimacy of the occupation. This resolution also calls for U.N. member states to provide assistance, to aid Iraq's speedy reconstruction.

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell said that the passage shows "a great achievement for the entire Security Council to come together again in this manner," according to CNN.

This resolution's text stresses the temporary nature of the coalition forces' rule in Iraq and the sovereignty of Iraq under governance by its own people.

Despite the adoption of the resolution, many still harbor doubts and reservations.

"Although we consider the resolution to be an important step in the right direction, I would have liked to see more inclusion of French, Russian and German concerns in the final draft of the resolution," said Germany's U.N. Ambassador Gunter Pleuger.

Up until the passage of the resolution, the United States had been fearful that despite multiple revisions, the resolution would only receive the "yea" vote of nine of the 15 nations on the U.N. Security Council. Although enough votes for a passage of the resolution, the United States would still be in a precarious position because the vote would have shown how divided the world remains over the war in Iraq.

In related news, a new agency will be established in Iraq to be run by the U. N. and World Bank to distribute funds earmarked by nations other than the United States for Iraq's reconstruction. This agency will be independent of U.S. forces' control.

"For political reasons, they [European nations] don't want their funds to be perceived as being commingled with funds controlled by the Coalition Provisional Authority (C.P.A.). They want their own say over how the money is spent," said a World Bank official to The New York Times.

The U.S. Congress recently pledged almost $87 billion for military and reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan and Iraq, while Japan, Britain, Canada and Spain have pledged a total of $3 billion for 2004.

Ignite the white!
Zoom!
whiter brighter
faster

Whiten your teeth in
one hour or one weekend!

Take your first step to feeling good, looking great and making a memorable impression every time you smile. You have to try Zoom! Find out more about Zoom Professional Teeth Whitening. Call today!

523-3207
David R. Robinson, DMD, P.C.
339 Market St.
Lewisburg, Pa.
(Downtown)

Bring this ad in & receive 15% off any whitening procedure

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST
SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN

1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for
2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Pennsylvania legislature reduced the blood alcohol level at which an automobile driver is considered drunk to 0.08 in response to a federal mandate. The new limit is common in most developed countries, but many claim the law needs to become even stricter.

State laws get tough on alcohol

By LINDSEY GENTEL
Staff Writer

Pennsylvania Governor Edward Rendell signed a new piece of legislation lowering the state's DUI limit for blood-alcohol content (BAC) from 0.10 to 0.08 on Sept. 30. The new law also creates a three-tiered punishment system for offenders.

The 0.08 limit took effect on Sept. 30, but the law's new penalty system will not be in place until Feb. 1.

"There will be fewer alcohol-related fatalities because of the 0.08 level. This bipartisan, bicameral bill is something that all Pennsylvanians can be proud of," Sen. Charlie Dent, R-Lehigh, sponsor of the Senate's version of the bill and one of the Senate negotiators, said to The Morning Call.

A federal mandate required states to reduce the blood alcohol level at which a driver is considered drunk to 0.08 by Sept. 30. Had Pennsylvania failed to meet this deadline, the state would have lost nearly $12 million in federal highway construction money. Likewise, if the legislature had not approved changes to laws that deal with repeat DUI offenders, the state would have lost an additional $22 million.

Pennsylvania has already forgone $3 million in federal incentive grants because it did not meet a July deadline to lower the state blood-alcohol level. After two months of discussions over the law's sanctions, the State House of Representatives and Senate finally released a compromised version of the legislation.

"We looked at the entire law and did a complete rewrite with the hope that the revisions will improve the recidivism rate and that the people who need treatment will get it," said Rep. Craig Dally, R-Northampton to The Morning Call.

The new law creates distinct punishments for those caught driving drunk with children in the car and increasingly rigorous penalties based on a

In contrast, a fourth-time offender with a BAC of 0.10 to 0.159 percent would be charged with a first-degree misdemeanor and be required to serve a mandatory jail sentence of one year. There would also be a fine of $1,500 to $10,000, his license would be revoked for 18 months and the offender would have to use the ignition-interlock system for one year. The offender would also undergo rehabilitation treatment.

"There will be fewer alcohol-related fatalities because of the 0.08 level. This bipartisan, bicameral bill is something that all Pennsylvanians can be proud of."

—Sen. Charlie Dent, R-Lehigh

driver's BAC, according to The Philadelphia Inquirer. It also remands most first- and second-offense cases to a no-jury trial.

Among its other provisions, the law requires repeat DUI offenders to have ignition interlocking systems installed in their cars, preventing the cars from starting unless the driver is sober.

According to The Morning Call, the bill is meant to target addicts and repeat offenders. A first-time offender would be charged with an ungraded misdemeanor. In addition, all offenders would receive a maximum of six months' probation, pay a $300 fine, attend an alcohol highway-safety school and receive treatment as requirements of their sentences.

"This is going to be a piece of model legislation for the rest of the country," Rep. Dennis M. O'Brien, R-Philadelphia, who is the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, said to The Morning Call. "This isn't just because of a mandate. It's taking the system and making it work."

"These measures will save lives across Pennsylvania," said Rep. Rick Geist, R-Altoona, chairman of the House Transportation Committee, according to The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Not everyone is certain this legislation will reach its objectives. Matt McKinley, a resident of the Philadelphia suburbs, is one of these individuals. According to The Philadelphia

Inquirer, McKinley built an anti-0.08 Web site, www.keep-point10.com.

"It's locking up the wrong people. Your problem drinkers aren't at 0.08. They're at 0.15. They're the ones that are really causing the problems, getting in the serious wrecks," McKinley said.

A Boston University study, published in an issue of the American Journal of Public Health, concluded that lowering state BAC limits for drivers to 0.08 percent would save 500 to 600 lives annually in a national spectrum.

In addition, researchers suggest that the lower BAC limit will reduce annual alcohol-related fatalities by 12 percent and serious nighttime accidents by 7 percent, when compared with a 0.10 percent limit.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration report, "The Merits of a .08 BAC per se Law for Adult Drivers," drivers are significantly impaired even at 0.08 percent BAC.

For an average 170-pound man this translates into four cans of beer on an empty stomach in one hour.

Other conflicting reports suggest that the 0.08 limit will do little to change the behavior of those drivers who are most dangerous and most deadly—the repeat DUI offender whose blood alcohol level is greater than 0.15.

The 0.08 limit is common in most developed countries. A few, such as Sweden at 0.02 percent and Finland at 0.05 percent, have tighter limits.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

"Under God" left up to the Court

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Writer

The U.S. Supreme Court announced last week that it would hear a case concerning whether the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance violate the establishment clause of the U.S. Constitution.

The case comes from the Ninth Circuit Court, which is based in San Francisco and encompasses nine Western states. The court ruled that the words "under God" are unconstitutional.

Michael Newdow filed the suit against the Elk Grove Unified School District where his daughter attends school. She was nine years old when the suit was filed. Newdow is an atheist who was recently admitted to the California bar and will be representing himself.

The lawsuit is complicated by the fact that Mr. Newdow was never married to the girl's mother and did not have custody of his daughter for a period of time.

Her mother, Sandra Banning, has publicly supported the pledge. According to CNN, Banning said she believes the pledge is a "patriotic expression."

The New York Times reported that Banning not only supported the pledge but also felt that her daughter should recite it because it is a "part of her education."

According to The Washington Post, Newdow has argued that the words "under God" establish an official doctrine of monotheism and therefore excludes polytheistic and atheistic beliefs.

The words "under God" were not always part of the pledge, but were added in 1954 in order to distinguish American values, including those of a religious nature, from communist ideas. The pledge has been held constitutional by the Supreme Court twice before.

In a 1943 case brought by Jehovah's Witnesses, the Court ruled students could not be compelled to recite the pledge.

"When I look at my life and the world around me, I think

Courtesy of Gerard Padden

The Pledge of Allegiance to the United States of America has come under fire as a case before the Supreme Court questions the constitutionality of the "under God" clause. These phrase was added to the pledge in 1954.

it's impossible not to see God working, but I know and respect that some people do not see things the way I do. In the case of saying 'under God' in the pledge, I think it's appropriate if people want to say it, but anyone can choose to be silent during that phrase."

University Chaplain Ian Oliver acknowledges the complexity of the issue.

"The balancing point between giving citizens with religious beliefs the freedom to express their beliefs in public with giving nonreligious citizens the freedom not to have others' beliefs imposed on them involuntarily, is very difficult, even at a private institution like Bucknell," Oliver said.

The case has been divisive for the Supreme Court. Justice Antonin Scalia recused himself from the case, meaning that he will not participate in the decision. This allows for the possibility of an example of Constitutional misinterpretation.

In Scalia's opinion, the rule

"When I look at my life and the world around me, I think it's impossible not to see God working, but I know and respect that some people do not see things the way I do. In the case of saying 'under God' in the pledge, I think it's appropriate if people want to say it, but anyone can choose to be silent during that phrase."

—Katy Timer '04,
Bucknell Student Government president

bility of a 4-4 tie which would affirm the Ninth Circuit's ruling. Scalia chose to abstain after he was criticized for remarks that he made citing the Ninth Circuit's decision as ing is a part of a mistaken attempt to "exclude God from the public forums and from political life," reported The Washington Post.

These remarks violated the Craig Staufenberg '07, who defines himself as an atheist agrees that Newdow's claim is legitimate but questions whether it should be pursued.

"It's ignorant for a parent to assume that they can control every influence on their child. He should be confident enough in his ability to raise his child as he sees fit instead of having to resort to pointless lawsuits," said Staufenberg.

Others make a differentiation between vague references to God that are made in daily governmental functions, such as the words "in God we trust" appearing on currency or the words in the Declaration of Independence that state that people are "endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights," and acts that have been deemed explicit violations of the establishment clause by the Supreme Court, such as prayer in school.

Oliver claims this is the first step to reaching a resolution.

"One issue that the courts will eventually have to deal with is defining the line between 'civil religion,' that is, the relatively neutral religious expression of the pledge or 'in God we trust,' and government entanglement with particular sectarian religious expression," Oliver said. "Removing every iota of religion from American public life is impossible and unnecessary, but, on the other hand, one should never underestimate the potential for majority groups to go too far in assuming their beliefs are everyone's beliefs."

According to The New York Times, the case, Elk Grove Unified School District v. Newdow, will be argued sometime in February or March. Most news sources agree the Court will probably announce a decision sometime in the summer of 2004.

Recently, the Ninth Circuit has also received media attention because of its involvement in the California recall election and a decision allowing doctors to recommend medicinal marijuana to their patients, according to The Washington Post.

Telemarketers get disconnected

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has been working on producing a national Do Not Call Registry since June. The registry prohibits telemarketers from soliciting their company to registered phone numbers. The list applies only to telemarketers, and not to non-profit organizations, politicians or pollsters. The Web site claims that this list currently has 53.7 million registered phone numbers. Likewise, CNN.com reports 27 states that have individual registries in conjunction with the national list.

"All these consumers have stated that they want an end to telemarketing calls," said FTC Chairman Timothy J. Muris. The American public is clearly making a statement. In fact, the day the Registry started in June, 730,000 people registered their numbers, CNN.com reported.

U.S. District Judge Edward W. Nottingham ruled on Sept. 23 that the FTC does not have the authority to create such a list, according to CNN.com. He also ruled in Denver on Sept. 25 that the specific law is unconstitutional on the grounds that the Registry infringes upon freedom of speech.

"The registry creates a burden on one type of speech based solely on its content, without a logical, coherent, privacy-based or prevention-of-abuse-based reason supporting the disparate treatment of different categories of speech," Nottingham said.

Muris responded to the argument that the list will infringe upon freedom of speech in a press release issued Oct. 20.

"The Do Not Call Registry does not ban any speech, it simply offers consumers a choice about what speech is welcome in their homes. The Registry allows commercial telemarketing to be directed to see consumers except those who have placed their numbers on the list," Muris said.

Muris' testimony also claims that the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) has pledged to enforce the conditions of the Registry only to the telemarketing companies that have downloaded the list, but those that have not downloaded it will not be forced to abide.

Both Colorado and Oklahoma have supported court actions to deny the FTC the authority to create the list. CNN.com reported that Congress voted to allow the FCC the authority to create and implement the list on Sept. 26. This action seeks to negate the actions of Oklahoma and Colorado as well as Nottingham's complaints.

In support of the Registry, Bush signed a bill that removed a large part of the hurdle barring the success of the list.

ReutersNews.com acknowledges the fact that while Bush's signature does not override the free speech concerns brought up by both the Oklahoma and Colorado courts, it will allow the FCC to assist the FTC in enforcing the goals of the registry.

In discussing the matter among University students, it has been found that most students agree with the registry and find that it is unfair for anyone to attempt to curb the success of the list.

"I find the companies' ability to call private residences at any hour to sell their product extremely offensive. I find it even more offensive that the companies are using freedom of speech to defend their actions. I believe that the interests of the citizens far outweigh the interests of the corporations. If their other advertising strategies are so ineffective that they must resort to disturbing people's privacy, they have bigger issues to contend with," said Megan McWhinney '07.

Due to the legal issues surrounding this list, the FTC was unable to fully and finally implement the list until Friday, Oct. 12. This is only 11 days after it was hoping the list would be put into effect.

In just the short time that the list has been in use, the FTC reports that registered consumers have already filed more than 15,000 complaints against telemarketers that have violated the conditions of the Registry.

However, the FTC is still claiming that if people signed up for the list after August, they will most likely continue to receive "those dinner time calls" until December when the companies are able to fully update their registries.

In extended efforts made on the part of the government to respect consumers' privacy, ReutersNews.com says that Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) has been trying to develop a "do not spam" list for the Internet.

Schumer released a poll that shows that a great deal of Americans support his idea for a registry that will set up a list of e-mail addresses that don't want to receive spam messages on Oct. 15.

Unfortunately, his efforts have attracted little support in Washington because many of the "anti-spam" activists say that the spammers will simply ignore the list and that his goals are nearly impossible.

While the list continues to exist under scrutiny, the FTC and the FCC are doing everything in their power to combat negative motions to curb the success of the list.

FCC Chairman Michael Powell spoke in support of the list after the bill's White House signing ceremony.

"What you've got is virtually everyone in federal government here working to leave no avenue unexploited to try to make sure that the list works as fully as legally possible," said Powell according to ReutersNews.com.

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts

800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL

ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

FEATURES

Studying abroad in Northern Ireland

By LAUREN MINACAPPELLI
Writer

The unique Bucknell in Northern Ireland program offers students both a social and educational experience.

"The trip is really a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity that shouldn't be passed up," Jennifer Perrin '05.

The program consists of three and a half weeks during which students complete two Psychology William Flack and Professor of Sociology Carl Milofsky. The first trip was taken in May-June 2002.

The program was started for many reasons.

"We wanted to expose students to the social science of serious societal conflict," Flack said.

Flack says that Milofsky was already in contact with professors at the University of Ulster-Coleraine.

"I was invited by the Association for Voluntary Action Research in Ireland to give talks at Trinity in Dublin and the University of Ulster in 1999 since I knew Arthur Williamson and some other Irish scholars from my research on nonprofit organizations. I found Northern Ireland particularly interesting from a sociological standpoint, I think because the community life there is especially rich and complicated," Milofsky said.

While Milofsky took particular interest in the community, Flack saw much to be studied from a psychological standpoint.

"I was interested in the psychological impact of the sectarian conflict in Northern Ireland," Flack said.

Both professors are committed to the use of service-learning as a tool in their courses.

"When you study abroad it is most important that you get to know local people well and that you come to experience their political, personal, and cultural challenges," Milofsky said.

This is reflected by the requirement that each student spend two days per week in a community program. There is a wide variety of community placements and each involves cross-community/peace-and-reconciliation efforts.

"They range from work in working-class community centers for mothers to helping the Bogside Artists with their public artworks to production work at a community theater, and working with the developmentally disabled in an outpatient hospital setting," Flack said.

According to Flack, this is one of the most unique and important aspects of the program.

"[This program promotes] student and faculty exchanges and collaborative efforts in both teaching and research" Flack said.

One of the hopes of Milofsky's and the other professors at the University of Ulster, is that the Bucknell in Northern Ireland program will lead to further educational efforts along similar lines—studying societal conflict in other societies, including the United States, and to the development of research projects for both faculty and students.

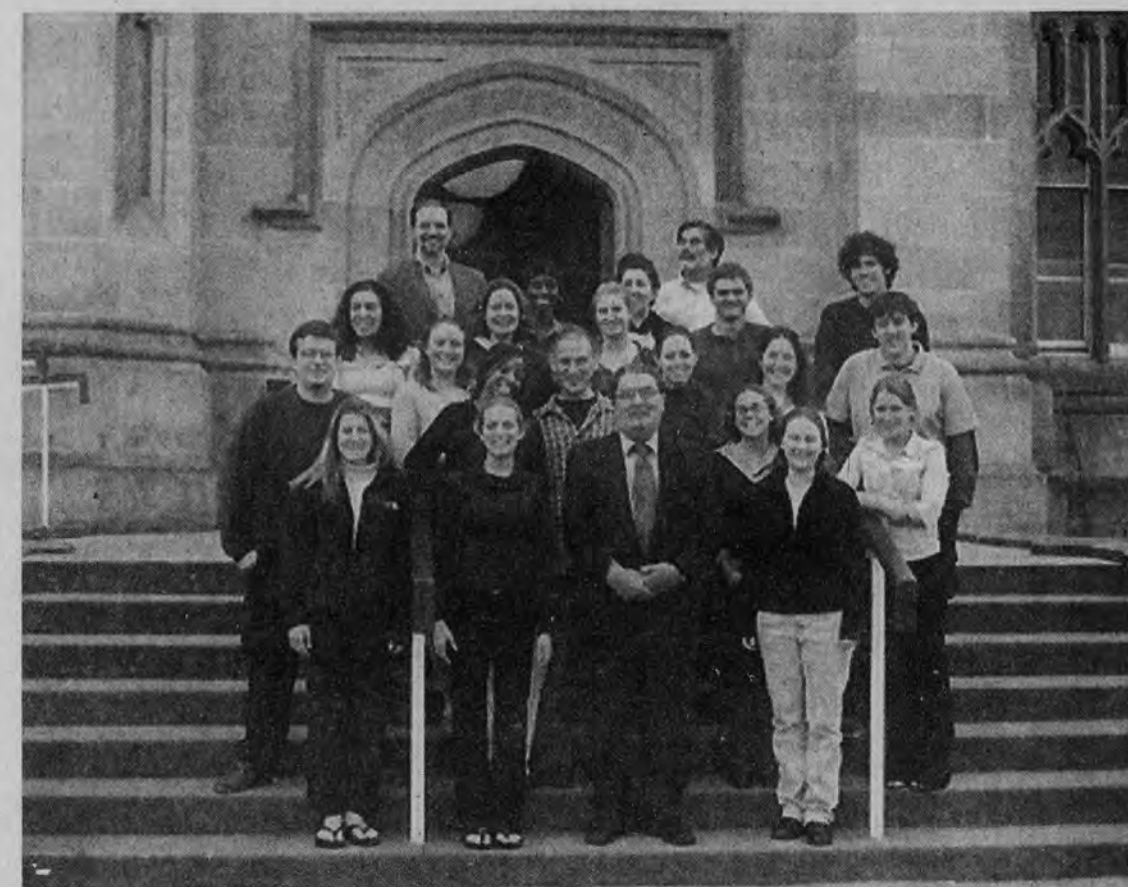

"I decided to go on the trip because it sounded like an amazing opportunity to study a real-life conflict and another culture while getting a chance to experience amazing scenery," Perrin said.

She says there are many positive aspects of the program, especially the educational opporunities.

"We talked with all of the national leaders and key people in the [Catholic vs. Protestant] peace process," Perrin said.

One of these leaders is John Hume, former leader of the Social and Democratic Labor Party (SDLP). He won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1998 with David Trimble for their work on the peace process in Northern Ireland. The group also met leaders of the Catholic civil rights movement from the 1960s and 70s—Ivan Cooper, Bernadette (Devlin) McAliskey and Eamonn McCann. Other highlights of the program included day trips for sightseeing, during which the group saw the highest sea cliffs in Europe, extremely old castles and forts.

Courtesy of William Flack

The members of the Northern Ireland program congregate in front of the Hume, one of the many architectural marvels they experienced while abroad. Time was spent experiencing the culture both through touring and interacting with Ireland's native population.

According to Perrin, the only negative aspect of the trip is that there wasn't much time to do independent sightseeing or trips because the program's schedule was packed.

Overall both participants and faculty find the program to be both educationally fulfilling and emotionally gratifying.

"There are profound lessons to be learned in this tiny country of two million that may well help in the solution of violent and non-violent conflict elsewhere in the world," Flack said.

more respect for the miners. You can't appreciate it until you see it," Larry Weiser of Northumberland said.

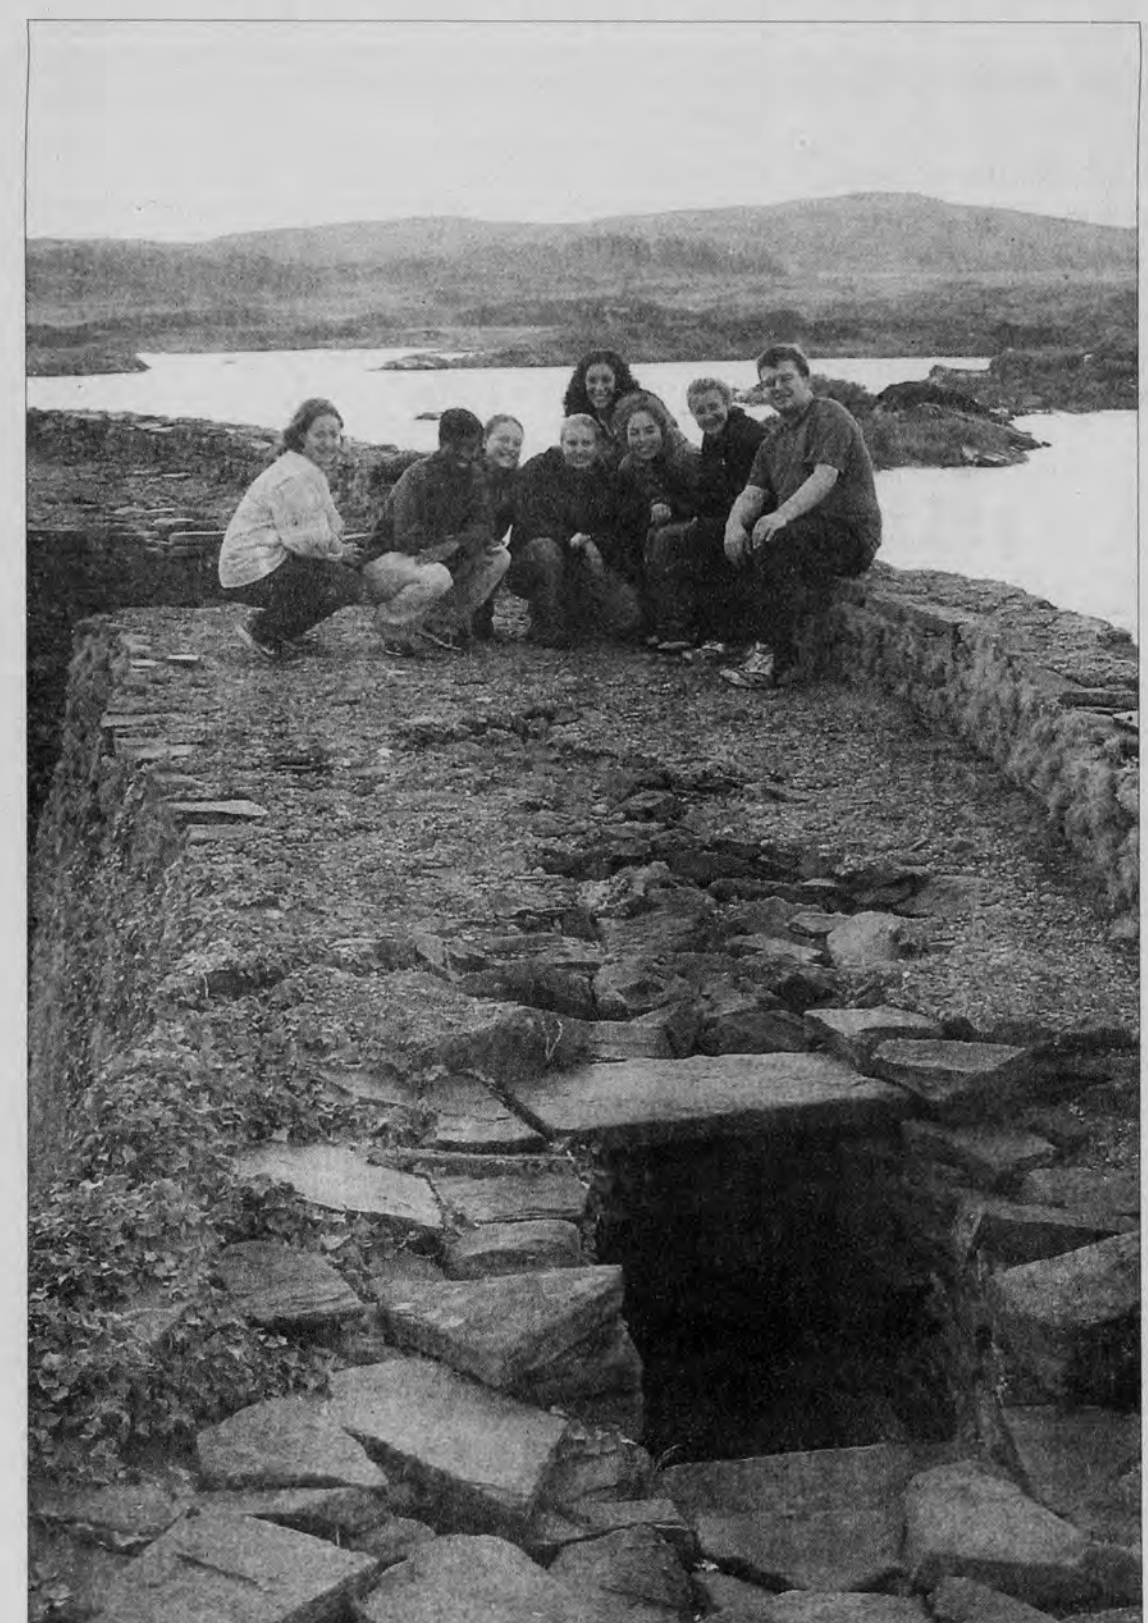

The Pioneer Tunnel also houses the "Henry Clay," an old-fashioned steam locomotive.

"At the time of the opening of Pioneer Tunnel in 1962, two lokies were purchased from a scrap yard in Hazleton, Pa., and completely refurbished," the mine's press release said. The train has now been running for 41 years and is the only one of its kind in operation. The locomotive takes

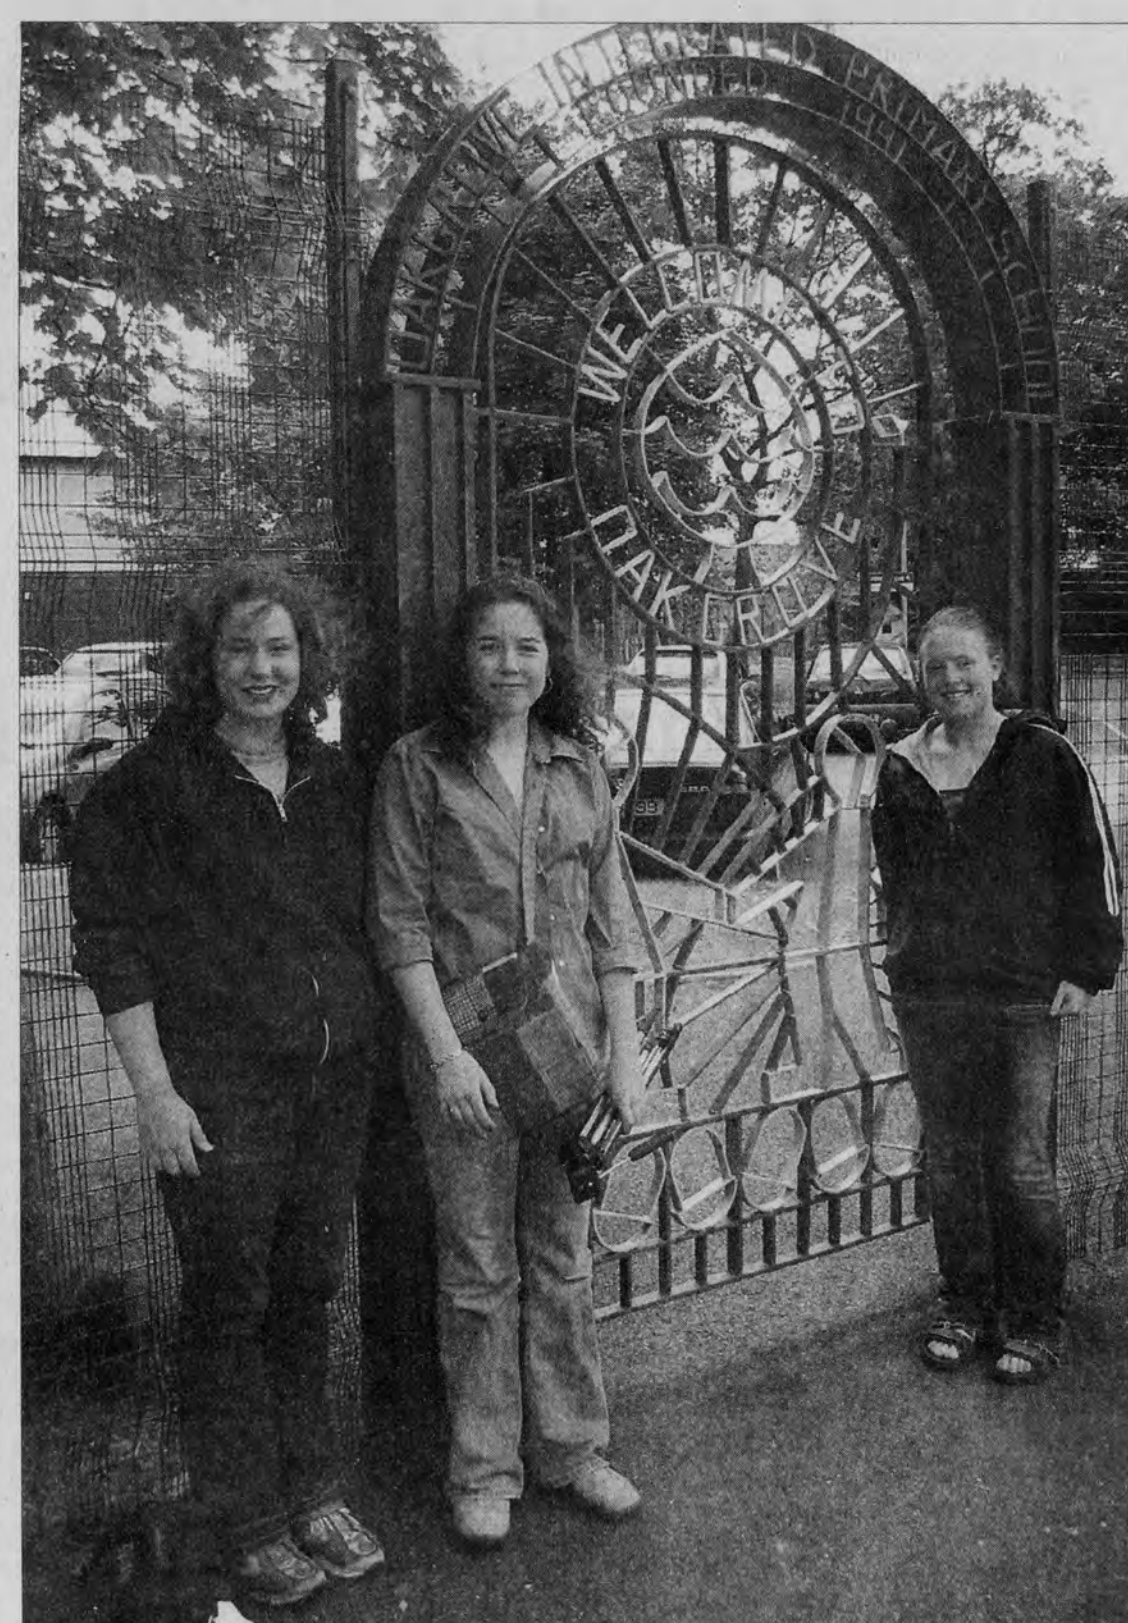

"There are profound lessons to be learned in this tiny country of two million that may well help in the solution of violent and non-violent conflict elsewhere in the world."

—William Flack, associate professor of psychology

300-level courses, study the Catholicism versus Protestantism conflict and experience the community first-hand through working in it. The three-and-a-half-week program was co-developed in the spring and fall of 2001 by Assistant Professor of

The students who participated in Bucknell in Northern Ireland last year enjoyed some cultural experiences along with their education. (Left) A group enjoyed the view while touring the historic Doon Fort. (Right) Cassie Lajeskie '04, Katie Breitenbach '05 and Jennifer Perrin '05 toured the Oakgrove School.

Photos Courtesy of William Flack

USA SPRING BREAK.com
Cancun, Bahamas, Acapulco, Jamaica & More!
Don't be fooled! Go with Quality and Experience!
28 years in business!
Largest Student Tour Operator
(Division of USA Student Travel)
Call Toll Free: 1-877-460-6077
Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $$

FREE Ticket to Paradise
with every Spring Break package!
Limited time offer. Check our website for details!
www.studentexpress.com
Call NOW: 1.800.787.3787

HARVEST HOUSE CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP
GO Vertical
310 Market St.
Downtown Lewisburg
Under CVS
Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

Wash Tubs
-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570) 524-9839

FEATURES

History comes alive at the Pioneer Coal Mine

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Coal mining is deeply engrained in the history, heritage and hills of northeastern Pennsylvania. In the town of Ashland, 52 miles down Route 61, this mining can still be experienced at the Pioneer Tunnel Coal Mine.

"Pioneer Tunnel was once an operating mine that produced an average of 400 tons of coal daily, but which now stands as a monument to those who engaged in the tedious, often dangerous, task of coal mining," according to a press release for the coal mine.

The mine operated from 1911 to 1931, but was reopened in 1962 for tourism. Now, rather than producing coal, the mine brings tourists—about 44,000 annually. This, combined with the mine's unique appeal, led the Pennsylvania Travel Industry Advisory Council to name the tour one of the top 10 tourist attractions in Pennsylvania.

The attraction is twofold, consisting of a tour of an anthracite coal mine and a ride on an old-fashioned steam locomotive. Each part runs about one half hour including a guided narration.

"[During the tour], tourists are given an explanation by experienced miner-guides of how coal is mined. There are maps, charts and exhibits inside the mine depicting the mining operation. Guides also point out gangways and a vein of coal, along with other points of interest inside the mine," the press release said.

Highlights in the mine include the Mammoth vein—the largest vein of anthracite coal in the world—and a view of the lower two levels of the mine, 300 feet below where the tourist stands. The tourist becomes surrounded by the miner's world.

"It gives you a lot

What to do in the middle of NOWHERE visitors on a short-guided tour around Mahonoy Mountain, home to the coal mine. Cars used by the train were used explosives to seal the entrance, leaving all the equipment preserved inside.

During the ride, you can view a replica of a bootleg mining operation. These were a common sight during the Great Depression, when conflict frequently erupted between these miners and the police forces used by the large coal companies to control them.

Total costs for both the train and the mine tour add up to $13, and visitors to the mine can treat themselves to snacks or souvenirs from the gift shop.

The press release said that the tun-

"It gives you a lot more respect for the miners. You can't appreciate it until you see it."

—Larry Weiser

found in the abandoned mine. After the mine closed, the coal company

Julianne Pietak—The Bucknellian

The Pioneer Coal Mine offers tourists a peek into the heart of what used to be central Pennsylvania's livelihood. The mine shown above was reopened in 1962 for tourism.

Econo Lodge offers a unique experience

Lewisburg's option in economic motels, one stay here may be enough for most visitors

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

♦ HOTEL REVIEW

The college search process is an intense one, involving countless hours of investigative work to determine what you're looking for in a school. Your top choices need to be narrowed down, and then, for most people, comes the college visits, checking out the campus and the student body as well as the surrounding town. Oftentimes these visits involve an overnight stay at a local hotel/motel establishment.

After completing my investigative work and deciding this University was a likely match for me, I decided to pay it a visit. And because this was the first step in declaring my independence from my parents, I wanted to do it on my own terms. I went with three others to rent a motel room and look at the University. We wanted to take in the sights and sounds of Lewisburg without our parents looming over our shoulders. In theory, the plan was full proof, until we realized our limited budgets would force us to stay in a lower-scale establishment. And we certainly got what we paid for.

For that particular visit we stayed in the Econo Lodge, located just past the University on Route 15. And our experience, both traumatic and entertaining, encouraged me to put out the word and deter any further University students or parents from subjecting themselves to such an establishment.

Check-in to the lodge was rather painless, and we managed to find our room without too much difficulty. But it is what we found once we got there that turns this from a fairy-tale into a horror story. The air was stale, as to be expected in a small motel room, but the lingering odor of cigarette smoke in this "smoke-free" room was hard to ignore. The beds, which were not exactly made, had a musty comforter atop two top sheets simply lain on the mattresses with just lying down in sight. I was tempted to take a blacklight to them, but

Steve Young—The Bucknellian

The Econo Lodge, located past the University on Route 15, offers an economic lodging option. Keep in mind that you will certainly get what you paid for.

decided I didn't really want to know what there was to be discovered.

"Once I got past the sandpaper rough and stained sheets, I thought sleeping wouldn't be so bad. But then I discovered a nice gathering of hair in my mouth from just lying down onto the pillow," Ryan Palmer '06 said.

The bathroom wasn't much better. The towels were about big enough to cover a 6-year-old child's body, and the tub hadn't seen a good cleaning since leg warmers were the height of fashion.

"Thank goodness I'd brought shower-shoes with me, because the chance of contracting a foot fungus from that shower was higher than I was willing to risk," Lectie Altman '06 said.

It wasn't just the room itself that was difficult to bear. The view out of the bathroom window was frightening enough to keep anyone away. Apparently the locals have been storing their garbage, abandoned cars and general unsanitary waste back there for sometime now, and we had the room with the most picturesque view.

"There was a nice array of garbage and plywood out there. It looked like a dump," Palmer said.

My favorite part of the entire Econo Experience was not the sheets, complete with a whole array of DNA samples, or even the bathroom with its mold-motif. What made the visit complete for me was the extra pillows. The four of us are pillow-loving people, and we needed to ask the proprietor for a few extra so could rest up properly for a day of Lewisburg exploration. That was, bar-none, the biggest mistake of the trip. The pillows smelled so strongly of curry that laying your head upon them was impossible. We had to keep them outside of the room all night or else we would pass out from the smell. And we incurred the same problem with the extra towels. After drying off with one you felt almost dirtier than you had pre-shower.

Yet despite the less-than-stellar caliber of the hotel, we still managed to have a good time. Maybe it's our generally light-hearted nature. Or our youthful ability to be able to take even the worst of situations and turn it into something fun. But even though I will forever remember my Econo Lodge experience as both unique and wholly entertaining, I'm going to have to recommend that none of you ever subject yourself to that particular establishment. And I encourage you to spread the word to loved ones who may come visit you over Parents' and/or Siblings' Weekend. For though we managed to find some sunshine in that dark experience, I'm almost certain our parents, and likewise your parents, would not be so amused because not much has changed since my visit a year and a half ago.

FEATURES

The Galloway House, located on St. Catherine Street, is where some members of C&H live. This year is its 10th anniversary.

Enjoying sobriety and longevity C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S. celebrates its 10-year anniversary

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

I'm sure there are some people out there who, ill-informed like me, think that there is an unnaturally large population of University students obsessed with the cartoon Calvin and Hobbes. Why else would there be an entire organization, not to mention a house, dedicated to it? But we are sorely mistaken. I'm here to set the record straight and make sure those out there who were so misguided never have to be publicly embarrassed by revealing their true naivete.

C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S. (C&H), which stands for Creating A Lively, Valuable, Ingenious and New Habit Of Being at Bucknell and Enjoying Sobriety, was originally founded by Matt Bellace '96.

"One motivation for starting C&H was to create more substance-free social options on campus. By my sophomore year, I realized I wasn't having the 'time of my life' at Bucknell. In high school, I had a lot of friends that were substance free, and we always knew how to have fun. I just wanted to bring that to Bucknell," Bellace said.

During its first year, C&H had only seven members, with a budget barely big enough to sustain its limited activities. Yet after only two years it acquired a house, had a sizeable budget increase and were holding campus-wide events nearly every weekend. The group has also earned national acclaim and has been featured by the likes of U.S. News and World Report.

"How times have changed ... at Bucknell University, an anti-drinking group called C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S. has moved into fraternity row," U.S. News and World Report said.

The house C&H acquired in 1995 was previously inhabited by Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. The University purchased it after Sigma Phi Epsilon left campus because of repeated alcohol violations and financial troubles. Ironically, it was then given to the University's newest non-drinking organization after nine months of costly renovations. And though C&H has since moved downtown to the Galloway House on St. Catherine Street, with Sigma Phi Epsilon's return to fraternity row, its numbers have remained high.

"The course they have taken has made me tremendously proud ... Socially, there were fewer substance-free options in 1993 than today, and the influence of C&H has a lot to do with that," Bellace said.

Unbelievable to some who doubted C&H would entertain longevity at a school like the University, the 10-year anniversary is this year.

"I always hoped it would live on beyond my time at Bucknell, but never imagined it would do so well for so long. I remember a conversation with a student in 1995 when she said, 'You don't think this group will make it to 2000, do you?' She was being really negative, but I just smiled," Bellace said.

In honor of its extended success, the group will be celebrating "C&H style." This weekend there will be a retreat at the Cowan Retreat Center for current members and alumni.

"It is shaping up to be the biggest extravaganza in C&H history. By invitation only," current C&H president Ken Romeo '04 said.

The founding father of C&H will be returning to campus on Nov. 15 for a comedy show open to all University students at the 7th Street Café. A professional motivational speaker, Bellace will be performing in the comedy show along with Pete Dominick.

C&H has not only been recognized by the University community, but it has also spurred the creation of similar organizations at campuses across the country. These "sibling organizations" are located at The College of New Jersey, Rutgers, Drexel, Villanova and California Institute of Technology—all thank C&H for the inspiration it provided through its successes. Contact between the sibling organizations is frequent.

"We went to visit our sibling organization in New Jersey a few weeks ago," Romeo said.

Originally designed with the goal of providing its members and the rest of the University community with active and desirable choices to the current 'norms' of the campus social community, C&H has evolved into much more for many students and alumni, thanks to one student with big ideas.

"Like any group, C&H has gone through ups and downs. But the element I am most proud of today is the cohesion among the members. The strong bond that exists among C&H members is a model for other groups."

—Matt Bellace,
founder of C&H

It has turned into more than just another club. C&H has become a home away from home for many University students.

"C&H has been my Bucknell experience," Romeo said.

Shed the noise and find the open road with RoadTrip Nation

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

For people who are not sure what RoadTrip Nation is, their manifest of individuality is enough of an explanation.

"Everywhere you turn people try to tell you who to be and what to do with your life. We

Mike Marriner and Nate Gebhard with the beloved RV that took them 15,000 miles around the country. The group's future plans include more student involvement.

call that noise. Block it. Shed it. Leave it for the conformists. As a generation, we need to get back to focusing on individuality. Self-construction rather than mass production. Listen to yourself. Your road is the open road. Find it. Find the open road," according to RoadTripnation.com.

RoadTrip Nation was started in 2001 by a group of recent college graduates who, like many students at the University, had no idea what they wanted to do with their lives.

"Nate [Gebhard] and I started it at Pepperdine. We felt a lack of exposure to what was out there," said Michael Marriner, co-founder of RoadTrip Nation.

They drove 15,000 miles in a bright green RV to figure it out, and in the meantime, started a movement. They met upper-level executives across the nation, and the video tape of their experience has brought them fame in Forbes magazine and sponsorship from Nike and Apple. It has allowed them to extend what began as a search for themselves into an opportunity to reach out to college students everywhere.

"They set up over 150 interviews with people around the country who were successful and passionate about their careers ... Along the way, they learned many bits of wisdom through these interviews that they share in their documentary and through their website," said Sarah Bell, assistant director of the Career Development Center.

Last year, during its first national tour, the group chose the University as one of their stopping points.

"We had a friend who went to Bucknell a couple of years ago and loved it and said we had to visit it on our tour. We had such a great time last year on campus and met so many cool people that there was never a doubt about coming back," said Amanda Gall, a member of the original RoadTrip Nation team.

When the bright green RV pulls onto college campuses, it certainly draws attention to itself. But that's the idea. RoadTrip Nation will be visiting 20 college campuses during their fall tour this year, both to spread its message and to recruit students to have their own "Behind the Wheel" experience.

When it's not visiting campuses, the RV is traveling the countryside promoting "The Open Road," which is the original documentary that airs on the day of the visit on the PBS station in each of the towns where they stop.

"The Open Road" chronicles the original RoadTrip that Mike, Nate, Brian [McAllister] and I took after we graduated [from] college, which the book 'RoadTrip Nation' was written from."

Another titillating edition brought to you by ...

Sex and the Bubble

I was incredibly excited to get a question from a male reader this week! Perhaps I should have mentioned before that I do not discriminate in any way, shape or form, no matter the issue. I will answer questions from anyone! So keep them coming!

Dear Ms. O

I was wondering if you are able to answer questions from guys too, because I have a problem. I just started dating this girl and I can't tell if I am "satisfying" her. I was wondering if you could give me some tips on how to make hooking up more enjoyable for her. I want her to enjoy our time together as much as I do. Any advice you might be able to offer me from a female perspective would be great! Thanks.

—K

Dear 'K'

Wow! There should be more men out there like you who are actively looking for ways to make sure that the women they are with are satisfied! All kidding aside, I think that I can definitely help you out. First of all, I would start by playing what I like to call "nice" all over her body to relax her. You do this by running the very tips of your fingers all over her skin. Make sure that you rub everywhere and not just her back. Get her legs, her head and even her feet. Leave no part of her body untouched! This caressing will produce a slow and pleasurable torture that will warm her up and get her in the mood. Do not be skimpy on the caressing! When you think that you have been running your fingers over her for long enough, override that thought and continue to do it for at least another five or ten minutes.

While she is lying on her back, gently kiss the spot on the back of her neck where her neck and her shoulder meet. This will send tingles and goose bumps all up and down her body. Continue to kiss along her shoulder bone then back up to her neck and find the same spot on her other shoulder. If you are feeling really advanced, then you can continue to "play nice" along her arms and on her back while you are kissing her neck. Her senses will go wild!

From this point on I think that you can probably handle the situation. I would say that the general rule of thumb to follow in a situation like this is that if you like something that she does to you, chances are that she will enjoy the same thing on her body. Just respond to whatever she seems to be enjoying, and ask her if there is anything else that she would like you to do.

And don't forget that no matter what you do, you should be safe and always use protection!

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to The Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What's the best music to hook-up to?

Gall said.

Today, RoadTrip Nation will return to campus, parking its RV on Rooke Lawn all afternoon and then showing the documentary of last year's travels in the LC Forum at 7 p.m.

"They connected well with the students last year and seemed to inspire enthusiasm and interest in what they are doing. We really believe in the message they are sharing and hope students will use this opportunity to start thinking about what they would like to do if they didn't have expectations (their own and others) getting in the way," Bell said.

The members of RoadTrip Nation hope to continue broadening their horizons.

"About six months ago we accomplished our goals and started thinking it should be bigger than our road trip," Marriner said.

Though right now RoadTrip Nation primarily concentrates on spreading the word about its original trip and recruiting college students to take their own journeys, it will launch phase two this summer. It involves the first showing of a student documentary and a new book chronicling the experiences of each college visit the group has made.

"When we first set out, we were just on a search for what the heck is out there. We had no idea that we would come this far with it," Gall said.

October 31, 2003

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

inside Volume 132, Number 8
Spoof Section:
Read all the news that's not fit to print.
See section D

Carr arrested in shooting

Joshua Carr '07 was detained in Olin Science Tuesday afternoon

By SANDI-JO GALATI & ELISABETH SALEMME
Senior Editor & News Editor

Joshua B. Carr '07 was arrested by the Lewisburg Police Department (LPD) and charged with four counts of aggravated assault and four counts of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon on Tuesday afternoon. According to sources familiar with the investigation, the LPD executed a search warrant on Carr's vehicle and found a 1000S Daisy Pellet rifle, allegedly purchased at the Wal-Mart located on Rt. 15.

The LPD also charged 19-year-old Carr with possession of alcohol, marijuana and drug paraphernalia.

According to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, the University was not informed by the LPD that the arrest was going to be made.

"Typically, the criminal folks are given the lead [when it is both a University and criminal investigation]," Ferraro said.

Carr was arrested in Olin Science at approximately 3:15 p.m. on Tuesday after he met with Associate Professor of Mathematics Allen Schweinsberg to discuss his class.

"Shortly after leaving my office he was arrested," Schweinsberg said. "I had walked down the hall to get a drink of water when I saw two officers with him."

Lewisburg District Justice Leo Armbruster arraigned Carr and committed him to Union County Jail. Armbruster set bail at $200,000 for the assault charges and $1,000 for the marijuana and alcohol possession.

LPD Chief William R. Neitz, Jr. declined further comment about the details of the arrest.

Joshua Carr '04 who allegedly shot at four students with a pellet gun last week, has been arrested and is being held in the Union County jail located in the courthouse on South Second Street.

Carr allegedly shot at four University students last week with a high-powered air rifle using pointed pellets, hitting three students and narrowly missed the fourth. Two of the students sustained injuries and received medical treatment.

The students struck with pellets were walking through the quad area between Larison Hall, Vedder Hall and Harris Hall. The other student reported that he was talking on the phone near an open window in Larison Hall when a pellet struck the window frame.

According to Penn State's legal Web site, a person can serve from three to 36 months in jail for each count of aggravated assault and nine to 16 months in jail for each count of assault with a deadly weapon.

Students interviewed who live on the third and fourth floors of Larison declined to comment.

See SHOOTING page A3

Lewis speaks at U.N. to help create gender policy

By BRIANNA EVANS
Contributing Editor

Associate Professor Linden Lewis was invited by U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan to help create a policy on gender and masculinity.

See LEWIS page A2

University to renew its accreditation

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Writer

The University began the report for the renewal of its accreditation this week by requesting the opinions of the faculty, students and staff on its standards. The comments are considered in the University's Self-Study and are reviewed, along with an evaluation by a team of faculty and administrators from other Middle States universities, by the Middle States Commission on Higher Education.

"The opinions of the staff, students and faculty have a large role in the content and organization of the document," said Bucknell Student Government President Katy Tiner '04. "There are often dozens of suggestions that are made for each section, whether or expressed at the meeting or e-mailed to the writers."

Accreditation assures the students, parents, alumni and the public that the University meets the standards expected of a degree-granting institution.

"Every 10 years, the Middle States Commission on Higher Education reviews Bucknell for renewal of the University's accreditation," said Jerome Rackoff, director of institutional research and assessment. "Accreditation also enables eligibility for state, federal and foundation funds."

According to Rackoff, the Self-Study report has four major sections including introductory materials about the University, its accreditation history, the organization of the report, a section discussing the university's strengths and issues and a discussion of the standards for accreditation.

"The Middle States Accreditation assures the stu-

Newspaper confiscated at Hampton University

By PETER HACKEMAN
Editor-in-Chief

The Hampton Script, the campus newspaper of Hampton University, was confiscated last week by order of Acting President JoAnn Haysbert after Haysbert objected to the placement of her letter to the editor, which responded to a front-page story about health code violations at the University's cafeteria. Haysbert demanded that her letter be placed on the front page and when it was instead placed on page three, the acting president ordered all 6,500 copies of the Homecoming issue be confiscated.

Over the next few days, Talia Buford, the editor-in-chief of the Script, and Haysbert discussed the situation. By Friday, the two agreed to reprint the paper with the acting president's letter on the front page and to establish a task force to focus on the role of the newspaper at Hampton University. The task force was to include Buford, Daarel Burnette II (a sophomore journalism major), Chris Campbell, the dean of the Scripps Howard School of Journalism and Communications at Hampton University and three faculty members.

"We did this so we could have a Homecoming issue and we wanted to get this task force. We stepped out in faith," Buford said.

Yesterday, Haysbert changed her mind and added three additional faculty members to the task force, softening her commitment to abide by the task force's recommendations.

"I believe we'll work this out," said Buford. "If the rules of engagement are changed, there might be some problems. I don't know what we'll do if she reneges."

Hampton University's School of Journalism opened in September of 2002 as a partnership between the University

See HAMPTON page A3

OF GHOULS AND GOBLINS

The Best Buddies Program hosted a Halloween party for mentally disabled children on Saturday.

Sojka Awarded

University Professor and former Bucknell President Gary Sojka is recognized for his leadership.

See page A3

Volleyball

The women defeat Army 3-1, moving to 8-1 in the Patriot League

See page B1

Bucknellian Editorial

Hampton University deserves its bad press after its acting president ordered the confiscation of the student newspaper. Adding fuel to our Editorial Board's fire, The Script relented to the president's demands.

See page C4

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Oct. 19

MEDICAL TRANSPORT / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety stopped and identified a student in front of the 7th St. House. It was determined by Public Safety and Lewisburg Police Department who administered a Breathalyzer test that the student was highly intoxicated and needed medical treatment. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus. A Citation was issued for public drunkenness.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety received a report that unknown person(s) broke a window in the entrance to Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety observed a male student urinating on the University Avenue sidewalk. The student will be cited for disorderly conduct.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Sigma Chi Fraternity for a fire alarm activation. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the alarm was caused by a pull station being activated for no apparent reason by unknown persons(s). The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of an ill student. The male was gone when the officers arrived.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a small amount of blood on the floor. No witnesses or victims could be located in a search of the area.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of an ill student. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified a male as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21 years. The student was transported to Evangelical Emergency room for treatment and will be cited for underage consumption.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A Public Safety student security worker reported to Public Safety that a window had been broken by unknown person(s) at the Vedder Hall northwest door. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / BIOHAZARD CLEANUP—A student reported to Public Safety that she had fallen in Vedder Hall, cutting herself. She requested a biohazard cleanup of the blood. A custodian responded to disinfect the area.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on her car while it was parked at the 23 University Avenue parking lot. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall for the report of a student who had a slight seizure. An RA transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment. The student later returned to campus.

Monday, Oct. 20

UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to 23 University Avenue for the report of damage to a door. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

INFORMATION / SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Public Safety responded to Moore Avenue for the report of a suspicious male who had stepped out from behind a tree while a student was walking in the area. No one was located in a search of the area.

Tuesday, Oct. 21

SIMPLE ASSAULT—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall for the report of a student who was hit with a BB while he was walking between Vedder and Harris Halls. Upon investigation, it was determined that two other students were struck also. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Sigma Chi Fraternity for a fire alarm activation. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the alarm was caused by a pull station being activated for no apparent reason by unknown persons(s). The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / BIOHAZARD CLEANUP—A student reported to Public Safety that she had fallen in Vedder Hall, cutting herself. She requested a biohazard cleanup of the blood. A custodian responded to disinfect the area.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on her car while it was parked at the 23 University Avenue parking lot. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

MENT / ACCIDENTAL ACTIVATION—Public Safety responded to Marts/ Freas/ Vaughan Lit for a fire alarm activation that was caused by a student who accidentally activated a pull station with no malicious intent.

ACT 64 / DRUG VIOLATION / UNFOUNDED—Public Safety responded to a room at Roberts Hall for the report of marijuana odor. Upon arrival, Public Safety was unable to find evidence of marijuana use while conducting a plain view search of the room. The report was determined to be unfounded.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A Student Health Services driver notified Public Safety that she was transporting a resident of Larison Hall to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a foot injury. The student later returned to campus.

Wednesday, Oct. 22

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed his X-box video game from a lounge in McDonnell Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Thursday, Oct. 23

ACT 64—DRUG VIOLATION / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm activation at a Bucknell West Mod. Upon arrival, Public Safety detected the odor of marijuana in the room. During a plain view search, Public Safety observed marijuana and empty beer cans in the room. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. During the investigation, one of the residents returned to the Mod and admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Citations were filed for possession of controlled substance and drug paraphernalia, underage consumption, presence of empty alcohol containers in a room of an underage person, health and safety standards and possessing candles. East Buffalo Township Police Department charges are pending.

INFORMATION / SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Public Safety responded to Moore Avenue for the report of a suspicious male who had stepped out from behind a tree while a student was walking in the area. No one was located in a search of the area.

Tuesday, Oct. 21

SIMPLE ASSAULT—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall for the report of a student who was hit with a BB while he was walking between Vedder and Harris Halls. Upon investigation, it was determined that two other students were struck also. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Sigma Chi Fraternity for a fire alarm activation. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the alarm was caused by a pull station being activated for no apparent reason by unknown persons(s). The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / BIOHAZARD CLEANUP—A student reported to Public Safety that she had fallen in Vedder Hall, cutting herself. She requested a biohazard cleanup of the blood. A custodian responded to disinfect the area.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged the driver's side mirror on his car while parked in the parking lot behind Hulley House. The incident is under investigation.

Penn State professor speaks on child abuse

Professor of Psychology at Penn State Sandra Azar spoke on Oct. 24 about the causes of child abuse.

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

The psychology department welcomed its first speaker of the year, Sandra Azar, Ph. D., on Oct. 24.

A professor of psychology at Penn State University and previously a fellow at Harvard Law School, Azar's research is entitled "A Cognitive Behavioral Approach for Understanding Child Maltreatment."

"Child abusers are not off the continuum of other parents," Azar said.

She continued to explain that, though only a small percentage of parents ever act on their emotions, most parents reach a point where they feel they could abuse their children in dealing with the stressors of family, work and marriage.

This abusive behavior, Azar argued, stems from a cognitive script composed of four stages that these parents write for their children. Parents, Azar said, set unrealistic standards for their young child, which the child then fails to meet. The parent attributes a negative intent to the child's actions, believing that he or she was purposefully attempting to disobey, which then causes an overreaction in an attempt to alter the child's behavior.

"Child abuse is operant. Parents initially get a better response from kids [after they are abused], but [the children] grow accustomed and thus more abuse is necessary to elicit the same response," Azar said.

Throughout her years of research, Azar has found a typical prototype for parents, specifically mothers, who project negative attributes to their children. Azar said parents with low IQs tend to show more negativity and have a higher level of unrealistic expectations for their children. The stressors of lower incomes families also tend to show a higher percentage of abuse cases.

Much of her research was done to see if a high stress environment produced a negative, abuse result from parents. Normally, those parents who had previously been known to have higher unrealistic expectations of their children responded with violence when under stress, whereas parents with a more realistic set of expectations were more adaptive.

This adaptive behavior, in the eyes of child developmentalists, is more conducive to the healthy and steady development of the child. Matching the profile Azar had previously established, most of the parents who reacted negatively where from lower income, poorly educated backgrounds.

"By teaching a cognitive component and healthy strategies to parents we can reduce abuse. It will teach parents to talk themselves down before they act to irrationally," Azar said.

There are programs that intend to stop the abuse before it happens, including the Healthy Start Program. This national program teaches parents how to increase the intellectual stimulation of their children and decrease abusive behaviors. When this program is coupled with a cognitive aspect, such as the "talking down" skills proposed by Azar, it has shown a decrease in active abuse in previously abusive households.

Throughout the year, the psychology department will be welcoming a number of other speakers on different topics.

LEWIS From page A1

sentative from the Caribbean. A mix of scholars and practitioners from Yemen, Kenya, the United States, Australia and the Pacific were also invited.

The chosen experts, along with two U.N. officials, worked for four days to help draft a background report that Annan will use in the upcoming Commission on the Status of Women.

The report serves two purposes; to provide information that will be used in the upcoming commission and to stand alone as a document that will inform other U.N. organizations about gender equality.

Lewis was asked to contribute his own work to the conference. A paper he wrote for the conference, "Gender Tension and Change in the Contemporary Caribbean," argues that today there is gender tension in the Caribbean and the restructuring of the global economy has intensified this tension. Specifically, he wrote, the workplace is a particular site of tension between men and women.

"His work is really on the leading edge in the area of gender and identity," said James Rice, assistant vice president for academic affairs. "It is a testimony to his work and the kind of currency his work is that the United Nations recognized him."

While at the conference, Lewis played an important part in formulating policy. He was the chair of a sub-committee on work and he helped to draft part of the report. Lewis and the other experts produced a 30-page document in four days. While Lewis said the work was tiring, he said that it was very positive in terms of experiencing how policy is generated.

"The exciting part was the recognition that you were in the process of making history," Lewis said. "This sort of policy has not been made before. It's not every day that you get to be a part of making policy that has these sorts of global implications."

Getting recognized by the United Nations is an accomplishment that has potential for international ramifications.

"The interesting thing about this award is that not only is it an outside award, but it is coming from the premiere international body—the United Nations," Rickard said.

Lewis's recognition by the United Nations is a testament not only to the kind of work he is able to produce, but it is a testament to his character as both a professor and a scholar.

"It is important when scholarship can reach off campus. I admire that about his work, that he is engaged in the world outside of campus," Rice said. "At Bucknell we talk about the 'Teacher-Scholar Model.' It is difficult to be a productive scholar and teacher ... he has shown he can do all of that."

Sojka receives award for distinguished leadership

By JULIE LESKO
Writer

Professor of Biology Gary Sojka received the 2004 Economics-Pennsylvania Adam Smith Award for Distinguished Leadership on Tuesday.

The non-profit, statewide economic education association, Economics-Pennsylvania provides classroom programs, activities, teacher training workshops and seminars to promote economic literacy by making comprehensive curriculum available to school districts.

The group's former Chair and current President of Shamokin Filler Co. Don Roslin announced the award.

"The decision to present the 2004 Adam Smith Distinguished Leadership Award to Gary A. Sojka was an easy and natural choice given the mission, program and classroom activity initiatives for teachers and students provided by Economics-Pennsylvania," Roslin said.

"The extraordinary career of Gary, coupled with the depth of positive influence and personal leadership he has exercised in so many areas of his life and in the lives of those he has touched as a teacher, mentor, volunteer and friend, makes him the ideal recipient of the Adam Smith Award," Roslin said.

As an undergraduate, Sojka attended Coe College and earned his master's degree in microbiology and doctorate degree in genetics at Purdue University.

Prior to his work at the University, Sojka was a professor and chairperson of the biology department at Indiana University. There he became a dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and was awarded the Senior Class Teaching Award and the Frederic B. Lieber Award for distinguished teaching.

Professor Gary Sojka received the 2004 Economics-Pennsylvania Adam Smith Award for Distinguished Leadership on Tuesday.

Sojka came to Lewisburg in 1984 as the University's 13th president. During his 11-year term, the University capital building campaign was founded and $90 million was used to construct almost half of the current square footage of campus facility space.

During Sojka's presidency, the University endowment went from $52 million to $142 million and new curriculum plans were formulated for both the College of Arts and Sciences and the College of Engineering.

SHOOTING From page A1

"I don't know Josh at all personally, but I'm surprised anyone would do this, whether or not it was Josh," Schweinsberg said.

Neitz said the LPD did not prevent students from discussing the incident with the press.

"We do not restrict anyone to not speak with the news media," Neitz said.

Director of Housing and Residential Life and Assistant Dean of Students Daniel Remley said his office did not speak with students who live in Larison, where Carr lives.

"We have nothing to do with this incident. Cases like this go directly to the LPD," Remley said.

According to Ferraro, Carr is suspended from the University until a Community

After his term as president, Sojka returned to the classroom as a Professor of Biology.

Last September, Sojka received an honorary Doctorate of Science from Purdue University recognizing his work throughout different facets of higher education, including his role as teacher, research scholar, faculty mentor and administrator.

Current University President Steffen Rogers said he appreciates Sojka's impressive career.

"Gary has made contributions in so many ways and on so many fronts," Rogers said.

Mike Reynolds '06, a current student of Sojka's, said he sees the professor's great dedication to teaching and the University.

"Professor Sojka's love for science and love for teaching is evident in his enthusiasm in the classroom," Reynolds said. "It is obvious that he takes a lot of pride in his profession and in creating a good reputation for the school. He is one of the great professors who contribute so much more to the school than just what he teaches."

The Adam Smith Award recognizes Sojka's contributions and achievements as a professor and Pennsylvania citizen.

"Whether as University president or classroom instructor, Gary leads by example, constantly strives for standards of excellence in all pursuits and is recognized nationally as a man of the utmost integrity whose handshake is his bond," Roslin said.

"The Susquehanna Valley Regional Board of Economics-Pennsylvania is extremely proud to name Gary A. Sojka as their 2003 Adam Smith honoree because he absolutely brings added prestige to the roster of former recipients, including Tom Ridge, Merle Phillips, Donald Trump, Gov. Ed Rendell and Malcolm Forbes."

Addressers wanted immediately!

No Experience necessary.
Work at home.
Call
405-447-6397

EXXTRME VACATIONS,
INC 1-800-336-2260
Sell Spring Break Trips!
Guaranteed Best Buy
1 free trip for every 10 paid
OR
cash starting with first booking.
Exxtreme Party Packages!
Protection of American Express Worldwide
www.xvacations.com

HARVEST HOUSE
CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

GO Vertical

310 Market St.
Downtown Lewisburg
Under CVS

Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

Fraternalities-Sororities
Clubs-Student
Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks.
Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program!
It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST
SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for
2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS

Isn't nothing but $12.99 half

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS...
FIT FOR A KING

Meaty St. Louis-cut ribs, dry-rubbed with our special seasonings, loaded with our own bold Flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce, and pit smoked right here with Applewood. Served with hickory smoked baked beans, B's skillet potato cakes, freshly baked sourdough bread, and cornbread with honey butter. Plus... a FREE non-alcoholic beverage.

Served all day Monday thru Wednesday.
11am until closing.

67 North Market Street
Lewisburg, PA
67 Mill Street, Harrisburg and The 11am Midweek
15 St. Clair Ave.
www.brynswood.com

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available
3001/05 1-6 bedrooms
Spring '04
Summer/Fall
Available

Call: 570.524.3121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

BRYNWOOD
Rentals

Buffalo Bill's
TEX-MEX GRILLE & SALOON

Monday 5-9
Jumbo Hamburger & Fries
& Large Soda---$3.99

Tuesday 5-9
12 Jumbo Wings & Fries
& Soda---$3.99

Wednesday 5-9
Vegetarian Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price

Thursday 5-9
Mexican Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price

Lewisburg • 523-8900

News

Alcohol policies at other institutions compare to current University rules

ALCOHOL From page A1

instead of motivating them to cut back on drinking," Lisa Cutrufello '05 said.

The administration argues that the situation is more complex. According to Ferraro, as of Tuesday, there have been 17 alcohol-related hospitalizations that have occurred this semester, three of which occurred in the last week. There were a total of 22 hospitalizations that occurred last year.

"Some students believe that the increase in Borough citations this fall stems solely from the implementation of new enforcement practices, including foot patrols by police," Pollock wrote. "But this does not explain the increased incidence of driving under the influence or students winding up in the hospital with alcohol poisoning."

When Nicole D'Aureli '03 was made aware of the numbers, she was appalled.

"I think that is way too many, and I'm not really sure why that is happening," she said. "I guess that more people tend to want to break the rules when there are so many, but it shouldn't lead to a life-threatening situation."

Ferraro admits that the administration is puzzled as to the cause for these increased hospitalizations.

"The increased number of hospital visits and DUIs is a problem, but it's not a problem that the school is going to be able to fix," Dean DeLuca '06 said. "It's going to have to be decisions made by the students."

At this point, the University is not willing to leave the resolution up to students alone. The University and others are reexamining their policies to find better solutions to the issues of alcohol abuse and the resulting DUIs, hospitalizations and acts of violence.

This past month, Public Safety officers on this campus have begun administering breathalyzer tests to drivers who fail a field sobriety test.

"When someone declines to take the breathalyzer test, it will be assumed that he or she had a BAC level that warrants five alcohol points, rather than lower levels warranting only four or three points," Pollock said.

Another Patriot League school, Lehigh University, is also taking a closer look at alcoholism on its campus.

According to its Web site, "In 1996, Lehigh became one of six universities nationwide selected to receive a five-year grant to build a campus-community coalition to address the problems of abusive drinking and the secondhand effects this drinking has on other students and neighbors."

Lehigh's program, known nationally as "A Matter of has begun sending letters home to parents of students guilty of alcohol violations. Additionally, students were made aware that they may be faced with suspension following two serious violations.

A sophomore member of the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity at Lehigh who wished to remain nameless said, "prohibition didn't work then and it won't work now."

Although he stated that Lehigh's alcohol policy is strict, he mentioned that its policies also act to strengthen Greek life, which he views positively.

As another approach to curbing excessive drinking, some schools, such as Florida State University have experimented with marketing campaigns that encourage students to drink responsibly in want to develop the type of community in which alcohol abuse is regarded as unacceptable behavior, and students take responsibility for each other."

Ferraro hopes for a similar change on this campus as well. He wants to work with the students to institute a proactive approach rather than implementing more regulations.

"We would like to follow a moderate path," Ferraro said. "I think extreme regulation is unhelpful, and extreme intoxication is unhelpful as well."

Ferraro and other members of the administration have been meeting with students to discuss possible solutions to the current alcohol-related issues.

"If we have a situation where students are working, hopefully proactively, with the administration to resolve the major alcohol issues, I think the minor ones will take care of themselves," Ferraro said.

"What prompts the most concern are the serious issues, the ones that cause a danger to your life and your health."

Students have suggested a number of possible ways to improve conditions downtown.

One suggestion included having student representatives downtown to assess the situation and assist when needed. Another proposal was to talk to the community about revising the zero tolerance policy to consider giving warnings to students. Another student suggested implementing an auxiliary patrol system downtown, but Ferraro pointed out the loss of privacy associated with such a concept. Lastly, a student brought up the possibility of having a system of designated drivers.

Ferraro said most of the suggestions are being considered, but they are in the early stages. "We want to continue to work with students to improve the situation," Ferraro said.

Reaccreditation

Middle States to evaluate University

SELF-STUDY From page A1

Commission last year introduced 14 new standards for accreditation [and] Bucknell is a member of the first group of institutions to be accountable for the new standards," Rackoff said. "We demonstrate that we have complied with the requirements for accreditation by showing that we have met each and every fundamental element of each standard."

Rackoff said he "encourages [the public] to comment on the standards section of the report."

The document entitled "Characteristics of Excellence" can be found on e-reserves. The public is addressed now as time constraints are becoming an issue.

"Since the 2010 process was not able to yield a strategic plan and an accreditation, the accreditation process has a sense of urgency in completing it in the time period remaining," Timer said. "The plan must be completed by a designated date and I think Bucknell will accomplish that."

The review team of faculty and administrators from other universities will visit the University for two to three days and examine issues of interest in March 2004. The entire evaluation and judgment on reaccreditation by the Middle States Commission on Higher Education will occur later in the summer of 2004.

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Elizabeth's

An American Bistro

Come see what's new and exciting.
Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts

August 24th

11:00 AM to 2:00 PM

412 Market St. Lewisburg
570-523-8088

Wednesday-Saturday Bakery 10-2
Lunch 11:30-2, Dinner 5-9
www.elizabethsbistro.com

MARCO'S

Enjoy Parents Weekend

with a Taste of Mediterranean Cuisine in Historic Danville

Serving Lunch and Dinner

Monday-Thursday 11:00am to 9:00 pm
Friday-Saturday 11:00am to 10:00pm
Closed Sundays

LIVE Music
Monday & Tuesday Evenings

282 Mill Street, Downtown Danville
Call for reservations: 275-8122

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trauman associates, inc.
promotional products - fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards - trophies - business gifts

800-538-8009

Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009

www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!

GOOD ON ANY APPAREL

ORDER

(minimum 36 pieces)

you accidentally knock your roommate's toothbrush into the toilet. he's not home. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

October	November	November	November	November
FRI 31	SAT 1	SUN 2	MON 3	WED 5
Parents Weekend Scramble Golf Tournament Golf Course Banquet Room 1 p.m.	Parents Weekend Football vs. Holy Cross Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium 1 p.m.	Parents Weekend Catholic Mass Bucknell Hall (Main Sanctuary) 10 a.m. Rooke Chapel 4 p.m. J Hunt Hall Living Room 10 p.m.	Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m. "The Glass Menagerie" Coleman Hall Harvey Powers Theatre 8 p.m.	Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 6 p.m. "Bend It Like Beckham" Vaughan Lit. Auditorium 10:30 p.m.
"The Glass Menagerie" Coleman Hall Harvey Powers Theatre 8 p.m.	"A Clockwork Orange" Hilltop Film Series Vaughan Auditorium 2 p.m.	Hilltop Brunch Berelson Center for Jewish Life 10 a.m. Quaker Services Willard Smith Library Vaughan Lg. 125 10 a.m.	November TUE 4	November THUR 6
"A Clockwork Orange" Hilltop Film Series Vaughan Lit. Auditorium 8 p.m.	"We Brake For Nobody" Comedy Improv Troupe Freas Trout Auditorium 5 p.m.	Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 11 a.m.	CarioKick Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m.	Lecture: Devra Davis Langone Center Forum 7:30 p.m.
Pool Contest Uptown 9:30 p.m.	"The Glass Menagerie" Coleman Hall Harvey Powers Theatre 8 p.m.	Bucknell Choral Concert Weis Center Auditorium 2:30 p.m.		Bucknell Jazz Band Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.
"The Hulk" Langone Center Forum 10:30 p.m.	Orquesta Aragon Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	"The Glass Menagerie" Coleman Hall Harvey Powers Theatre 8 p.m.	The information for these events is subject to change. Some events are open to members of an organization only.
Stephen Kellogg 7th Street Cafe 11 p.m.	Jeff Clark Uptown 9:30 p.m.
	"Meet the Parents" Vaughan Auditorium 10:30 p.m.

Send calendar submissions to bucknellian@bucknell.edu with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Airline workers examine luggage as passengers prepare to board Southwest Airline flights. Security has increased after Nathaniel Heatwole decided to test airline security by carrying weapons aboard flights and storing materials resembling explosive devices.

Putting security to the test

BY ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

Nathaniel Heatwole, a 20-year-old college student, sought to expose weaknesses in U.S. security by planting banned items on airplanes nearly two months ago. Heatwole has been charged with taking a dangerous weapon aboard an aircraft.

Heatwole carried a plastic bag aboard Southwest Airlines Flight 993 on Sept. 12, 2003. Inside this plastic bag were a variety of suspicious objects, including two box cutters, 10-12 ounces of molding clay intended to simulate plastic explosives, a few dozen strike-anywhere matches and about eight ounces of bleach in suntan lotion bottles, according to CNN.com.

He placed this package and four others on different planes behind the panel underneath the sink in the rear lavatories of the aircraft. He carried bags onto six other planes from Feb. 7 to Sept. 14.

The Chicago Sun Times reported that just a few days after he planted the bags of banned objects, Heatwole apparently e-mailed the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to let it know that he had "information regarding the six security breaches" that occurred at the Raleigh-Durham and Baltimore-Washington International Airports between February and September.

The e-mails were not found by the TSA until weeks later. While the e-mails were signed with his whole name, his e-mail address and his telephone number, TSA spokesman Mark Hatfield told CNN.com on Oct. 18 that "the e-mail did not trigger the steps that could have been taken to track the man down sooner."

The illegal objects themselves were not found until Oct.

"I'd love to speak of all of this, I have a ton of stuff I'd like to say, but now is not the time. I have to work with the government before I work with the media."

—Nathaniel Heatwole

16, nearly a month after they were left. They were only found when, as stated in the FBI affidavit, the pilot of one of the Southwest planes reported a maintenance problem with the rear lavatory. It was during the check of the lavatory that a maintenance technician found the Ziploc bags.

The FBI also reported that the other bags were found during a routine maintenance check also on Oct. 16.

Upon this discovery, The Chicago Sun Times said that inspections were stepped up all over the country and approximately 7,000 planes were searched for the remaining bags

According to authorities, Heatwole passed right through the security checkpoints of Raleigh-Durham and Baltimore-Washington International Airports without a problem.

Heatwole was charged with a federal crime on Oct. 20 for getting on an aircraft with a concealed dangerous weapon that could have been accessed during the flight.

Heatwole has generated a great deal of discussion regarding whether he actually did something wrong, whether he broke any laws and how he should be punished.

The Greensboro News & Record interviewed Heatwole,

and he explained to them that he had no connection to the airline company at all, that he was simply a passenger on the planes.

"I'd love to speak of all of this, I have a ton of stuff I'd like to say, but now is not the time," Heatwole said. "I have to work with the government before I work with the media."

In response to his actions, the New York Daily News conducted a poll asking readers whether or not Heatwole should be punished as a criminal or should be "praised for public service."

Results tallied at 61 percent to 39 percent in support of Heatwole. Over 98 percent of people who responded in e-mails were supportive.

An overwhelming number of the respondents felt he should not be punished on the grounds that he simply embarrassed the TSA, and the head of the TSA, instead of Heatwole, should be punished for allowing this to happen.

In discussing Heatwole's actions with University students, many felt as though he should not be punished.

The Baltimore Sun reported that Steven McHale, the deputy administrator of TSA felt rather differently about Heatwole's novice stature.

"Amateur testing like this does not in any way assist us or show us where we have flaws in our system," McHale said.

Heatwole was released without bail. His preliminary hearing will be Nov. 10.

Heatwole reportedly left behind. When none of the bags were found, TSA rescinded the inspection order.

In addition to the two packages planted in September that were found in October, there were two other packages that were left earlier in the year found in April. These are the only four packages that Heatwole claims to have actually left behind.

Heatwole was charged with a federal crime on Oct. 20 for getting on an aircraft with a concealed dangerous weapon that could have been accessed during the flight.

Heatwole has generated a great deal of discussion regarding whether he actually did something wrong, whether he broke any laws and how he should be punished.

The Greensboro News & Record interviewed Heatwole,

and he explained to them that he had no connection to the airline company at all, that he was simply a passenger on the planes.

"I'd love to speak of all of this, I have a ton of stuff I'd like to say, but now is not the time," Heatwole said. "I have to work with the government before I work with the media."

In response to his actions, the New York Daily News conducted a poll asking readers whether or not Heatwole should be punished as a criminal or should be "praised for public service."

Results tallied at 61 percent to 39 percent in support of Heatwole. Over 98 percent of people who responded in e-mails were supportive.

An overwhelming number of the respondents felt he should not be punished on the grounds that he simply embarrassed the TSA, and the head of the TSA, instead of Heatwole, should be punished for allowing this to happen.

In discussing Heatwole's actions with University students, many felt as though he should not be punished.

The Baltimore Sun reported that Steven McHale, the deputy administrator of TSA felt rather differently about Heatwole's novice stature.

"Amateur testing like this does not in any way assist us or show us where we have flaws in our system," McHale said.

Heatwole was released without bail. His preliminary hearing will be Nov. 10.

Heatwole reportedly left behind. When none of the bags were found, TSA rescinded the inspection order.

In addition to the two packages planted in September that were found in October, there were two other packages that were left earlier in the year found in April. These are the only four packages that Heatwole claims to have actually left behind.

Heatwole was charged with a federal crime on Oct. 20 for getting on an aircraft with a concealed dangerous weapon that could have been accessed during the flight.

Heatwole has generated a great deal of discussion regarding whether he actually did something wrong, whether he broke any laws and how he should be punished.

The Greensboro News & Record interviewed Heatwole,

and he explained to them that he had no connection to the airline company at all, that he was simply a passenger on the planes.

"I'd love to speak of all of this, I have a ton of stuff I'd like to say, but now is not the time," Heatwole said. "I have to work with the government before I work with the media."

In response to his actions, the New York Daily News conducted a poll asking readers whether or not Heatwole should be punished as a criminal or should be "praised for public service."

Results tallied at 61 percent to 39 percent in support of Heatwole. Over 98 percent of people who responded in e-mails were supportive.

An overwhelming number of the respondents felt he should not be punished on the grounds that he simply embarrassed the TSA, and the head of the TSA, instead of Heatwole, should be punished for allowing this to happen.

In discussing Heatwole's actions with University students, many felt as though he should not be punished.

The Baltimore Sun reported that Steven McHale, the deputy administrator of TSA felt rather differently about Heatwole's novice stature.

"Amateur testing like this does not in any way assist us or show us where we have flaws in our system," McHale said.

Heatwole was released without bail. His preliminary hearing will be Nov. 10.

Legislating life

Fla. legislators enacted "Terri's Law" to keep Terri Schiavo alive

BY MICHELLE JOHNSON
Writer

Terri Schiavo, a woman who has been in a persistent vegetative state since 1990, was put back on a feeding tube on Oct. 21, six days after it had originally been removed at the urging of her husband, Michael. The tube was reinserted as a result of a special law rushed through the Florida State Legislature by Governor Jeb Bush. Bush became involved after Terri's parents, Bob and Mary Schindler, contested that Terri was still responsive and could be rehabilitated.

Schiavo says his relationship with Terri's parents dissolved after he was awarded $1.3 million in a malpractice lawsuit in 1993 for the misdiagnosis of Terri's condition. He claims that Mr. and Mrs. Schindler are after a portion of the money and control of the situation, according to The New York Times.

Schiavo himself has faced criticism due to his relationship with a long-time girlfriend with whom he has a child. He refutes the accusation that he is abandoning his wife, saying that his girlfriend supports Terri's care.

The actual cause of then 26-year-old Terri's collapse remains a mystery, though it is suspected that it was a result of a chemical imbalance due to an eating disorder that stopped her heart. CNN reported that an insufficient consumption of potassium is one possible reason for the collapse.

While Terri's parents argue that she laughs and follows them with her eyes, this has been rejected by doctors. In an excerpt from the testimony of Ronald Cranford, a neurologist at the Hennigsen County Medical Center in Minnesota, according to The Washington Post, said, "Terri does not have visual tracking. If you look at the videotapes, she's really not looking at her mother."

When a person is in a persistent vegetative state, the primal parts of her brain continue to function. She sleeps, she moves and she has facial expressions, but this state differs from a coma because it is traditionally held that if a person does not recover within three months, then she will never recover. Schiavo has been vegetative for 13 years.

If the feeding tube was removed, doctors estimate that Terri Schiavo would die within 10-14 days. First, her body would become dehydrated, which would cause a feeling of drowsiness followed by unconsciousness. Neurotransmitters would also be produced by Terri's brain that would prevent her from suffering.

Whether or not Terri would have wanted to be sustained by a feeding tube is another issue being debated by friends and family. The attorney representing Terri's parents claims that she had no end-of-life wishes, according to The New York Times.

Terri's friend, Diane Meyer, told CNN a similar story, saying that Terri once told her, "Where there's life, there's hope."

This has been countered by Michael Schiavo and his brother Scott who believe that Terri would not want to be kept alive by a feeding tube. Scott says that after the death of his grandmother, who had been kept alive by a respirator, Terri expressed her wishes by saying, "If I'm gone, just let me go."

Terri Schiavo is currently living in a hospice in Pinellas Park, Fla. Her husband and the American Civil Liberties Union are preparing to challenge the constitutionality of the law enacted by the legislature, which has been named "Terri's Law." The case has sparked debates over right-to-die issues in the United States.

Florida protesters appeal to state representatives to protect Terri Schiavo. The controversy has sparked questions of the government's role in deciding life and death.

B&P Wants YOU

Contact Courtney at cchoman@ if you care about the issues that affect you.

SPRING BREAK 2004!

Travel with Beach Life Vacations! America's Best Student Tour Operator! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida!

Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

October 31, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 8

Arts & Entertainment

Maroon 5 rocks Uptown with its hit songs and unique style.

See page B6

Bison fall 3-0 to American

Soccer team honors senior in her final home game

BY TERY SCHLANG
Writer

American defeated the Bucknell women's soccer team 3-0 on Saturday afternoon here at home. Bucknell's record became 7-4-3 in regular season play and 2-2-2 in Patriot League play with the loss.

American took an early lead, scoring its first goal after 17 minutes of play. After American's Christina Gonzalez scored the goal on an assist from Anabel Jimenez, American didn't score another goal in the first half. In the 65th minute of play Jimenez, American's leading goal scorer, scored its second goal on an assist from Simone Konig. Jimenez scored the third goal unassisted in the final 10 minutes of play.

American took a total of 14 shots on goal and Bucknell goalkeeper Samantha Hecht '06 had seven saves. Bucknell only took five shots on goal and American's goalkeeper had only two saves.

"American was a good team, maybe the best team in the league that I have seen so far," Head Coach Chrissy Findlay said. "I do not feel that it was a 3-0 loss, and that is hard to accept. But we have to take responsibility for not capitalizing on our opportunities."

Hecht had similar sentiments.

"The score of the game didn't reflect our play at all," Hecht said. "Unfortunately, we were unable to capitalize on our opportunities."

This game was the final home game for lone senior Abbey Seaboyer '04. The Bison celebrated Senior Day in honor of Seaboyer's final home game, but unfortunately could not pull off a win.

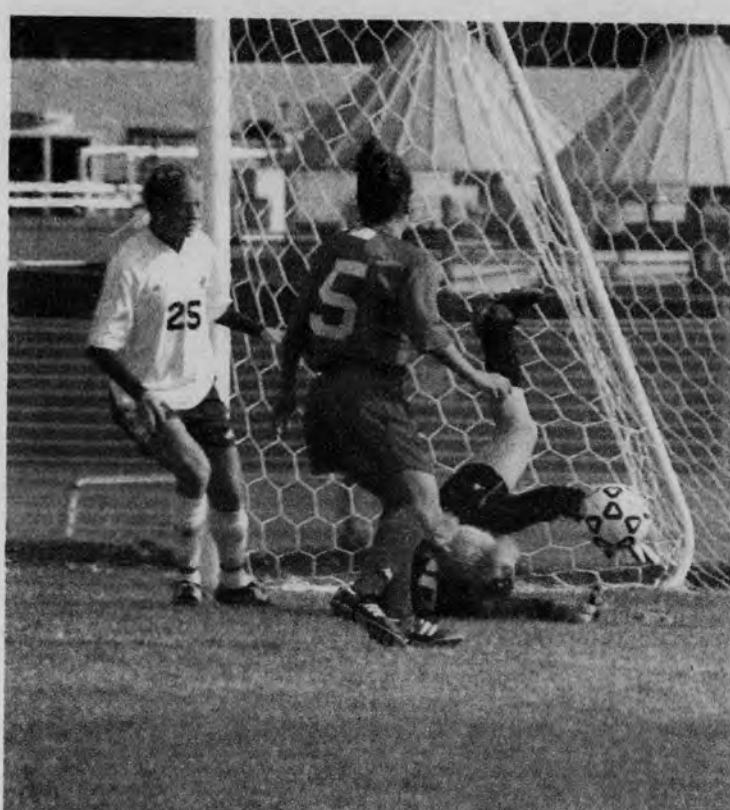

"I was proud of our team very strong in the midfield, which made it more difficult for us to transition and get down the field."

In order to proceed into the postseason the Bison must win their game this weekend against Navy.

"Our last in-season Patriot League game vs. Navy is huge," Seaboyer said. "So we are trying to take the positives and negatives from the American game into consideration as we prepare for this Saturday."

"We have been playing pretty good soccer, but not dangerous soccer," Findlay said. "Therefore, we have placed ourselves in pressured situations, in games and the season, that we could have avoided if we would have realized as a team that taking risks is all a part of the game, or life for that matter."

The Bison played their second-to-last regular season game Tuesday against St. Francis. Their final regular season game against the Naval Academy is scheduled for Saturday.

Ashley Dincer '05 follows a shot on goal against American. The Bison were unable to convert any of the shots, losing 3-0.

Bucknell suffers disappointing loss, 50-6

BY CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell football team suffered its most definitive loss of the year on Saturday, falling to Colgate 50-6. Colgate is the first Patriot League team to defeat the Bison this season, as the Orange and Blue fell to 2-1 in the league and 4-4 overall.

Scoring on all seven of their offensive possessions, the Raiders opened up a 50-0 lead on the Bison before Blamah Sarnor '06 gave Bucknell its only score of the day with a touchdown run 3 minutes, 49 seconds before the end of the game.

"Colgate was an excellent football team and executed extremely well," Head Coach Tim Landis said. "They beat us in every aspect of the game."

Colgate quarterback Chris Brown led the charge against the Bison, throwing three touchdown passes in the first half.

The Raiders scored on their first possession after an 80-yard drive culminated in a 2-yard touchdown run by Jamaal Branch, then scored again after recovering a fumble by Bison quarterback John Henry Jackson '05 during Bucknell's first possession. Jackson was making his first career start in place of regular starter Daris Wilson '05, who was sidelined by an ankle injury.

A Colgate touchdown pass at 13:31 in the second quarter made the score 20-0, and a blocked punt less than one minute later gave the Raiders a safety and pushed their lead to 22-0.

Brown threw touchdown passes to John Friese and J.B. Gerald with 9:37 and 39 seconds left in the half, respectively. Branch scored his second touchdown of the day for Colgate with a 19-yard run at 7:39.

The halftime score left the Bison on the receiving end of a 43-0 rout, but the scoring slowed down in the second half.

Colgate scored one more time when Brown ran for a touchdown with 3:49 left in the third quarter to make the score 50-0 after an extra point conversion.

The Bison finally broke into the end zone with 3:49 remaining on the clock in the fourth quarter after Sarnor's run capped a 14-play, 80-yard drive resulting in the final score of 50-6.

The debate dropped the Bison back to a .500 record, while the Raiders' record jumped to a flashy 8-0.

The Bison will try to bounce back from the frustrating loss when they face Holy Cross tomorrow at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

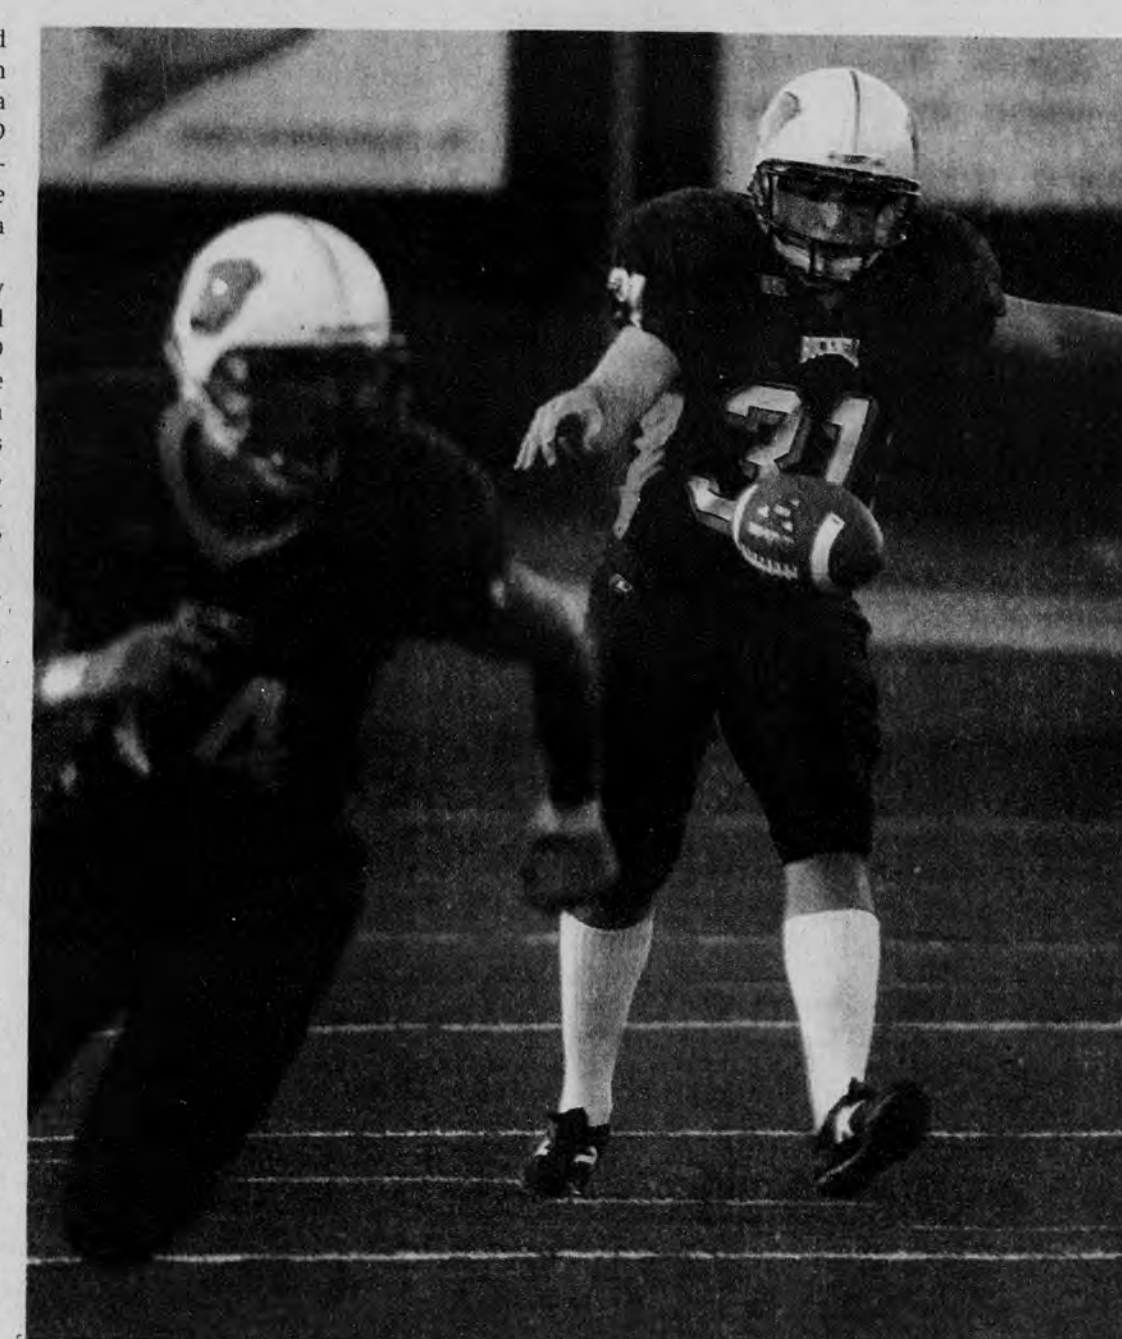

League rival Holy Cross will likely be another tough opponent for the Bison.

"We will need to get back to work this week in our preparation for Holy Cross," Landis said. "Holy Cross is a better team than their record indicates. They are explosive offensively and have one of the premier players in all of I-AA football in Ari Conesfor."

The Bison will be playing at home for only the third time this season.

"The team is excited about returning home after six away games in seven weeks," Landis said. "We are looking forward to a nice homecoming crowd and a supportive student body. The students really gave us a boost in our games against Duquesne and Towson. I hope that they will be out there again this weekend."

Kickoff is at 1 p.m.

Shown here in an earlier game, punter Ryan Berry '05 has been a dependable part of the Bison squad. Unfortunately, with less than three minutes into the second quarter during the most recent game, Colgate's Antwone Porter blocked Berry's punt through the end zone for a safety.

Patriot League Cross Country Preview

BY EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Championship season begins this weekend for cross country with the Patriot League Championships. The Bucknell men's and women's squads will look to return to the podium Saturday at Lafayette.

The men's race should be very exciting with the addition of Navy. American, Army, Navy and Bucknell all have legitimate shots at bringing home the title. On paper, the defending champ American is the best team, but a couple of its top runners have been struggling this fall.

Army and Navy have met twice this year, with Navy besting Army at the Great American Cross Country Festival, while Army beat Navy in a very close dual meet recently. Although Bucknell hasn't run head-to-head against any of the other contenders this season, among common opponents the four teams look to be very balanced.

Colgate and Lehigh have no realistic shot of winning, but either could steal a top three finish if one of the big four teams has an off day. Colgate is lead by Xavier Deboisezon and Louie Dinuzzo, who will both look to contend for the individual title. Other contenders include Phil Sakala of Army and Matt Seymour of American.

Sean McCarthy '04, who was a senior in high school the last time that Bucknell won the league title in 1999, sees Bucknell as a team that is on an upward swing.

"I would say we have the best shot at the league title that we have had in the last four years," McCarthy said. "In order to win however, we'll have to be at the top of our game."

Being at the top of their game will mean using the strength of the pack to their advantage, and at least one runner needs a breakthrough type of race.

"The main thing we have to do is use our depth to our advantage," McCarthy said. "We are the deepest team in the league [from] one to five, yet no one has emerged as a front runner on our team so far this year. If someone steps it up and takes one of the top three spots in the meet, our chances to win increase dramatically."

The Bison will have their work cut out for them, as one of the team's captains and top runners quit this week due to personal reasons.

Last year, the Bucknell women's cross country team was second to American by a single point. This year the women's race should be equally exciting, as that loss has been on the team's mind, constantly motivating them. Bucknell is lead by a very young contingent that has been significantly improving on a week-to-week basis.

Alison Cole '06, a first-team all-league performer last fall is optimistic about the Bison's chances.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of

See PREVIEW, page B4

Sports

Water polo defeats Slippery Rock Bison compete at Inter-regional Competition

By KATIE COLGAN
Contributing Writer

On Oct. 25 and 26, the Bucknell men's water polo team traveled to Princeton University where it had some disappointments but got a taste of victory as well.

The team opened the tournament on a good note with a victory over Slippery Rock. The Bison took an early lead, only to fall behind by one goal at the half.

Goalkeeper Trevor Mullins '06 had a solid third quarter and helped the Bison regain Weborg '06 and Nick Ferring '06. The men held on for the win, defeating Slippery Rock 9-7.

The men faced Johns Hopkins next, playing for first in their bracket. With two goals each from Danforth and Benoit and tallies from Platsch, Ferring and Bradley Roslyn '06, the teams were pretty evenly matched and went into overtime.

The Blue Jays took advantage of the extra time and snuck one last goal by the Bison for a heartbreaking 8-7 loss.

The Bison will have a chance to avenge the loss when they play Hopkins in the first game of the Southern Championships, which will be hosted next weekend at Bucknell.

"It should be an exciting game against Hopkins... we lost a close one against them in overtime, and it will determine whether or not we go to Easters," Mark Stevosky '06 said. "We're confident that we can win."

Bucknell finished up its weekend at Princeton with yet another overtime game, this time against Salem International. Mullins made seven saves in the cage, and Scott Afzal '04, Platsch, Ferring and Danforth each scored twice.

Also raising the score, Benoit and Roslyn took some successful shots for the Bison. The men played a great game, but the Salem International squad took the lead in overtime and answered the Bison's lead with an amazing defensive shutout. Leading the team offensively, Aaron Platsch '05 contributed three goals while Jay Danforth '05 and Elliot Benoit '05 each added two to the scoreboard.

Also converting for the Orange and Blue were Lars one goal with three of its own. The final score was 12-10, Salem International.

The Bison know they have what it takes to win and have learned a lot this season.

"The time for victory is now."
—Brad Unroe '06

"While the two losses in overtime were very frustrating, I believe that we are in prime position to meet our goal, which is to reach the final four at Southern here at Bucknell," Mullins said.

Brad Unroe '06 agreed. "The time for victory is now," Unroe said. Getting off to a rough start, the men have come a long way in their season, with their record now at 6-17 overall and 2-6 in Southern Division play.

Roslyn summed up the Bison's experiences thus far very eloquently. "Rome wasn't built in a day," Roslyn said. The team will host the Southern Division Championships this weekend, hosting teams from Princeton, the U.S. Naval Academy, George Washington, Hopkins and Washington and scored twice.

The Bison's first game of the weekend will be at 8:30 tonight in the Kinney Natatorium. The Bison will face Johns Hopkins and can earn a bid to the Eastern Championships with a victory.

Claiming the title

PREDICTIONS from page B3

In the mighty Western Conference, one team will emerge and claim the NBA title. Teams such as the Los Angeles Lakers, Sacramento Kings and Dallas Mavericks will put their own ensemble of superstars on display night in and night out, while teams such as the San Antonio Spurs

Although the likes of Michael Jordan, David Robinson and John Stockton will surely be missed, the new generation and future Hall-of-Famers such as Shaquille O'Neal, Kobe Bryant, Tim Duncan, Kevin Garnett and Tracy McGrady are at or not even near their prime and already have their shoulders squared to carry the game for years to come.

and Minnesota Timberwolves improved in the off-season through key acquisitions. The Lakers are the "team of the crop"—at least on paper.

guarantees a far push into the playoffs but how well they mesh will dictate how far they eventually go.

Minnesota upped their scoring as well, picking up Latrell Sprewell, Sam Cassell and Michael Olowokandi to complement Garnett and Wally Szczerbiak. This is the year Garnett should finally push the team past the first round, although a second round exit is likely to follow.

Meanwhile, the Houston Rockets will get a huge season out of Yao Ming and should get the leadership they need from new head coach Jeff Van Gundy. The Portland Trail Blazers will still be a mess, and the Phoenix Suns will enjoy seeing Shawn Marion, Stephon Marbury and man-child Amare Stoudemire run-and-gun (but not necessarily win). Mike Dunleavy of the Golden State Warriors will finally get to show off his skills and Ray Allen will find life in Seattle very lonely.

All in all, enjoy the show. Oh yeah, and about that 24-karat gold piece? Give it to L.A. Please?

The Lakers are the "cream of the crop"—at least on paper. It's hard to pick against them winning the entire thing...

The Lakers are the "cream of the crop"—at least on paper. It's hard to pick against them winning the entire thing...

complement Garnett and Wally Szczerbiak. This is the year Garnett should finally push the team past the first round, although a second round exit is likely to follow.

Meanwhile, the Houston Rockets will get a huge season out of Yao Ming and should get the leadership they need from new head coach Jeff Van Gundy. The Portland Trail Blazers will still be a mess, and the Phoenix Suns will enjoy seeing Shawn Marion, Stephon Marbury and man-child Amare Stoudemire run-and-gun (but not necessarily win). Mike Dunleavy of the Golden State Warriors will finally get to show off his skills and Ray Allen will find life in Seattle very lonely.

All in all, enjoy the show. Oh yeah, and about that 24-karat gold piece? Give it to L.A. Please?

Bucknell's Predictions

By JOHN HENNING & ASHWIN RAMAKRISHNA
Contributing Writers

Eagles @ Falcons (4:15)

Giants @ Jets (1:00)

PAPA: The battle of New Jersey. The Giants' O-line is decimated by injury, where they have three rookies starting. Also, Chad Pennington gets his first start against an average defensive backfield. J-E-T-S win 34-10.

SCHWIN: After last week's big win over the Vikings, the inconsistent Jets offense shouldn't be a threat. Look for Collins and Toomer to hook up on several occasions. I'm calling a break out game for Tiki Barber as well. Giants fly high 31-10.

Ashwin Ramakrishna (SCHWIN): I'm going to have to agree with my counterpart on this game. This year I'd rather take the threat of Vick off the bench with a broken leg than McNabb. With a hurting secondary in Philly, look for Peers Price to have a huge game.

Falcons win 23-13.

Steelers @ Seahawks (4:15)

PAPA: Expect the Bus to run over the Seahawks. Also expect Chad Scott to get beat deep at least once. Steelers win 20-14.

SCHWIN: Seattle... rainy climate... "wet rain" means fun times and Steelers Football.

Packers @ Vikings (8:30)

PAPA: Brett Favre is absolutely horrible in domes. Therefore, Ahman Green will light up the Minnesota defense. At least that's what I'm hoping for, because my fantasy team will need the points. Packers in a shocker 28-27.

SCHWIN: Green lighting up the defense... are you kidding? Favre will throw too many interceptions for Green to get the ball enough. Look for the Viking defense to step it up after last week's first loss of the season. Vikings win 34-17.

Look for Burrell to break out this week should the Bus start rolling. Steelers win 23-17.

Bucknell will draw its top competition from American who has arguably three of the best barriers in the league. Army has a slightly deeper team yet fewer front runners and also looks to be very tough.

"The competition should be really good between Army, American and Bucknell," Cole said. "All three teams should be up in the running for the win."

Lafayette's course is a classic cross country course almost entirely on grass that weaves through corn fields and woods. This type of course should challenge the field and make for an especially exciting second half as some runners fade while others begin to roll.

Lafayette has one of the toughest courses in the league," McCarthy said. "The course doesn't appear to be that formidable when first looking at it, but its rolling hills and tight turns make more out of your legs than you might first think. The last time the league meet was held on the Lafayette course, Bucknell came out on top."

PREVIEW from page B1

Most notable was the retelling of the 1963 creative conflict between Cage and famed composer/director Leonard Bernstein. Bernstein had planned to lead the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in an improvisation based on one of Cage's works. Cage urged him to abandon this idea, as he considered their musical ideas irreconcilably different.

The concert featuring Cage's work went on anyway, and Feist played a recording of the event at Monday's lecture. The musicians just made noise on their instruments, quoting passages from famed orchestral works and disregarding the experimental scores Cage had printed.

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Arts & Entertainment

University Chorale to feature student compositions

The Concert Chorale's fall concert will include a variety of musical styles such as jazz, spiritual and classical

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

The University Concert Chorale practices for their upcoming concert set for Sunday at 2:30 p.m. The concert repertoire will include two original and unique pieces by Ashi Day '04.

Feisst discusses the music of John Cage

By DAVID ALLEN
Staff Writer

The Gallery Series, a program spotlighting experimental and nontraditional forms of music, sponsored a lecture on the works of U.S. composer John Cage and the role of improvisation in his work. Sabine Feisst, professor of music at Arizona State University gave a talk titled, "John Cage and Improvisation: An Unresolved Relationship."

Feisst discussed improvisation in the music of the 20th century. She stated that the idea was neglected in the early part of the century, but was rediscovered the 1950s in connection with the avant-garde movement.

Most notable was the retelling of the 1963 creative conflict between Cage and famed composer/director Leonard Bernstein. Bernstein had planned to lead the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in an improvisation based on one of Cage's works. Cage urged him to abandon this idea, as he considered their musical ideas irreconcilably different.

The concert featuring Cage's work went on anyway, and Feist played a recording of the event at Monday's lecture. The musicians just made noise on their instruments, quoting passages from famed orchestral works and disregarding the experimental scores Cage had printed.

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

The University Concert Chorale will present its Fall Concert on Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Just in time for Parents Weekend, it boasts a fascinating selection of compositions, including two student-composed pieces.

"I think what makes this concert different are the student compositions," said chorale member Lacy Gonzalez '04. "It's really special to be involved in the actual process of composition."

Professor of Music William Payne, the Chorale's conductor, will lead the singers through a multifaceted performance incorporating jazz, spiritual and classical musical styles. The 11 pieces being performed will include "We are the Music Makers" by Joe Markley, "Agnus Dei" by Samuel Barber and Eric Whitacre's "Go, Lovely Rose" and "With a Lily in Your Hand." The variety of pieces promises an excellent concert.

Feisst discussed improvisation in the music of the 20th century. She stated that the idea was neglected in the early part of the century, but was rediscovered the 1950s in connection with the avant-garde movement.

Most notable was the retelling of the 1963 creative conflict between Cage and famed composer/director Leonard Bernstein. Bernstein had planned to lead the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in an improvisation based on one of Cage's works. Cage urged him to abandon this idea, as he considered their musical ideas irreconcilably different.

The concert featuring Cage's work went on anyway, and Feist played a recording of the event at Monday's lecture. The musicians just made noise on their instruments, quoting passages from famed orchestral works and disregarding the experimental scores Cage had printed.

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

Bucknell will look to repeat history this weekend at Lafayette, as this was the last place that the men's and women's teams brought home titles in the same year.

"We have a strong team this year with a pack style of running. If our pack works together, we should have a good shot at winning."

—Alison Cole '06

despite the difficulty of the songs and the short amount of time available to prepare for the Parents Weekend event.

One of the more unusual pieces the Chorale will be performing is a spirited Latin American song, "Kasar Mie La Gaji." Its translated title is "The Earth is Tired," and the performance will involve clapping as well as other percussive sounds.

"Images," a jazz piece composed by Rob Landers, will feature an instrumental trio accompanying the choir.

Featured prominently in the concert will be two pieces composed by Ashi Day '04, a member of the chorale. Both songs, "Prayer" and "Flower Girls," have unique styles, reflecting Day's desire to transcend genres and avoid the strict, sometimes mechanical classical form.

Based on Rainer Maria Rilke's "The Book of Hours" and Goethe's "Faust" respectively, the songs were written for the women's chorus. "Prayer" is intended to be a peaceful, spiritual piece.

"Flower Girls," which is one part of a set of three compositions Day is currently working on, tells the light-hearted story of three girls going to the market to sell flowers, comparing their feminine beauty to the floral aesthetics.

According to Day, these pieces took her two weeks each to complete and were not originally intended to be performed by the chorale.

"I wrote them and showed them to [Professor Payne] to get his feedback, and didn't expect him to say, 'Let's sing this.' It kind of surprised me," Day said.

Day, a music major with a concentration in composition, plans to pursue her master's degree in music composition after graduation. She has been writing her own music since elementary school, but only began to take it seriously during her senior year of high school.

The concert will be held in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts and is open to the general public. Admission is free.

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $

FREE Ticket to Paradise
with every Spring Break package!
Limited time offer. Check our website for details.
www.studentexpress.com
Call NOW: 1.800.787.3787

STSTRAVEL.COM
Asia America's #1 Student Travel Operator
CANCUN ACAPULCO JAMAICA BAHAMAS FLORIDA
Sell Vips, Euro Cash, Get Free New Wiring Call for group discounts
1-800-648-6249 • www.ststravel.com

For Rent
Saint Catherine's St.
3 Bedrooms
2 1/2 Bathrooms
Washer, Dryer, Dishwasher
$850 per month
Available 04/05
523-3033

Vennari's
Large Cheese Pizza only $5.50!
Dine-in Only Monday-Thursday
Vennari's Pizza
610 Market St.
524-0444

If you see this little buckaroo (Joseph Gaughan) wish him a Happy 50th Birthday

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

Market Street PHOTO
We like picky people!
We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.
523-1543
M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5; 24 hour drop box
120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

Cinema Center
Sellinggrove - Susquehanna Valley Mall - 374-2049
Play Dates: October 31-November 4, 2003
Radio (PG-13) 1:15, 3:50, 6:20, 9:15
Intolerable Cruelty (PG-13) 1:45, 4:15, 6:30, 8:50
Roundup (PG-13) 12:40, 3:50, 7:40, 10:40
Secondhand Lion (PG) 1:30, 4:30, 6:50
Beyond Borders (R) 1:35, 6:30, 9:20
Scary Movie 3 (PG-13) 1:35, 6:30, 9:20
Brother Bear (G) 12:25, 2:15, 4:30, 6:40, 8:45
Kill Bill (R) 2:45, 7:30, 10:15
Runaway Jury (PG-13) 1:15, 4:45, 9:30
Texas Chainsaw (PG-13) 12:40, 2:45, 5:15, 7:20, 9:45
Under the Tuscan Sun (R) 12:45, 3:15, 6:15, 8:45
Good Day? (PG-13) 12:50, 3:55, 7:10
School of Rock (PG-13) 12:50, 3:10, 7:10, 9:45
Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

Who Says You Can't Have It All?
59.2 cu. ft. of cargo space
Available with 4-wheel anti-lock

Arts & Entertainment

Maroon 5 scores a perfect 10

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

If Michael Jackson were white (no, I mean really), and listened to more rock music, he probably would've sounded something like Maroon 5.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Mixing trademark R&B beats and vocals with a combination of pop and hard-rock guitar, the L.A.-based quintet brought their unique styles to Uptown this past weekend and received the biggest response of any of the numerous gigs I've attended at this campus venue. Admittedly, I did not know too much about Maroon 5 upon arriving at the show. What I did know automatically raised my expectations: "Harder to Breathe," the band's biggest single, is still the number one on numerous radio charts, and its video currently sits at the top of VH-1's weekly countdown.

When this sunk in, one burning question stuck in my head—how did Uptown book such a huge act?

The answer lies in the insight of club manager Steve Klinger, as well as the student-based Uptown committee, who realized the band's potential over the summer and took action.

"We're paying much less than this band is worth right now and we're thrilled about that," Klinger said.

As for the show, I was more impressed than with any other band I've seen at Uptown in my four years at the University.

Chad Flood—The Bucknellian

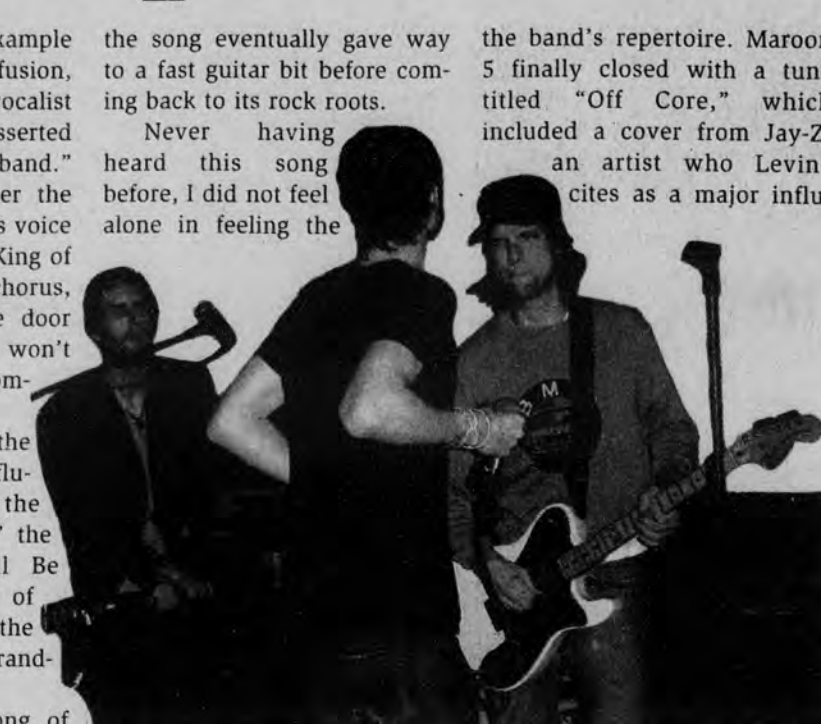

Opening with a perfect example of the band's R&B/rock fusion, "Not Coming Home," vocalist Adam Levine quickly asserted himself as "leader of the band." He hit notes all over the spectrum and allowed his voice to waver much like the King of Pop's on the song's chorus. "When you answer the door pick up the phone, you won't find me 'cause I'm not coming home."

Through the rest of the evening, various other influences became clear: the funkiness of "The Sun," the ballad-esque "She Will Be Loved," the pop quality of "Harder to Breathe," and the sheer intensity of the brand-new "Wasted Years."

However, the song of the night seemed to come in the form of "Tangled," in my opinion the band's best-constructed, most versatile song.

Shifting from a straight-up rock and roll guitar riff into a rising chorus, sheer energy emanating from the stage, as everyone around me seemed to share the same groove.

The band closed the set with fan favorite "Shiver," which features a guitar riff that borders on the Middle Eastern feel of Led Zeppelin's "Kashmir," and offers some of the most powerful vocals in

Chad Flood—The Bucknellian

Maroon 5 visited the University Saturday for a well-received performance at Uptown. The band's single "Harder to Breathe" has placed on radio and music video charts nationwide.

ence in developing Maroon 5's style.

While most people may have showed up to hear "Harder to Breathe," by the end of the night, Maroon 5 could have played nearly anything and received a huge ovation—not because of who it is, but because the group truly deserved it.

Chicago Shakespeare Theater updates a classic

By STEPHANIE MALENICH
Writer

THEATER REVIEW

An eager audience packed the Weis Center for the Performing Arts awaiting The Chicago Shakespeare Theater's rendition of the romantic tragedy, "Romeo and Juliet," last Friday night. This anticipation was surely satisfied as the professional acting company presented a truly unique interpretation of one of Shakespeare's most well-known and most-performed plays.

The company's "Romeo and Juliet" combined traditional with nontraditional elements in the creation of a truly distinctive adaptation. This was reflected in the costuming that had characters in contemporary business suits, and traditional Renaissance attire in the next. The company's distinctive approach was also displayed through the delivery of its parts, which felt very contemporary. This was especially true of the main characters.

Many audience members may at first have been taken aback by this approach, considering the familiarity of these characters and their customary portrayal on stage. However, this technique fit with the rest of the performance. It seemed to fuse traditional and modern approaches to present a rendition that maintained its classical roots while updating it to appeal more directly to the contemporary audience.

The highlights of the performance were undoubtedly the innovative set designs and music. The set was composed of three rectangular structures on wheels. These three pieces were rearranged to meet the needs of each scene, artfully portraying everything from the Capulet mansion to the tomb where the final scene takes place.

"I particularly liked the set design. It was simple but effective because it placed emphasis on the actors and actresses' performances," Jarrod Neff '05 said.

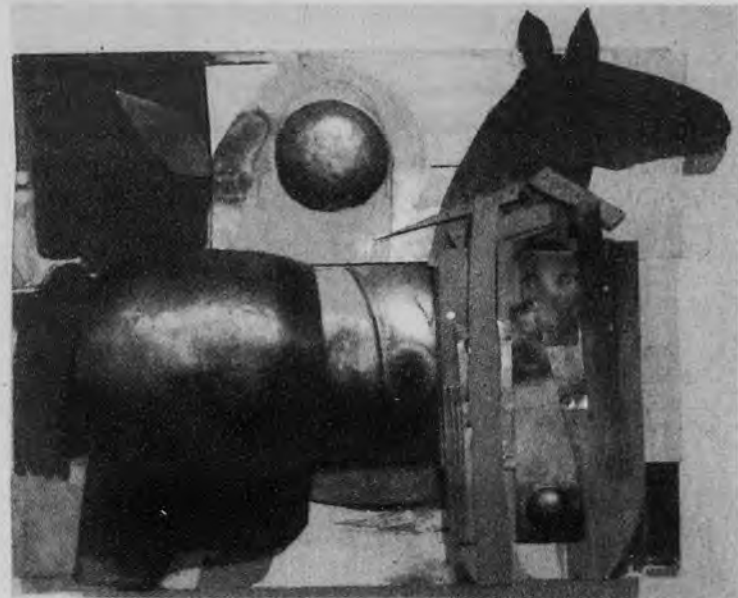

The set's construction was very modern—each piece was composed of metal bars and plastic pieces. It used a traditional element in the lights on the pieces, glowing like candlelight. This changed the mood for scenes in the church and tomb. The background lighting also added to the play as the colored light, indicative of tone, bathed the stage with each scene.

The music was phenomenal as well, enhancing the emotion of each scene in which it was included, especially in the marriage and fight scenes. It also was effective in the transitions between scenes.

"It has become extremely difficult to find high-quality, touring classic or contemporary theater in America. The lack of profitability has driven most companies away. As soon as I learned that Chicago Shakespeare Theater was going to take the plunge and tour this year, I started working to book 'Romeo and Juliet' on the Weis Center series," Director of Cultural Events Bill Boswell said.

"Romeo and Juliet" has become one of Shakespeare's most recognizable works. In light of this familiarity, The Chicago Shakespeare Theater's performance provided the University with an interesting and innovative take on this familiar play.

Samek Art Gallery features faculty work

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

This piece was constructed by William Lasansky, Professor of Art and accomplished granite sculptor. Lasansky is one of four faculty members whose work is being featured at the gallery.

By MELANIE CAUGHEY
Contributing Writer

The Samek Art Gallery began running the exhibition "Inquiry," featuring the work of University Assistant Professor of Art Tulu Bayar, Professor of Art William Lasansky, Samek Gallery Director Dan Mills and Professor of Art Rosalyn Richards on Oct. 23. It is a unique combination of photographs, sound and sculpture, some involving the roles of the United States and maps.

Mills gives a critique of the government in his ongoing series "USA Future States." It explores U.S. global policies, imperialism and cartography. It progresses to form a new world order. Each "Future State" includes written background information, rationale for takeover, benefits to the United States, painted passages of the future state, text for the developing statehood through size comparison and a new name for each creation.

"The matter-of-fact application of these ideas and actions seem disturbing but plausible at this moment in history," Mills said. "That they do not seem totally outrageous is a critique of where we have been led to today—and to me, that is frightening."

Richards investigates visualized information such as scientific map charts to create highly detailed and abstract images, imaginary maps and diagrams in the form of drawings, paintings and prints. They deal metaphorically with issues of memory, perception and the passage of time.

"My recent work has evolved out of a fascination with how developments in technological imaging have given us a new way to see and understand the natural world," Richards said.

"Technology has opened up an unseen world of nature and has influenced how we experience our surroundings."

"Inquiry: Tulu Bayar, William Lasansky, Dan Mills, Rosalyn Richards," is showing in the Main Gallery until Nov. 23. Imagery.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Faculty member Rosalyn Richards often uses scientific imagery in her prints.

A&E EVENTS PARENTS WEEKEND

Friday, October 31

- ♦ The Glass Menagerie, Harvey Powers Theatre, 8:00 p.m., $6
- ♦ Christy's Candlelight Entertainment, Rooke Chapel, 9:00 p.m., $5
- ♦ Rocky Horror Picture Show, Campus Theatre, 11:00 p.m., $8
- ♦ The Hulk, LC Forum, 10:30 p.m., free
- ♦ Stephen Kellogg, 7th Street Cafe, 11:00 p.m., free

Saturday, November 1

- ♦ A Clockwork Orange, Vaughan Literature Auditorium, 2:00 p.m., free
- ♦ Orchestra Aragon, Weis Center, 8:00 p.m. $20
- ♦ The Glass Menagerie, Harvey Powers Theatre, 8:00 p.m., $6
- ♦ Christy's Candlelight Entertainment, Rooke Chapel, 9:00 p.m., $5
- ♦ Jeff Clark, Uptown, 9:30 p.m., free
- ♦ Meet the Parents, Vaughan Literature Auditorium, 10:30 p.m., $1

Sunday, November 2

- ♦ Bucknell Concert Choral Fall Concert, Weis Center, 2:00 p.m., free
- ♦ Glass Menagerie, Harvey Powers Theatre, 8:00 p.m., $6

WILL YOU MAKE THE CUT?

Courtesy of Department of Theatre and Dance

Directing students (left to right) Kim Klauder '05, Michael Mellas '05, Candy Turner '04, Kristen Habacht '05, Paola Grande '05 and Brittany Bohn '04 will be holding auditions for their one-act play projects (i.e. Cocktail Theatre) on Tuesday evening, November 4, from 6 to 9:00 p.m. in Coleman Hall, Room 020. All students are invited to audition.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION C

October 31, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 8

Features:

Sarah Wilson '04 experiences the culture of Chile.

See page C8

Another titillating edition brought to you by...

Sex and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I was wondering if you could give me some basic sex tips that could help me spice up my relationship with my boyfriend. Things have been getting a little tired and routine between us, and I think we need to breathe some new life into our sex life. Thanks, Ms. O! You are the best!

Love,

'J'

Dear 'J,'

Oh! This is definitely one of my favorite types of questions to answer!

First of all, a basic tip is that you should make sure that you are both spending enough time on foreplay. If you do not get your engines properly revved up, then doing the actual deed will not be nearly as enjoyable.

That being said, a good way to make foreplay and sex more fun is to throw in a blindfold (neckties and bandannas work really well for this purpose). Although blindfolding seems cliché, it is definitely one of the most exciting things you can do for a quick fix. This will intensify your sense of touch because the blindfold takes away your ability to see what is going to happen next and makes you concentrate more on the actual sensations and pleasure. Ask your partner to blindfold you, and then have him massage and kiss various parts of your body.

See MS. O, page C2

University-sponsored events provide many activities for students on the weekends. Left: Comedian Daniel Tosh jokes with students in the Bison. Right: Meika Pauley performs in the 7th Street Café as part of ACE's Late Night Music Series.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

A diamond in the rough

University-sponsored programs offer a chance for fun on weekends

By CARRIE TODD
Writer

When thinking about central

Pennsylvania, what comes to mind? One haunting image is the vast farmland. Yet another disappointing example is the Susquehanna Valley Mall, providing students with a very limited variety of stores to choose from. I wouldn't suggest that anyone take his or her one-stop Christmas-shopping trip there.

Maybe central Pennsylvania isn't what we all dreamed it would be, but we are able to make it better than it is with the help of a few friends and the University. With the innumerable activities that the University offers, students are able to convert what might have been a "suitcase" school to a school many never want to leave. After all, why do you think all those alumni come back for Homecoming?

Last weekend was a fabulous display of the University-sponsored events. From the Late Night Music Series at the 7th Street Café and Craft Center Late Night to comedian Daniel Tosh, there are many options for those who aren't into the party scene. The Maroon 5 concert at Uptown was an especially popular event, drawing a crowd so large they had to stop people at the door.

When in need of a relaxing, entertaining night, just look to the triangular flyer holders on the cafeteria tables to provide you with a list of options. All of these events are planned by Activities and Campus Events (ACE) and the Campus Activities and Programs (CAP) center and are provided to give students the chance to participate in non-alcoholic events. Even for those who enjoy the party scene, these options are for those times when you just aren't in the mood to face downtown.

"I had been looking forward to the Maroon 5 concert for a long time. There was no way I was going anywhere else but Uptown that night," Kiki Spinner '05 said. "There was so much energy in the room, and I think the band really fed off of it. They sounded so good live, and the lead singer was everything I imagined him to be, summed up in one word: hot."

While these activities might not seem so enticing while staring at you from the hot-colored paper on the cafeteria table, you might be pleasantly surprised.

Associate Dean of Students and Director of CAP Kari Conrad explained that it is part of her responsibility to have things to do on the weekend. One of her goals is that she wants to make sure students cannot say they have "nothing to do."

Conrad knows how important it is for the students to take part in choosing what activities ACE and the CAP center will offer. The activities are meant to entice the students, and if they are not given what they want, they will not be motivated to go.

"Since [Lewisburg] is not a large city, [students] get more opportunities to create activities which lead to more student participation and involvement, which

See FUN, page C2

Skirmish USA brings paintball to life

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Four shots go whizzing by my head. I dive for cover. I frantically crawl through a thicket of bushes, all the while keeping a lookout for my pursuer. I hear a rustling and the pop-pop-pop of a gun being fired, but this time from a different direction. Almost instantaneously this is followed by a stinging in my right arm—I've been shot.

Thankfully, I lived. I am brought back to life by a man in an orange armband carrying a whistle. I met him many times that day. But every time before I can even have a chance to thank him, I am back in the thick of battle. Welcome to paintball, Skirmish-style.

Camarderie, action, outdoors, exercise and the thirst for victory bring paintball to life. It's a day where you can get as close to an experience with the ugly face of war as you want, yet be guaranteed to go home with only a few minor bruises and scrapes. Skirmish USA is one of the largest and best places to play on the entire East coast, and it's located within one-and-a-half hours from the University.

Skirmish gets enough business so that there's always a lot of action, even if you go with only a couple friends in the winter. If you lack the numbers needed to make a team, you and your friends will be placed on one. However, if you convince an entire hall, club or group of friends to play, you can form your own team. Group play is where the awesome team-building experience starts to happen as you work together to conquer an opposing team through a variety of situations.

Skirmish owns hundreds of acres and has over 40 different playing fields. The fields are vast enough that the battle you and your team are fighting is the only one you have to worry about. Play includes the typical woodland-warfare, capture-the-flag games, to the overtaking of various forts and castles at the end of the day there is an all-out rapid fire play to use up extra paintballs.

Courtesy of Skirmish.com

Skirmish offers hundreds of acres and 40 different fields on which to play paintball. Groups qualify for a special rate to enjoy the fun, team-building activity.

When you arrive at headquarters near Jim Thorpe, Pa., also the home of Pocono White-water, you'll have the option of renting a gun, a face mask and a jumpsuit. Be prepared though because you won't have an option of buying paintballs, it's required. Splitting cases or boxes of balls with friends is a good way to save money, as a day of paintball at Skirmish can get pretty pricey. The non-group rate is $30 per day and you should expect to spend around $30 for balls.

Don't let the price scare you away though, as Skirmish is willing to make deals. They offer large discounts to groups and many special rates on specific dates. They are also very reasonable to deal with. When I played two years ago on BYOG Day (Bring Your Own Gun and play for free Day), I brought a friend's gun that began malfunctioning. After a technician looked at it and was unable to fix the gun on the spot, I was given a free rental with hardly any additional questions asked.

Once you've paid your way and have been put on a team, you'll then take a 10-minute bus ride to the base camp of Skirmish's play fields. This is where you'll be spending the rest of the day, so don't forget anything.

If you've never played before, make sure you're properly dressed as you'll be spending the entirety of the day outdoors and you may spend a good portion crawling around the ground trying to save your teammates' butts from enemy fire. So besides making sure to wear clothes that you don't mind getting dirty and painted, make sure you have plenty of coverage, as paintballs on exposed skin can sting nicely.

Lockers are available at the base camp so don't be afraid to bring a change of clothes or shoes. Food and beverages are also good to bring, but they do have concessions at the base camp.

Skirmish USA offers well-organized play, a number of special deals and discounts and great variety in playing fields. It is definitely worth checking out.

Let's do the Time Warp

Courtesy of rockyhorror.com

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Writer

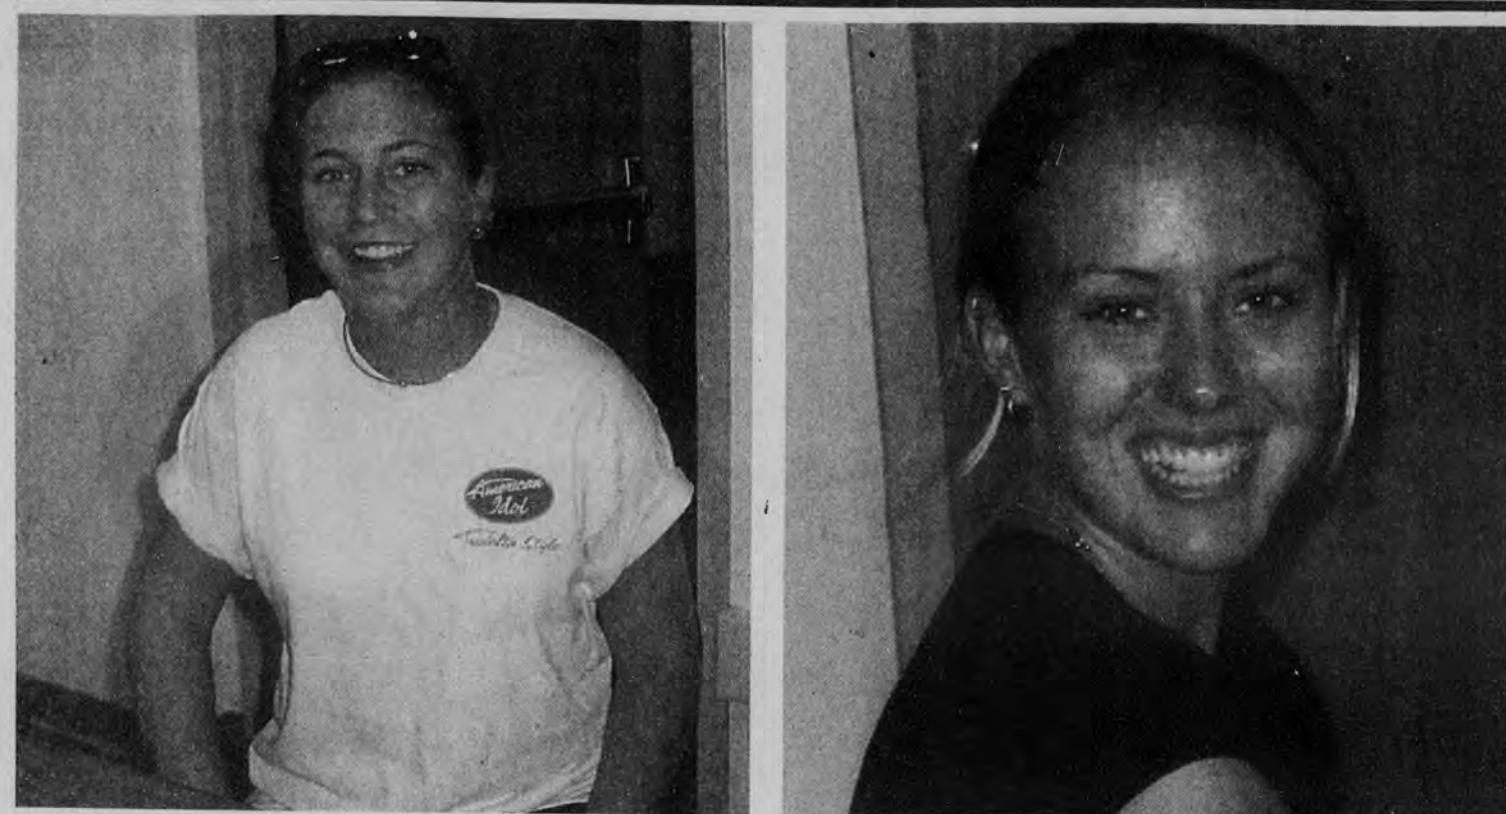

Driving past your local movie theater, you see a group of kids dressed up in costume, lined up to buy a movie ticket. Who are they? And what are they wearing? They are the Rocky Horror fans! For them, the movie "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is a tradition to watch with other fans every Halloween.

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is a film widely heard and talked about. The U.S. premiere in late 1975 at the Westwood Theater in Los Angeles failed to attract an audience, but in the 28 years since its release the film has become a classic among all Halloween films.

"Rocky Horror is a place to go where you'll be accepted, whoever."

See ROCKY, page C2

FEATURES

Many students enjoy the opportunity to student teach during their time at the University. Darcey Brooten '04 (left) and Robin Meling '04 (right) feel this experience is adequately preparing them for their futures.

TEACH From page C1

ers are eased into it.

Student teaching offers students the opportunity to experience teaching firsthand and for some, decide that teaching is what they want to do for a career.

Brooten always knew that teaching was her calling.

"Ever since the first day I entered a classroom, I have wanted to be a teacher. As I have grown older, my desire to teach has only grown stronger," Brooten said.

Denise Tang '04, who is teaching third grade at White Deer Elementary School in Milton, said that her student teaching experience has led her to what she wants to do in life.

"I never knew I definitely wanted to be a teacher until I started student teaching," Tang said. "Taking classes and observing is not the same as actually teaching. It's a whole different feeling being in the classroom and being in control of what you teach. It's also a kind of pressure, but a good one."

Like Brooten, Tang finds her student teaching experience tremendously rewarding.

"You have the pressure of wanting to make a lesson effective and meaningful, but you have the motivation to do so because you think these students are part of you," Tang said. They are like my other family. I care about them and want to make learning fun for them. It's exciting to think that I will be doing this everyday!"

"You have the pressure of wanting to make a lesson effective and meaningful, but you have the motivation to do so because you think these students are part of you."

—Denise Tang '04

In addition to endless lesson plans, University elementary and secondary student teachers meet from 4 p.m.-6 p.m. every Thursday to discuss issues that have come up during the week. This seminar gives the student teachers the opportunity to not only vent, discuss and commiserate, but also to laugh and share funny stories.

Some student teachers only recently developed a passion for classroom teaching. Robin Meling '04, who is teaching tenth grade English at Milton High School, explained her newfound love.

"Growing up, I never imagined myself becoming a teacher. I didn't want to be stuck in school for the rest of my life," Meling said.

"My first semester at Bucknell I took Education 101 and realized teaching was where I wanted to be. Working with kids and helping people is something I have always enjoyed."

Meling has also decided that she would like to be with students outside of the classroom.

"Another reason why I decided to go into teaching is because I would like to coach," Meling said.

"Growing up, I participated in sports year-round, and my coaches influenced me greatly. Teaching will allow me to coach different sports at a high school level."

Jennifer Campana, a graduate student teaching ninth-grade American Cultures at Lewisburg High School, also only recently developed a fondness for teaching.

"As a student I felt a huge contempt for the structure of public school and actually quit without finishing the tenth grade. The last place I imagined I would be is teaching in high school," Campana said. "But, as I grew older I realized that there were more students out there who might need help from an alternative perspective. These students are hard to reach, frustrating and cocky, but they are my reason to be. Actually, all that I hope is to help them find a passion for learning (no matter the content) as I was lucky to do for myself."

Despite whatever age group—dealing with either teenage angst or coloring woes—students look forward to teaching in the future.

of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet." Boswell said that the performance had brought the city to this truly rural homeland of central Pennsylvania. He also said that the turnout was not as high as he would have liked.

So next weekend when you think about going out, take a second and think. Maybe what you want is to take a night off and take the alternative path. You just might enjoy yourself by engaging in a non-alcoholic event.

"The University is your oyster, and you make it what you want it to be," Rich Karcher '05 said.

MS. O From page C1

This will work best if he tries to vary the body parts that he touches instead of going up or down in a straight line. If he mixes up what body part he moves to next, it will make it more exciting for you because you won't be able to anticipate where he is going to touch next. Then, switch roles and allow him to experience the thrill of being blindfolded for himself.

If you are still looking for some more spice, then you can try what I like to call the "Icy-Hot" trick. For this you will need a glass of ice cubes and a cup of warm tea (make sure it is warm, not hot). Place both of the glasses within easy reach of the bed. Ask your partner to lie down and relax. Start off this little game with the ice cubes. Take one cube in your hand and begin to rub it all over his body. Also, put a cube in your mouth and give him a slow sensual kiss. Continue down his body, making sure to move your cool tongue all over his body. After your ice cube has melted, take a few sips of the tea to warm up the temperature of your mouth. Go over all of the same areas of his body with your warm tongue. His body will be even more sensitive to what you are doing because of the change in temperature. When he has had his turn, make sure he tries this out on you too. This trick never fails to add a little spice!

Another recommendation I have for you is to move out of bed. Try something different and a little more creative. You do not have to pick some place that is daring or adventurous. The idea is just to throw in a little variety. Pick a place where you are both comfortable but haven't tried before. This will also help relieve some of the monotony that I sense you are feeling.

Ms. O's best sex tip is to always remember to use protection during foreplay and sex!

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to The Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What is the biggest mishap that has happened while you were hooking up with someone?

ROCKY From page C1

er you are. The music is wonderful, the costumes are flashy and fun and the film can be a wonderful vacation from reality. It's like a grownup combination of dressing up and "The Wizard of Oz," and we get to be among the players, cut loose and be someone exciting and sexy for a couple of hours a week. It's just a lot of fun," according to the Official Rocky Horror Web site. "The Anniversary Celebration of Rocky Horror has given the movie more publicity than it has received in the last five years. The actual anniversary event was covered by a great deal of television, newspapers and magazines."

Now that's about the film, but what about the "cult"? These are the fans who watch "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" over and over again. They have a deep love for the film, packing the theaters and interacting with the show. They shout out their favorite lines and invent new verses to go along with the songs in the film. The "cult" also brings props, including balloons and condoms to follow along with the actions demonstrated by the actors. These actors do their "skits" as the movie is playing, creating a different experience with every show.

"The show 'went public' through people inventing lines and using the lines of others. An individual would yell a line; others would pick it up; then a whole group and eventually the entire audience would shout out the line together," the Web site said.

"Anyone who has seen 'The Rocky Horror Picture Show' a few times knows how to do the 'Time Warp.' It's just a jump to the left, then a step to the right," said one anonymous fan.

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" will be shown at 11 p.m. tonight at the Campus Theatre. The turnout for the event seems to be positive.

"The ticket sales have been decent and will pick up as the week continues," said John Witmer '07, Campus Theatre employee. "It should be a pretty good turn out."

STUDENT PRIZES AND AWARDS Fall 2003

THE STEPHEN A. BAROWSKY PRIZE—For demonstrating campus leadership during the junior year.
Jennifer Lynn Mellon
Garry David Thaniel

THE UNIVERSITY PRIZE FOR MEN—For the man showing the greatest proficiency in English composition and literature during the junior year.
Joshua Larry Tepley

THE BUCKNELL PRIZE FOR WOMEN—For the woman showing the greatest proficiency in English composition and literature during the junior year.
Elise Nicole Cavaney

THE "MOLES" CIVIL ENGINEERING AWARD—For the civil engineering student whose academic achievement and application for the first three years show outstanding promise for a career in construction engineering and management.
Zachary Paul Newman

THE YARNALL PRIZE IN ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—To a student who has a high academic standing and has demonstrated leadership in and a contribution to environmental affairs.
Meredith Paige Field

THE RALPH A. STILL AND ANNE B. STILL PRIZE—For the English major who had the highest standing in English during the junior year.
David Michael Meilleur

THE EASTERN COLLEGE ATHLETIC CONFERENCE MEDALLION—For excellence in scholarship and athletics.
Julie Ellen Engel
Benjamin Alan Stoll

THE BUCKNELL PRIZE FOR WOMEN—For the woman showing the greatest proficiency in English composition and literature during the sophomore year.
Lauren Gayle Lombardo

THE UNIVERSITY PRIZE FOR MEN—For the man showing the greatest proficiency in English composition and literature during the sophomore year.
Chris Ryan Fellabaum

THE PROFESSOR WILLIAM T. GRIER PRIZE—For the student with the highest standing in Latin during the first year.
Carolyn Elizabeth Carmeris

THE BUCKNELL PRIZE FOR WOMEN—For the woman showing the greatest advance in English composition and literature during the first year.
Alexis Berry Shore

THE JEANNINE C. LIUTKUS '93, MEMORIAL PRIZE—For the Bucknell en France students who, through individual initiative and perseverance, improved his/her proficiency in French, made the most of the opportunity to live in the French culture, and showed significant personal growth.
Keith Adley Grant
Alexis Abigail Zackey

THE UNIVERSITY PRIZE FOR MEN—For the man showing the greatest advance in English composition and literature during the first year.
John Robert Gallagher

THE JEFFREY JAMES HAROLD PRIZE—For the student with the highest standing in electrical engineering during the first year.
Jeffrey M. Stoltzfus

THE JOHN A. WALLS PRIZE—For the student from Union County showing outstanding scholarship during the sophomore year.
Abby F. H. Gulden

THE CHARLES F. WHITE '25 MEMORIAL PRIZE—To students who have completed their sophomore year and exhibit excellence in scholarship and promise and achievement in athletics.
Ashley Hempt Dincher
Ryan Edward Goodman

THE SAMUEL LEWIS ZIEGLER PRIZE—For showing the greatest proficiency in English composition and literature during the junior year.
Lacy Jean Gonzalez

THE SAMUEL LEWIS ZIEGLER PRIZE—For the student whose preliminary examinations in English demonstrated the greatest proficiency in the elements of English composition during the first year.
Louis Christopher Grandizio

THE AMERICAN CHEMICAL SOCIETY UNDERGRADUATE AWARD IN ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY—For the student who has displayed interest in and aptitude for a career in analytical chemistry during the first, sophomore, and junior years.
Rachel Lynne Slotcavage

THE GEORGE R. FAINT PRIZE—For the student in liberal arts whose work during the first, sophomore, and junior years is of generally high quality and gives promise of future excellence.
John O'Hearn Phillips
Mary Katherine Timer

THE PROFESSOR GEORGE MORRIS PHILLIPS PRIZE—For the first-year student with the highest standing in mathematics.
Toan Vu Phan

THE PRESIDENT'S AWARD FOR DISTINGUISHED ACADEMIC ACHIEVEMENT

Established to recognize annually all students who have demonstrated, according to established criteria, a high level of academic excellence.

CLASS OF 2004

Elizabeth Anna Benjamin
Brian Paul Bialas
Cecily Campbell Cairns
Cindy Lee Carlson
Sara Danielle Carlson
Marcia Lynn Caron
Izge Cengiz
Margaret Loveland Coates
Kimberly Ann Cocoros
Benjamin Max Cohen
Melissa Erin Cook
Ashley Kate Day
Julie Ellen Engel
Michelle Lynn Gezo
Lacy Jean Gonzalez
Keith Adley Grant
Jill Elizabeth Harrington
Mark Wells Harris
Kathryn Carnahan Heise
Vanessa Kristin Hull
Elizabeth Ann Humphrey
Scott Michael Leeder
Megan Elizabeth Leitch
Benjamin Donald Love
Ashley Mary Lukens
Joel David Martin
Kasey Shane Morgenheim
John O'Hearn Phillips
Ashley Sara Pietrefesa
Erin Renee Rafferty
Erin Elizabeth Sheerin
Frederick LaRue Shrimp
Emily Cooper Smith
Christina Evyenia Stamoolis
Elizabeth Ann Staudt
Lauren Rachel Talarico
Katherine Elizabeth Tarca
Joshua Larry Tepley
Kandy Kay Turner
Scott Alan Whitefield
Kevin Michael Wilson
Jocelyn Lee Wozney
Alexis Abigail Zackey
Michele Elaine Zager

CLASS OF 2005

Wesley Bochs Baker
Craig Earl Beal
Matthew Koren Belmont
Jessica Leigh Bissett
Katherine Grace Breitenbach
Jennifer Marie Brundage
Taylor Lynn Chase
Erin Marie Connell
Jessica Marie Cortese
Anthony Joseph Curtis
Sarah Elizabeth Diamond
Michelle Marie Dombeck
Thomas John Goodman
Adam Robert Hersperger
Erin Kelley Hicks
Allison Marie Kasie
Denis Verne Flaugh Kennedy
Kirt James-Francis Kubbs
Monica Lancellotti
Adam Jason Lipman
Victoria Lee Miller
Tyler Caroline Mills
Erin Lynn Morsheimer
John Michael Ostrum
Alexander Douglas Perkins
Robert Christopher Rhoades
Ann Kathryn Rosko
Theresa Ann Sheard
Jennifer Ann Shoener
Steven William Utke
Mark Sanford Veillette
Peter Michael Verderame
Meredith Leigh Widner

CLASS OF 2006

Eric Patrick Anderson
Romana Baig
Lindsey Alison Beers
Sean Paul Bradley
Joel David Buckman
Kristin Elizabeth Cashman

Stephanie Margaret Chang
Nicole Stafford Chapdelaine
Adam Brent Cohen
John Henry Colebrook
Megan Theresa Cusimano
Jeffrey Michael Day
Elizabeth Caitlin Decker
Jenevieve Consuelo DeLosSantos
Micaela Caloia Deming
Christine Lynn Dougherty
Carol Marie Forney
Melinda Mae Gildner
Colin Moy Haines
Rachel Elizabeth Hepfer
Hannah Marie Kacza
Tomasz Maria Kott
Kathrina Ann LaPorta
Kathleen S. Laux
Ainsley Deirdre Maloney
Gerald Francis Manbeck
Jeffrey Nicholas McKnight
Lindsay R. Morris
Samuel Cunningham Nelson
Justin Pachuski
Toan Vu Phan
Christina Grace Phillips
Lauren Marie Popoli
Ryan Matthew Price
Benjamin Joseph Reiter
Laura Ann Romah
Louis Regis Sarry
Nathaniel Joseph Sartell
Dustin Matthew Schroeder
Julie Ann Schwab
Jeffrey M. Stoltzfus
Amy Gorham Sutter
Rosa Elizabeth Terlazzo
David Nelson Tomasacci
Rachel Meghan Tooley
John Joseph Wagner
Mark Clement Walker
Anne Marie Wittmann

The Magpie
Contemporary clothing, crafts, fine art, jewelry and classes
Joanne Landis, painter
Ordinary Extraordinary Women
Oct. 24 - Nov. 14, 2003
400 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-8550
www.magpienet.biz

Ignite the white!
Zoom!
whiter brighter faster
Whiten your teeth in
one hour or one weekend!
Take your first step to having good, looking great and making a memorable impression every time you smile. You owe it to yourself! Find out more about Zoom Professional Teeth Whitening. Call today!
523-3207
David R. Robinson, DMD, P.C.
339 Market St.
Lewisburg, Pa.
(Downtown)
Bring this ad in & receive 15% off any whitening procedure

DOR-DAY'S
GREAT SUBS!
Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Union County Historical Society invites you to visit
The Dale/Engle/Walker Farmstead
1793 Limestone House used in the Underground Railroad
Site of the Dale's Ridge Trail
Open for Tours:
special hours for BU visitors
Saturday, November 1
from 2:00 - 4:00
last tour begins at 3:45
(570) 524-8666
Follow Route 192 west from Route 15 for 2 miles, turn right onto Strimbridge Road, travel 1.5 miles to House on the left.

IMPERIAL LANES
679 S. Front St.
Milton, PA
570-742-9211
*Parties
*Open Bowling
*Mixers
*Fundraisers
ROCK-N-BOWL

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 132, Number 8
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor
Michelle Dombeck '05

Managing Editor
Alyson Walker '04

Business Manager
Stephen Santulli '05
Director of Sales
Kristin Stangel '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubenstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04

News Editors
Elisabeth Salemme '06
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kecley Skow '07

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Homan '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Geoffy Catrine '04
Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Petak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photo Editor
Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout
Nick Kupinski '07

Chief Copy Editors
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
John Heskin '05
Davaish Malhotra '06

Marketing Directors
Joseph Giordano '05

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester exclusively by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFO

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free guest per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Free speech under fire at Hampton U.

The confiscation of The Hampton Script by acting Hampton University President JoAnn Haysbert is an indefensible assault on student speech and a disgraceful action by a failed leader. Her message to student journalists could hardly be more disrespectful and arrogant.

The freedom of speech enjoyed by the press is an absolutely vital foundation of our society. For a president of an accredited university, especially one with a journalism school, to order the confiscation of the university student newspaper based on her opinion of its truth coverage of the university is abhorrent. It completely violates the lessons the student journalist learns in class and at the newspaper.

Haysbert has the right, just like everyone else, to submit a letter to the editor. She did, and it was published. The controversy began when Haysbert tried to dictate to the newspaper where her letter had to be placed, and the newspaper decided to put the letter on a different page.

The president of the university has no more moral right to dictate the placement of information in the student newspaper than the editor-in-chief has to make school policy. If Haysbert wants to control The Hampton Script, she should resign as acting president, enroll as a student at Hampton and attempt to become the editor of the newspaper.

Haysbert thinks that "there is indeed a lesson to be taught from all of this," and she is right, but not in the way she anticipates. The lesson is clear: college administrators are capable of thinking and acting like three-years-olds.

Unfortunately for the students and future journalists at Hampton University, Haysbert's tantrum after she didn't get what she wanted resulted in the embarrassment of their college. How will the Scripps Howard School of Journalism and Communications at Hampton University ever recruit another journalism major?

When the journalism school was opened barely a year ago, the Hampton president at the time said that the school would "positively revolutionize journalism and journalism education in this country." We doubt anyone realized the revolutionary direction of the school would be backward, to the time before the founders of this great nation established the independence and freedom of speech and press.

There was a rightful outcry of indignation after Haysbert violated the principles of journalism. Jeff Cohen of the American Society of Newspaper Editors (ASNE), an organization that has given money to Hampton, said, "We are gravely concerned about the acting president's decision ... If you don't believe in [the First Amendment], you certainly can't teach it."

The only reasonable solution to this catastrophe is the resignation of Haysbert as acting president and provost immediately. She has brought shame to her university and herself and executed judgement so poor as to render her unfit for any leadership position in an educational environment.

We are additionally disappointed by the decision of The Script's editorial board to succumb to the pressure of the acting president and reprint the front cover with the letter to the editor. Despite including a note explaining their objection to the letter on the cover, the students on the editorial board failed to stand up for their rights and those of other student journalists throughout the country.

Faced with a group of bad choices, they chose something less than the best available. There can be no doubt that the ethical and moral choice should have been refusing to cave in to the president's demands.

We are lucky to have an administration that is not so foolish as to believe that it is above the principles of the Constitution. It may disagree with our decisions about placement of stories or our suggestions for improving the school and student life, but it understands the important role of a free and independent press.

There are surely improvements possible with regard to speech issues on campus, but the most fundamental, that of the press, is not under assault or threat.

Christophe Richard—The Bucknellian

Letters to the editor

University student-athletes meet high academic standards

To the Editor:

News related to college athletics has appeared in bold headlines in newspapers across the United States in recent months. Unfortunately, very little of the coverage has been of a celebratory nature. Social misconduct, charges of academic fraud and shake-ups in major conference alignments are just some of the stories that have littered college sports fans' dailies.

What those negative banners have masked, however, is the fact that most schools are conducting their athletics programs above board while providing their student-athletes quality educations. And among these schools, no one is doing it any better than Bucknell.

The University is one school that has aimed to set high standards for upholding the scholar-athlete model, and it has succeeded. Yes, winning is extremely important at the University, but not at the expense of the overall mission. Recently, Bucknell was cited as the national leader in the graduation rate of its student-athletes, with a 100 percent success rate. Among all Division I institutions, Bucknell ranks third in total number of Verizon Academic All-America selections, with 106 since 1970. Bucknell has claimed 93 Patriot League Scholar-Athlete awards. No other league school produced more than 39. Of Bucknell's 26 varsity teams, 23 compiled team GPAs of 3.0 or better last spring.

And lest anyone forget, those teams have also been extremely successful on the playing fields.

Sincerely,
Lacy Gonzalez '04

Two students outraged by argument against homosexual marriage

To the Editor:

I initially started writing this letter with a barrage of quoted statistics and comments about the evolving meaning of marriage in our society. And then I realized something: those numbers, although solidifying the point that homosexuals are no different from heterosexuals except for in respect to whom they love, were beyond the point.

Marriage, beyond its religious and legislative connotations, is about love. It is about love and commitment. I am completely unable to see how that, in any way, shape or form, could be threatening.

If two people want to celebrate their love, to confess a desire for long-term commitment to one another, then I say more power to them. It takes a lot of courage to put oneself into a commitment like that, and if today's divorce rates are any indication, it is even harder to maintain such a commitment.

And it is the same idea—love—that makes couples into parents. As long as the child is loved and cared for, then chances are that he or she is going to turn out OK.

So basically what is being argued is the ability for same-sex couples to express their love. And again that makes me want to ask, "Why are we arguing?" Even in the face of the supposed "glutinous sexual appetites" of homosexuals that Martin Wade described, wouldn't marriage be a deterrent from such behavior? If homosexuals really were like that, wouldn't marriage lessen such behavior because one person could commit solely to another person?

Marriage, beyond its religious and legislative connotations, is about love

So, if two people love each other enough to want to spend the rest of their lives together, why should we prevent them from doing so? The only thing that might result from such a union is the further pursuit of such an ideal, i.e. more people would want to find that kind of love. And if more people are trying to love, where is the problem?

Sincerely,
Stephanie Wright '06

To the Editor:

When reading Martin Wade's article, "Same-sex Marriages Should Not be Allowed," several people I know, myself included, were disturbed and saddened.

Mr. Wade is obviously trying to dehumanize gay men, as seen in his statement, "there is clearly very little commitment in their lives." Homosexuals are human beings, with all the strengths and weaknesses that everyone experiences. Trying to ascribe a quality such as "uncommitted" to a group of humans such as gay males, is as silly and false as calling all redheads "uncommitted" or saying that all bimbos are people have "glutinous sexual appetites."

Mr. Wade's statistic that "43 percent of homosexual males have had over 100 sexual partners" is also blatantly misleading. Common sense leads me to question if 43 percent of homosexual males even know 100 other homosexual males, and much less have had sex with them. Do these statistics encompass a truly representative population of U.S. homosexuals? It is disturbing that anyone's judgment could be so clouded by hate that they would believe such a preposterous statement.

I suggest that Mr. Wade work on improving his basic logic skills and compassion for his fellow beings before he tackles such a complex issue as same sex marriage.

Sincerely,
Carrie Nugent '06

Every voice needs to be expressed

Henry David Thoreau's work is refreshing in its emphasis on the power of every opinion

By MATTHEW FORNATARO
Contributing Writer

In a day and age when a neoconservative, obtrusive and arrogant administration sits at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, it is refreshing to read "Resistance to Civil Government" by Henry and stand up for what you believe is right applies to today, as it does to every age.

While the George W. Bush administration dragged the name of our country and every moral citizen in it through the mire of an unjust war, violated international law and asserted false statements perpetuating conflict, it assumed that all U.S. citizens were apes, willing to mimic in due fashion the lies embodied in their leaders. While many were willing to approach this issue with a sense of apathy, ungoverned by an impending fate of joining the ranks of the unlucky souls whose job it is to affect these unjust principles, some were willing to stand up in a manner not seen since the abomination called Vietnam.

The most important thing that Thoreau renders in this work is the power of the individual. Quoting Shakespeare's great tragedy "Hamlet,"

Thoreau writes: "A wise man will only be useful as a man and will not submit to be 'clay,' and 'stop a hole to keep the wind

Our government ignored these thousands upon thousands of American voices away." Essentially, when even one man's opinion or talent is wasted, society is left impotent. One person's voice means change. While those opposed to Bush's war for the profit of Halliburton, Bechtel and ExxonMobil may not have prevented this excessive war with Iraq, one voice brought about a second voice, which in turn brought about a voice, which flourished into tens of thousands of individual voices dissented from the leadership of the United States.

A movement with such power and sweeping numbers cannot be overlooked ideologically, yet war was ratified, and our government ignored these thousands upon thousands of U.S. voices who stood up against a war in an organized, civilized and respectable manner.

Along with Thoreau, in his opposition to another unjust war, I proclaim that this blood was not in my name! Was it in yours? I stood up and voiced my dissent. Did you believe their lies? Where are the "weapons of mass destruction?"

I do not believe our country should have invaded a sovereign nation without provocation, and just as Thoreau believed that one man's ability to free his own slaves was in itself achieving abolition, so am I now trying to stop war.

My rejection of our government's policy is what makes me an individual, a human being, according to Thoreau. It is the spirit of each individual's conscience that should guide this country.

Thoreau writes, "The character inherent in the American people has done all that has been accomplished; and it would have done somewhat more, if the government had not sometimes got in its way."

When even one man's opinion or talent is wasted, society is left impotent.

Freedom comes from within. The sooner we all use our free and individual voices, the sooner will this country again be ours.

University costs can be easily reduced

Printing only when necessary and turning off lights are effective ways to save money

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

28,764. That's no small number, and unless you're receiving financial aid, that number doesn't get any smaller. Yes, tuition is $28,764 per year. And no, that doesn't even begin to cover the expenses for cars, food, insurance or even beer.

So what exactly are we paying for? An education? Of course. A good time? Absolutely. The chance to watch University football for free? Maybe. But there are other superfluous things as well. They cannot be wholly responsible for the seemingly exponential rise in college tuition costs, but they cannot be entirely innocent of driving this inflationary binge either. So, here it is in black and white: paper and electricity cost a lot of green.

Well fine, this is not perhaps a shocking revelation. We need paper to print out stuff, we need paper in order to read irate columnists' remarks about pointless topics and we need paper so we can make paper airplanes in class. That's all well and good, but how much does that actually cost? Paper is very much a luxury at this university.

It's not very hard to see why. Next time you walk into Bertrand Library, print something for free—everyone does it. While some computers have double-sided printing, others do not. That means electronic reserves, PowerPoint presentations, essays and midterms require tremendous sheets of paper and all are printed free-of-charge to the student, but at a large cost to the University. Of course, that means it becomes a burden to tuition fees. Once fees are raised, it becomes a burden to the average University student, and this free of charge concept is out the window.

At 10 p.m. on a Sunday night revealed that five of the 28 classrooms were bathed in florescent light

The funny part is, I'm part of the problem too. I print out lots of stuff for classes. For a research project I printed out a stack of paper one-inch high and then I changed my project altogether and had to print out another inch-high stack. For another course, University students, including myself, are expected to print out PowerPoint slides. Even if they are printed double-sided, the cost adds up; every presentation is about five pages long, there are 18 presentations and there are over 10 people in the class. This adds up to a whopping 900 pieces of paper, and that doesn't even include the 10-page research paper, the rough draft, the paper needed to do the research or even the lab reports. Not without its irony, this is supposed to be an environmental studies course. And that's just the paper aspect of it. Toner is incredibly expensive for the school's fleet of laser printers. Extensive use of electricity is necessary as well.

And that's the next point. Electricity, in light of this summer's Northeastern blackout, California's notorious blackouts and brownouts of last year, the soaring prices of the oil and natural gas needed to generate the power, the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) debates of the 2000 election, Iraq, etc. is by no means a static topic. While some may say it is a supply-side issue and see the need for the exploitation of Alaskan wilderness or the Iraqi people, there is a demand side as well, and the University is part of the problem.

A spot check of Coleman Hall and Vaughn Literature Building classrooms at 10 p.m. on a Sunday night revealed that five of the 28 classrooms were bathed in fluorescent light. That's not terrible by any means; in fact, it almost came as a pleasant surprise. Nonetheless, there were five whole classrooms with their lights on, probably since Friday, draining our pocketbooks and straining the environment for apparently no reason at all.

Yet there's no reason to play a blame game because criticizing University students ignores the deeper issues at hand. And I think the issue here is U.S. society in general; we just do not see the need to turn off the light or print out some more paper because it's not in our mindset to do so. It's free for us because somebody else will pick up the tab, when in reality all of society is paying, and not paying just for the mere economic costs, but paying dearly for the larger environmental ramifications as well.

Education is truly an ongoing process that is not bounded by our campus. While the University can play a pivotal role in changing our ethos and, by extension, society, it instead simply reaffirms U.S. norms of wastefulness and consumption.

We just do not see the need to turn off the light

So why not solve easy problems? The University should reduce tuition costs through the paper it no longer needs to buy. Meanwhile, the University sells or charges students for paper at cost. This market solution makes students print only what is necessary, and those students who do not print that much save money. Second, turn the lights off with timers. Over time, money will be better off. And last but not least, tuition costs may never rise again.

Student-athletes enjoy balance at University

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

When we think of marquee collegiate athletic programs, names like USC, Texas, Miami and Stanford come to mind. We can name prominent players on these types of teams—students who are relatively close to our age in schools all over the country, students who are nationally-renowned celebrities, students who are already thinking about their post-graduate shoe contracts. With fewer than 4,000 students, strict limitations on athletic scholarships and a highly-selective admissions policy, the University is certainly at a disadvantage compared to highly populous, big-market schools. In spite of this, the University competes with remarkable success at the Division I level, while maintaining its credibility as one of the nation's best academic institutions. As a result, the experience of being a University student-athlete is both unique and rewarding.

From an academic standpoint, Bucknell student-athletes operate similarly to those at comparable academic institutions like Haverford, Washington and Lee University, Bates, etc. Unlike student-athletes at these other schools, however, student-athletes have the opportunities to compete against the Miami and Stanford of the world and measure themselves against some of the best in the nation. The experiences of toeing the line against Olympic qualifiers or stepping into the batter's box against one of the nation's toughest pitchers can be amazing, particularly for University student-athletes who are not accustomed to the national spotlight. Granted, few University teams and student-athletes can claim to have consistently out-performed the nation's best; however, the University is commendable for having given its student-athletes such opportunities. With these opportunities, University student-athletes have made their mark in national-caliber competition with some extraordinary performances and maintained their favorable reputation with consistently strong competition. In the world of Division I collegiate athletics, the University is rarely, if ever, a pushover.

The University competes with remarkable success at the Division I level, while maintaining its credibility as one of the nation's best academic institutions

In addition to challenging competition, being a University student-athlete has other advantages. Unlike many of the big-name athletic institutions, University student-athletes are given ample opportunities to develop themselves off of the playing field. The lives of student-athletes here don't have to revolve entirely around athletics. There are many who enjoy participating in student organizations, on-campus jobs, fraternities, sororities and student government.

Upon arrival at the University, athletic teams can serve as a source of comfort for new students looking to make new friends. However, the student-athlete's social experience here isn't limited to spending time with his or her athletic team. At larger universities that give athletic scholarships, athletic teams are often placed in team dorms, eat team meals at scheduled times and spend much of their time on a demanding team schedule. While there are certainly benefits to this lifestyle, there are also tremendous limitations. University student-athletes are always able to make friends with different groups of students and spend time in other organizations. They have the benefit of being able to broaden their horizons and still be part of an outstanding athletic tradition.

My experiences as a student-athlete at the University have generally been very positive and rewarding. When sharing stories with friends who compete for other universities, I often find myself feeling encouraged about my decision to become a student-athlete. While some student-athletes can claim to be treated like professionals, stay in hotel suites and accrue enough free Nike gear to last a lifetime in one season, I am constantly reminded that I can lead a full life as a part of many University organizations and still be proud of my team and my school every time I compete.

Romeo and Juliet interrupted

By ALYSON WALKER
Managing Editor

Juliet pauses, contemplating whether the sleeping draught will really work, and as she swallows the liquid, she clutches her throat and gasps, "Ring ... ring!"

Oh wait, that wasn't Juliet; it was the cell phone of the person behind me. I decided not to turn around and glare because the individual would obviously already feel horrible about having her cell phone go off during the play, let alone during such a momentous part—beep, beep!

Apparently, I was incorrect in my assumption as the person, rather than turning off the phone entirely, turned her phone back on, evident by the sounds of an arriving voice mail. Figuring that this was the end of the noises, I tried to refocus on Romeo and Juliet, just in time to watch Juliet's family mourn her "death."

When I first heard the voices, I was shocked. Not content to know that she had voice mail, she checked it—during the show! By this point, I was angry enough to give her a look—you know which one—the severely annoyed. "I can't believe you're doing that!" look. The look proved ineffective.

Grated, what was I expecting from someone who was apparently a theater/Shakespeare novice? This same person, along with her group, discussed how they should have read the synopsis of Romeo and Juliet before the lights went down because they did not know the plot. Ironically, they discussed this throughout the Prologue, which, for those of you not familiar with the play, gives a general plot outline.

If you're visualizing this group as a group of six rowdy students only in attendance because an English professor required it for a class, you're completely wrong. While I was surrounded almost entirely by students, this motley and disruptive group consisted of six adults, approximately 40 years old.

Surprising? Maybe. But does this woman's age give her the right to infringe on my right to peacefully watch "Romeo & Juliet" from my $10 seat (a big thank you to the Weis Center for student discount tickets)—I don't think so!

Perhaps the woman had a family emergency, but if that was the case, she should have simply turned off the phone and quickly and quietly exited the theater. From the lobby, she could return the call and either leave the theater or return for the conclusion of the play.

Apparently, this new "cell-phone etiquette" issue is not just confined to the college student—adults are just as guilty.

My solution—if you can't talk—or if you shouldn't talk, as is the case whenever you're at a performance, movie, or lecture—turn off the phone. Have some common courtesy and think of those around you. Set a good example for those college kids you complain are so inconsiderate.

Share your opinions...
e-mail ahanlon@bucknell.edu

FEATURES

Abroad perspective: cultural diversity in Chile

By SARAH WILSON
Contributing Writer

I recall the feeling I had on the third night of my study abroad experience in Chile, when my host parents drove me 30 minutes up the coast to a beach where you could look out onto the Pacific Ocean and see the well-lit port city of Valparaiso in all of its picturesque glory.

"Welcome, Sarah, to the most perfect place in the world," my host father said. As I looked over the bay at the rolling hills, overflowing with lights and activity, I felt a deep sense of serenity and was filled with the overwhelming sensation that I had made the right decision to come to Chile.

Ever since I saw the movie "Alive" when I was 12 years old, I've wanted to visit Chile. The incredible mountains the rugby team's plane crashed into reminded me so much of my own mountains in Colorado, but the Andes appeared even more majestic and awesome. Watching that film with my friends, I was always teased as I was never really able to get past the beauty of the Chilean scenery and actually enjoy the compelling survival story as it was intended. When I began researching study abroad programs as a sophomore, I realized that studying abroad would be the perfect opportunity to indulge my desire to visit Chile.

So I joined 25 other students from across the United States on the School for International Training's (SIT) nontraditional study abroad program entitled "Chile: Culture, Development and Social Justice."

Courtesy of Sarah Wilson

Wilson (right) and another SIT member enjoy the Andes. The mountains, reminiscent of her home in Colorado, prompted her to study in Chile.

on Sept. 3, 2002. After arriving in Valparaiso, I spent approximately eight weeks taking classes and living as an active member of the Ibañeta-Lobos family. I cooked, ate and traveled with my host family, and my Spanish improved immensely as I began to forget that I was not actually their Chilean daughter but in fact a visiting student from the United States living with them for only two short months.

They welcomed me entirely, answering all of my questions and taking time to explain to me that which I didn't understand. My father tried out his English on me, mispronouncing nearly every word most of the time and then pretending to be insulted when I could hardly stifle a giggle. My mother took me shopping, showed me around town, made sure that I always knew which form of public transportation to take and told me how to direct the micro and colectivo drivers so I would arrive safely back at our apartment.

They even pretended to enjoy the U.S. salad I made for them, after I had scoured Jumbo, the local four-story grocery store, for such atypical ingredients as bacon, bleu cheese and garlic-flavored wine vinegar. They weren't offended when I declined to be traditionally Chilean and cover every plate of food with mayonesa and limon. My wonderful host family even made me a small turkey on Nov. 28, even though the U.S. conception of Thanksgiving meant absolutely nothing to them.

The wealth of cultural knowledge I gained from living with a Chilean family far exceeds anything I've ever been taught in a classroom. They always say that immersion is the best way to learn a language and discover the intricacies of the culture, and I would agree. But even more so, becoming a part of the culture, living as one of them and learning how to do this as you go, transcends all cross-cultural communication and lifestyle barriers. I learned so much about Chilean culture, my host family and myself by being an active part of a traditional family, and the appreciation I have for this knowledge is indescribable.

Aside from the incredibly important experiences I gained living with a host family, my time in Chile was also spent in

Courtesy of Sarah Wilson

Interacting with the local wildlife was a common occurrence during senior Sarah Wilson's trip to Chile. During her year abroad, Wilson was given the opportunity to entirely submerge herself in the culture and lifestyle.

While the Andes are in fact one of the most beautiful mountain ranges in the world, most of its major magnificence comes from its location. Chile is a very skinny country, and the landscape goes from sea level to 20,000 feet in less than 100 miles. This made it a very interesting trip in a bus as we wound up the mountains, climbing 20,000 feet in less than two hours. We sucked on lemons and chewed on native coca leaves (yes, the plant that cocaine is derived from), and some of us had to regulate our breathing through an oxygen tank because our bodies couldn't adjust quickly enough. Eventually we reached the top, acclimated and settled into the village of Putre, where we would spend the next few days.

The next part of the program was the part I had felt most uneasy with—our village stay. In the Andean alipiano, there are many small indigenous pueblos, most of them having no more than 20-30 families. We had prepared for fieldwork and observation, and the culmination of our field study seminar was to be dropped off in one of these villages for five days.

I arrived in Ticnamar, a small village with the only school for the surrounding villages, and I proceeded to spend my week of fieldwork teaching English at the boarding school. Meeting and spending time with the children from the school was an incredibly rewarding experience—I had a really difficult time leaving them.

My time in Ticnamar was also eye opening for me as there was no commerce in the small village. The families provided for themselves entirely, and my host family grew their own vegetables and raised goats for milk and meat. I will probably never again have the opportunity to live in a house with no running water, herd goats for two hours a day and actually eat goat daily. My experience in Ticnamar put my life entirely in perspective, and after eating goat, I realized that I could never again practice vegetarianism. Although I was worried about the village study, it turned out to be an absolutely life-changing and informative experience. I'm so glad I had the opportunity to live as an Aymaran, even if it was only for one week.

The last important part of my short time in Chile was my independent study period, the last month of my trip. The most unique aspect of all SIT programs is the Independent Study Project (ISP). The ISP requires you to choose a topic and a location for research. Through interviewing and other research strategies, such as direct observation and focus groups, you develop a research project and submit your findings, normally in the format of a mini-thesis. It is an amazing culmination to a formative semester as you are completely on your own and entirely in control of your research.

I chose to live in Santiago, the capital and largest city in Chile. I worked very closely with both feminist non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and SERNAM, the national women's service division of the government. I met the most amazing women during my month there, and my research on the interactions between the civil and governmental sectors of Chilean society has been used to improve the national situation for Chilean women, and I feel honored to have contributed to it. Furthermore, I spent this month exploring the amazing city of Santiago, visiting wineries and museums, eating wonderful food and even mastering the subway system. I had been well-prepared for living on my own in a large Latin American city, and the format of my program had inspired an amazing sense of independence and self-ownership over my own life and experiences.

I've always been aware of the beauty of the Chilean landscape. Beyond that, I didn't give the skinny South American country much thought, as I'm sure the majority of people do as well. I had no idea that this country could be as culturally rich and as perfect as I discovered it to be.

Geographically, Chile really is an all-inclusive country—the length of it provides relatively every type of climate and ecosystem, from rain forest to desert and from tropical island to glacier.

Culturally, I discovered it is just as diverse and welcoming. The Chilean people have survived a difficult political history, and they are stronger and more fascinating because of it. Every Chilean has a unique story, and while they probably won't actively offer it, they will gladly tell you upon request. The political dynamic is now promising and encouraging, and Chileans are the funniest, kindest and most hospitable people I have ever met in my life.

Reflecting on the night I stood on the beach and observed beautiful Valparaiso with my host father, I realize now that he was right. Chile really is the most perfect place in the world, and my experience there changed me in innumerable ways.

Courtesy of Sarah Wilson

Children dance in costume.

Broken Wheel Ranch—a safe haven for rare bison

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

What do an eating establishment in the Lehigh Valley, University football uniforms, Bookstore paraphernalia and Elysburg, Pa., have in common? They are all places where you can spot the otherwise rare bison.

Any University student is familiar with our school's mascot. However, due to their low population and out-of-the-way location, real-life encounters with wild bison are few and far between.

The Broken Wheel Bison Ranch looks to change that. Located in Elysburg, this ranch is home to a herd of approximately 60 truly tangible University mascots.

"Our purpose is preservation, not meat," ranch owner Kay Jeffrey said.

The ranch began when Jeffrey and her husband took a trip to Florida and saw a herd of a highway in Virginia.

"My husband said, 'I just have to be a part of bringing them back,'" Jeffrey said.

Today, the Jeffreys have owned the bison for 20 years and have had their ranch open to the public for 12 years.

Their herd boasts two full-grown male bison and about 40 mature female bison. They also have a large number of juveniles, including Woody, a gentle seven-month-old who Jeffrey calls "her fat fuzzy dog."

The herd is rotated between seven fields for grazing purposes.

"They eat only grass and hay," Jeffrey said.

The bison are also comfortable in any climate. "The colder it gets, the more they like it," Jeffrey said.

The bison are able to run 35-40 miles per hour and jump six feet straight up into the air. Female bison are expected to live 30 years and reproduce throughout their lifespan. The Jeffreys have a 38-year-old female bison who is still breeding. This bison is so friendly that she had to have her horns removed.

"She would nuzzle my husband whenever he came out to see her," Jeffrey said. This attachment to the animals keeps the Jeffreys in the bison business and draws in others as well. A map in the ranch's gift shop showing where various tourists have arrived from details how far tourists are willing to come for such an experience.

"Just this week we had people from western Australia," Jeffrey said.

Just what does this experience involve? For 5 dollars you get the truly unique opportunity to drive through the herd, literally an arm's length from the beasts.

"Don't do this out West. Our animals have all been brought up in fences around humans. We've become a part of their wild — you'll see they'll just ignore us," Jeffrey said.

True to Jeffrey's warning, the bison seemed oblivious to the van disturbing their herd, allowing you to get surreally close. Centuries ago, this opportunity would not have been so rare. Woods bison, shorter and wider than the Plains bison at the ranch, were once native to central Pennsylvania, but the last herd was wiped out in the mid-1800s.

Today, the only places in our area where they can be found are in their representation on campus and at the Broken Wheel Ranch.

In addition to its animal attractions, the ranch boasts several gift shops, featuring a number of Native American and bison-related crafts. Groups and organizations can use the ranch's many facilities for a number of activities. During the autumn months, the ranch offers hayrides through the herd followed by a bonfire.

Julianna Pietak—The Bucknellian

The Broken Wheel Bison Ranch is home to over 40 rare bison. The ranch offers the opportunity to get up close to the herd in a driving tour.

THE BuckHellian

Special Halloween spoof section

R.I.P.
THE TRUTH

This section of The Bucknellian is a spoof section. All information has been made up, and all names of people are fictional. Any resemblance to actual events is purely coincidental. This special Halloween section is intended to be humorous and should not be taken seriously.

BuckHellian exclusive with Dubya

By ALEXANDER MUFFIN
Senior National Spoof Writer

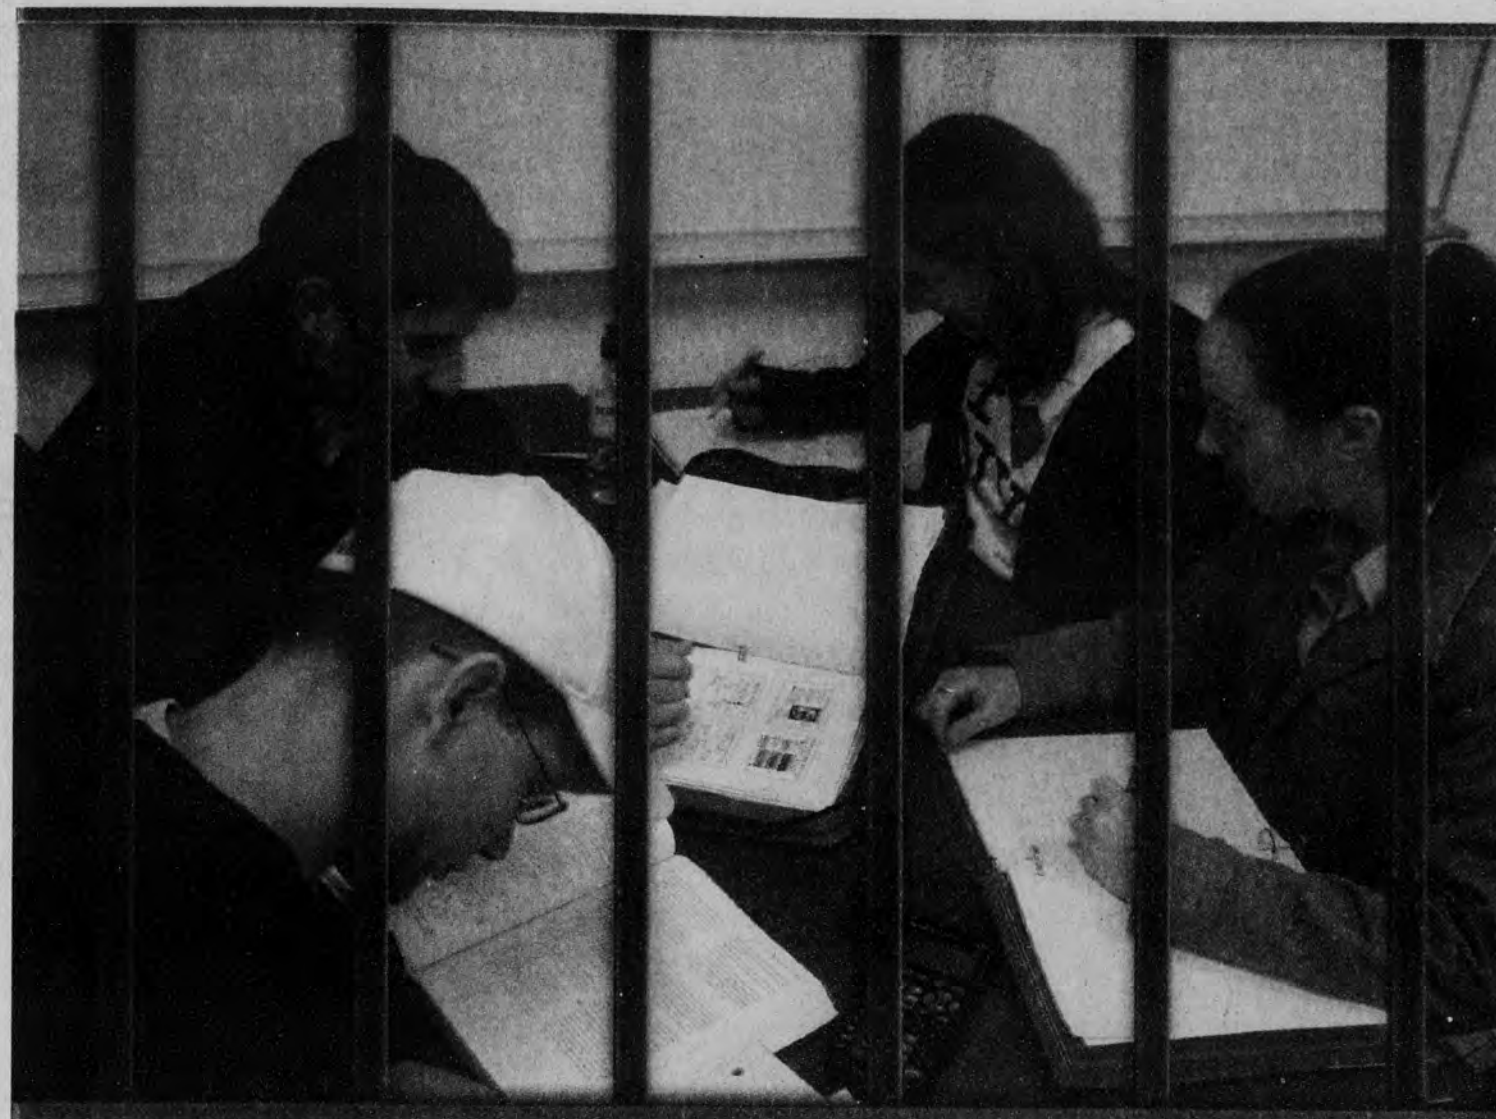

U.S. President George W. Bush recently took time out of his trip to Asia, which ended with a fundraiser in Hawaii, to sit down and discuss the state of his presidency, the country and his ideas.

Muffin: "Thank you for taking some time out of your busy schedule to meet with me. First, I would like to hear you take on the Democratic presidential candidates."

Bush: "No problem, Alex. To be

See DUBYA, page D5

Students blamed for everything

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Ima Badass '06, Jody Juvy '05, E. Scape '07 and Scott Free '04 are accused of starting the Israeli-Palestine conflict, creating decline in local property values and decaying society's moral fiber. They are each being held on $35,000 bail per year.

By JILL BYRDE
Contributing Writer

College students are responsible for the moral decay of society, the slumping economy and increased international violence, according to Vice President of Student Culpability Pickering Johnson Haughty. Despite the many students on campus that disagree with this conclusion, Haughty is undeterred. "In my years of study of the modern 'so-called college student,' which really is a misnomer because none of them study at all, I've found that you can trace all of the evils of our social-morass back to this one group of people," wrote

Haughty in his book, "College Students: Worse than the Devil." The book, published by Random Thoughts Inc., is the result of three years of doctoral thesis work and caught the attention of the University administration, leading to Haughty's hiring last summer.

James Inspid '06 thinks Haughty is being simplistic and unfair.

"Of course not all of us are angels, but we are not the renegade social terrorists he makes us out to be," Inspid said.

"Current University students, including those on this campus, exhibit a lack of morals and respect for our preceding generations, leading to the imminent decline of Western civilization," Haughty said. "Of course these 19- and 20-year-olds don't think they're responsible; they are children, years away from becoming respectable members of our society."

"These students go out two or even three nights a week, they drink alcoholic beverages, they ingest Lord knows what other kinds of substances and then they make noise out in public. This is not at all what we did in college when I was there in the 1970s," Haughty said.

Haughty fears that the disruptive and disrespectful behavior of college students will trickle down to the high school level.

"How can we not expect the

See STUDENTS, page D5

Cable turns students to zombies

Administration, Board of Trustees kicking themselves for allowing installation in student residences

By LOIS LANE
Contributing Writer

University officials report a 500 percent increase in student absences from class since cable became an option in all student housing earlier this semester.

Students have apparently locked themselves into their rooms, mesmerized by all the central Pennsylvania basic cable package has to offer.

students.

"I used to receive brilliant papers about the use of light and dark imagery in Shakespeare," Associate Professor of English Nrkgtlbris Gedkjsabkjdsknlal said. "Now all students want to tell me is how great Mel Gibson looked in tights when he played Hamlet."

Professors in all disciplines are experiencing problems. Assistant Professor of

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Roommates Rem Oathog '06 and Stead E. Gaze '06 can't keep their eyes off the television—despite the fact that the building is on fire! Since cable installation, both students have attended about 20 percent of their classes and each boast a 1.04 GPA.

Ms. O-My

The University's premiere relationship expert dishes it out regarding student relationship issues

Teasers

Title IX

By 2013, women's sports will no longer exist at the University.

Bucknell Briefs

Read about the most racy University news.

What to do
in the middle of NOWHERE

Pubic Safety

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

HIT & RUN—A public safety officer reported that a stop sign ran into his patrol car. The sign broke one window and detached the left passenger rear-view mirror from the car. Public Safety does not know to where the sign escaped. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A Student Health Services driver transported a student from Swartz Hall to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment of food poisoning. The student apparently ate a bad hamburger at the Caf.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A Student Health Services driver transported a student from Swartz Hall to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment of food poisoning. The student apparently ate a bad salad at the Caf.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A Student Health Services driver transported a student from Swartz Hall to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment of food poisoning. The student apparently drank a bad cup of soda at the Caf.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A Student Health Services driver transported a student from Swartz Hall to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment of food poisoning. The student apparently drank a bad cup of soda at the Caf.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT

ILLEGAL CONSUMPTION—Students responded to a loud party in the Public Safety building. Officers were discovered playing drinking games with six cases of beer and ten blenders full of fruity alcoholic drinks. The alcohol was confiscated and destroyed. Hmm.

POLLUTION/TAMPERING WITH THE ENVIRONMENT—Public Safety Officers were charged by the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection for hundreds of counts of pollution. Apparently "destruction of beer" constitutes emptying cans into the Susquehanna River. Fish in the river have reportedly gained 15 pounds since the start of the semester.

MISSING STUDENT—Public Safety responded to a house on Fraternity Road to rescue a student from the basement of one of the fraternity houses. The student apparently slipped and fell while trying to leave the house after a party last weekend. The student had been stuck to the floor, unable to move in the muck, for three days before Public Safety found him.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A Student Health Services driver responded to Hunt Hall to transport a student to Evangelical Community Hospital. The student was put on a ventilator after inhaling too much glitter.

OLFACTORY MISCHIEF/INSTITUTIONAL VANDALISM—Public Safety

responded to the Dana Engineering building to investigate reports of an unusual smell. Several students were sent home to shower so that the ambient environmental conditions could be returned. Prior to their showers, the students had not left the building for three days.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF/VANDALISM/DESTRUCTION OF UNIVERSITY PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to the laundry facilities in McDonnell Hall for the report of a broken washing machine. A student apparently tried to shove his BUID into the coin slot. According to the student, this method of payment works at nearly every other university in the United States.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF/VANDALISM/DESTRUCTION OF UNIVERSITY PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to the laundry facilities in Vedder Hall for the report of a broken soda machine. A student apparently tried to shove his BUID into the coin slot. According to the student, this method of payment works at nearly every other university in the United States.

DISORDERLY GATHERING—Public Safety responded to a disorderly gathering at the president's house. The students had apparently heard a rumor that the University president's wife was baking cookies.

DISORDERLY GATHERING—Public Safety responded to a disorderly gathering in Marts Hall. Students were impatiently waiting in line to register for classes. Students apparently could not register online because almost all students on campus take at least one course requiring a permission signature.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety has responded to 379 reports of white rat sightings on campus. Public Safety suspects that members of the Class of 2004 released 2004 rats on campus as a class prank. None of the rats or students has been apprehended, but Public Safety suggests that all students invest in rat-traps. The situation is under investigation.

THEFT—The biology and psychology departments reported that all rats kept for laboratory purposes have been stolen. Public Safety has no leads on the perpetrator. The incident is under investigation.

PUBLIC NUDITY—Public Safety responded to the Academic Quad after reports of a naked student frolicking in front of Coleman Hall. The student ran in the direction of Swartz Hall upon noticing that Public Safety had arrived. Public Safety was unable to catch the student, but officers are certain that they can correctly identify the individual's backside.

INVASION OF PRIVACY/MISSING PERSONS—Public Safety responded to student concerns that a member of the administration was following them around with a video camera. The students decided to take a shortcut through some cornfields in order to evade the administrator. Public Safety found the lost administrator being tended to by a female wolf in the field the next morning.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT/ILLEGAL GATHERING—Public Safety reported to Harris Hall for a report of a loud party. When Public Safety entered the room in question, officers found students engaged in a raucous game of Trivial Pursuit. The students had in their possession four cases of Pepsi. Students were cited for having too much fun and refusing to sell their souls to Coca-Cola.

ILLEGAL POSSESSIONS—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for reports of smoke coming from the deans of students offices. Apparently the deans were singing "Happy Birthday" to an unidentified person, who was unable to blow out the trick candles on the cake. The deans were cited for illegal possession of candles and have lost their office-selection picks for next year.

Students

WANTED: Visiting Professors No experience necessary!

Bucknell University is currently seeking several full-time, entry-level visiting assistant professors to teach students of all majors during the 2004-05 academic year.

Preference will be given to candidates who have successful undergraduate teaching experience, or even to those who have experience teaching as an undergraduate (such as a T.A. or peer tutor). Bucknell encourages all potential applicants to apply because it is likely that not one application will be denied.

- Bachelor degrees are preferred, but GED or high-school equivalent is required (Applicants with master's degrees or higher may also be considered).
- Applicants should be able to teach in active learning and computer laboratory environments. While computer knowledge is not necessary, the ability to be in the same room as them is—there will be no opportunity for new-hires to learn computers during their time at Bucknell, as the Tech Desk will most likely be of little use.
- English as a third language is preferred, but in most cases the minimal ability to recite the "Pledge of Allegiance" (barring "under God") will be acceptable.
- Applicants should not have any prior experience working at Bucknell or a similar institution and, if hired, shall show no interest in learning the methods and customs of Bucknell. The University prides itself in being diverse.
- Salary is competitive with the University Dining Service and may be considered a living wage for the hometowns of most new-hires.

Letters of application, curriculum vitae, résumés, and reference information related to faculty positions should be directed to the chair of the search committee in the individual departments. Or, for an immediate review, application materials can be sent to the University Parking Appeals Board; however, this may increase the chance of your application being denied.

Note: The mass hiring of year-long visiting professors is a result of Bucknell's failure to effectively coordinate sabbaticals of tenure-track faculty. As a result, there will be several openings in each academic major during the 2003-04 school year. If Bucknell fails to fill all 89 positions, visiting professor new-hires may be expected to teach interdisciplinary classes. For example, a professor who applies for the opening in the electrical engineering department may also be asked to teach ART 314 ("The Gothic Cathedral: The Art and Architecture of Transcendence"), unless the applicant is blind, in which case he or she may have the option to teach MUSC 362 ("Advanced Topics in Musicology").

Bucknell University encourages applications from women, minority groups and the physically- or mentally-disabled (EEO/AA).

CABLE from page D1

"I asked the student what was going through her mind, and she said she saw someone do it on 'Ripley's Believe It Or Not' last week."

An international relations professor reported that a student answered an exam question about the European Union with, "Have you seen the new 'Joe responded similarly.

During a commercial break, students seemed more talkative. "Me like Friends," Slacker said without shifting his gaze from the television set.

Scheduling has also become a problem for the Registrar's Office. Students refuse to take any classes scheduled from 1-2 p.m. because if they have a test, they will be forced to miss "Days of Our Lives."

Scheduling has also become a problem for the Registrar's Office. Students refuse to take any classes scheduled from 1-2 p.m. because if they have a test, they will be forced to miss "Days of Our Lives."

Millionaire?" I can't believe how money-hungry those European women are."

Students are not only suffering academically but they appear to be suffering socially. In the Larison Hall lounge students gather each evening to watch their favorite prime time programming.

When asked what his favorite television program is, Hugo Slacker '06 responded with a grunt.

Hipna Tize '07

Director of the Registrar Tim Slot said, "You can't miss a day when the plot is so intense." Members of Board of Trustees are kicking themselves for finally allowing cable in all rooms on campus. "I knew those kids would be lead straight to the devil!" Trustee Representative Ann Tenna '45 said.

Students have been trying to convince the Board of Trustees and the administration to install cable in their rooms with cable for the last 24 years. Several University

How to have a happy, inoffensive Halloween

By KEPE N. KLEEN
Contributing Writer

There's no better time to celebrate diversity than Halloween—the most potentially offensive holiday of the year! To protect the campus community and preempt any disciplinary action in the name of the bias-related harassment protocol, I will outline everything that you cannot be for Halloween. For all of you out there whose minds are percolating with objectionable costume ideas, allow me to steer you clear of potential disaster, manifested in hurt feelings and long essays on the pitfalls of body paint. Beware the dark and looming administrative hand that taps incessantly on your fraternity house doors—as it to remind you that your actions are being closely scrutinized—and you shall have a happy Halloween.

Lesson one: Be careful not to dress in such a way that might offend someone on the basis of color. Humans, simple creatures that we are, are incapable of dealing with abrupt changes that affect the way we categorize ourselves. When people paint themselves different colors, it is entirely too much for the human mind to comprehend. Some people are black. Some people are white. Some people are "other—please specify." When colors change, it becomes extremely difficult for us to attribute an entire personality, set of values, likes, dislikes, music taste, family history, socioeconomic class and favorite food to someone based solely on his or her color. This, evidently, is extremely disconcerting and results in unimaginable emotional distress. My advice is stay away from the paint, unless you wanna get smeared.

Lesson two: Be careful not to dress in such a way that might offend someone on the basis of sexual orientation. The University has an array of sexual orientations, ranging anywhere from prude to promiscuous. Some people choose to orient themselves with monogamous or even asexual relationships. Others enjoy more diversity in their sexual endeavors in both partners and practices. When planning your Halloween costumes, I ask you to be mindful of the latter group and avoid dressing in a manner that might indicate sex-ophobia. It has been brought to my attention that some young women have considered wearing formal dresses and high heels, messing up their makeup, and frizzing out their hair in order to be "The Walk of Shame" for Halloween. Such a costume, however, would undoubtedly hit home in the most emotionally jarring of ways for so many University students. As a result, I can only plead with you to put yourself in the walker's heels before belittling his or her situation with your costume. If you're going to dress up as "The Walk of Shame," please play the part. If not, transportation is available. The car keys are on the dresser. Please don't crash it. Please do leave an address.

Lesson three: Be careful not to dress in such a way that might offend someone on the basis of their academic major. I have already seen prelates to disaster in the form "Bucknell Engineering" shirts that read "A real major" on the back. As a Liberal Arts student, I was not aware that my major was fake. Before I demand a refund from the University, I must emphasize the danger of inter-departmental conflict. Liberal Arts students know how to make rules and theories that govern society, but unfortunately we do not know how to make real things. I've seen engineers carrying around catapults lately and I am therefore particularly wary of any battle that may result from an offensive Halloween costume. Last year, for example, I saw a student dressed as a protractor. His costume was un-funny to the point of being offensive. Similarly, another student was dressed as William Shakespeare. Engineers clearly do not need to see that—they don't even need to read it. In order to prevent conflict and offensive behavior, we should all be aware of the potential consequences of academic major-related costumes. We need not be so liberal with our costume art as to engineer bad blood between colleges.

With this knowledge, you should all be able to have a safe and enjoyable Halloween experience without attracting unwanted attention from University administrators. Happy Halloween everybody!

Dear Miss O-My,

I have gone out on three dates with this guy and I really like him a lot. I am growing very fond of him and I would like to take the relationship to the next level. The only problem is that I am a rather shy girl, and he seems to be quite shy too. I have been trying to drop hints, but he does not seem to pick up on them! I am at a loss—I fear that if I talk to him about it, I might drive him away. What should I do???

Sincerely,

V. Passionate

Dear V.,

Only three dates and you are already thinking of taking it to the next level??? It does not sound like you are a shy girl to me! Maybe you should be playing hard to get, dear. Have you ever heard the expression, "Why buy the cow when you can get the milk for free?" You certainly do not want everyone thinking you are a lussy do you? I suggest some cold showers and trade in your Kama Sutra for the Bible!

Fortunately, it sounds to me like you have found yourself a lovely young man—very gentlemanly and pure of heart. He is obviously in control of himself and quite capable of taking the relationship reigns. After all, you need someone to tame your wild tendencies. Let him make the moves in the relationship.

If you are still feeling the same way after a few dates, Miss O-My has a few tips for you, although I do fear that you might scare away this young man, who is obviously quite the catch! The best time to make your move is at a moment when you are both feeling very relaxed, perhaps after a romantic dinner, a walk in the park or a PG-rated movie.

First and foremost you must remember safety. On the outside, Miss O-My sees a halo and beautiful white wings, but you have no idea where or with whom Romeo has been before! Make sure you have a glove even before propositioning him. And not one of those new fangled leather or animal-skin ones—latex offers the best protection.

Next, you must set the mood. Candlelight, romantic music and a fire are all excellent choices. He should know as soon as he walks into the room that you have a special evening planned for him. Now, sit within an arm's length away from him on the sofa, look at him coyly, bat your eyes and smile.

At this point he will probably be anxiously awaiting what you have in store for him next. Before the little sweat beads of anticipation emerge, quickly put the glove on and go for it! Hold his hand! The stars will sing out in the glory of your budding romance. It will be an evening to remember for all eternity.

WILL THE REAL PUBLIC SAFETY PLEASE STAND UP?

May I have your attention please?
May I have your attention please?
Will the real Public Safety please stand up?
I repeat, will the real Public Safety please stand up?
We're gonna have a problem here...

Y'all act like you never seen a Student Safety before Jaws all on the floor like FIGI and DU when I'm at the door
And start whoopin some a like never before
It's the return of the... "oh wait, no way, you're kidding.
He didn't just bust TKE like I think he did, did he?"
And Dean of Students said... nothing you idiots!
Dean of Students fled (he's not in the LC)
Sorority women love these men
"Public Safety, I'm sick of them
Look at them, walking around searching for you-know-what.
Looking for you-know-who," "yeah, but it's a registered dude!"
Yeah, I probably got a few screws up in my head loose
But no worse, than what's goin on in SAE's bedrooms.
Sometimes, I wanna get in my cruiser and just let loose, but I can't
But it's cool for first years' to sneak into KDR and schmooze
"My bum is on your list, my bum is on your list"
And if you're lucky, P.S. will only write up six kids
And that's the message we deliver to applicants
And expect them not to know what a Sig Ep party is
Of course they're gonna know what the natty light is
By the time they hit third grade
They're already watchin Live on E! bits
They see the wild animals, stupid acts of radicals
Drinkin stuff like Canon balls
So, women raise your pantyhose, sing the chorus and it goes

I'm Public Safety, yes I'm the Public Safety
All you other Public Safety's are just imitating
So won't the real Public Safety please stand up,
Please stand up, please stand up.

Other cops don't gotta act tough to be noticed;
Well I do, so funk them, and funk you too!
You think I give a damn about Kappa Sig or Sammy?
Half of the frats can't even stomach me, let alone stand me
"But Sig, what if you win, wouldn't it be weird?"
Why? So you guys could lie to just show me in?
So you can, sit me here next to Deans with no fear?
Whoa, Steffen Rogers better switch me chairs
So I can sit next to Lambda, or somebody worse
And hear em argue, over who they gave bids to first
What you thinking, chattin with me like I'm Oprah Winfrey
"yeah, he's mean, but I think he's from town, hee-hee!"
I should stop all the music yellin "who we be?"
And show the whole world how to really play a CD
I'm sick of your little fratty boy groups, all you do is annoy me
So I have been sent here to destroy you
And there's a million of us just like me
Who buzz like me; who just don't give a ^$%& like me
Who take ID's like me; stroll, drool, and limp like me
And just might be, the next best thing, but not quite me!

"THE REAL PUBLIC SAFETY" WON BEST ORIGINAL BALLAD AWARD LAST TUESDAY AT LEWISBURG HIGH SCHOOL'S GRAMMY AWARDS. RECORDING ARTIST G.I.
CANNASING PERFORMED THE SONG LIVE.

I'm Public Safety, yes I'm the Public Safety
All you other Public Safety's are just imitating
So won't the real Public Safety please stand up,
Please stand up, please stand up.

I'm like a headache to listen to, cause I'm only givin you Things you joke about with your friends inside your common room
The only difference is I got the guts to say it
In front of y'all and I don't gotta be a real cop, or even trained at all
I just get out my pad and write it
And whether you go and try and fight it, I just cite it Better than 90 percent of you Safety's out there
Look at me, you think I care?
I pick em up from 6th for a safe ride
But it don't matter, I see what they try to hide
Oh, you're a day under 21?
Oh man, you ain't never gonna have fun
Then you'll be screamin "this is so messed up!"
With your windows down and your systems up?
So, will the real Public Safety please stand up?
And turn one of those sirens on each dash up?
And be proud to be outta your mind and outta control
And one more time, loud as you can, how does it go?
I'm Public Safety, yes I'm the Public Safety
All you other Public Safety's are just imitating
So won't the real Public Safety please stand up,
Please stand up, please stand up.

Haha, I guess there's a little Public Safety in all of us.

B&Pee

Sharpton gets Democratic nod

The presidential nominee puts on his game face and gears up for 2004

By IVANA B. AKENNEDY
Writer All-Star

MARGARITAVILLE, USA—Thongs gathered outside the Democratic National Convention last weekend, hoping to catch a glimpse of the nominee, Rev. Al Sharpton. Sharpton strolled down the red carpet to the cheers of his adoring fans.

Joan Rivers, of E! Entertainment, asked Sharpton the pressing question of the evening.

"Who are you wearing?" Rivers asked.

Sharpton refused to comment. There is speculation as to whether his suit, a blue jacket emblazoned with white stars paired with red-and-white striped pants, was a foreign brand. Hints of Suit-gate ran amuck throughout the convention.

"If Sharpton is truly wearing a foreign suit as the Democratic nominee for president, I'd vote for him—especially if it's Armani," Matt Frial said.

Others, including U.S. President George W. Bush, were more concerned.

"I think this is some sort of strategy by the Democrats to confuse me," Bush said.

Former U.S. President Bill Clinton was the guest musical artist at the convention, and he did not inhale. Sharpton was introduced by 2000 nominee, Al Gore, who was wearing a red tie and carrying a lockbox.

"My advice to Sharpton in his battle against Bush is not to beat around him, but to burn him. Also, I recommend not losing like I did," Gore said. "But if you lose, we can have a club—Two Als without the White House."

Upon his entrance to the stage, Sharpton planted a kiss on Gore.

"Whoops—I'm supposed to shake your hand before my speech and kiss my wife after the speech," Sharpton said.

In his speech, Sharpton launched his new campaign slogan, created to develop a more intimate feeling with voters.

"You can call me Al," Sharpton said. "I'm just a man walking down the street, and if you vote for me, you can call me Al."

During Sharpton's address, several fights broke out among the delegates and guests of the convention. One of these was to protest Sharpton's choice of Ralph Nader as his running mate.

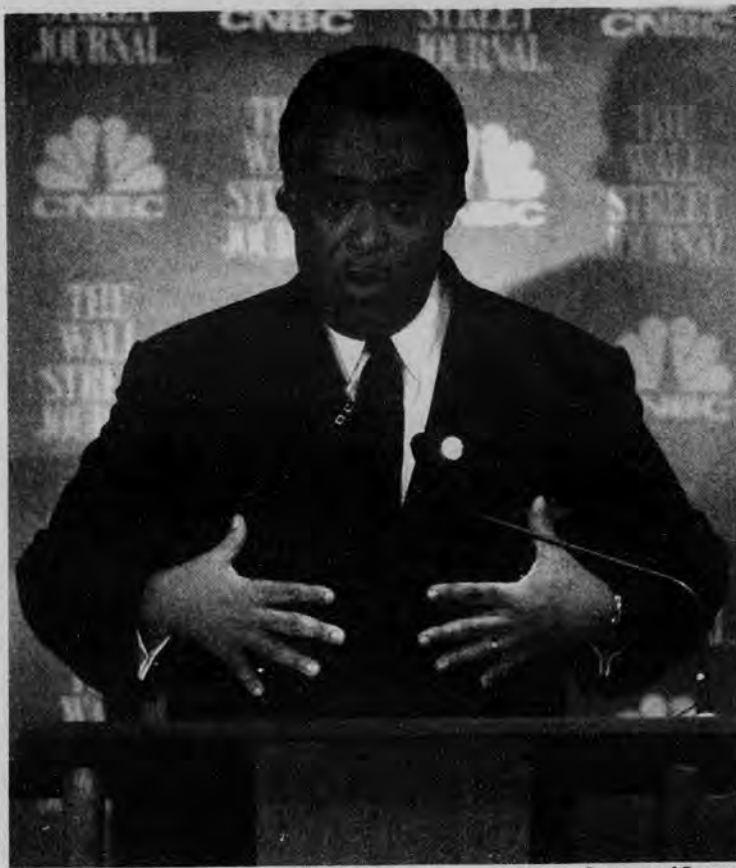

"I feel together, Ralph and I can do what Gore and Lieberman couldn't—unify the Democratic voters so that we don't lose to Bush," Sharpton said.

Howard Dean supporters, also upset with the Sharpton/Nader ticket, decided a unique form of protest—dumping over 1,000 gallons of maple syrup, fresh from Vermont, onto the convention floor.

The Democratic party decided to use this as an unconventional fundraising event, and immediately had pan-cakes prepared for the crowds at $500 a plate.

A small contingency of delegates cast their votes for James Traficant, while another larger group voted for Bob the Builder.

"I voted for Bob the Builder because he can fix America," said Anita Life. "He had the catchiest campaign slogan—I've been singing it for days."

Courtesy of Reuters
"You can call me Al," Sharpton said at the convention. After his acceptance speech, Sharpton asked where the buffet table was.

The Democratic National Convention was held in Margaritaville this year, and it's being blamed on a woman—Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), minority leader of the House of Representatives.

"Ever since Pelosi's been in charge, we chill out a lot more and bond with each other. We're getting back to our core purpose—to party," said Rep. Keg Stand.

Pelosi could not be found for comment. An unnamed senator and wife of the late Democratic president said that Pelosi was looking for her lost shaker of salt.

Even the recently-elected Republican California governor, Arnold Schwarzenegger, was in attendance at the party.

"I love Democrats—they pump up my popular vote," Schwarzenegger said.

While Schwarzenegger ate enough pancakes to fund the general election in 2008, the Democratic hopefuls were not in attendance.

Dick Gephardt was filming his new weight loss ad. Apparently after eating his way through the "Great Gephardt Iowa Pie Challenge," he gained over 30 pounds. He will be marketing his new book, "Don't be Thick—Lose Weight with Dick" around the country during this fall, and it will be found in stores starting Election Day.

John Edwards was unavailable for comment. Actually, we didn't contact him, because since we didn't give him media time before the primaries, why would we now?

Joe Lieberman is currently the understudy and stunt man for Emperor Palpatine in "Star Wars: Episode III."

Carol Moseley Braun and Dennis Kucinich have decided to run together under a third party, the "No Chancers."

John Kerry decided to leave politics after failing to win his own state's primary.

Retired General Wes Clark was last seen in police custody after threatening to attack the Convention. Over 30,000 G.I. Joys and Joe Paterno's football playbooks were found in his possession. No further reports were available at press time.

Nader's last crusade?

Students debate the origins of Ralph Nader's superstardom

By HOLLY WOOD
Senior Contributing Correspondent for Campus Connections

Conflicts among roommates are an inevitability of college life, especially among freshmen. This controversy began last Friday afternoon when student Matt Werder read the headline of The Bucknellian, "Ralph Nader to speak at Commencement."

Both Werder and his roommate Chris Smith have since been debating furiously what motion picture or television program Nader starred in that turned him into a cultural icon, giving him the perspective to deliver a fine graduation speech.

Both freshmen agreed that Nader definitely had a cameo in "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" as the elderly librarian in the Venice scene, but are split on whether Nader was thrust into stardom as Darth Vader, Werder's assertion, or as the friendly advice giving-neighbor Wilson on the hit comedy series "Home Improvement," as contended by Smith.

By Saturday morning the debate was in full swing. Smith attempted to back his position by using his imagined vast knowledge of the Star Wars Trilogy when he exclaimed, "Nader could not have been Darth Vader; James Earl Jones was, just listen to the voice."

Werder countered, "No way, Jones only did the voice for Vader. Nader was definitely the guy behind the mask." He then added, "You're so dumb."

Saturday evening gave a chance for alcohol to fuel the dispute to the next level. With no factual material to bolster their claims, the inevitable name-calling gave way to an all out brawl. Shouts of "Vader" and "Wilson" could be heard as the two intent truth seekers fought clumsily on the floor. Eventually Matt Werder won the fight and retired to his bed for some much needed sleep.

The pair spent most of Sunday bickering, but neither person resorted to reading the article about Nader in The Bucknellian or even entering "Ralph Nader" into an internet search engine. Either option would have quickly revealed Nader as a lawyer, heavyweight consumer and environmental advocate and a presidential candidate, and not as a B television actor.

As evening approached it was clear that their entire hall was laughing behind their backs at them.

"I am embarrassed to go to school with these people," Kate Berry said. "The irony is just everywhere. I heard Matt mention that he thought Nader may also have been a spokesperson for General Motors. Yet he has no idea that Nader's book Unsafe at Any Speed was instrumental in having seatbelts added to cars, which GM vigorously opposed. Chris is from Nader's hometown, I can't even begin to understand how he hasn't heard of him. Furthermore, Nader's speech will be about the individual's responsibility to be an engaged citizen in democracy. Now that's irony. Should I tell them who he is? Do they deserve to know?"

The epic debate came to a conclusion when, in its 50th hour, Chris Smith had a shocking revelation. "Nader isn't Darth Vader or Wilson! How could I have been so stupid! Ralph Nader is Tim the Enchanter from 'Monty Python and The Search for the Holy Grail'!" Werder echoed, "Of course how could we have missed it! I think he was also in some soap commercials."

Having come to an agreement on Nader's celebrity status and his contribution on the large and small screens of America, the roommates agreed that they anxiously await Nader's appearance at Commencement.

Car company to sponsor Nader

University willing to do anything for insightful speaker

By SELLYA SOUL
Junior Staff Lackey

In an unexpected move, the United Car Corporation (UCC) announced yesterday that it would offer to sponsor Ralph Nader's Commencement speech at the University. The announcement comes on the heels of class-action lawsuit against the UCC for its alleged attempt to cover up the unusually high stereo power button failure rate of its most popular sport utility vehicle, the Tiger.

"If Nader accepts our offer, we will be pleasantly surprised that Ralph Nader accepted our offer of sponsorship," said Kris Carlson, UCC chair of philanthropic giving. "It's not every day that a corporation like us gets the chance to be affiliated with such a great man."

After Nader accepted the University's bid to be its Commencement speaker last week, the UCC said it realized that the University's relatively small compensation package might pose a problem for the politician.

"It seems unusual that someone of Nader's stature would accept such a low offer. Maybe he thought Bucknell made a mistake in the decimal point. But we knew that Bucknell was looking forward to seeing Nader so we wanted to do everything possible to help send him on his way there," Carlson said.

The UCC declined to comment on its upcoming lawsuit and its possible connection to Nader, a consumer advocate well known for his role in motor vehicle safety laws.

"Nader had for a long time spoken out against the auto industry," Visiting Associate Professor of Political Science Angel Yankerton said. "He even wrote a book about it and helped pass a lot of laws and stuff. Maybe this is the UCC's attempt to improve its image or something."

"Commencement is about imparting graduates with some knowledge and wisdom," Carlson said. "And if Bucknell graduates can use this as an opportunity to learn a little more about UCC cars, then so be it."

This is the first time that a University commencement speaker has been offered corporate sponsorship.

"We're very hopeful that Nader can still come speak at Bucknell," said Chair of Commencement Compensation Services Jack Smith. "Although we've never had a sponsored one before, I guess that anything is better than Deborah Norville."

Seniors tend to agree with Smith.

"Last year sucked," Joanna Clikeson '04 said. "And the year before sucked, too. I can't believe we even paid for those guys."

In exchange for sponsoring Nader, the UCC has asked the University and Nader to hang a UCC banner across the Commencement stage and print the Commencement program on paper with UCC watermarks.

"According to a recent marketing poll of college students, it seems that commencement ceremonies are a very untapped advertising medium," Professor of Economics Jill Shanker said.

"Last year sucked," Joanna Clikeson '04 said. "And the year before sucked, too. I can't believe we even paid for those guys."

Bucknell Briefs

University adds new requirement to undergraduate application

By DEE CILANTRO
Contributing Writer

In an attempt to maintain the high standard of attractiveness at the University, the administration has implemented a new requirement into the undergraduate application. To be considered for acceptance at the University, a student must meet certain appearance criteria.

"We have a reputation to maintain. We have never had an ugly person attend this University, and this is just a precaution so we can keep it that way," Dean of Admissions John Smith said.

The administration is currently compiling a list of criteria prospective students must meet. Thus far, applicants must submit a photo from the waist up, a life-size headshot and measurements.

"I think students who will meet our criteria will be in the top .01 percent of attractive people in the world. There are six billion people in the world, so that gives us six million potential applicants," Smith said.

Students boycott campus parking

By GOSSA IPPER
Contributing Writer

In a brazen move, 800 students parked their cars on the football practice fields on Wednesday.

"There is no where to park our cars on campus," Neve R. Walks '04 said. "So we decided it was time to make our own parking lot."

Some students are afraid to leave their residence halls for fear that they will not be able to park when they return.

"I have to hire a Lewisburg elementary school kid to lay down in my space when I leave," Ghetto Style '05 said. "I don't know what little Billy is going to do once the weather gets colder."

Public Safety did not ticket any of the cars in on the field. Apparently they had written so many tickets earlier in the day, there were not enough left.

Engineer seen on date

By GOSSA IPPER
Contributing Writer

Several students reported seeing an engineer eating a romantic dinner at Elizabeth's on Friday night. The pair apparently continued the evening with a movie at the Campus Theatre.

"I could not believe my eyes," Fiesta Mucho '05 said. "I knew he was an engineer because he wore a full backpack and had a ruler sticking out of it."

Other students responded doubtfully when they heard the news.

"Are you sure it was a real date?" Skepta Cull '04 said. "Because if the engineer's date was named Dana, it doesn't count."

Everything is the fault of students

STUDENTS from page D1

high school students to see this and decide they want to abandon their studies and chores in favor of having fun and socializing? And then these 15- and 16-year-old babies go home and don't listen to their parents and don't listen to their teachers. They just run amuck. Any educated person can see how dangerous college students are to the moral fabric of our society," Haughty said.

Haughty cited a study by the Pennsylvania Association of College Towns and Cities, which concluded that the presence of college students decreased the property values and increased crime and amoral behavior. The study also sought to dispel the myth that college students spend discretionary money near their school, thereby helping the local economy.

"The average college student steals everything they want. They go into stores and take clothing, books, pet rabbits, chocolate and anything else they want," the study said.

Haughty has proposed rethinking the college environment at the University as a test case for colleges and universities nationwide.

"If we were able to reduce the so called 'freedoms and rights' that college students claim they have, and instead from a college as simply a prison for smarter young people, I think we could really improve things," Haughty said.

"We could utilize corporal punishment, lock students in the library for six hours a day and prohibit opposite-sex guests from entering the dorms."

The controversy involving college students' contribution to society gained notoriety after a study conducted by the United Senior Citizens of Rural Areas for International Peace claimed that drunken college students started conflicts in Chechnya, the Middle East and Venezuela. The report failed to include many facts or other important parts but was immediately picked up by the national media and talk radio.

"I don't think I was even alive when the Israeli-Palestinian conflict began," Jerome McDay '06 said. "In fact, I seem to remember this problem originating right after World War II, so it seems that the only people on a college campus who were even around then are some professors and administrators."

Haughty was unmoved by such doubts expressed by students at his recent open forum. "College would be better without students."

"These students are exactly the kind of agitators that I'm talking about. We grizzled adults know right from wrong and we know about real life. College students are too full of idealistic things like principles, passion and humanity," Haughty said.

University ranked as most diverse school in nation

By DEE CILANTRO
Contributing Writer

U.S. News and World-Report recently announced in their 2003-2004 school year rankings that the University is the most diverse school in the nation.

The accepted applicant group for the class of 2007 represents all 50 states and the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, American Samoa and 158 different countries, including every country in Africa and Asia, representing 300 different nationalities.

"We have always had a reputation as being extremely diverse, and it has always been our goal to be the most diverse school in the nation. This is a great honor," University President Zeus Ferdinand said.

Cell phones banned on campus

By DEE CILANTRO
Contributing Writer

After Professor of Religion Bea Harmful attempted to karate-chop one of her students like a block of ice when the student's cellular phone rang during class Tuesday, the University has decided to ban the use of cell phones on campus.

"At least once a day my class is interrupted by students' ringing cell phones. I have been taking Karate classes for the past few months, and at the time I felt I had no choice but to use my moves," Harmful said. "I am truly sorry for harming the student."

A poll taken by The Bucknellian determined that 100 percent of students polled own a cell phone and use it every day.

"This is devastating," Letta Talk '07 said. "My cell phone is my life. I call someone in between, and sometimes during, every class. I need to know what everyone is doing every second and I need to make sure I stay on top of everything that is going on with my friends. Without my cell phone I will be lost, and I am seriously considering transferring."

The new policy is to take effect immediately and anyone caught using a cell phone will face the Community Judicial Board.

Polo and J.Crew outlets to relocate to Lewisburg

By DEE CILANTRO
Contributing Writer

The Ralph Lauren Polo and J. Crew outlets, currently located in The Crossings Outlet Center approximately 100 miles from the University, will relocate to Market Street in May.

The Polo outlet will replace all stores on the left side of Market Street between 6th and 7th Streets and the J. Crew outlet will replace all stores on the right side of Market Street between 6th and 7th Streets.

The decision was made after it was determined that more than 90 percent of customers at the stores are University students.

"This is just the most exciting thing ever," Jennifer Smith '05 said. "Everything I ever wanted will be so close to me. This is truly a dream come true."

Many Lewisburg residents expressed dissatisfaction with the relocation of the stores.

"I don't understand why people shop at stores like that. A lot of people I know buy their clothes at Walmart," Lewisburg resident John Parker said. "It also really upsets me that all these stores will be out of business now."

Students Picket ISR

By GOSSA IPPER
Contributing Writer

Students picketed ISR on Monday demanding to know who sponsors the University network. Students are apparently tired of receiving penis and breast enlargement ads every day in their University e-mail accounts.

"It's ridiculous," Anna Conda '07 said. "I don't even have a penis."

University officials claim that these ads are a necessary evil of the network sponsor.

"I'm offended every time I open my email," Mya Rack '05 said.

Students promise to continue picketing ISR, but officials claim that nothing can be done.

"The network is funded by the shops and bars on Rte. 15 South, just past Selingsgrove," Director of ISR Ned Worker said. "We can't do anything about this until their contract expires in 2047."

George Dubya spills his beans

DUBYA from page D1

honest, I'm not really that busy right now. I only work four and a half days a week, so for me, Thursday afternoons like this are the beginning of my weekend. As for the Democrats, I'm not paying much attention to them. I'll lose as long as they don't pick [Reverend Al] Sharpton or [Congressman Dennis] Kucinich or [Former Ambassador Carole Moseley] Braun. I don't really expect to be reelected. It's quite a bit of a stretch to think that the citizens of this country would walk into a polling place and decide to keep me for another four years. U.S. Bush's are like used cars: you pick one that you think looks good, you find out its not what the salesman told you, and after a few years of breakdowns and wasting money trying to fix it, you junk it. But that's OK. It's all part of our plan to have Jeb run in 2012 and then George P. in 2020."

Muffin: "Wow. That is quite a bit of news. We can come back to that, but I'd like to know what you thoughts are on the education system in our country. Are you concerned about the costs to our country of having a sub-standard education system?"

Bush: "Absolutely, can you believe the high cost of education these days? I mean, it's outrageous. When I was young, it only cost my family $100,000 and a few CIA favors to get me into Yale. Now, I couldn't even afford to send my daughter to a proper private, preparatory high school. Can you believe that both Georgetown Day and Phillips Andover Academy told me no one had enough money to persuade them to take another Bush? What really surprises me is that I went to Andover and graduated in 1964. I wasn't exactly an academic all-star, but I was on the cheerleading squad and made the 3rd Team All-Northeast Male Cheerleader Team. I'm sorry, what was the question again?"

Muffin: "I'm not sure you completely understood my question. What I meant was, aren't you concerned that our education system is not successful. Many students drop out of school and the one's that graduate high school seem unprepared to go out into the world?"

Bush: "Yes, Yes I am. I want to tell you a personal story. I have two daughters. I haven't spent much time with them, but Laura tells me their great girls. Despite their privileged upbringing, I'm scared they'll go off to college and marry some guy like me."

Muffin: "Really? You seem like a wholesome guy and you've been pretty successful. Don't you think the First Lady is lucky and happy to be married to you?"

Bush: "Well, at least you are consistent. Thank you again for your time this afternoon Mr. President."

Bush: "Sure, at first I can seem intelligent and caring, but I can only keep that act up for so long. Once I sensed that Laura was figuring out what I'm really like, I took her home to meet my parents, 41 and Bull-dog Barb. I think they kind of scared her a little, but they also introduced her to the Bush lifestyle: little work, lotta fun, no responsibility."

Muffin: "Fascinating! Let me take you back in time..."

Bush: "Really, we can do that now?"

Muffin: "No, I mean figuratively. Like, think back into your recent past. Anyway, what was it like to be elected President? What feelings did you have when you knew you had won?"

Bush: "Oh, I see. OK, well, when I won I felt compassion; it's the only real emotion that I have. That's why I keep repeating it. Since you've been so attentive to my answers, I'll tell you a little secret. It was reported in the press that Jeb cried the night of the 2000 election. What was reported was that he wasn't crying because he knew he was crying because he knew he and Katherine Harris and their friends were going to get the vote to go the Supreme Court and he realized for the first time that I might actually become President. I mean, I think for him that whole campaign was fun and exciting because no one in my family thought I would win. Now they had to deal with the very real prospect of me being President and embarrassing them. It was a tough night."

Muffin: "Since our time is almost running out, I'd like to ask you about a bunch of challenges facing our country and have you tell me, briefly, what you think we should do to fix these problems. First, the economy is losing jobs at a staggering rate. What should we do?"

Bush: "Tax cuts."

Muffin: "Welfare reform?"

Bush: "Tax cuts."

Muffin: "International trade policy?"

Bush: "Tax cuts."

Bush: "Domestic violence?"

Bush: "Tax cuts."

Bush: "Prescription drugs?"

Bush: "Environmental degradation?"

Bush: "Tort reform?"

Bush: "Tax cuts. Tax cuts. Tax cuts."

Muffin: "Well, at least you are consistent. Thank you again for your time this afternoon Mr. President."

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Write us! (We're still the same paper.)

FRI 31	SAT 01	SUN 02
Free Tattoos and Body Piercings LC Uphill Lawn 11 a.m.	Internet Outage Campus-wide 9 a.m.	"The Condom Lady" LC Forum 11 a.m.
Internet Outage Campus-wide 1 p.m.	Wet T-shirt Contest Natatorium 3 p.m.	Women's Soccer vs. Brazil Varsity Soccer Field 1 p.m.
Apple-Bobbing Bostwick Cafeteria 3 p.m.	Internet Outage Campus-wide 4 p.m.	Pie-Eating Contest Bostwick Cafeteria 4 p.m.
"The Handyman" X-Rated Film Series Fras Trout Auditorium 8 p.m.	Prime Rib Dinner Bostwick Cafeteria 5:30 p.m.	"After Hours" X-Rated Film Series Fras Trout Auditorium 4 p.m.
All-Campus Lockdown Students must be in bed. Deans will make sure everyone is tucked in. 10 p.m.	Busta Rhymes & Shaggy Sojka Pavilion 9:30 p.m.	Internet Outage Campus-wide 7 p.m.
	"Showgirls" Fras Trout Auditorium 10:30 p.m.

Title IX repealed

100 percent of women's sports to be phased out over the next 10 years

By TYLER DURDEN
Contributing Writer

Since the approval of Title IX in the Education Amendment of 1972, the female athlete rates at universities throughout the country has increased substantially. Due to recent legislation changes, this rapid increase will be replaced with an eventual phasing out of all women's sports.

Title IX is the portion of the Education Amendments of 1972 that prohibits sex discrimination in educational institutions that receive any federal funds. In brief,

Title IX states, "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any educational program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

Last year President George W. Bush appointed Susan Dikta,

(D-La.) as Secretary of Education. Dikta has proven herself as an ardent opponent of women's groups and the NAACP. Dikta has flown under the radar of the media and most women's groups due to her enchanting speeches and eloquent dialogue with whomever she deals.

"Title IX presumes that male and female students are equally interested in intercollegiate athletics," Dikta said. "This is not the case at many modern day universities. It has been shown at numerous schools throughout the country that women's overall interest levels have been declining exponentially for the past 10 years."

"Dikta has been supported in her decision by millions of frustrated male athletes. "After last month's 100 Million

Women's Sport	Date to be phased out
Crew	Spring 2004
Cross Country	Fall 2004
Field Hockey	Fall 2004
Basketball	Spring 2005
Softball	Spring 2005
Water Polo	Fall 2006
Track	Spring 2007
Tennis	Fall 2008
Golf	Fall 2009
Lacrosse	Spring 2010
Swimming	Spring 2011
Soccer	Fall 2012
Volleyball	Fall 2013

Disgruntled Man March, I was finally able to persuade President Bush to repeal Title IX," Dikta said. "The decision was finally made after minutes of contemplation by the President."

University Provost Edgar L. Fudge agrees with Dikta. "Over the past couple of years we have noticed a decline in overall interest and appreciation for women's sports," Fudge said. "Our statistics show that within the next 10 years, women's sports will no longer exist at Bucknell."

The University has decided that in order to cut the costs of supporting these failing sports it will begin disbanding teams beginning in the fall of 2004.

Ever since the enactment of Title IX, universities throughout the country have been receiving federal funding for their obedience to Title IX. Due to the federal funding which the federal government will no longer have to pay to universities, the U.S. population can expect lower taxes and universal health care to be provided for all US citizens.

The money saved will provide the University an opportunity to expand current programs and implement other programs which have long been awaited by the majority of the student population.

"A portion of the money which will be saved from no longer supporting the women's teams will be transferred to build a better habitat for the monkeys which reside in the Bucknell West vicinity," Fudge said. "The habitat will include a new batting cage and climbing wall which will help the monkey's versatility throughout the upcoming seasons."

After long deliberation the University Board of Trustees has decided the order in which the teams will be phased out.

See CREDULOUS, page E5

Title taken from Marlins

By TROGDOR THE BURNINATOR
Writer

The newly crowned World Series champion Florida Marlins were stripped of their title after reporters uncovered evidence that the team had replaced 23-year-old ace Josh Beckett with a robot following game one of the National League Championship Series.

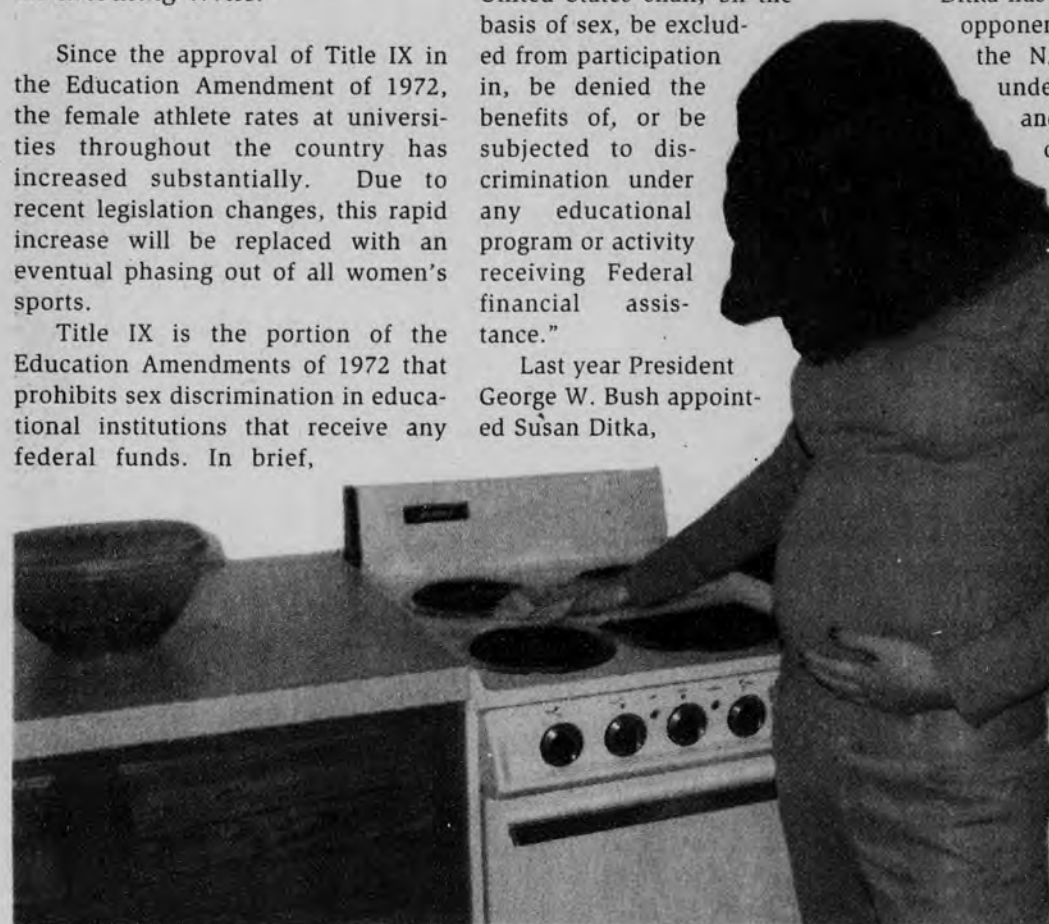

While former first-round draft pick Beckett has been highly touted since the beginning of his career, his recent unyielding performances in the clutch, including shutouts against the Cubs and Yankees, aroused suspicion.

Anonymous tips informed major-league baseball officials that the Marlins may have indeed benefited from the aid of superhuman players during their quest for a world championship. Formal investigations have confirmed suspicions that the team had violated rule 10.25 (f) of league stipulations, which states that "(1) All players shall be of the human race, free of any robotic elements. (2) No robots may be used in a professional game unless approved by the Rules Committee."

Because of the Beckett-robot swap, Florida was declared ineligible for both the National League pennant and World Series titles, and the Chicago Cubs were immediately named National League Champions.

Rather than hold another rigorous best-of-seven set to decide a World Series winner between the Cubs and Yankees, league officials opted instead to declare a champion based on the results of games simulated using Backyard Baseball for GameBoy Advance. Chicago emerged victorious and replaced the Marlins as major-league baseball's top honorees.

The Marlins will be fined for a sum later to be named, while the robot will likely sign with the Yankees in the off-season.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Once an exceptional student athlete Amanda Hugkiss '06 has decided to give up athletics and focus on her culinary skills and childbearing. The baby is due in December.

Bucky the Bison arrested, charged for trafficking

By P. SMASH
Writer

In a regrettable turn of events this past week, University mascot Bucky the Bison was arrested on charges of using and trafficking illegal equine supplements Banamine and Furosemide. Bucky will stand trial following the completion of the fall sports season and will remain on probation until that time.

Recent drug scandals sweeping the sports world inspired the University to enact its own campus-wide investigation, and Bucky was among the highlighted suspects. Suspicious arose after Bucky mascot the University's athletic programs to an undefeated, eight-victory weekend.

Although Bucky has always been an above-average mascot, this sudden increase in cheering success seemed implausible, leading investigators to launch an intensive search for evidence of rule violations.

Phone taps on the plucky ruminant's home line picked up several telephone conversations between Bucky and Otto the Orange. The conversations, although difficult to decipher because of the interference caused by massive amounts of felt and padding near the phone receivers, involved discussions of drug-oriented transactions and an elaborate proposed five-way deal involving Knic the Khat, Mr. Met and Izzy, mascot of the 1996 Summer Olympics.

Otto, who has been indicated in numerous doping incidents and has tested positive for pesticides and FruitCal on several occasions, was unavailable when authorities attempted to contact him.

Becky the Bison was also questioned about Bucky's drug use, but claimed to be unaware of her mate's vices.

"I really wasn't aware that Bucky had been ingesting anything other than grass and the occasional bison chip," Becky said. "I had noticed a sort of blank, glazed-over and unchanging stare in his eyes, but then, it's hard to tell because his eyes are just giant plastic disks anyway."

Reports from anonymous sources claim that Bucky had become temperamental and agitated in recent weeks. Allegedly the mascot had engaged in flipping the postgame spread on several occasions, including after Bison victories.

Bucky's future with the University is uncertain, but his once pristine image is likely tarnished. If he is found guilty of the drug charges, he will be banned from NCAA athletics and the Mascot Hall of Fame.

Bucky was unavailable for comment.

LEBRON JAMES TO ATTEND BUCKNELL

Eric Graham (sort of)—The Bucknellian

On Saturday LeBron James decided to reverse his decision to join the NBA and will join the Bison squad for this upcoming season. James has given up a $93 million contract with Nike in order to play for the University. After Bucknell decided to offer scholarships James declared "I couldn't pass up the opportunity to play for Bucknell."

Yankees sign Finch, will make him exist

By MRS. PRIOR
Writer

In the wake of the team's World Series loss, the Yankees have attempted to bolster their roster by signing fictional super-pitcher Sidd Finch to a 10-year, $440 million deal. Finch—rumored to possess a 168 miles-per-hour fastball, which he can place with pinpoint accuracy—re-enters the professional baseball scene after disappearing for 18 years.

Once touted as an up-and-coming star for the Mets in 1985, Finch's stock dropped when everyone discovered that he didn't exist. Reports have confirmed that he still does not, in fact, exist.

Diabolical Yankee despot George Steinbrenner is undeterred by the fact that his new pitcher is a figment of the late George Plimpton's creative imagination, claiming that Finch can simply be bought into reality.

In addition to inking Finch, the team also plans to disinter Babe Ruth and sign him to an even better contract. The franchise isn't concerned about the logical challenge inherent in this, as its payroll will eventually be large enough to bribe death into submission.

BSG pushes for cable in dorms

Task force examines cable obstacles

By JULIE LESKO
Writer

The Bucknell Student Government (BSG) has been researching ways to bring cable television to all dorms. Right now, the administration has financial concerns about such an endeavor.

The opposition against cable in dorm rooms has recently decreased by the administration.

"The decision not to have cable used to be a purely pedagogical issue; we wanted students to focus on academics," Associate Dean of Students and BSG Adviser Karl Conrad said. "However, cable now offers so much, including many educational options. It also allows student to be in touch with the world outside."

BSG has been pushing for the implication of cable for years. BSG President Katy Tinner, '04 said she understands that the issue is long-lasting, but believes that it is becoming more possible.

The initiative to get cable television in all dorm rooms on campus began five years ago in the Fiscal Sub-Committee of BSG. In the first year, the committee produced an extensive document that included an enumeration of reference schools that had cable, possible funding sources, contending cable packages and technology sources. The committee took its proposal to Vice President Charles Pollock '70 and representatives of the Physical Plant.

With the support of the president's staff, BSG representatives and key players on campus created the Task Force for Cable Television on Campus. It has spent the last years researching different technologies to bring cable television to all dorms and more recently decided on the best option. The task force presented to the Board of Trustees in April a feasible, affordable and persuasive proposal for cable television.

With support from both students and from the Bucknell

See CABLE page A4

MEN'S SOCCER UPSETS NO. 2 RANKED MARYLAND

The Bison snapped Maryland's 23-game winning streak with a 1-0 win on Tuesday. With the victory, Bucknell captures the biggest upset in school history, with the only other top-10 victory coming over No. 8 South Carolina in the 2000 season.

See SPORTS page B1

Carr's hearing rescheduled

By ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

The date of the preliminary hearing for Joshua Carr '07, who allegedly shot at four University students with a pellet gun two weeks ago, has been postponed from yesterday to Dec. 11.

"Carr's attorney requested a continuance," said a representative from the District Justice's office.

Graham Showalter, the Lewisburg attorney representing Carr, said he requested the continuance because the defense needs more time to prepare for the preliminary hearing.

"At this point, we are still in the investigative stage," Showalter said.

The preliminary hearing is an opportunity for the commonwealth to present its evidence against Carr before District Justice Leo Armbruster.

"Normally, the defense does not present any evidence at the preliminary hearing, although the District Justice decides if there is enough evidence to bind the case to court," Showalter said. "This is a prima facie case, which is when the bare elements of the defense have been determined."

There are two potential outcomes of the preliminary hearing: one is that the case could be dismissed by Armbruster, and the other is that it will go to the Court of Common Pleas, where Judge Louise Knight would hear the case.

"There are a number of things that can happen [in the Court of Common Pleas], but we will not discuss that yet," Showalter said. "At his preliminary hearing, some charges could be dismissed. It is up to [Armbruster] as to which bound over to court."

Carr was held in the Union County Jail, which is located in the Union County Courthouse, from the date of his arrest on Oct. 28 until Oct. 31, when he posted his $201,000 bail.

According to Showalter, Carr is in the custody of his parents.

Write-in candidate wins Ward III vote

By MICHELLE DOMBECK
Associate Editor

Democrat Carlos Colon beat Republican Dennis Plotts 34 votes to 19 votes for the four-year Ward III seat in the Lewisburg Borough. Both candidates were write-ins.

Current council member Steven Beattie received 64 votes and won uncontested re-election for the two-year Ward III seat. No students ran for these offices, unlike in 2001 when two students ran unsuccessfully for local government.

The University campus is split across voting districts. Students living in town, Trax, Kress, Roberts or in downhill residences are in the Lewisburg Borough. Students living west of Seventh Street in Swartz

Hall, McDonnell Hall, Bucknell West and houses on Fraternity Road live in East Buffalo Township. Most students who live in the Lewisburg Borough live in Ward III, but some downhill fraternity houses are in Ward II.

Colon has lived on South 7th Street since January 1997. Although he said he originally had problems with students in the neighborhood, he was able to talk with them about the issues and coexist happily. He was thinking about moving to take a job, but decided to stay and improve the district.

"I'm looking forward to working with Bucknell officials and students," Colon said.

See WARD III page A5

Chris North '07 hands out flyers at the Union County Courthouse, one of six voting sites, on Tuesday for school board write-in candidate Michael McGuire '07. McGuire lost the election.

Trustees to communicate with students about campus issues

By KIM DUNLAP
Contributing Writer

University students will have a chance to change things on campus during Trustee Access Day on Thursday. An annual time to address the upper hierarchy of the school, this opportunity allows students to make appointments with the University trustees and present suggestions for regulation amendments, new campus installations and anything else they feel is important to address.

"It was put into place so people could have access directly to the trustees ... [and] bring issues to their attention," University President Steffen Rogers said.

The event allows any students, faculty or staff members with serious proposals to present their case to the Trustees in informal half-hour sessions. Groups such as Habitat for Humanity will present their ideas, along with many other organizations, clubs and sports.

"Typically, students who speak to the Trustees are sent as representatives for organizations and are very passionate on a specific issue," said Helen Britz '05, 2005 class treasurer and a speaker at Trustee Access Day both this year and in 2001.

Anyone can make a proposal if prepared to make the effort, but many warn that the effort required is great.

"They are not simply chat sessions ... students bring a proposal and come ready to answer lots of questions. While informal, these sessions are very important for students and should be taken seriously," Britz said.

One such proposal in the past few years led to such innovations as the establishment of the uphill eatery in the library. Several class officers have even bigger plans for this year's event.

"This year, I will be presenting ... on the issue of having student representation on the Trustee Board,"

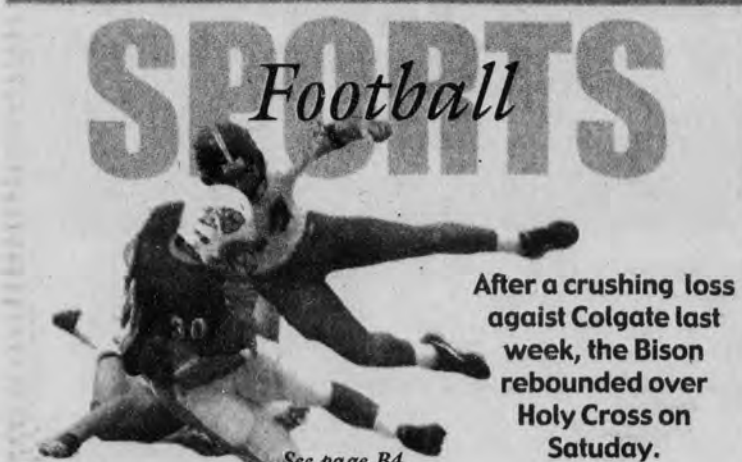

See TRUSTEES page A2

THE TREE OF PEACE

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The Tree of Peace, located on the front lawn of the Recreation and Athletic Center, was re-dedicated Oct. 31. This symbol of the Iroquois is one of the oldest portrayals of democracy in this country.

See page B4

Locking Horns: Racial Preferences

Jake Palley and Kyle McNeel face off about racial preferences in college admissions. Does this harm minorities more than it helps them, or is it needed to level the playing field and help right the wrongs of slavery and discrimination?

See page A7

Sex and the Bubble

What do you do if you think you're being cheated on? Ms. O helps you follow your gut instincts.

See page B10

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Oct. 26

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / FRATERNITY ALCOHOL VIOLATION—While conducting a party check at Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity, Public Safety observed four individuals consuming alcohol without wristbands. All were identified as students under the age of 21. They were cited for underage consumption. The fraternity was cited for serving minors.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male by the Langone Center walking with a staggered gait. Upon investigation, the male was identified as a student who had consumed alcohol although under the age of 21. The student agreed to a breathalyzer test and due to the results, an ambulance was dispatched. It was determined that the student was not in need of medical treatment. He was cited for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

ASSIST POLICE/UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on routine patrol on South 7th Street, Public Safety assisted Lewisburg Police Department in locating the source of fireworks which were set off in the area. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

ASSIST POLICE/UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on routine patrol on South 7th Street, Public Safety assisted Lewisburg Police Department in locating the source of fireworks which were set off in the area. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

ACT 64 / DRUG VIOLATION / TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—While returning a student to Bucknell West, Lewisburg Police Department and Public Safety observed several items of drug paraphernalia in plain view.

East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. In addition, a smoke detector in the main living area was covered with a plastic bag. Residents were cited for tampering with fire equipment. Additional charges pending further investigation.

ACT 64 / DRUG VIOLATION—Upon responding to Bucknell West for a fire alarm activation, Public Safety observed a marijuana bong, a small amount of marijuana and a BB gun and a homemade stun gun. East Buffalo responded. The residents were cited for possession of drug paraphernalia and possession of an offensive weapon (BB gun). Charges are pending from East Buffalo Township Police Department.

ASSIST POLICE/PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to South 6th and Saint Catherine Streets to assist Lewisburg Police Department with an intoxicated student who was unable to provide identification. Lewisburg Police administered a breathalyzer test and due to the student's high level of intoxication, an ambulance was requested. The student indicated that he would refuse the ambulance. A paramedic consulted a doctor who advised that the student could not refuse to be transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment at his current level of intoxication. The student later returned to campus. Citations were issued for public drunkenness, underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

ASSIST POLICE/UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to South 7th Street to assist Lewisburg Police Department with a student who was observed removing a keg of beer from the roadway. Lewisburg Police Department administered a breathalyzer test and determined that the student had been drinking alcohol. Citations were issued for underage consumption and possession of a keg of beer.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke out a window pane on an exterior door at Swartz Hall. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of abdominal pain. A student health services driver transported the student who later returned to campus.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of a student experiencing severe pain. The individual was able to walk and was transported by a friend to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an employee who was experiencing diabetic complications. She was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to work.

ASSIST POLICE—Public Safety responded to Wendy's parking lot to assist Lewisburg Police Department by transporting to their residence two students who had been involved in a motor vehicle accident.

BU PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to the Music & Arts building for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area.

Monday, Oct. 27

FIRE ALARM—Public Safety responded to the 7th Street Café for a fire alarm activation caused by a malfunctioning dishwasher. Physical Plant responded to repair the appliance.

SUSPICIOUS PHONE CALL—A student reported to Public Safety that she had received a phone call soliciting the purchase of products by her sorority. The student was concerned because a similar call last school year proved to be a scam. University officials were notified. Public Safety contacted the caller, who advised that he represented a legitimate company. He was advised of the University solicitation policy.

Tuesday, Oct. 28

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of a student who had fallen out of bed and felt dizzy. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to the Botany Building for the report of an individual pounding on an exterior door. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—An employee requested a student health services driver to transport a student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a non-emergency heart problem. The student was transported and later returned to campus.

Wednesday, Oct. 29

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—A student reported to Public Safety that an unknown person entered her unlocked Vedder Hall room and urinated on the heater. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

FIRE ALARM—Public Safety responded to Sigma Chi Fraternity for a fire alarm activation caused by a malfunctioning power strip that had burned through the plastic case. Physical Plant responded to determine that the area was safe with no further threat of fire.

FIRE ALARM—Public Safety responded to BU West for a fire alarm activation caused by towels burning on a stove burner. The resident had extinguished the fire.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to River Road for the report of a minor vehicle accident involving one car into the ditch. No one was injured and the vehicle damage was minor. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded and a citation was issued for careless driving.

Thursday, Oct. 30

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed two palm pilots and one charger from an office at the Public Safety Department. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / POSSIBLE HAZING—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male, possibly a student, go down to the railroad tracks off River Road. Upon investigation, it was determined that the individual placed two bottles of malt liquor at that location along with a clue that appeared to be part of a scavenger hunt. Upon further investigation, six more bottles of malt liquor were found. The locations of the alcohol were observed throughout the night but no suspects were located. The information was given to the Dean's office for review.

Friday, Oct. 31

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A Public Safety officer observed unknown person(s) throw toilet paper in the trees around Smith Hall. Public Safety also observed, while on patrol, purple plastic wrap wrapped around the statue in front of Vedder Hall, toilet paper in a tree at the President's house, toilet paper in the yard and toilet paper on the car and trees of Assistant Dean of Students Chip Marrara's residence. Marrara later reported that his front door and his car had been egged and two pumpkins on his front porch had been smashed. An employee also reported that unknown person(s) broke a rear window and had thrown eggs at the President's house. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, Nov 1

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of an intoxicated student. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the student was under the age of 21 years and intoxicated and needed medical treatment. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a male visitor in the building who was soliciting females for sexual purposes. No one could be located in a search of the area. Lewisburg Police Department notified.

INFORMATION / TRESPASS WARNING—Public Safety responded to the Bertrand Library for the report of two male visitors trespassing in the building. The two males could not provide any identification. They were given a warning regarding trespassing on University property and escorted off campus, without further incident.

SPRING BREAK—Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $499! Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More!
Organize Small Group—Earn Free Trips plus Commissions!
Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

FOR SALE!

1999 Honda Prelude
Black, 5 Speed, 85000 miles, 200 hp, cd/mp3, 17 in Custom wheels, asking $12,495
Call: 523-9613-Scott

Earn $250-$350 a week
Working Part-time
Evenings and weekends.
B&D DELPHIN
742-1642

Trustees will be available to students on Thurs.

From page A1

Briz said. Virtually any matter can be submitted to the trustees during this time, not only about serious problems, but also about any amendments students would like to make.

"To my knowledge, any student issue from parking to the Bison may be brought up," Briz said.

This event is significant to every student. "I'm a great believer in communication. The trustees are only here four times a year ... the opportunity to sit down and discuss your problems and issues is very important," Rogers said.

Trustee Access Day is an opportunity for University students to take a more active role in what happens on campus.

"It allows the students to bridge the gap between policy and reality," Briz said. "The trustees' decisions directly affect the students, and it only makes sense that their main benefactor should be consulted in the process."

Trustee Access Day is not only beneficial to the students, but to the trustees themselves.

"Some programs are making presentations so they'll have a better understanding of what's going on on campus," Rogers said.

Trustee Access Day is considered an extremely important opportunity by much of the administration and student body and many agree is something to be taken advantage of.

"Students spend every minute at Bucknell; no one is better suited to aid the trustees in their decisions," Briz said.

SPRING BREAK—Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $499! Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More!
Organize Small Group—Earn Free Trips plus Commissions!
Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

FOR SALE!

Earn $250-$350 a week
Working Part-time
Evenings and weekends.
B&D DELPHIN
742-1642

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme

Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Bush signs anti-abortion measure

WASHINGTON—President Bush signed legislation Wednesday to ban so-called "partial-birth" abortions, declaring that "the right to life cannot be granted or denied by government." But within an hour, a federal judge issued a limited temporary restraining order to block the law, sharply questioning its constitutionality.

Washington man admits 48 murders

SEATTLE—Gary Leon Ridgway confessed Wednesday to being the nation's deadliest serial killer, admitting to 48 murders in the Green River investigation. "I killed so many women I have a hard time keeping them straight," he said.

Dean expresses 'regret' over flag flap

NASHUA, N.H.—Howard Dean said Wednesday he regretted the pain he caused by saying that the Democratic Party must court Southerners who display the symbol of the Confederacy in their pickup trucks.

State of emergency in Sri Lanka

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka—Sri Lanka's president stunned this island nation Tuesday when she suspended Parliament, sacked three Cabinet ministers and deployed troops around the capital—moves that endanger the fragile peace process with Tamil Tiger rebels.

Rewards set on virus writers

Microsoft Corp. Wednesday offered a $500,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of the authors of the crippling MSBlast and Sobig computer bugs.

MTV to go up against iTunes

NEW YORK—MTV Networks is preparing to launch a music download service with plans to go up against Apple Computer Inc.'s iTunes and other competitors, said MTV chief Tom Freston on Monday. Freston, who addressed investors at the Harris Nesbitt Gerard Playtime conference, said the as-yet-unnamed service would debut within the first half of next year, but gave few details. "It will compete with iTunes and everyone else," he said.

HIV vaccine test begins on humans

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa—Researchers this week will begin testing an experimental HIV vaccine on 24 human volunteers in South Africa, a country where more than one in 10 people is infected with the AIDS-causing virus.

'Liquid Drano' for the arteries

Intravenous doses of a synthetic component of "good" cholesterol reduced artery disease in just six weeks in a small study with startlingly big implications for treating the nation's No. 1 killer. "The concept is sort of liquid Drano for the coronary arteries," said Dr. Steven Nissen, a Cleveland Clinic cardiologist who led the study.

SARS vaccine to take at least two years

GENEVA—Trials on an anti-SARS vaccine may start in January, but that is not soon enough to give protection if the deadly virus returns this northern hemisphere winter, the World Health Organization said on Wednesday.

DeCerio expresses concerns regarding driving violations

By DREW CALVERT
Contributing Writer

Director of Public Safety Vincent DeCerio sent out an e-mail to all students on Monday, which responded to what he has observed as an increase in illegal driving on campus and warned that officers will increase their monitoring.

"I have received numerous complaints from students, faculty and staff regarding the increase in erratic and reckless driving on campus and I have observed it myself. This manner of driving is unsafe as well as illegal. People seem to speed and disregard stop signs often when driving on campus," DeCerio wrote.

Besides complaints, a number of accidents have been reported so far this year. One large accident occurred Monday, the day the e-mail was sent out, at the corner of South 6th Street and St. George Street.

"This accident occurred in the Borough and was handled by the Borough police," said DeCerio, who was unable to divulge details.

In his e-mail he said there is a wide spread concern for drivers and pedestrians around campus.

Dean of Students Richard Ferraro also expressed his concern.

"I know that we almost had one alumnus and two staff members hit by cars driven recklessly this semester," Ferraro said. "In addition, I know that several persons have expressed concern about cars moving at speeds that were well above those posted on campus. And some cautionary devices, which print out the speed of cars to drivers as they drive by, were posted in various spots on campus to provide some helpful hints about slowing down."

"I think it's important that people follow the driving laws for the safety of drivers and pedestrians alike. People should slow down, because after all, this is a neighborhood," DeCerio wrote.

In his e-mail, DeCerio cited the section of Pennsylvania law which grants Public Safety officers full police powers on University property as well as on streets running adjacent to or through the campus.

"This is a friendly warning that we will be increasing our monitoring of illegal driving on and around campus and will maintain this enforcement on campus," DeCerio wrote, and then addressed drivers themselves.

"Please observe all the parking and traffic signs on campus as well as the speed limit, which is 15 mph on campus. Slow down. No one is in so great a hurry that they need to make this campus unsafe for pedestrians and lawful drivers," DeCerio wrote.

Neil Young '06 said he felt DeCerio's e-mail was necessary.

"[Aggressive driving] is a problem everywhere. I mean, people can die, right?" Young said.

Lyons discusses Native American issues

By KIM DUNLAP
Contributing Writer

Oren Lyons, the traditional Faithkeeper of the Native American Haudenosaunee tribe, gave a lecture entitled "Sacred Places and Our Responsibility to the Future: Contemporary Indigenous Voices" last Thursday.

The talk focused on a wide range of present-day issues such as the expansion of industry into traditionally Native American living spaces, environmental abuse and the obligation of today's youth to work on resolving these problems.

Lyons addressed the exploitation of native peoples and said that since several "progressive" treaties have been signed with the Native American nations, some $8 or $9 billion promised to natives has not reached its intended recipient, leaving countless tribes with insufficient funding as well as shrinking land claims.

Lyons also described the process of encroaching industrial claims to native lands, especially in light of renewed needs for natural resources. Extreme pressure has been laid on several native nations as the government strives to place dams in rivers and utilize coal and oil deposits in the United States.

In light of these environmental threats, Lyons said that taking care of the earth out of respect not only for the planet itself, but also out of reverence for those who come after us.

"Prepare for the seventh generation," Lyons said many times throughout the lecture.

Following with a common Native American concern, Lyons said that providing a healthy and happy environment for the many generations following us is not a courtesy, but an obligation.

"We were told that ... we could judge the decline of humanity by how we treat our children," Lyons said in his 1992 presentation to the United Nations as a delegate for indigenous peoples.

Lyons also said that one key to achieving a more prosperous environmental care plan is a more stable and open-minded political system.

A strong advocate of a document called the Earth Charter, Lyons presented pamphlets to listeners that explained its principles, which entailed not only promises to care for and repair the natural environment but also to establish a more peaceful social atmosphere. It was many of these principles that Lyons presented to the United Nations eight years ago.

Much of Lyons's lecture also dealt with his tribe's governmental structure and how it reflects upon our own. The Haudenosaunee government, Lyons said, revolves around consensus, rather than voting, ensuring that new policies are wanted by everyone involved. In addition, Lyons said that many more females are involved in the political hierarchy of his people.

In fact, the Haudenosaunee's traditional leader is a woman called the "Clan Mother." Lyons said he encourages females to have more of a voice in American government and he said that he insists that many more women should hold office and possess more influence in our society.

Lyons said that even social and political discrepancies between the American government and his own were not an excuse for these environmental problems to continue.

"Even though you and I are in different boats, you in your boat and we in our canoe, we share the same River of Life. What befalls me, befalls you," Lyons said. "We are the environment."

Several of the anthropology professors at the University attended the lecture, along with local high school classes and University students.

"I was most impressed with the point he kept reiterating in his talk that he was a 'runner' carrying a message of peace for our survival on this planet," said Paul Noguchi, professor of anthropology at the University. "He spoke with conviction when he said he would go forward and not stop under any circumstances."

Lyons's lecture disputed the Americanized thoughts and beliefs of his audience.

"I thought the lecture was really eye-opening. It challenged a lot of ideas in our society and in our government and kind of changed your perspective on it all," said Lizzy DeVan '07 said. "Most people consider American ways to be pretty idealistic, but the concepts introduced by [Lyons] were even more so, which was surprising."

Faculty members also praised the international perspective of the talk.

"Being in the 'Bucknell Bubble' has a way of making us comfortable and content; this often limits our thinking to the local. Lyons's talk made us appreciate some wider global issues, not just in terms of space but in time as well as our responsibilities to the seventh generation," Noguchi said.

Some audience members simply expressed their gratitude to listen to such an influential figure for the Native American nation.

"It was a golden opportunity," Noguchi said.

Lyons went on to invite students and faculty alike to eat with him in the Terrace Room the following day, where students and professors could ask questions discuss common issues about land disputes and treaty violations among several Native American tribes.

Lyons is a professor of American studies at the State University of New York at Buffalo and co-founded the Traditional Circle of Elders and Youth and the Haudenosaunee Environmental Task Force.

MCGUIRE From page A1

and I really appreciate it," McGuire said. "I was really happy to see that [Swope] got the most votes. I think she is great to have on the School Board."

McGuire said he thinks a reason he lost was because he was a write-in candidate.

"Write-in campaigns are just really hard to win," McGuire said. "People have to do an extra step of punching write-in and placing a sticker on the envelope. I lost votes, not enough to make a huge difference, because the votes were not cast correctly. It was frustrating."

McGuire and some of his supporters, including Lewisburg High School graduates Chris North '07, Chad North '04, Flory Perez '07 and Katie Urosevich '07, handed out flyers at the six borough voting sites. The flyers contained stickers with McGuire's name, so people who wanted to vote for him could attach the sticker to their ballots. Prior to Election Day, McGuire went door-to-door handing out these flyers.

"I think chances of people voting for [McGuire] are good. I think a lot of people are definitely willing to support the student perspective," said North, who handed out flyers at the Union County Courthouse, on Election Day. McGuire said this year's results will not deter him from involvement with the School Board.

"I am still going to go to School Board meetings, stay involved and contribute where I can," McGuire said. "I've always voiced my opinion, passed around petitions and have tried to get the community involved."

McGuire wants the community to be more involved but the students as well.

"I think I could have helped promote more student involvement," McGuire said. "And I would have brought a different perspective since I went through the school system."

In the next two years, McGuire intends to continue participating with the Board members and the community and asserting his opinions on issues such as integrating the No Child Left Behind Act in the school system.

"In 2005, I will get on the ballot and that should give me a much better chance at winning," McGuire said. "[This year], I gave it my best effort and am not unhappy about it."

Who Says You Can't Have It All?

53.2 cu. ft. of cargo space Available with 4-wheel antiLock brake system Up to 130 lbs./ft. torque, 180 horsepower* 30 MPG City 35 MPG Highway*

TOYOTA MATRIX GET THE FEELING

You're lord and master of quite possibly the most versatile automobile on the planet. Matrix is an entirely new breed of vehicle-cutting edge styling, standard air conditioning, and up to 180 horsepower with available 6-speed. Matrix is designed to be whatever you want, including affordable.

TOYOTA Visit www.buyatoyota.com for details.

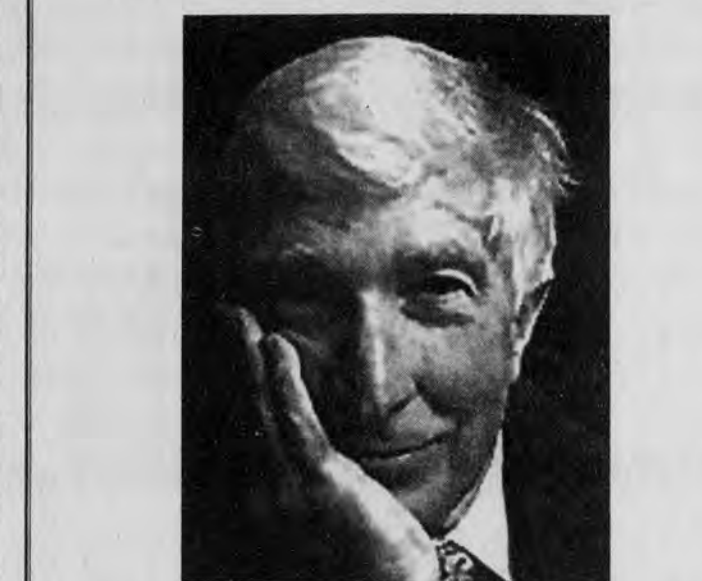

*Based on EPA estimates for 2003 5-speed manual.

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

UPDIKE TO SPEAK AT UNIVERSITY

Pulitzer Prize winning author John Updike will be presented with this year's Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters on Nov. 11 at 8 p.m. in the Janet Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

News

BSG, students express desire to have cable access in rooms

CABLE From page A1

Parents Board, the task force still recognizes challenges of its struggle.

A BSG survey found 94 percent of all students approve of cable TV in the dorms.

Due to the increasing obsolescence of analog cable, the University will not be installing wires for the same type of cable currently available in Bucknell West and the Gateways. A new cable package would offer digital cable through an Internet connection that could be accessed all over campus, including wireless laptops.

"Channels like ESPN, CNN, and other basic news will allow us to be outside of the supposed 'Bucknell Bubble,' and will make us more ready for when we graduate."

—Mark Kohler '07

Costs for cable television include the content packages, pertinent individual equipment and possibly initial head-end equipment. The Task Force for Cable Television on Campus anticipates a modest increase in everyone's room fee to cover the costs, as cable access will not be optional. The price of cable would be slightly more than the average per person cost of the cable package offered in Bucknell West and the Gateways and may also include more channels.

"I meet with President Rogers and [Vice President of Student Affairs Charles] Pollock, '70 once a month and I basically ask for an update and question the progress of the cable situation each time, so the administration knows that students are still very interested in having cable and BSG will not stop asking until it is implemented," Timer said.

"The timing of the situations been frustrating because perhaps it would have been better to have implemented cable a few years ago when the economy was doing better and there was a surplus. However, the available technology has greatly improved since that time but financially it is difficult to implement cable while most university departments have been facing severe budget cuts," Timer said.

A pilot test program planned for three residence halls this fall was cancelled due to monetary reasons. Administrators had to make decisions prioritizing programs.

"Other items that were recognized as likely to rank ahead of cable, including closing a projected $2 million gap between revenues and expenses, to prevent having to eliminate jobs, or to reduce employee benefits, or to cut some other costs," Pollock said. Some students feel the luxury of cable is necessary.

"I think students deserve the option of cable in their rooms. Some buildings on this campus even have all of the wiring and jacks in the walls, but for some reason the administration is resistive to this change. I do not feel it is necessary, but I think we should have the option," Nick Gallo '05 said.

Feeling disconnected from the rest of the world, some students said they believe cable will reconnect them with current events.

"It would be nice to have the news because we feel like we are in a bubble away from everything else," Kirsten Elzer '07 said.

Mark Kohler '07 sees TV as a necessary tool for education.

"College is about getting us ready for the rest of the world, and we should have most of the distractions and other amenities that we will have the rest of our life. People then learn to prioritize and designate how much time they can actually watch television with. Channels like ESPN, CNN, and other basic news will allow us to be outside of the supposed 'Bucknell Bubble,' and will make us more ready for when we graduate," Kohler said.

Other students do not feel that cable is of prime importance.

"I actually wired cable from the basement of Hully House to my room sophomore year, and everyone would come watch TV in my room instead of the lounge. Junior and senior year I've had cable in my room in the fraternity house. My GPA has gone down, but not because cable has taken away from my school work, but because my engineering classes have gotten continuously more demanding," Mike DeVita '04 said.

Fritz Konker '07 says cable TV would impact the relationship between hallmates.

"I think that I wouldn't have half as many of the good friendships I have with the people in my hall if we were allowed cable in our rooms," Konker said.

Member of BSG Cable Task Force Helen Britz '05 said that BSG will continue to push the issue until it is resolved in the best possible manner.

"Bucknell has done and continues to do extensive research and fact-finding to develop the best possible scenario for Bucknell students. Implementing cable in the dorm rooms will continue to be a high priority to the students on the BSG. Cable is in no shape or form an issue with an easy or inexpensive solution," Britz said.

Interest in the program is still high considering the recent obstacles.

"There is a great deal of interest in providing cable among administrators, including the president, but we need to be sure it is fiscally and strategically responsible to take this big step," Pollock said.

ASIAN AWARENESS BROUGHT TO LOCAL STUDENTS

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

The Students for Asian Awareness at Bucknell sponsored the Asian Fair, which was designed to bring awareness to local students, on Saturday at the Donald Heiter Community Center.

Market Street PHOTO

We like picky people!

We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.

523-1543

M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5; 24 hour drop box
120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

ADVERTISEMENT

An Important Copyright Message for the Bucknell Community

Do you know that most music and movie sharing is illegal?
Are you aware of the risks you are taking when you do this?

The US Copyright Law (Title 17 of the US Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material regardless of the format of that material. The consequences of illegally sharing copyrighted material over the Internet are serious.

With the availability of high-speed Internet connections, Peer-to-Peer (P2P) programs have been developed to allow people to share information in digital formats. In particular, P2P programs like KaZaA, Blubster, Gnutella, Morpheus, AudioGalaxy and others are commonly used to share music and movies without regard to copyright restrictions. Making copies of any copyrighted material without the right to do so is against both state and federal law and University policy. Most commercially produced music and movies are copyrighted and cannot be freely shared. This is the law. We believe that many people who make illegal copies know it is wrong, but they don't know how serious the penalties can be.

The record and movie industries are enforcing copyright laws by using technology to detect those who run servers or simply download something they have no right to have. The likelihood of being caught is increasing, and prosecutions will become more frequent. Recently, the RIAA (Recording Industry Association of America) has taken further action to subpoena the names of people who are sharing large amounts of music. These subpoenas can lead to lawsuits, substantial financial penalties and perhaps jail time. In the spring of 2003, for example, four students at other colleges settled copyright claims against them out-of-court for approximately $15,000 each. The DMCA (Digital Millennium Copyright Act) specifies procedures that Bucknell must follow when notified an individual using our network is violating copyright laws.

Regardless, most music and movie-sharing violates the law that we are bound to uphold. In addition, members of our community must follow university-defined policies for appropriate use of technology resources. If you distribute copyrighted music and videos, you are putting yourself at risk of losing computing privileges, being charged by Bucknell's community judicial board, and facing prosecution under civil and criminal laws. Bucknell and ISR will not be in a position to protect you or your identity from this prosecution.

For your own protection, you need to seriously consider your own actions.

For more information:

www.musicunited.org — of particular interest is the TAKE IT OFF link

www.riaa.org — Recording Industry Association of America

Some content reproduced and edited with permission from Hamilton College.

Bucknell
Information Services & Resources

News

STUDENT PULSE

How did you like online registration?

"It was easy. We didn't have to deal with the old ladies at the Registrar's Office."

—Jack Sheehan '04

"I liked it better than waiting in line, but I don't like alphabetical time slots."

—Emine Boran '05

"I couldn't do it online because there was a typo in the book."

—Khalid

Alghamdi '05

"Online would have been too big of a hassle because of wait-lists."

—Greg Buzzell '05

Compiled by Adam Wilcox and Elisabeth Salemme

WARD III From page A1

BSG began a voter registration drive in October 2001 in an effort to get students involved in Lewisburg politics. The effort gathered approximately 400 new student voters in the Borough of Lewisburg.

"Student participation in Lewisburg politics is essential in order to keep students living off campus, making living downtown a positive experience and to fight against the unfair ordinances the Borough has aimed at students," former Bucknell Student Government (BSG) president Nate Sorber '02 said in October 2001.

Two students ran unsuccessfully for office in Lewisburg in November 2001. Sorber ran for mayor and Matt Kasdan '03 ran for the Ward III seat of the Borough Council, losing in a tie-breaker in which a name was drawn from a hat.

After he and Sorber lost, Kasdan asked the Borough Council in January 2002 to include a non-voting, student seat. The Council did not even discuss the issue.

"As students, we currently lack a voice in the community of which we are a part; our concerns are not being heard, nor are the concerns of permanent residents being effectively communicated to the student community. By working together, we can all be a positive factor in the life of the community," Kasdan said in January 2002.

BSG President Katy Timer '04 said that she believes student voices are now being heard.

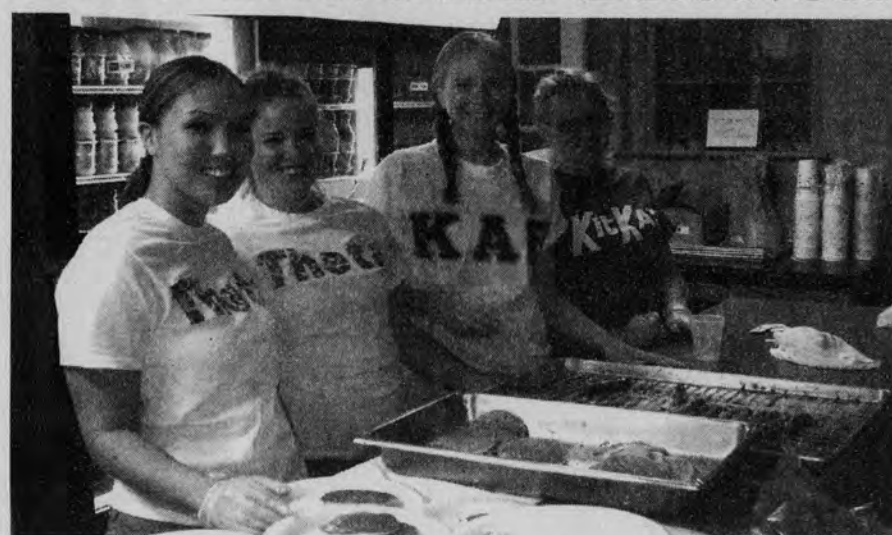

"We already sit on the Borough Council, and the BSG Vice President of Administration chairs the off-campus living review board. Three student representatives also sit on the town-gown relations board," Timer said.

Timer said that she thinks an official representative is not necessary.

"It's not a bad idea, but we have so many contacts talking to so many people downtown. Based on the efforts of the last campaign [in 2001], it just seems like a lot of effort for a position like that," Timer said.

If students wish to contact Timer, they can be reached at 524-7708 or by e-mail at colton@pdl.net.

KAT PANCAKE BRUNCH

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The annual Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority Pancake Brunch was a great success, attracting many students and their parents this past Sunday.

Addressers wanted immediately!

No Experience necessary.
Work at home.
Call 405-447-6397

Leisure Tours

"Act Now!" Book 11 people, get 12th trip free. Visit the official website for spring break '04. The Best deals to the Hottest destinations. Group discounts for 6+ www.springbreakdiscounts.com or 800-838-8202

St. George Student Rentals

2004-2005 School Year
&
Second Semester '03-'04
2&3 Bedroom Units

Includes: Off Campus Parking, Stove, Refrigerator, Dishwasher, Refuse Removal, Water Sewer

Call Brad or Wanda
922-1205 or 898-8530

November	November	November	November	November
FRI 7	SAT 8	SUN 9	MON 10	WED 12
"For Whom the Southern Belle Tolls" Tustin Theatre 8 p.m.	Men's Soccer vs. Holy Cross Varsity Soccer Game Field 2 p.m.	Quaker Services Willard Smith Library Vaughan Lit. 125 10 a.m.	"Zoolander" Langone Center Bostwick Cafeteria 5 p.m.	Merck Lecture Rooke Chem 116 7 p.m.
Fall Snack Fest Harris Hall Lounge 8 p.m.	"Fast, Cheap, and Out of Control" Hilltop Film Series Vaughan Auditorium 3 p.m.	Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 11 a.m.	"T3: Rise of the Machines" Vaughan Lit. Auditorium 10:30 p.m.
"Fast, Cheap, and Out of Control" Hilltop Film Series Vaughan Auditorium 8 p.m.	"For Whom the Southern Belle Tolls" Tustin Theatre 8 p.m.	Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel Main Sanctuary 4 p.m.	November TUE 11 John Updike Book Signing 2:30 p.m. Bucknell Bookstore
Shunsake Sato & Hugh Sung Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	Bucknell Symphonic Band Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	BSG Congress Meeting Langone Center Forum 5 p.m.	Lecture: John Updike Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	November THUR 13 Psychology Colloquium Langone Center 301 4 p.m.
Manhunt Goldrush Langone Center Bison 9 p.m.	Choice Talent Show Harris Hall Lounge 8 p.m.	Inter Religious Dinner Langone Center Walls Lounge 5:30 p.m.	John Updike Overflow Closed Circuit Vaughan Lit. Auditorium 8 p.m.	CDC Jumpstart Coleman Hall 117 6 p.m.
Pub Night Uptown 9:30 p.m.	Comedian: Dan Levy Langone Center Bison 9 p.m.	Catholic Mass Hunt Hall Living Room 10 p.m.	Reception: John Updike Weis Center Lobby 9 p.m.	Dance Studio Tustin Theatre Dance Studio 5 p.m.
"Bend It Like Beckham" Langone Center Forum 10:30 p.m.	Badfish: Sublime Tribute Band Uptown 9:30 p.m.
Ryan Adcock 7th Street Café 11 p.m.	"Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle" Vaughan Auditorium 10:30 p.m.

The information for these events is subject to change. Some events are open to members of an organization only.

Send calendar submissions to bucknellian@bucknell.edu with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

USA SPRING BREAK.com
Cancun, Bahamas, Acapulco, Jamaica & More!
Don't be fooled! Go with Quality and Experience!
28 years in business!
Largest Student Tour Operator
(Division of USA Student Travel)
Call Toll Free: 1-877-460-6077
Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $$

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570) 524-9839

11 North Market Street
Schuylkill
201 Mid Street, Danville
Sat. 11am-Midnight
Fri. 11am-2am
www.memphisbbq.com

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS...
FIT FOR A KING

Meaty St. Louis cut ribs, dry rubbed with our special seasonings, basted with our own bold flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce, and pit smoked right here with Applewood. Served with hickory smoked baked beans, B's skillet potato cakes, freshly baked sourdough bread, and cornbread with honey butter. Plus... a FREE non-alcoholic beverage.

Served all day Monday thru Wednesday, 11am until closing

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 132, Number 9
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor
Michelle Dombeck '05

Managing Editor
Alyson Walker '04

Business Manager
Stephen Santulli '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Samir-Jo Galati '04

News Editors
Elizabeth Selesnoff '06
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kecley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Homan '05
Chris Stivers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Hevring '07

Photography Editor
Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout
Nick Kupenski '07

Chief Copy Editors
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
Davaish Mallotra '06

Marketing Director
Joseph Giordano '05

Circulation Manager
Jes Trinis '07

Advice
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy
The editorial board of The Bucknellian reflects the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION
The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the University Board, its advisory, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION
Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY
The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements it deems offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Students must be more active in local politics

Though Carlos Colon, a newly-elected representative for Ward III, seems to genuinely want to improve town-gown relations, it would still be a great benefit for the University, students and Lewisburg if there was a student representative in the Borough's government.

There is a very real possibility that if a student had run for the four-year seat in Ward III, that student would have won. Colon received 34 votes, while opponent Dennis Plotts received 19. Bucknell Student Government (BSG) helped register approximately 400 student voters in 2001, many of whom might still be current University students and could have voted in this week's election.

BSG seemed to be very interested in getting more students involved in Borough politics in 2001, when two students ran unsuccessfully for office in Lewisburg. This year, there was no such effort from BSG or any other politically oriented groups on campus to either register students or help elect a student.

We have missed a wonderful opportunity. While there are numerous committees that work to help improve relations between the University and Lewisburg, a voting student on Lewisburg Borough Council would be an invaluable asset to the town and students. This student would prove to the Lewisburg community that University students are mature and are interested in their town and home of four years. She or he could be an official liaison between the University and the town, representing student opinion on important issues like noise ordinances. One student could start a domino effect—even if a student were to run and lose, it could help increase student political awareness. By running, the student would encourage people to be politically active, register and vote. The gesture might be practically worthless, but it would be a moral example.

There are so many issues around downtown living. Students are blaming the administration, but if they are so concerned, they need to step up and take action instead of simply complaining. Voting is an individual responsibility, but sometimes people need a little direction. Perhaps for the next election, people will organize and finally elect a student to Borough government.

The vicious voting cycle

Letter to the editor

Greeks create Halloween success for many children

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank the fraternities and sorority that contributed their time and effort to make the first Big Brothers Big Sisters event of the year a success. On Oct. 26, Big Brothers Big Sisters brought 22 children between the ages of four and 15 to campus. Fiji donated its basement as a location for a Halloween party, where the kids created various arts and crafts and were judged in a costume contest. Sigma Chi and Kappa Kappa Gamma combined to create an awesome haunted house that was enjoyed by even the oldest child. The event would not have been possible if it had not been for the help of these great organizations! We look forward to working with them again in the future!

Sincerely,
Kristi Cashman '06
President,
Big Brothers Big Sisters

From the Editor's Desk

This past week we saw two Southern states end years of Democratic control of the governors' mansions, the embattled mayor of Philadelphia win re-election and New Jersey voters break the tie in their state senate. The national press focused, as usual, on campaign strategies, polls and get-out-the-vote activities on Election Day. The story they missed is that of the election-night parties and wakes.

Our winner-take-all election system invariably leaves at least one candidate devastated and one delighted in each competitive election. And since neither candidate planned to lose, they have both invited their family, friends, supporters and staff to the election night rally. The general, TV-watching public sees two very similar scenes: smiling candidates, surrounded by family and friends, saying nice things about the opponent they've spent the better part of a year disparaging. The true evening couldn't be more different for the victors than the vanquished. Even among the losing and winning campaigns, there are different kinds of Election Night feelings.

I've had the pleasure of working on staff for two campaigns; an unsuccessful campaign for Congress in Kansas and a successful campaign for Senate in Louisiana. Each night was memorable and emotional in very different ways. In Kansas, we were a close campaign staff that took the last hard-fought night of the election. In Louisiana, the staff was made up of non-locals. When we won, we were those of us who were temporary transplants from the East Coast spent much of the night meeting the friends of the local staffers.

In Louisiana, the field staff was almost completely made up of non-locals. When we won, we were those of us who were temporary transplants from the East Coast spent much of the night meeting the friends of the local staffers.

importantly, you can learn from fictional circumstances and the experiences of characters.

Fictional heroes have much to teach us about our motivations and decisions in the professional world and in our own personal lives. Take Arthur Miller's play "Death of a Salesman." Everyone knows the tale of Willy Loman and his failed attempt to fulfill the American Dream. Everything he did was driven by money and his desire to have a successful life, as defined by having a successful career.

Today, more so than ever, the moral of this story is priceless—people, especially engineers (whose job it is to make technological advances in the most economically-efficient fashion), are driven by capitalism. Doesn't Willy have something to teach us all? Alright, so it's not the 1940s, you aren't a salesman and times have changed. But the point is that the moral transcends these differences in time and lifestyle and is thus offering us a lot to gain from the story of Mr. Loman's demise. You still say that learning from fictional characters is impossible, that their situations would never happen in real life because they are too abstract. Doesn't that imply that in order to learn from something it must have a direct application, or that it must be exactly like it would be in the "real world"? This idea is unreasonable. Every day you learn from things that seem to be abstract. In your engineering problem, you may neglect the role of friction, but does that mean that the force doesn't exist? Of course it exists, and when you need to, you will factor it into the equation, adapting what you've learned to account for new circumstances. The same principle applies for learning from literature.

All too often it seems that an education in engineering has turned into a Christopher Marlowe story in which "all things shall be trivial which shall not be engineering." Simply incorporating literature, both classic and field-specific, is very necessary and rewarding for students. It would help them to keep a growing appreciation for the value of reading and writing in all forms of professionalism and academia. Integrating reading and engineering combines the principles of engineering with the fact that being successful means being well-formed and worldly. For every one of us to be outstanding intellectuals as well as well-rounded leaders; isn't that the University's goal upon graduation?

SHOULD COLLEGES HAVE RACIAL PREFERENCES?

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

Nobody can deny the racism endemic in this country's history-white supremacy reigned supreme for centuries in the United States. The white elite of this country engineered and perpetuated racial stereotypes and epithets by relegating demeaning, menial and unskilled labor to African Americans, forcing millions into abject poverty and subordination through slavery. Literally skin-deep racial ideologies developed to justify the African American's lowly status; white America subscribed to the idea that African Americans are racially inferior because of their skin.

Even when slavery ended in name, the social, political and economic realities were little changed. Jim Crow laws rendered African Americans politically irrelevant, de facto segregation continued and a culture of poverty set in. Further, without education, still impoverished and still wholly dependent on the white elite for jobs, slavery continued in all but name.

So there are two sides to take here. It is very convenient to say that slavery ended, and boom, just like that, African Americans could exploit free-market capitalism and U.S. style entrepreneurialism, make millions and live happily ever after. And maybe a select few did. The other side of that story is that several million minorities were not so lucky. Back then, and even up through the 1964 Civil Rights Act, excelling in a social environment steeped in a racist mindset was incredibly difficult. You need all the luck and cunning you have just to get by, and even today that mantra is still valid.

Today you don't have to look too far to find fascists, neo-Nazis and white supremacist groups that permeate the U.S. landscape, explicitly advocating racial purity just as their forefathers once did. Even on a much more implicit level, every American has been indoctrinated and programmed to be racist, even if that racism is inadvertent and subconscious.

Tolerance.org proves this point by testing for "hidden bias." When it comes to the issue of skin preference, 67 percent of respondents have a "slight to strong" preference for light skin, while a meager 14 percent of respondents have a "slight to strong" preference for dark skin and another 19 percent have no preference. Thus, minorities will always be scapegoated, blamed and marginalized because racism exists on both conscious and subconscious levels.

That is why affirmative action can be such a simple remedy. Affirmative action is needed because the playing field between African Americans and white Americans has never been even, even 100 and some years after abolishing slavery. Thus, affirmative action is not an argument about making up for the past; rather, it is an argument about making up for the present because ignoring racism in today's society is to ignore the plain and simple fact that racism is something that is still deeply ingrained in everyone's mindset.

Today, you don't have to look too far to find the fascists, neo-Nazis and white supremacist groups that permeate the U.S. landscape

Affirmative action is absolutely necessary in achieving a more egalitarian society. The only remaining question is to what degree should affirmative action be implemented. Quotas are wrong because they preclude qualified non-minorities from being hired, but preferences can and should be taken into consideration.

Just as one is presumed innocent until proven guilty in a court of law, so too should minorities be afforded that extra protection of affirmative action in a place of employment, unless one is fired or not hired simply because his or her (potential) employer is racist. Diversity is deeper than skin color and reflects upon our own individuality and abilities, and this is something employer should, and under affirmative action must, consider.

Only when minorities achieve or are afforded a similar socioeconomic status can racial stereotyping have a good chance of being thrown out of our society. Only then can fear and loathing become historic remnants of a racist and therefore inherently faulty employment system. Then, and only then, do minorities truly have the chance to escape beyond the narrow confines of the negative connotations associated with them.

Affirmative action tries to negate the inherent inequalities found in our society, and there is no other way to achieve that.

Once minorities are more fully integrated into the system, be it educational or otherwise thanks to affirmative action, greater tolerance and increased well-being will follow for generations to come. That is because it lays the foundation for a lifetime of success and access to greater material well-being, breaking the vicious cycle of poverty. Eventually, when racial stereotyping is truly minimized (it can never be destroyed because racism is a two-way street and it would be naive to think it could be), affirmative action will have served its purpose and it will no longer be needed. However, reaching that point will take several more generations.

Thus, while affirmative action is by no means a simplistic or a politically neutral program, it is without question an effective and all too necessary one. Affirmative action tries to negate the inherent inequalities found in our society, and there is no other way to achieve that. There is no doubt Affirmative Action affords tremendous opportunities to minorities for greater social, economic and educational success, and that it goes a long way to dispel traditional stereotyping found throughout this nation's history.

By KYLE MCNEEL
Contributing Writer

Everyone knows the argument: affirmative action is necessary because racism still exists in society. Blacks and other minority groups are underrepresented in the top ranks of society. Racial preferences in college admissions will increase the number of minorities enrolled in college. With degrees from top schools they will be able to reach the upper levels of society in terms of income and power. It all looks wonderful on paper. There are two problems. Affirmative action does not increase the number of minorities enrolled in college, and those admitted by virtue of race rather than merit are less likely to leave college with any sort of degree.

The data on this are astonishing. A study by Drs. Robert Lerner and Althea Nagai found that at the University of California, San Diego, of the first-year class of 1988 (when California still used affirmative action), 71 percent of whites and 67 percent of Asians graduated in five years compared to only 41 percent of blacks.

John Perazzo has found that the University of Washington's incoming class of 1995 experienced similar disparity in graduation rates. There, 70 percent of whites and 65 percent of Asians graduated in six years whereas a paltry 29 percent of black students were able to graduate in the same time.

At Washington State University, the SAT disparity between blacks and whites was on average 180 points, while the graduation rates after six years was 44 percent for blacks and 61 percent for whites.

None of this is saying that black and hispanic students are incapable of graduating from college; rather, the numbers show that admittance through affirmative action does not actually help minority students.

By allowing less-qualified students to matriculate at more rigorous universities, the so-called beneficiaries of the affirmative action policy are less likely to receive degrees than they would at a school more suited to their academic capabilities.

Affirmative action does not increase the number of minorities enrolled in college

Thomas Sowell found that at schools with more pronounced use of affirmative action, or at schools that allow more students with lesser qualifications to enroll, the difference in graduation rates between races is more pronounced. At the University of Colorado, Boulder, "test score differences between black and white students have been more than 200 points—only 39 percent of the black students graduated, compared to 72 percent of white students." Contrasting this with the University of Colorado, Denver, where the average difference in SAT scores was a meager 30 points; "there was a negligible difference in graduation rates—50 percent for blacks and 48 percent for whites." It is only logical that students with lesser qualifications will not perform as well.

W. Lee Hansen, professor emeritus at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, has shown in a study that with the end of preferential admissions, "the number of targeted minorities graduating from University of Wisconsin, Madison, would equal the current number who are graduating despite the one-third decrease in the number of targeted minorities admitted and enrolling here."

This demonstrates another argument that the defenders of affirmative action make. Banning affirmative action, they say, would re-segregate higher education. Hansen states that if affirmative action was abandoned in Wisconsin, minority enrollment at the Madison campus would drop 30 percent immediately. This is true, and I must accept that minority enrollment at Ivy League schools as well as flagship state universities would decline drastically without affirmative action. This decline has been seen in California, Texas and Florida, states that have banned affirmative action. In 1995, before affirmative action was banned in California, 222 blacks enrolled at University of Banning affirmative action, they say, would "re-segregate" higher education.

California, Berkeley. In 2002, only 141 blacks enrolled at the state's flagship campus. This drastic decline in minority enrollment can be seen as catastrophic to the minority community.

Between 1998 and 2002, the San Diego campus saw minority enrollment rise from 9.9 percent of the incoming class to 15.2 percent. The same phenomena have been observed in Florida and Texas. After banning affirmative action, black enrollment at the University of Florida, Gainesville, rose 33 percent, at Florida State University, 21 percent. Abandoning affirmative action would not re-segregate higher education. Quitting this insidious practice would simply redistribute students to schools more in line with their intellectual faculties. By so doing, students would have a better chance of actually graduating from college, as opposed to the current role as a pretty little statistic that shows up on the "U.S. News and World Reports" Web site.

As Hansen states, the number of minorities receiving degrees would remain stable. This means that those 30 percent of minorities who would no longer be at the Madison campus were the ones who would have been most likely to fail at that campus. Furthermore, it is hard to believe that the desire to attend college would be dissuaded because you cannot attend a top school. Those 30 percent would most likely attend one of the state's nearly 30 satellite campuses, where they would have a better chance of graduating. What good is it for a student to fail out of Madison, for example, when he or she could graduate from Eau Claire? The road to hell is paved with good intentions, and affirmative action has caused much more harm than anyone knows.

An apathetic voter

One student's satirical view on voting

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

As an over-18, natural-born resident of the United States, I have been granted the inalienable right to vote. My foremothers fought long and hard for that right, and so in memory of their fight, I should take full advantage of my right and cast my vote on Election Day. And yet, my apathy overwhelms me, and instead I choose to ignore politics altogether and not vote. Some may scold me for wasting the opportunity to make a difference, and to them I say "pshaw."

I have very good reasons for not voting. First and foremost, as a felon convicted of promoting prostitution, the government has temporarily retracted my right to vote. In a perfect world, those in my profession would have a say in politics, perhaps even serve on a committee or two.

More importantly, I'm too lazy to waste my time and number two pencil lead filling out a registration, let alone actually going to the ballot booth and straining my bicep to pull that lever. Do they wipe those levers clean with a moist towelette after every vote is cast? I think not. I will not risk contracting any number of skin-borne infections to elect an undoubtedly corrupt politician into office.

Lastly, I'm cheap. Though I'm told there is no fee to vote, somewhere in the equation it's going to cost me money, and those are dollars I'm simply not willing to part with.

For those of you out there who do actually vote, I really just feel sorry for you. Do you think your opinion matters? Or that your vote is going to make a difference? Living in a fantasy world, unless drug-induced, is simply not being fair to yourself. Of the over 130 million registered voters in the United States, you are a single vote. If you are a Floridian, your vote actually gets thrown away.

Don't flatter yourself into thinking Henry Ford was referring to you when he sang about the "power of one." If you happen to oversleep on Election Day and do not cast your crucial vote, the world will not turn upside-down, and no one is going to lose sleep over it. Obviously you didn't.

In high school, my government teacher offered me extra credit if I registered to vote. And though it was enticing, because what's more fun than getting an A for free, it was still not enough to spark my interest.

I would not allow myself to vote without at least knowing which candidate looks better in his or her three-piece suit or skirt, and watching those wrinkly old men and women bicker back and forth is not my idea of Friday-night fun. The days of hot candidates like John F. Kennedy are long gone, taking with them any chance of my involvement.

I don't know what channels CNN and C-SPAN are, and I never intend to find out. Let's be honest. Do you really want someone like me voting anyway?

The dreaded possibility of the "freshman 15"

By MARLEE SAYEN
Contributing Writer

You've heard the rumor. It's talked about, joked about and feared, but does it even exist? It's the "freshman 15," supposedly the inevitable 15 pounds (or more) that you gain during your first year in college, but how much of it is actually true?

We live in a society that is unfortunately based largely on appearance. Here at the University, the countdown to Thanksgiving break has begun. Along with that, there has been a dramatic increase in "crash dieting," especially among the female students, in the hope to make up for the unhealthy eating habits formed earlier in the semester.

Going home over break will be the first time that many are able to see friends and family since departing in late August for the University, and therefore they want to "look good." Many times these new "sparse" eating habits are mistaken for being "healthy." But this drastic rationing of food does much more harm than good.

In the beginning of school, as an incoming first-year student, you go through a whirlwind of adjustments from making friends to getting to know the campus, adjusting to being away from home and taking advantage of this newly gained freedom. One of the many changes that occurs involves your eating habits.

"Late-night candy run to the C-store?" Why not?

"Dominoes at 1:30 in the morning again?" Sure! Between that and the majority of first-year college students increasing their "social drinking" habits, reality sets in, and the pounds pile on. More often, the other side of this spectrum occurs where students fear gaining the "freshman 15" before it has even set in and go into restriction mode to "prevent" the weight gain. They lose a few pounds early on so that if they gain weight they will be back to square one with no gain.

This aspect of the undergraduates' unhealthy weight maintenance is often hushed or covered up. Plus, losing weight when you're not overweight only further distorts your image of yourself, thus causing a full-fledged eating disorder.

The statistics are self-explanatory: One out of every four college-age girls develops an eating disorder. Anorexia nervosa is the number-one cause of death among psychological disorders. Eating disorders are everywhere, the University being no exception to these horrifying statistics.

From personal experience, I remember suffering with anorexia on this campus last year. For me it was never about losing weight, because I didn't think I was overweight to begin with—it was about control. I remember the warped mindset, the ridiculous meals I found "filling" and the strenuous exercise regimen I would put myself through every day.

Upon returning this fall, I am a new person. I've silenced the voices of anorexia and moved on with my life, but it will always be a part of me. Once you have gone through an eating disorder, you can spot one.

Being healthy doesn't just mean fitting the stereotypes set for men and women today. It is all about moderation, whether it be in eating or exercising. Insecurity about your body only reflects badly upon yourself. The University's focus needs to be shifted from not just fearing the "freshman 15" but balancing that with raising awareness about eating disorders; even though I have fought through my disorder, it still terrifies me that I see them in girls here every day.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Victories for both parties in 2003

By PETER HACKEMAN
Editor-in-Chief

Election Day 2003 resulted in Republican victories in Mississippi and Kentucky, while Democrats swept the major races in Pennsylvania.

Former Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour and U.S. Rep. Earnie Fletcher (R-KY) both won their elections with the largest vote totals ever for a Republican in each state.

Barbour defeated Democratic Governor Ronnie Musgrove, while Fletcher defeated Kentucky Attorney General Ben Chandler. The current Kentucky Governor, Democrat Paul Patton was term-limited from running again.

Barbour and Musgrove each set spending records in one of America's poorest states. Barbour's promise to use his Washington connections to create jobs and the increasingly Republican tilt of Mississippi in recent years was enough to overcome Musgrove's relentless campaigning and focus on improving education.

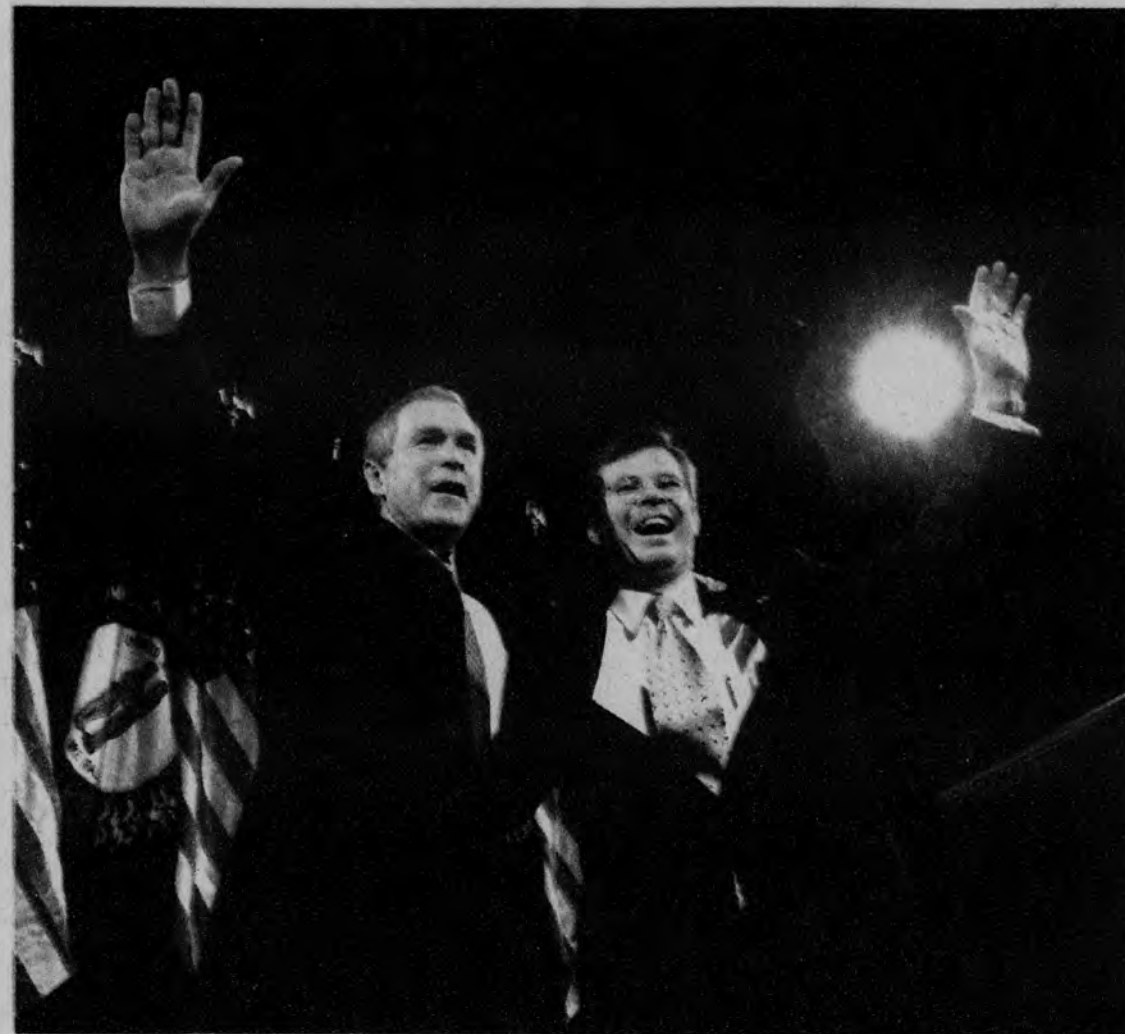

Democrats scored a sweep of the major races in Pennsylvania. Philadelphia Mayor John Street, a Democrat, was re-elected with 58 percent of the vote. In the race for Allegheny County Chief Executive, Democratic challenger Dan Onorato defeated Republican incumbent Jim Roddey by 16 percent. Allegheny County, one of the largest counties in the state, includes Pittsburgh.

Heavy turnout in Philadelphia ended Republican candidate Sam Katz's effort to govern the city, in which registered Democrats outnumber Republicans by a 4 to 1 margin.

Democrats also reversed a trend of Republican dominance in state-wide judicial elections when Max Baer defeated Joan Orle Melvin for a seat on the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. Baer won easily, with about 55 percent of the vote to Melvin's 45 percent.

Courtesy of Reuters
Philadelphia Mayor John Street (left) celebrates his re-election to another four-year term on the same night that Republican Earnie Fletcher (right), seen campaigning with U.S. President George W. Bush, was elected governor of Kentucky. The off-year elections gave each party some momentum heading into the 2004 elections.

In the race for three seats on the Pennsylvania Superior Court, Democrats Seamus McCaffery of Philadelphia and Jack Panella of Northampton County won election. The third seat is still up in the air, as the margin between Republican Susan Gantman and Democrat John Driscoll stood at about 5,000. Some precincts in Philadelphia have yet to report their complete results and a handful of absentee ballots throughout the state have yet to be counted.

Republicans had won 18 of the last 22 state-wide judicial elections in Pennsylvania before this year. High voter turnout in the Democratic areas of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh helped Baer and the other Democratic candidates to reverse that trend.

Despite appearances by U.S. President George W. Bush in Kentucky and Mississippi and former U.S. President Bill Clinton and former U.S. Vice-President Al Gore in Philadelphia, both parties contend that this week's results are not an accurate prediction of the 2004 elections.

The results seem to solidify the South as increasingly inhospitable to Democrats and provide the Democrats with control of the two most populous and Democratic areas of Pennsylvania.

Democrats also captured the previously tied New Jersey state senate and enlarged their majority in the state house. In Virginia, Republicans added a state senate seat while Democrats picked up a couple of state house seats.

Mayoral elections in Houston and San Francisco resulted in run-offs between the top two vote-getters.

Partial Birth Ban passed Upswing in economy

By LINDSEY GENTEL
Staff Writer

In a vote that could alter the future of U.S. abortion rights, the U.S. Senate overwhelmingly voted to ban late-term abortion procedures. U.S. President George W. Bush signed the measure into law on Wednesday.

The Senate vote, 64-34, took place on Tuesday, Oct. 21, just three weeks after the U.S. House of Representatives passed the bill by a 281-142 margin, according to The Washington Post.

The battle over what critics call partial-birth abortion has set off one of the fiercest political clashes since Roe v. Wade. The new law is the first to criminalize a specific abortion technique. It is also the first years in prison as well as civil lawsuits for performing a partial-birth abortion.

After the final day of debate, it was a bipartisan win for abortion foes as 18 senators who generally support abortion rights voted for the ban.

"We have just outlawed a procedure that is barbaric, that is brutal, that is offensive to our moral sensibilities and that is out of the mainstream of the ethical practice of medicine today," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., who is also a surgeon, according to The New York Times. "The legislation we just passed will save lives—not just several, but hundreds and potentially thousands of lives."

Bush urged Congress to pass the ban, which Republicans had pursued since the Republican Party

"[This practice] is an affront to the dignity of human beings." Santorum is a lead sponsor of the bill.

Boxer disagreed, saying to CNN.com, "I want a civilized society. That means you care about the women of this country. That means you care about their pregnancies. That means you want to help them through the most difficult times. That means you don't play doctor here."

Abortion opponents have said the procedure is cruel, while abortion-rights advocates argue any move to restrict abortion would hinder a woman's right to terminate her pregnancy as granted to her by Roe v. Wade.

In 2000, 2,200 late-term abortions were performed, which was less than 0.2 percent of the 1.3 million abortions performed that year, according to the Alan Guttmacher Institute, a non-profit group that conducts sexual and reproductive health research.

Several abortion-rights groups such as Planned Parenthood, the National Abortion Federation, the Center for Reproductive Rights and the American Civil Liberties Union have said they plan to file lawsuits challenging the law.

"In 2000, five Supreme Court justices said that Roe v. Wade guaranteed the right of abortionists to perform partial-birth abortions whenever they see fit. But Congress is now inviting the Supreme Court to re-examine that extreme and inhumane decision."

—Douglas Johnson,
National Right to Life Committee

time Congress has moved head-on into outlawing a medical procedure.

"This is an enormous day. It's been a long seven-year fight about the issue of partial-birth abortion," Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., said to CNN.com.

"This is indeed a historic day," Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., said, according to CNN.com, "because for the first time in history Congress is banning a medical procedure that is considered medically necessary by physicians."

The measure bans "an overt act" that "will kill the partially-delivered living fetus," according to The Washington Post.

A doctor could face up to two captured the House in 1995. Both houses of Congress have held prolonged debates on this specific procedure since 1995, and Congress approved a ban twice. Former U.S. President Bill Clinton vetoed the bill because he believed it did not contain an exception to protect the health of the woman.

As reported by The New York Times, the procedure, when doctors partially remove the fetus and its skull is collapsed, is called intact dilation and extraction.

"This kind of treatment to an innocent child, who would otherwise be born alive, who is healthy with a healthy mother... there is no excuse for it," Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., said to CNN.com.

"While it is also true that Congress found that a health exception is not needed, it is, at the very least, problematic whether I should defer to such a conclusion when the Supreme Court has found otherwise," Kopf said, according to CNN.com.

Economic growth has traders looking at gains

By DEVIN GANGI
Contributing Writer

This past week it was reported by the government that the Gross Domestic Product (GDP), the country's main economic indicator, grew by 7.2 percent between July and September, the largest surge in growth in nearly 20 years. While the Bush administration has claimed this indicates economic recovery is here to stay, there are some doubts about whether this growth is sustainable.

This unprecedented growth has helped push up the stock market and is a direct result of increased consumer spending. Consumer spending accounts for approximately two-thirds of all economic activity in the United States and is the primary factor in determining the GDP.

U.S. President George W. Bush has claimed that his economic policies have finally started to work.

"By reducing taxes, this administration kept a promise. We did the right thing at the right time for the American economy," Bush said, according to MSNBC.

Bush credits his tax cuts with putting more money back in the hands of U.S. people to spur the economy and boost consumer confidence.

Further encouraging news came from the struggling manufacturing sector. About 2.5 million manufacturing jobs have been lost since the economy went into recession, according to MSNBC. The Institute for Supply Management reported its index of manufacturing activity jumped to 57 from 53.7 in September, according to CNN. The employment index also rose, so while jobs were still being cut, they were being lost at a much slower rate.

Jobs remain the main reason many economists doubt that the current rate of growth is sustainable. Associate Professor of Economics Geoffrey Schneider shares these doubts.

"The economy will perform somewhat better over the next couple years, but will remain very erratic," Schneider said. "The current growth rate is unsustainable because of the nature of the jobless recovery."

Additionally, the rise of consumer spending was largely based on deficit spending, as people made purchases based on credit.

Chief Executive Officers (CEO) of companies have been wary of other brief pickups in economic activity in recent years, and if the companies don't start to hire soon, consumer

See TRADERS page A9

Courtesy of Reuters
New York Stock Exchange traders enjoy a period of economic growth. Bush claims the growth results from the success of reforms, but critics question how long the growth will continue.

November 7, 2003

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

inside Volume 132, Number 9

Sports:

With a win over Johns Hopkins, the men's water polo team has earned a bid to the Eastern Championships

See page B2

BISON PULL OFF BIGGEST UPSET IN PROGRAM HISTORY

By CECILY CAIRNS & CHRISTA SAWKO
Sports Editor & Writer

The men's soccer team added another accolade to its superb season Tuesday when it registered the largest upset in the program's history. The Bison shut out the University of Maryland's highly touted squad—a team ranked second in the nation.

The lone goal of the game was scored when Scott Visnic '06 took a pass from Chris Beekman '04 and drilled it into the net just 1 minute, 32 seconds into the game.

It was Visnic's 12th goal of the season, which ties him for 10th on the Patriot League's all-time single-season list in that category.

The Bison then determinedly held on to the 1-0 lead for the remainder of the game, thwarting a total of 23 shots by the Terrapins. Bucknell only took a total five shots on the goal, but the Bison defense refused to yield a single goal to Maryland's potent offense.

At the helm of the defensive effort was goalkeeper Adam Edwards '06, who continued his impressive season by compiling eight saves. It was the eighth time this season that he came away with a shutout.

Visnic's goal proved to be the game winner, as the Bison came away with a 1-0 victory and a tremendous achievement. The only other time the program defeated a top-10 team was in 2000 when they beat No. 8 North Carolina in overtime.

The victory followed a 2-0 win over Navy on Sunday that allowed the Bison to clinch the regular season Patriot League title and gain homefield advantage in the league tournament. This will be the first time that Bucknell will host the tournament since the 1990-91 seasons.

"Coming into the season, [earning] the No. 1 seed was our goal, and I do not think many people thought we could do it," Head Coach Brendan Nash said.

The Bison went ahead only 4:46 into the Navy game with a goal by Eric Brunton '06. Jon Hemmert '05 served a ball to Visnic. Visnic headed the ball on goal, but it hit the post. Fortunately Brunton was there to one-time the rebound. This was Brunton's fourth goal of the season and Visnic's third assist of the season.

"We really came out sharp and got

See SOCCER, page B5

1:32
Minutes into the game that Scott Visnic '06 took the first shot of the game

1
Bucknell shots on goal in the first half

1
Bucknell goals in the first half

2
NCAA ranking of Maryland

23
Maryland's home winning streak prior to the Bucknell game

0 Maryland's home winning streak after Bucknell game

11
Maryland shots in the first half 12

Maryland shots in the second half

0
Goals allowed by goalie Adam Edwards '06

8
Saves by Edwards

8
Shutouts on the year for Edwards

Sports

Water polo earns bid to Eastern Championships

Men defeat Johns Hopkins at Southern Division Championship

By KATIE COLGAN
Contributing Writer

Bradley Roslyn '06 is simply unstoppable. In the Bison's first game of the Southern Division Championships on Friday evening, Roslyn scored a career-high five goals and led the Bison to a 9-6 victory over archrival Johns Hopkins.

The win put an end to their losing streak versus the Blue Jays and also earned them a third-place finish in the tournament, as well as a bid to the Eastern Championship in Annapolis, Md. The Bison also picked up 14-2 and 10-6 wins over Grove City and George Washington, respectively.

With other goals from Elliot Benoit '05, Nick Ferring '06 and captains Aaron Platshon '05 and Scott Afzal '04, Hopkins didn't have a chance. Stellar defense by Jay Danforth '05 and Brad Unroe '06 left the Blue Jays struggling to find safe water. Trevor Mullins '06 was a brick wall in the goal, shutting down nine shots.

"We were able to stay tough for four quarters, and that was the difference in Friday night's game," Afzal said.

Saturday's 14-2 win over Grove City was a piece of cake for the Bison, after defeating Hopkins the night before. Danforth had three goals in the first quarter alone, and with the score at 7-0 by the end of the period, the game was over before it had even begun.

Lars Weborg '06 played an amazing game, proving himself an offensive threat and scoring two goals for the Orange and Blue.

Bradley Roslyn '06 watches his goal fly into the net during a game against Johns Hopkins on Friday night. Roslyn scored a career-high five goals during the Bison's impressive 9-6 victory. The win helped the Bison en route to third place in the tournament.

Paul Yerkes '05 and Robbie Soper '07 both found the back of the net twice as well. Mark Stevenosky '06, Roslyn, Afzal, Platshon and Ferring each added a point to the scorebook.

Bucknell's defense against Grove City was nothing short of incredible. Goalie Michael McManigal '07 played the entire game for the Bison, making four saves while allowing only two goals. The Wolverines quickly learned that if Unroe was defending one of their teammates, a pass to that teammate was not an option. Unroe had five steals in the game, and also handed out two assists.

The Bison faced No. 11 Princeton next that Saturday for a chance to play in the championship game, but fell 11-6.

The Tigers ran a fast-paced offense and scored two goals to open up the game. Before the end of the first quarter, Roslyn answered back with a goal for the Bison.

After the break, Princeton came out energized and scored five more goals before the half. Afzal took advantage of a man-up situation and scored with a mere 6 seconds left before the intermission, but the five-goal differential would prove difficult to overcome. Benoit, Ferring, Platshon and Ferring each added a point to the scorebook.

The men finished out the weekend with a great win over George Washington (GW), taking third in the Southern Division Championships. With Bucknell in the lead, the Colonials were set on keeping the score close, until the fourth quarter when the Bison put away three unanswered goals to keep GW out of the picture permanently.

For Afzal, the games last weekend were his last home games.

"It felt great to play so well as a team in front of a home crowd for the last time," Afzal said. And while this weekend was the last time Afzal will play in Kinney Natatorium, the team still has him for its most important tournament of the season at Navy.

"If we can continue to play as we did all weekend we have the ability to challenge any team at Easterns," Afzal said.

The Bison improve to 9-18 overall and will compete at the Eastern Championship next weekend.

Goalie Michael McManigal '07 blocks a shot during the Southern Division Championships at Kinney Natatorium on Saturday. The Bison defeated Johns Hopkins, Grove City and George Washington, finishing third and earning a bid in the Eastern Championships next weekend.

Bison women compete in final Patriot League game

By TERI SCHLANG
Writer

The Bucknell women's soccer team played its final soccer game of the season Saturday at Navy. The Bison lost 4-0, but the score does not reflect their effort or their play. Had the Bison won this past weekend, they would have moved on to the Patriot League Tournament.

Navy wasted little time in getting the game started. Molly Burd scored an unassisted goal less than 10 minutes into play. Navy's Maggie Curran scored the second goal of the game with assists from Claire Henry and Stacy Finley.

During the second half, the Bison midfield played a solid defensive game, keeping the ball on its side of the field. Twenty-five minutes into the half it could not hold Navy off any longer, and Amelia Sheveland scored the third goal 71 minutes into the game. Curran scored the fourth and final goal five minutes later to secure its 4-0 victory.

Navy held the advantage of nine shots to six, while Bucknell led in corner kicks, three to two. Bison goalkeeper Samantha Hecht '06 had three saves, while Navy's goalkeeper had none because all of the Bison's shots were from off the mark.

"The 4-0 score was not reflective of the game," Abbey Seaboyer '04 said. "Navy is an excellent team, and [it] were able to capitalize on [its] opportunities while we were unable to find the net. Overall as a team I feel like we played better than we have for the past few weeks. We played with a lot of heart."

Even though the Bison did not qualify for the Patriot League Tournament, they had a very solid season with victories over archrival Lehigh and one of the top league teams, Army.

"At Navy we played better than we have played in several games but did not capitalize on our opportunities," Head Coach Chrissy Findlay said. "We were all over them for the first 12 minutes of the game, with several opportunities to score, and then Navy won it, went down the field and scored. That is a mentality. When you take eight shots and put four in, that is a bit of talent but much more mentality."

Findlay noted that although the Bison beat

Cross country teams place fourth at leagues

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

American University dominated the Patriot League Championships at Lafayette on Saturday, winning the men's and women's individual and team titles. Bucknell finished fourth in both races, managing to put a number of runners on the All-League teams.

American's top women established themselves early, with only a single Army runner in the mix. Eventually the Eagles' top three proved too strong and pulled away to finish in the top three spots, with sophomore Keira Carlstrom winning by a 43-second margin. The Eagles' 30 points bested the efforts from Army (57 pts), Navy (63 pts) and Bucknell (82 pts), with the remaining teams scoring 150 to 200 points.

"Our expectations were obviously very high, and when American started hammering early on in the race, I felt some of our ladies panicked a little," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "It was not a good team race for us. However we do have a very young team that is set up nicely for the future."

Katie Pfeifer '05, the sole upperclassman, led the charge for the Bison, finishing ninth overall to earn first team All-League status. Jamie Gow '06 (16th) and Kayla Halloran '06 (20th) both earned second team All-League status for the second year in a row, joined by Lauren Bricker '07 (15th), Leanna Nastase '07 finished in 22nd place to round out the scoring for the Bison.

"Overall, the performance of the team at leagues was disappointing because it did not demonstrate the talent we have nor the work and dedication we have shown throughout the season," Pfeifer said. "Some individuals did run well, and their performances should not be overlooked."

Even with the disappointing team results, Donner was still proud of the way some of the ladies ran, especially Pfeifer.

"She has really improved a lot over the past two years," Donner said. "The majority of the All-League runners were either freshmen or sophomores, which is very exciting because it means that the league is getting better and will be even more competitive next year," Pfeifer said.

Like the women's race, American took control of the men's race early. At the mile, the Bison looked very strong with 10 athletes in the top 15. The unseasonably warm weather and challenging nature of the course soon took their toll on Bucknell. By three-and-a-half miles, American had put five in the top 10 and began to run away with the team race. Then Navy, who had hung back early, began to make a charge. Pat MacAfee of American made a strong move after the four-mile mark to earn a 15-second win.

"Going into the race we thought American was the best team but we also thought they were beatable, so we went after it," Donner said. "The American guys really took the pace out fast and they had the talent to settle into a smooth rhythm while many of our men struggled after three miles. Navy ran a conservative race from the start and finished second and I think we are as good as them. Basically Navy was running for second while we ran for first and paid a heavy price."

"I respect the way our team ran," graduate student Greg Costello said. "We raced to win, and it just happened to backfire a little."

Costello, the sole Bison to remain with the leaders through four miles, held on to finish in ninth. "It was one of the hardest races I have ever run," Costello said. "It took just about everything I had to try to put myself in contention."

Dan Lounsbury '05 (17th) and Wes Reinhardt '04 (19th) also earned All-League honors with their finishes. Aaron Hanlon '04 (25th) and Matt Forsy '07 (28th) completed the scoring to put the Bison 98 points behind American (26 points), and also behind Navy (50 pts) and Army (79 pts).

Next up for the Bison athletes is the Regional meet on Nov. 15 at Lock Haven University, where both teams will look to bounce back to form.

"We just need to get through these next two weeks knowing that we are a good team. If we run to our potential, we will surprise a lot of people and teams," Costello said.

Concerning the women, Donner expressed a disappointment in the league meet but kept an optimism for the regional meet. "We had some runners who had struggled earlier in the season have some solid races [at leagues] which is good for them, however I was expecting to see more of their teammates surrounding them," Donner said. "We will need to regroup and get our edge back. I feel as though we have the team that can rebound nicely and place high."

Pfeifer expressed similar sentiments as Donner. "In order for us to do well at Regionals, we need to learn from this past race and then focus on the next one," Pfeifer said. "Lock Haven is a fast, fair course, so we need to be ready from the very beginning. Physically we are prepared, and we just need to decide that we are going to give it every last bit we have and then go out there and do it."

strong teams, they had mixed results in league play.

"We beat a top Patriot League team [Army], 4-1, as well as a win over Lehigh," Hecht said. "Unfortunately, our ties to Lafayette and Holy Cross had a detrimental effect in keeping us out of the tournament."

Findlay had a young group of girls playing for her this season, graduating only one senior. "My team consists of many talented soccer players," Findlay said. "Most importantly, they are great young women who work hard and enjoy being together. I know that I am lucky to have the group I have."

The Bison finished their season 7-6-3 in overall play and 2-3-2 in Patriot League play.

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

What's in the cards next?

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

On October 20th, the Donruss Trading Card company held a little gathering at ESPN Zone in Times Square to celebrate the unveiling of an enviable piece of auction-booby that it had snatched up for $264,210 last summer. At the ceremony, company president Bill Dully and his posse of trading card craftsmen presented their boon—a 1928 game-used, pin-striped Babe Ruth jersey, one of only three such items thought to be in existence.

And then, like any sensible owner of an invaluable artifact from our national pastime's history, they immediately dismembered the item, sectioned it into 2,100 fannel swatches to be laminated between a couple glossy cardboard rectangles, which in turn, are besprinkled into little foil packages, shoved into boxes and distributed at random to baseball card shops and drug stores around the country.

In a few months, you'll be able to find bits and pieces of Ruth's rare garb nestled in between an asunder of cards featuring snippets and shards of other great players' personal affects. Hats, gloves, dirt, pants, bats, helmets, bases—if you can spot it anywhere on or near a player during a game, it can be guaranteed that at some point, some card company will have found a way to snip it into one-inch squares, circles or stars and imbed it into a couple-thousand baseball cards.

Still, bastardization of integrity that it is, there is something kind of snazzy about the concept of the memorabilia card. You never know when you'll be rifling through a five-dollar pack of cards and bam—all of a sudden you're being stared in the eye by a glimmering sliver of Derek Jeter's fielding glove, agglomerated between two aesthetically pleasing rectangular slabs of cardboard.

The concept evolved from the brainspawn of the Upper Deck company, which, a little over a decade ago, spiced up the previously bland baseball card market with prettier graphics, subsets and, of course, the almighty insert card.

Intentionally short-printing cards gave them inherent value. Emblazoning them with autographs and stuffing them with game-used paraphernalia gave them even more inherent value.

Before Upper Deck exploded onto the scene in 1989, baseball cards were a little mundane—base sets ruled the universe and no one ever tried to plaster pieces of home plate into a card.

If it weren't for all the kids that crumpled, sliced, ripped, cropped and ditched their baseball cards—and the fact that companies didn't make that many of them in the first place—old cards might not have that much allure.

But the truth is, whatever they lack in flash-ness, creativity and sweat-stained jersey scraps, pre-insert cards make up for in age, obscurity and nostalgia. Aside from the obvious cash-cows—Topps' 1952 Mantle, Bowman's 1951 Mays, Goudey's 1933 Ruth, and so on—a lot of cards gain their value through some other quirk of production.

Here are a few of the most intriguing cards in the hobby—none of them autographed, gold-plated or memorabilia-laden:

1909 T206 Honus Wagner

Including this card on a list of appealing baseball cards may not be terribly imaginative, but it's pretty much imperative. The T206 Wagner is the baseball card. There are probably less than 100 of those are in respectable condition. The most recent one to be auctioned off dropped the Ebay gavel at a healthy $1.1 million—the most ever paid for a baseball card, and the most ever raked in by an Ebay auction.

So what makes Honus so honorific? According to legend, Wagner was an early (really early) advocate in the march against tobacco companies, and didn't want his image used to hawk smokes (the "T" in T206 stands for "tobacco"—cards were included in tobacco products). Shortly after the American Tobacco Company started stamping Wagner's image on cards, Wagner nixed the marketing plan, and that was the end of that.

Maybe Honus' great insight into the dangers of tobacco predated the American Lung Association, or maybe the folks at American Tobacco weren't writing him hefty enough checks. Either way, the decision to yank the card from production has left it with a mind-boggling price tag.

1933 Goudey Napoleon Lajoie

Lajoie retired in 1916, but Goudey included him in the 1933 set. Only the company didn't actually release the card until 1934, and when Goudey did print it, it was only available to collectors with enough initiative to write in and request it. Evidentially, not a lot of people had the drive to do so, and Goudey allegedly disposed of the leftover cards.

Some specimens of Nap's 1933 card, No. 106 in the set of 240 cards, have drawn over $10,000 from crazed hobbists looking to complete their sets.

1952 Topps Andy Pafo

The 1952 Topps run induces more drool than perhaps any other set in history, sporting the popular Mantle card as its centerpiece. While Mantle's card is the most widely coveted piece in the set, the most interesting might be Andy Pafo. Pafo was a nice player—a five-time All-Star and a .285 career hitter—but he was no deity.

Why does Handy Andy's '52 card drag in four-grand in mint condition? The story is in the same vein as those cards-in-the-bike-spokes lamentations that everyone's parents groan about when reminiscing on their childhood possessions: Pafo's card was No. 1 in the set. Kids usually stacked them in numerical order and then bound them with a rubber band, so poor Andy usually got dented, crushed or encrusted with eroding rubber. The band-tar-nished cards aren't nearly as desirable as the clean ones, which are tough to locate and boast a bigger price tag than most of the big-name stars in the set.

1954 Bowman Ted Williams

There are two versions of card No. 66 in Bowman's '54 set. One of them is worth $75; the other is worth about $3,000. One would expect any Ted Williams card to pull in a pretty big jar of pennies, but even his 1950 Bowman only attracts about a third the price tag of the '54.

Here's the story behind this card's allure: Bowman started printing the '54 set with the Splendid Splitter as card No. 66, until Williams pulled the trigger on Bowman and signed an exclusive contract with the Topps company. Bowman had to axe the Williams card early in the production, and replaced it with a card of his fellow Red Sox outfielder Jimmy Piersall.

The few Williams cards circulating out there are among the more enrapturing pieces of cardboard in history, while the Piersall card is one of his more popular installments.

1962 Topps Bob Uecker

OK, so it's only worth $75. But $75 is pretty staggering for a guy who played six seasons and posted a career batting average of .200.

Baseball cards, like all collectibles and other such bric-a-brac, are worth whatever people are willing to pay for them. Uecker, pitiful career numbers and all, made up for his ineptitude on the diamond with his character everywhere else. His card does the same.

Character. It's all about character.

1989 Fleer Billy Ripken Speaking of character, this might be the emperor of all unusual cards. Ripken's card comes in three variations, listed as 616A, 616B and 616C. All three of them together could bring in about $100, which is pretty impressive considering that common cards in the set are worth about five cents.

Billy's card is the most popular in the set—even more desirable than that of his accomplished brother, Cal, whose '89 Fleer books at a meager 50 cents.

Why the interest in Billy? It's all in the power of profanity. When the set was first printed, Billy Ripken's card provoked a few double-takes. Written on the knob of Ripken's bat, in crisp, clear, black marker and in plain view of any kid who happened to pull the card out of its wax pack, were the words "F—FACE."

Needless to say, parents didn't appreciate this devious bit of decorative alliteration, and Fleer had to whisk it off the market. The company replaced it with three different cards—a card that had the locate and boast a bigger price tag than most of the Sure, it's no T206, but this card, in all its variations, has its own degree of appeal. If nothing else, the unedited version is worth the $20 for its shock value alone.

Donruss' defacing of Ruth's jersey is daring in its own right, and ought to entice plenty of collectors to shell out for packs and boxes of whatever product line the company graces with the jersey card.

It should be interesting to see what price the card can inspire from the card-collecting masses, who arguably walk the fine line between hobby and mental illness every day. Chances are it will be in high demand.

If not, Donruss will surely be on the lookout for something else to chop up and cram into baseball cards.

Maybe somebody ought to hide that T206 Honus Wagner.

In coach we trust: Who gets players' respect?

By MIKE ORTA
Writer

Another weekend of NFL action has passed, and things just keep getting crazier. The Panthers lost to Houston. The Patriots squeezed out a victory at Mile High. The Raiders lost again, this time to the lowly Lions. Now that teams are somewhat entrenched in their habits, be it mainly winning or losing, we are getting a clearer look at where teams' loyalties lie. What I'm talking about is how much trust or faith the players have in their coaches.

It's not a matter of liking or disliking the coach, as we will see, but in a sense it's a matter of wanting to go to war for the man. You know what I'm talking about. Some teams seem to rally around a coach and rise to the occasion on gamedays, while others roll over like a lazy dog on a hot day. At this point in the season it is obvious which coaches seem to have the support of their team, and which coaches seem to be facing the threat of mutiny at almost Captain Bligh, bounty-esque proportions.

Bill Belichick has his team. This is a callous man who has no fantastical desire to be "friends" with his players. He is there to win ballgames, and he is doing just that. After releasing Lawyer Milloy right before "The Patriots' first game of the season," it seemed that Belichick's days were numbered. Some players were voicing opinions of malcontent, and others were outright proclaiming their dislike for the man. But sure enough, the man who brought this team to Super Bowl glory won his players back. This team officially has respect for its coach again.

Over the past few weeks the Pats have been hit pretty hard with injuries to key playmakers, but with the leadership of Belichick, they kept on winning. His attention to detail and the infinite possibilities of game time situations began to catch his players' interests. The Monday night game against Denver was a perfect example of this. When he decided to take a safety and punt the ball away, there weren't any sideline tirades by his players. They just went out and did what was asked of them.

What happened next? Bill's plan worked and his team gained great field position after forcing a three-and-out on the Denver offense, and the Pats went on to win the game. This team will go to war for Bill Belichick, and at this rate its weekly battles are going to last into January.

The Kansas City Chiefs are the surprise team of the year, and Dick Vermeil is the main reason why. His players have a distinct belief that he will lead them to victory every time they step on the field. Vermeil is pretty much everything that Belichick is not. Dick is emotional and personable and he talks to his players.

At the same time, the players understand that Vermeil is the coach and that his system is to be respected and obeyed. The players are paying attention to their tasks, from the quarterback all the way down to the blockers on punt returns. Vermeil is getting the most out of every player at almost every position right now. It's this ability to harness the skills of each player that makes Vermeil such a good coach. If these guys keep it up, they'll have the distinct honor of being the third team in three decades to play in a Super Bowl under Vermeil.

Now, let's look at some of Gun" offense doesn't seem to be impressing too many of the players. With no hot routes built into his packages and few blockers in the backfield to help in pass protection schemes, Ramsey is getting killed by the almost constant blitzes that are going to give it to you. He wants those guys in the backfield to be receivers in case the quarterback wants to chuck it down. It seems as though these guys haven't really bought into the system that Spurrier has been trying to install. Ramsey isn't getting rid of the ball quickly enough, receivers aren't getting open and guys are committing penalties like it's going out of style.

This is a ship headed straight into the eye of a hurricane. Disaster looms as the Redskins draw closer and closer to the end of the season and possibly yet another tumultuous off season, in which the head coach might be tossed overboard, as the players try to sail to Tahiti.

Raider nation has got to be near rioting at this point. A team that played in the Super Bowl just last year and had a seemingly unstoppable offense is just sputtering along with no sign of hope on the horizon this season. It doesn't appear that Bill Callahan has done much to establish himself as his own head coach, not just the guy who took over when Gruden left.

The funny thing is, the players were some of the biggest advocates for promoting Callahan to head coach after Chucky jetisoned to Tampa. Now it looks like he's got a circus on his hands in Oakland, and he hasn't got the proverbial whip that most ringmasters are issued.

This roots back to the Super Bowl, where Tampa seemed to recognize all of Oakland's audibles, which had been installed by Gruden, who was now the coach in Tampa. So basically, Callahan is trying to ride off of Gruden's wave, and the players are starting to catch on to this. When it was working like it was last season, guys like Charles Woodson had no problem, but now that the wave has hit shore and they have to paddle out again, the players have lost faith.

Most of these guys aren't going to be around long enough to see through the rebuilding of the team in the image of Bill Callahan. The window is shut, the door is closed, these guys are done, and they know it. Although a lot of these players are on limited time, they are going to be around long enough to quit on Callahan, and put him out on a life boat as they sail off to their retirement community.

Now there are a bunch of guys I could bring up on either side of the coin. Parcells has his teams' support, as do Fassel, Fox, Holmgren and Tice. Then there are the other guys like Jaaron, Del Rio, Schottenheimer and Wannstedt, who seem to be losing their teams.

Whether or not these guys can gain and keep the support of their players is the key to success.

If the players buy in and perform each of their assigned duties with a sense of responsibility to their coach, then the team will win. It's that simple. Guys like Jeff Fisher and Jim Fassel keep their jobs because each time they seem like they are on their way out, the players rally for their coaches.

That's what it takes, the ability for each player to say honestly, "In coach we trust." Once they can do that without a smirk or a snicker, then they're on the right path, and they'll start winning ball games.

Bill Belichick celebrates with one of his players. Belichick is among the NFL coaches who have earned their players' respect.

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

JAMAICA

Spring Break 2004—The Ultimate Experience

Packages from Philly or BWI starting at:
CALL 1.800.733.6347 $529

Call Today!!

Sell trips, earn cash, travel free!!
Book before Dec 15th and Save!!
Group Discounts
Bucknell...Life Life the Beach Life Way!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com - 1.800.733.6347

Ignite the white!

zoom!

whiter brighter faster

When your teeth in one hour or one weekend!

to let your first step to feeling good, looking great and making a memorable impression when you smile. You owe it to yourself. Find out more about Zoom Whitening. Call today!

David R. Robinson, DMD, P.C.
339 Market St.
Lewisburg, Pa.
(Downtown)

Bring this ad in & receive 15% off any whitening procedure

Sports

Football trounces Holy Cross in 53-31 rout

Bison offense comes to life as Jackson passes, runs for four touchdowns; Sarnor scores two touchdowns

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell football team successfully rebounded from its loss on Oct. 15 by picking up a 53-31 victory over Holy Cross on Saturday at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. The Bison were led by quarterback John Henry Jackson '05, who compiled 242 passing yards while throwing for two touchdowns and rushing for another two.

Jackson, making just his second collegiate start, picked up the first passing and rushing touchdowns of his career.

Also contributing to the offensive explosion were Blamah Sarnor '06, who ran for 102 yards and two touchdowns and Albert Marquardt '04 who snagged four passes for 130 yards and a touchdown.

The scoring began with 5 minutes, 55 seconds left in the first quarter when Holy Cross recovered a botched handoff and returned it for 55 yards to take a 7-0 lead.

Bucknell

struck back quickly when Dante Ross '06 made an 81-yard kickoff return, placing the Bison on Holy Cross' 10-yard line. Two plays later, Tim Johnson '04 scored on a 9-yard run to make the score 6-7. The Bison took an early lead when Zach Richards '06 caught a two-point conversion pass from Jackson to make the score 8-7.

Holy Cross scored again with 47 seconds left in the quarter when it capped a 70-yard drive with a two-yard touchdown run, but the Bison regained the lead early in the second quarter with a 1-yard run by Jackson.

Holy Cross wrestled the lead away from the Bison again at 7:01 when kicker Mike DeSantis capped the team's 47-yard drive with a 35-yard field goal to give the Crusaders a 17-15 lead.

The Orange and Blue scored once more before halftime when Ryan Korn '07 put a career-long 43-yard field goal through the uprights to grab an 18-17 lead for the Bison with 3:39 left in the second quarter.

The Bison took charge after halftime, scoring on a 2-yard touchdown run by Jackson at 11:43 and a 5-yard touchdown run by Sarnor at 4:50. Both drives included key plays by Antwan Kennedy '06, who set up Jackson and Sarnor's runs with a 30-yard catch and a 38-yard run, respectively.

Holy Cross cut the margin to 32-24 when Silva ran for his second touchdown of the day, but the Bison answered with a 67-yard drive that culminated in a 33-yard touchdown pass from Jackson to Marquardt with 12:35 left in the game.

A 10-yard touchdown pass from Jackson to Marquardt with 12:35 left in the game.

Tim Johnson '04 celebrates as Blamah Sarnor '06 charges across the goal line Saturday during the Bison's 53-31 victory over Holy Cross. Sarnor ran for two touchdowns in the team's rout.

age against the Bison, as Bucknell pulled away in the final quarter.

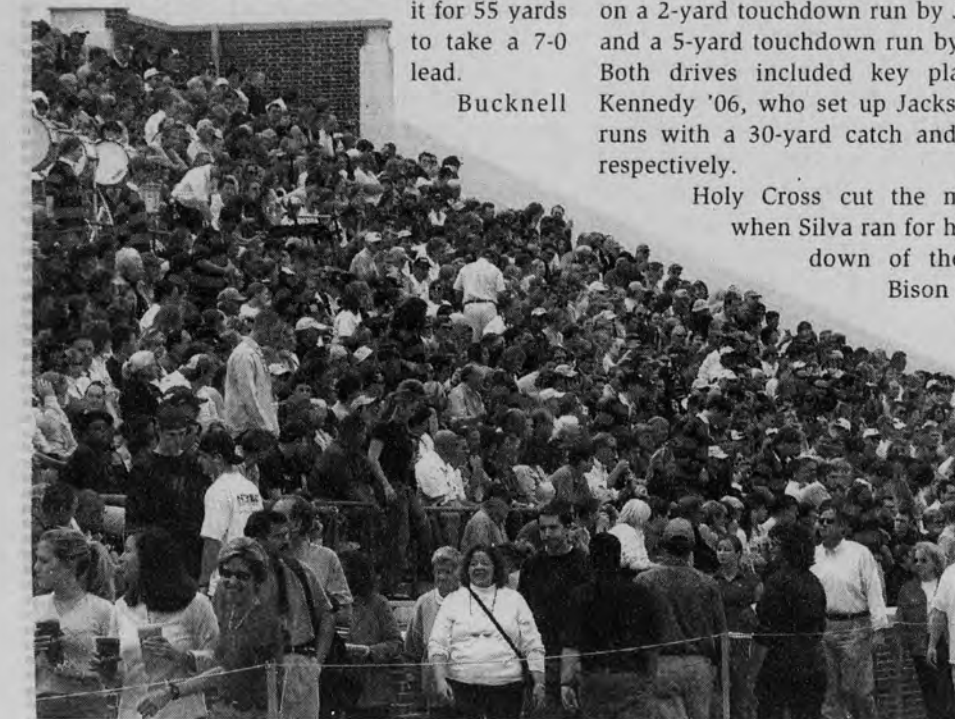

Ian Nutt '05 caught a 16-yard pass from Jackson on a fourth-and-one play at 4:27 to give the Bison a 42-31 lead, and Sarnor scored his second touchdown of the day to seal the victory with 26 seconds left in the game.

The scoring outburst marked the highest point total for the Bison since 1990, and the first time in the program's history that a Bucknell team allowed 50 points one week and then scored 50 points the following week.

The team also registered a season-high 544 total yards.

The victory improves the team's overall record to 5-4 and Patriot League record to 3-1. The Bison will face another league team when they travel to Lafayette for their last road game of the season. Kickoff is tomorrow at 12:30 p.m.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Fans fill the stands to watch the Bison play on Parents Weekend. The large home crowd cheered the Orange and Blue to an exciting defeat of Holy Cross.

Field hockey drops last game of the season

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell field hockey team suffered another tough loss on Saturday when it lost its regular season finale to American University. The Eagles, who finished the season 6-0 in the Patriot League, defeated the Bison 3-2 at Graham Field.

Prior to the game, Lindsay Gentel '04 and Kate Ruda '04 were honored, as the contest was their last home game for the Bison.

The Bison knew that American would be a daunting opponent, but still put forth a tenacious effort.

"We had heard so much about American and were anxious to play them," Head Coach Heather Lewis said. "Despite the difficult outcome, I thought the team played hard and kept fighting all the way to the end."

American struck first in the game, scoring 16 minutes, 50 seconds into the first half when Melissa Snyder scored off a rebound. The Eagles led 1-0 at halftime and widened their margin 5 minutes into the second half on another shot by Snyder.

The Bison were unimpressed by their opponent's 2-0 lead and quickly got back into the game when Meiko Boynton '05 took a pass from Callista Costopoulos '07 and snuck it past American goalkeeper Laura Miller.

Boynton's play throughout the game was among the factors that kept the Bison close.

"I thought Meiko Boynton played one of her better games this season," Lewis said. "She was key down the stretch in terms of putting constant attacking pressure on the American defense. And, I was pleased to see her finish on one of our penalty corner set pieces."

At 13:07, Bucknell knotted up the score when Kelly O'Brien '06, who finished the regular season with a team-leading 10 goals, scored off an assist from Alex Kyzmir '07.

"We got a nice lift from Alex Kyzmir off the bench," Lewis said. "She played very good individual defense, and her assisted goal with Kelly O'Brien was a classic execution of a 2v1 to goal."

Only 38 seconds later, American snatched back its lead when Camila Infante scored off a penalty corner and made the score 3-2. The Bison continued to battle, but were unable to score again, allowing the Eagles to finish their season undefeated against league teams.

Despite allowing the three goals, Liz Jordan '06 was again strong in the cage as she piled up 12 saves. The Eagles fired off 24 shots, while the Bison only managed eight.

Lewis felt that Jordan and the Goalkeeper Liz Jordan '06 prepares to block a shot on Saturday during the Bison's 3-2 loss to American. Jordan was impressive in the cage as usual, making 12 saves against the Eagles' strong offensive attack while allowing three goals.

defense were again a strong point for the Bison.

"Defensively, we did a nice job of containing American's key players," Lewis said. "And, as always, I thought Liz played well in goal. She was very good in the first half, thwarting multiple shot attempts in one attacking series."

Despite the loss, Lewis feels positive about the team's performance. "I was proud that we kept them under pressure and came back to tie it 2-2," Lewis said. "We just let it slip a bit following their time out, and American was opportunistic in scoring its third goal."

The loss left Bucknell with a 9-7 overall record and a 3-3 record in the league. The league record earned the Bison a spot in the Patriot League Tournament, which gives them the opportunity to enact revenge on some of their league rivals.

They will face Holy Cross in the first round at 2 p.m. today in Worcester, Mass. Holy Cross handed the Bison their first defeat of the regular season on Sept. 20, and the Orange and Blue are eager for payback.

"We've said all season long that

"Despite the difficult outcome, I thought the team played hard and kept fighting all the way to the end."

—Heather Lewis, head coach

our goal was to be the Patriot League Champions," Lewis said. "Right now, we've put ourselves in a good position to reach that goal."

Lewis isn't concerned about the team's ability to overcome the road trip.

"While some may think having to play at Holy Cross is a disadvantage, I don't think this team is too concerned with that," Lewis said. "We've traveled all season long, since the very first day of pre-season and are more than comfortable on the road."

The winner of today's game will advance to the finals, where it will face either American or Lafayette for the Patriot League crown.

Lewis noted that the tournament is well-matched and consists of four very impressive teams.

"I think all four teams are playing good hockey at the moment, and any one of us is capable of winning the whole tournament," Lewis said.

The Bison are prepared to stand up to the challenge and bring home the Patriot League trophy.

"In looking at our preparation, there's no doubt this team is focused and eager to get on with the games," Lewis said. "We're going up with a singular purpose, and I know Bucknell will play with great pride and determination."

Sports

Spotlight athlete: Samantha Berthod

By AINSLEY MALONEY
Writer

Before Samantha Berthod '04 came to Bucknell, she made a promise to herself to make the most of her college years and never let an opportunity pass her. When she joined the tennis team her first year, she made a similar vow: to walk away with no regrets.

Berthod stuck to these mottos through her entire college career, and it shows. The proof lies in her long list of activities and achievements both on and off the tennis court.

When Berthod first joined the team, she had few expectations. Rather than setting long-term goals, she wanted to focus on each individual performance. Her aim was not to snag the No. 1 spot but simply to become a key team player.

"Instead of worrying about the big picture, I just wanted to take it one match at a time," Berthod said. "My goal was to always be a contributing player and win points for my team."

Head Coach Rebecca Helt noticed Berthod's selfless and dedicated attitude from the day she joined the Bison squad.

"Sam was not a typical freshman," Helt said. "From the first day of practice, she established herself as a leader. She has never once approached me about her needs and has always put them aside in order to do what was best for the team."

Berthod continued to show her leadership qualities and was selected as team captain for the past two years. With the goals of the team consistent with her own, she is the ideal player to represent its mission. She keeps great communication with the other team players, who see her as a "big sister" rather than an intimidating senior.

"Sam is always willing to try anything I suggest on the court," doubles-partner Rheanna Gaskin '06 said. "We can all go to her with any questions or concerns, and she will always be understanding."

Berthod also serves as a role model by showing her teammates that attitude wins matches, not just talent. The other players admire her most for her determination and unrelenting desire to win.

"Sam is so composed and always gives 100 percent on any given day," Chelsea Mills '06 said. "Everyone looks up to her as an example of what we can aspire to."

Tanya Sichko '05 agrees. "When Sam goes out on the court, there is little doubt that she will do all she can to win, and she does just that," Sichko said.

In fact, Berthod did "just that," enough to put her name in the record books. In the second round of the ECAC Championships on Oct. 3, Berthod broke the University's All-Time Singles Win Record with her 51st win. The 6-3, 6-2 victory over Hofstra's Jill Spiritus allowed her to pass Kristina Lutter's nine-year-old record.

Breaking the record was something about which Berthod never dreamed. In fact, she hadn't even realized the goal was in view until she read earlier in the semester that she was only two wins away.

"I try to give my all at every match and practice and make every match important," Berthod said. "I didn't really have long-term goals; I just wanted to improve my game. Breaking the record is like icing on the cake."

If the body really does achieve what the mind believes, Berthod is a true example. Helt feels Berthod's mental toughness is what improved most over the years and recognized her progress at the end of each season. From her first year to junior year, Berthod accepted the Sportsmanship Award, Most Improved Player Award and Coaches Award.

"Samantha has gained an incredible amount of self-confidence as a competitor and believes she can win every match she plays," Helt said. "She makes up for any weaknesses in her skills with her competitiveness and determination to succeed. She is one of the most tenacious and determined individuals I've ever coached."

Along with excelling on the court, Berthod is highly active in her school and community. She is a double major in biology and psychology, a teaching assistant for a psychological statistics class, a peer advisor with the deans of fraternity and sorority affairs and the vice president of public relations for the Delta Delta Delta sorority. She also interned at the Burke-Rehabilitation Hospital in White Plains, N.Y., volunteered at the Danville hospital and received a research grant this past summer.

"Sam has one of the most hectic schedules of any student-athlete," Helt said. "Yet even as a freshman she understood how to prioritize, manage her time efficiently and get everything done."

Her biggest accomplishment off the court was being able to organize a rape forum for the student body last spring with the support of her sorority and the Women's Resource Center. Because of the forum, she received an award at the 2003 Bucknell Diversity Celebration.

Through her college career, Berthod kept the promises she made to herself as a first-year student; she soaked in and sought out every opportunity she could find. Berthod's character, however, led her to take the promises a step further. By consistently putting her all into every position she held, activity she planned and match she played, she not only held a place but left her mark in the Bucknell and tennis communities.

"I knew coming in a collegiate athlete that I would have my work cut out for me, but I never expected to enjoy the hard work so much," Berthod said. "The dedication, work ethic and leadership skills that I've learned will help me well beyond my years at Bucknell."

Of course, Berthod would not take all the credit.

"I would not be where I am today without Coach Helt," Berthod said. "She's been such a tremendous source of support, and I can't thank her enough. She's never doubted me, and because of her I have learned to believe in myself on and off the court."

Volleyball rolls over Lehigh

By TERI SCHLANG
Writer

The Bucknell Women's volleyball team overcame Lehigh with a 3-0 victory on Saturday evening at Lehigh, spoiling the Mountain Hawk's senior night event. This was the Bison's sixth straight victory, which will help them to at least a second-place seeding in the Patriot League Tournament later this month. Their league record is now 10-1 and 14-9 overall.

The Bison came from behind in all three games winning, 30-26, 33-31 and 30-28. During the first game the Bison trailed 20-16 before rallying back to win the game.

In the second game, Lehigh led 29-27 until Bucknell came back, ending the game on an ace by Jessica Bissett '05.

During the last game, the Bison were again facing a four-point deficit but overcame it to defeat Lehigh for the final time. They hit a 429 during the win in the final game.

"We pulled off some pretty impressive comebacks this weekend," Breean Trapasso '04 said. "We were determined and we successfully came together as a team."

"I think our team really stepped up this weekend especially against Lehigh, it was truly an all-around team effort," Jackie Leahy '05 said. "The energy our team displayed was just amazing. We went into Lehigh's gym on senior night and just took over. We showed a lot of heart coming back from a 19-10 deficit to win the crucial second game."

Over the course of the three games Brandi Trapasso '04

"The energy our team displayed was just amazing."
—Jackie Leahy '05

logged nine kills and 15 digs, while Bissett had eight kills and hit a 400. Jennie Smith '07 and Sarah Groman '07 each also had seven kills. Breean Trapasso handed out a total of 41 assists over the night.

"I think that we were able to defeat Lehigh because we played as team, as one unit," Bissett said. "Everyone individually had a great match, but more importantly, the energy and excitement that was generated, both on and off the court, was what gave us the edge over Lehigh."

Some of the starting players contribute their win partially to their bench and the sidelines. Bucknell was receiving so much support from the bench they felt it gave them a definite advantage.

"I think we had a total team contribution this weekend, by team I mean everyone, the starters and the players from the bench," Brandi Trapasso said. "Lehigh couldn't stop us because we were getting so much energy from the sidelines, and this energy was transferred onto the court."

The Bison victory at Lehigh was actually the second victory of the weekend. On Friday night they defeated Lafayette 3-0.

"Whenever you are on the road for three weeks, as we have been ... you can't help but be pleased with three game victories," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said. "The learning curve for our team seems to be continuing to move in a positive direction, and we're getting strong, consistent performances from our upperclassmen. We are very hungry for a couple of wins this weekend Friday versus Navy and Saturday versus American."

The Bison play at home tonight and tomorrow, facing Navy and American, respectively. The Bison will have a chance to avenge their only loss of the season when they face American on Senior Night in the Davis Gym.

Soccer clinches regular-season league title an early goal. That was great for us. It really took the confidence out of their game, and we were able to control the ball for most of the first half," Jon Hemmert '05 said.

SOCCER from page B1

Hemmert put the game away with 1-0 on the board and 15 minutes left in the first half. Brian King '04 crossed the ball in from the wing, and Hemmert hit it past Navy keeper Frank DiFilippo with a single strike. It was Hemmert's second goal of the season.

Edwards made two saves in the game and moved into eighth place on the Patriot League career list for shutouts.

Michael Lookingland '05 led the defense, which allowed the Midshipmen only eight shots. The Bison, on the other hand, had 18 shots on goal. The Midshipmen's DiFilippo made five stops in the goal.

"I think the game shows that when we want something as a team we will get it," Brunton said.

The two wins advance the Bison's record to 11-6 overall and 6-0-1 in the league.

There is one regular season game remaining for the Bison, as they host Holy Cross on Saturday. As the season winds down, the team must now focus on the upcoming Patriot League Tournament.

"Although the victory came at Navy, this was really the result of months of dedication and hard work by everyone involved in the program,"

Assistant Coach Brian Suskiewicz said. "Our focus now shifts to the post-season tournament. We feel that we will have a huge advantage playing in front of our home fans and on our own field—but it will still be a tough tournament. We are looking forward to the challenge and hope to walk away from the weekend as Patriot League Champions and heading to the NCAA tournament."

"Although the victory came at Navy, this was really the result of months of dedication and hard work by everyone involved in the program."

—Brian Suskiewicz, assistant coach

The team, as well as its mascots Batman and Robin, are hoping to find strong fan support at the Patriot League Tournament and the Holy Cross game.

"We have gotten great fan support over the years and we are looking for Batman and Robin to lead our fans in giving us a great home field advantage," Nash said.

THE LITTLE RED HEN™ EATERY
Famous for it's All-Purpose Dipping Mustard and Gourmet Foods
Lewishburg Roller Mills - 400 Antique Shops
Market Place Eatery, 517 Saint Marys St.
Lewishburg, PA Phone (570) 523-0009
11AM - 3PM 7 DAYS A WEEK
DAVID W. REED (OWNER)
HOME (570) 966-0457
The Little Red Hen™, c/o Hen House Gourmet Foods
642 Walnut Street, Millville, PA 17844

HARVEST HOUSE
CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

GO Vertical

310 Market St.
Downtown Lewishburg
Under CVS

Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

NOW OFFERING
ONE MONTH'S FREE RENT
FOR ALL REMAINING
'04-'05 UNITS!

BISON PROPERTIES

- Professionally Managed and Maintained
- High Speed Internet Available
- Two to Eight Bedrooms
- Now Accepting Applications for '05-'06

Call or E-mail Scott Bank '91
for more information

610-506-6676
bison.properties@comcast.net

CALL NOW TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF LIMITED REMAINING INVENTORY.

YOUR PARENTS WILL THANK YOU!

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Kirsten Nilsen '06 charges downfield with American players following in close pursuit. The Bison kept the game competitive by rallying from a 2-0 deficit before ultimately falling to the Eagles. American is now 6-0 in the league.

Arts & Entertainment

Your ticket to the top 10 live performances

Incubus, Coldplay, Pearl Jam, Dave Matthews Band and Metallica are among some of the must-see acts

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

I'm a concert guy. Listening to even the best studio albums just doesn't quite compare to seeing a band perform in a live setting, be it at a few-hundred person club or a 70,000+ seat stadium. Over the past 10 or so years, I've been to hundreds of shows, and this is my list of not just bands I like, but the best live acts that anyone who feels the same way about music should check out.

10. Metallica

I have a lot of personal reservations about liking Metallica, mainly based on its ridiculous outcry against downloading music online (because, of course, it doesn't have enough money already). Politics aside, Metallica is probably the single greatest heavy metal act of all time, and its live show proves it. I saw the group a few years back at Madison Square Garden, performing with a 72-piece symphony orchestra. It was among the most memorable concert experiences of my life.

9. The Roots

As a casual fan of hip-hop, it takes quite a bit to get me going at a live performance of the genre, mainly because so many mainstream rap artists are more concerned with how much ice they're wearing on stage and letting the crowd sing half of the lyrics. With The Roots, this simply isn't the case. Playing shows that usually run close to three hours, the underground group from Philadelphia doesn't only get the place bumping, but also expands its set to include jams, jazz pieces and rock solos.

8. Tool

Vocalist Maynard (as he's known to loyal

Coldplay ranks number five with its amazing shows that invite crowds to sing along.

fans) may be the most disturbing individual in popular music today, but at the same time he's one of the most talented and charismatic. Tool's live show not only offers great music, but often includes trapeze artists, amazing visuals and stage dress that toes the line between shock-rock and obscenity (Maynard rarely covers much and often times dons padded bras, high heels and full-face makeup). Tool simply rocks for its entire set, leaving nothing in the dressing room and giving fans an unforgettable show every night.

7. Incubus

Incubus is the kind of band that you'll want to check out once during a tour because you'll be fully satisfied without worrying about what you missed that it's playing the next night. While its set-lists are quite similar night to night, Incubus gives fans what they want—a great mix of old and new material, playing only the best songs from each album, doing so in a way that allows for a positive departure from what it does in the studio. Singer Brandon Boyd is just about as compelling as a young male vocalist can be, belting out tunes at all ranges and dominating the stage for the whole of the performance. The "stellar" light show helps too.

6. Phish

Phish takes over where the Grateful Dead left off. Seeing Phish doesn't just mean catching a concert but immersing yourself in an entire subculture unlike any the music world has seen in years. The thousands of Phish-heads who travel to every show will make attendance worthwhile, but if you're just going for the music, beware—Phish's sets vary so much night to night that there's no way to tell just what you're going to hear. If you're a casual fan who only wants to hear "Bouncin' Round the Room" or "Down with Disease," you might want to rethink attending. However, if you have an open mind and want to check out the quintessential jam band of our time, I would highly recommend it.

5. Coldplay

Anyone who thought that the modern "British Invasion" of rock bands ended when Oasis fell from the limelight is sorely mistaken. Coldplay sprung out of nowhere to release "A Rush of Blood to the Head," one of last year's best U2 captured the number one spot on the countdown. Its performances have been named outstanding because it has both the great music and a second-to-none setup.

3. Pearl Jam

Eddie Vedder is the closest thing to a present-day Bob Dylan, both in his lyrics and stage presence. The beauty of seeing a Pearl Jam show is the familiarity that you will undoubtedly find in the song selection—even casual fans will know most of the set; and those they might not are too good to ignore. Pearl Jam does for modern rock what bands like Led Zeppelin did for the '70s, playing what it wants, be it new or old. Pearl Jam also covers a variety of songs from bands like The Beatles to Creedence Clearwater Revival. At Penn State University last year, the group decided to play as long as fans were willing to stick around and ended up performing 39 songs in just less than three and a half hours. It doesn't get any better than that.

2. Dave Matthews Band

Dave Matthews Band (DMB) is consistently the best live band I have ever seen. Going to my first show in '98 as a non-fan and leaving as a dedicated follower, DMB puts on one of the most well-known shows in live music today. Whether you're a hardcore fan or a radio listener, each show will appeal to you in some way. Playing a variety of songs from nearly every one of its studio albums each night, mixing it up with frequent covers and unreleased tracks, there's something for everyone. If you want to hear one song in particular, make sure you go to more than one concert—DMB plays multiple shows at a single venue—the groups never repeated a set-list and rarely play the same songs on consecutive dates.

1. U2

Bono is a rock 'n' roll god. Wait, let me rephrase that: Bono is the rock 'n' roll god. While Bono (and arguably guitarist The Edge) get all the credit, make no mistake that U2, as a band, puts on the best single show in rock music today. I waited almost 10 years to finally see it up, pay the high price for a ticket and see the group live, then did it again a few months later. While set-lists are similar each night (usually toying with four or five songs), you're guaranteed to hear all of your favorites, spanning its illustrious career. U2's setup is second to none. On its recent "Elevation Tour," the band was quoted as saying that it decided to hold back with the stage show and focus more on the music. If the halogen lamps, handheld spotlights, giant televisions and huge heart surrounding the floor is "holding back," then I could only imagine what this fabulous act does when it goes all out.

AvanTango entertains crowd with style, flair and drama

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

AvanTango offered an exotic, sensual combination of music and dance Saturday evening for the parents and students that packed the Weis Center.

Despite the cancellation of Orquesta Aragon, this performance group succeeded in giving the audience a spectacular show, incorporating different styles of art to create both a visually—and musically—stunning cultural performance.

The group expressed its honor in replacing the Cuban charanga band and apologized profusely about the cancellation.

"[We] musicians don't like to mix politics and art, so I won't," said bass violinist Pablo Aslan, his joke in reference to Orquesta Aragon's visa issues that prevented it from visiting the University.

AvanTango's performance proved to be an extremely worthy replacement. Its program, "New York Tango," showcased several different styles of dance and music forms as it traversed the history of tango throughout the past century.

AvanTango incorporated tango styles popular in various parts of the world, including France, the United States and its native Argentina into Saturday night's show to show the universality of this musical genre.

"For Argentines, tango is more than just life. It's music; it's dance; it's singing," Aslan said.

Aslan is both the director of AvanTango and a prominent figure in American tango.

A vocalist was not included in their five-piece musical ensemble, and the intense emotion of the program was conveyed by the quietest and dancers.

Showing a rare virtuosity, AvanTango included a pianist, two violinists, a bassist and a bandoneon player. The musicians played zealously, serving as more than just background music for the dancers in the troupe. They even performed two pieces without dance accompaniment and throughout the evening mixed world-renowned tango pieces with more localized favorites.

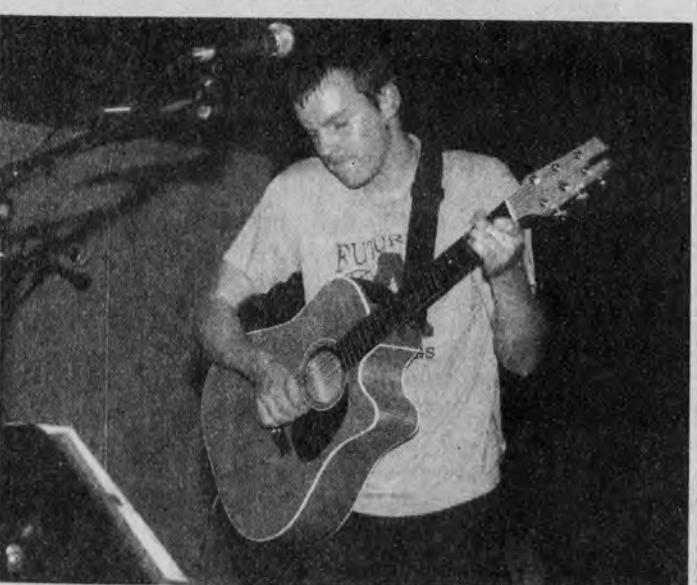

The three pairs of dancers exhibited exemplary tango skills and excellent acting ability as they took turns dancing through 15 tangos. Each of these songs told a story of passion—some playful, some romantic.

The dancers delivered their interpretations through dramatic poses, leaps, lifts, intense gazes and complex footwork that showed natural talent and years of dedication.

AvanTango received a well-deserved standing ovation, leading to an encore performance. The encore combined the technically-difficult artistry of the dancers while the instrumentalists performed emotive music.

JEFF CLARK VISITS UPTOWN

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Jeff Clark '03 performed Saturday night at Uptown. Clark, who accompanies himself on guitar and keyboard, has been on a national tour since graduation.

Arts & Entertainment

University Symphonic Band performs challenging selections

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Band director William Kenny leads the band at a rehearsal.

By MICHELLE DOMBECK
Associate Editor

The sounds of the University's Symphonic Band will resonate on the Weis Center stage at 8 p.m. tomorrow night. The schedule features a wide array of music and is what William Kenny, band director and associate professor of music, called the most demanding program in 14 years.

Chad Parker '05, who plays alto and soprano saxophones, says that the concert will prove to be exciting.

"The program is very diverse. In one concert we're combining so many different musical styles and genres. It could easily be part of a whirlwind tour of band literature. Because of all the variety, the music never gets boring," Parker said.

While most of the pieces have been composed in the last 15 years, the band arrangement of Richard Wagner's "Elsa's Procession to the Cathedral" from the Lohengrin is 70 years old.

"Gloriosa," one of the newer pieces, is a three-movement symphony in which the male musicians perform a Gregorian chant. In the piece's second movement, flutist Elsbeth Fager '04 performs an extended solo, the sounds of which mimic a Japanese flute.

Other pieces include the technically demanding "To Tame the Perilous Skies," by David Holsinger. This piece, according to Kenny, "paints a musical picture of the history of flight."

"It's a classic piece and challenging, but also beautiful because there is always something going on," flutist Julie Bellizzi '05 said.

The band will also perform a symphonic paraphrase of John Phillip Sousa's "Thunderer March," variations on "The Girl I Left Behind Me" and Percy's Grainger's classic "Lincolnshire Posy."

"Grainger somehow scores

This band is composed of 80 musicians who hail from many different majors and fields.

"It's always rewarding to see and hear the musical progress made by these stu-

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
The University Symphonic Band prepares for its upcoming concert. The performance tomorrow will feature a diverse selection of music, including works by Sousa and Grainger.

can hear individual instruments with a color you didn't know they could sound. Plus, Grainger was a big saxophone fan, so we've got some great parts," Parker said.

Most of these students participate because they love music and they enjoy playing their instrument," Kenny said. The concert is free and open to the public.

Downtown Lewisburg welcomes record industry with new store

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Lewisburg's new record store The Industry welcomed local band Night Train to Terror during its grand opening. The Industry's selection consists of mainly punk rock and hardcore music.

By DAVID ALLEN
Staff Writer

There is a new store in Lewisburg deserving of the support of University students. Industry Music and Skate celebrated its grand opening Saturday at 328 Market Street. This small store was packed with customers browsing and purchasing CDs, skate equipment, shirts, posters and stickers.

Enticed by live music, prize giveaways, food and an entrance fee of only $3, customers filled the store and the hallway outside for the entire two hours of the "Grand Opening Shindig."

The music selection at the store consists mostly of punk rock and hardcore artists, with a mix of local, independent and mainstream recordings.

The store's offerings for skateboarders include decks, wheels and trucks from many different skate companies.

Taking up even more space in the store at the grand opening was local band Night Train to Terror. The three young men in the band were dressed in suits and played a laid-back, partially-amplified jazz/boogie style of music.

Kurt lobst, Industry's owner, said that Night Train usually performs "really loud, noisy punk like Fugazi. I wanted to keep it very lo-fi and jazzy."

lobst himself plays in a local band, Thanatos570. Members of the area hardcore band Tracer were also in attendance at the opening. Industry will offer the store as a performance space to local artists and welcome musicians from the University.

lobst, a native of Allentown, Pa., works as a substitute teacher in the Selinsgrove Area School District. He said that it has been his dream since he was 16 years old to own a music and skate shop.

Having lived in the area for several years, the initiative to start up a shop in Lewisburg "sort of happened spontaneously."

With his shop's presence in town, music-listeners and skateboarders in Lewisburg and at the University "won't have to drive one half-hour [to the mall] to get what they want."

"Industry is a great addition to Lewisburg," Allison Kasic '05 said. "Independent music stores are important in spreading music that is outside of the mainstream, so it is great to see a place like this so close to campus."

Several DJs from WVBU were at the grand opening scooping out new artists to play on the radio station.

At about 8:30 p.m., lobst threw handfuls of stickers into the crowd of people inside the store and then drew names for the raffle.

Several skate decks, sets of wheels and T-shirts were given away. Then, in lieu of picking names for a prize winner, he tossed CDs and pins into the crowd and let customers grab for what they wanted.

Judging by the turnout at the grand opening, Industry will enjoy great support from area residents. With business from University students, lobst's store can become a community mainstay, providing punk, independent music and skateboarding supplies in the Lewisburg area for years to come.

Ryan Adcock to stop at University

Courtesy of ryanadcock.com
Singer/songwriter Ryan Adcock will perform tonight at the 7th Street Café as part of the Late Night Music Series. He has been named Cincinnati's Best Rock Vocalist.

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Singer/songwriter Ryan Adcock will be performing tonight as part of the Late Night Music Series at 7th Street Café. Adcock is currently promoting his new album "From Silence and Joy."

This is Adcock's fourth recording and his first since becoming a full-time musician.

"The level of songwriting is more cohesive now I think," Adcock said.

Adcock has been performing since the age of 14.

"I had my first three shows at a Borders bookstore," he said. "The gig sort of fell into my lap. Then, for a while, I played in a lot of coffee shops, bars and at festivals."

Since this beginning, Adcock and his music have progressed. He has been the recipient of many awards recognizing his musical ability. Music critics and fans in Cincinnati have voted Adcock the city's "Best Singer/Songwriter" and "Best Rock Vocalist." Adcock is also the only artist to be named one of WXOY's best bands five years in a row.

"WXOY is one of the last remaining independent radio stations... they are a great, cool radio station," Adcock said. "Every year they name their Top 20 artists and they got on board with my music right away in 1998. I never expect them to do it again, but every year they put me on the list."

In addition to these awards, Adcock has been recognized with gigs opening for many big-name acts such as John Mayer, Martin Sexton, The Samples, Ben Taylor, Miranda Stone and Michelle Malone.

"I get to open up for all these fun people. It's not really about what I'm doing, but it's good to be able to meet these people," he said.

Adcock also enjoys the people he meets while on the road. He performs an average of 200 days out of the year, a schedule that has taken him to 45 states. The touring lifestyle has become an integral part of Adcock's music.

"It's my favorite part of the job," Adcock said. "Just driving itself is very soothing... I like seeing the small and large towns, tourist traps and historical sites."

Adcock will make the University one more stop on this tour, playing at the 7th Street Café tonight. He will be performing original music—singing solo and accompanying himself on guitar.

"As far as the live show goes, it's just me and my guitar," Adcock said. "I tend to talk a lot between songs... especially if it's a good audience... I think that's what sets me apart from the average guy in the corner with a guitar."

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available
3091/05 1-6 bedrooms

Spring 14
Summer 14
Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

LBRYNWOOD

Rentals

Buffalo Bill's
TEX-MEX GRILLE & SALOON

Monday 5-9
Jumbo Hamburger & Fries
& Large Soda---$3.99

Tuesday 5-9
12 Jumbo Wings & Fries
& Soda---$3.99

Wednesday 5-9
Vegetarian Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price

Thursday 5-9
Mexican Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price

Lewisburg • 523-8900

JEFF CLARK VISITS UPTOWN

Jeff Clark '03 performed Saturday night at Uptown. Clark, who accompanies himself on guitar and keyboard, has been on a national tour since graduation.

"THE GLASS MENAGERIE" CAST SHINES

The Theatre and Dance Department, under the direction of Professor of Theatre Robert Gainer, charmed audiences Parents Weekend with an innovative performance of Tennessee Williams' "The Glass Menagerie."

WANTED: LEADERS/PILOTS
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER IN OUR COMPANY.
THIS COULD BE YOUR OFFICE.

Few people will ever set foot in an office like this. But then, few people have what it takes to be a Marine Officer. Officer Candidate School (OCS) is the first step towards preparing you for a future beyond anything you could imagine.

For more information contact us @:
1-800-544-2259
or osowb@aol.com

www.MarineOfficer.com

Attend a PAID INTERNSHIP during the summer in Quantico, VA
NO OBLIGATION
Unparalleled LEADERSHIP TRAINING
TUITION ASSISTANCE is available

FEATURES

Venice: an experience to remember

Deliciously expensive food, Turkish toilets and an unforgettable Venetian adventure

By MELINDA KUMMER
Senior Writer

The Vatican, "Mama Mia," spaghetti, the Mafia... these are the only things I used to associate with Italy. After spending five days of my mid-semester break in Venice, my experience has come to include Turkish toilets, overpriced glass and cones upon cones of gelato.

Those considering a Venetian adventure should take heed of my warnings and follow my advice for a nearly foolproof holiday.

The first bit of warning regards the timing of your trip. If your desire has always been to fight crowds on raised sidewalks slightly larger than tight ropes through St. Mark's Square, then a trip to Venice in October is ideal for you. Just remember the umbrella and be prepared for rain fiercer than the British variety.

Personally, I would recommend a warm spring or summer holiday when the temperature rises above seven degrees—well, it was never really that cold, but to my thin North American rain-soaked skin, I was convinced I had fallen asleep on the wrong plane and ended up in the Arctic.

I also realized I believe in splurging on holidays. A 10-day backpacking trip (first five days in Munich, second five in Venice), washing out underwear in a seedy hostel sink and never having enough money to buy wine left me dreaming of a Motel 8 as if it were the Four Seasons. A gaggle of pubescent French girls kept me tossing and turning throughout the night as they shrieked French rubbish about boys and fashion.

The Turkish toilets were a trip for my usually seat-pampered bottom, as well as a major workout for the thighs as crouching was as intense as a full set of squats on "Buns of Steel."

Quite honestly, it seemed absurd to me that I actually paid money for this slow and painful torture.

My budget, the cheapest of all, could not afford a glass of wine, even when I ate nothing but Chef Boyardee-tasting lasagna for dinner. Pizza and panini were plentiful for around three euros. But the three-euro charge for a can of Coca-Cola was a budget breaker.

After a long day of sightseeing and paying through the nose for lousy food, an 80-eurocent gelato was my only comfort (1.30 euro for a double scoop). I highly recommend the Tiramisu and chocolate flavor combination.

Masked figures parade through St. Mark's Square in the annual Venice Carnival. Tourists are drawn to Venice because of its memorable culture, cuisine and beautiful landscape.

Fearful that you might be convinced never to honor Venice with your presence, I must attest to the beauty of the quiet waters in the sunshine and the bright yellow buildings' contrasting lines of wash hung out to dry.

The serene moments of one street parallel all of the robust cheer usually associated with Italians on the next street. Language runs through your ears like rhythmic tides, and you cannot help but smile at every "Bon Giorno!" and "Ciao Bella!"

Though I did not seek out plates of spaghetti, kiss my fingertips and throw them in the air or let my imagination run wild when the priest at St. Mark's Cathedral sounded like "the Godfather," I also saw Italian children playing in a square and natives drive home from work in their little speed boats.

Through the rain and the tourists, bits of Italy shone through and brought a smile to a tired student in desperate need of a swallow of chianti.

Melinda Kummer is currently studying abroad in Bath, England. This article on her fall break excursion to Venice was originally printed in an English collegiate newspaper.

Underground wonder and wildlife at Penn's Cave

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Take a trip to the center of Pennsylvania, literally, by visiting Penn's Cave.

Penn's Cave is a spectacle. Throughout the tour, many formations resembling various objects and places are pointed out. These include the Statue of Liberty, Niagara Falls, chimes, a Chinese Buddha and Chiquita bananas—figures created by stalactites.

For $11, you can experience these formations in the cave that claims to be "the only all-water cavern in America," according to Penn's Cave tour guide, Justin Krebs.

A large boat takes visitors through the dark cavern, which is electrically lit for viewing.

"Along the limestone corridors, stalagmites, stalactite, flowstone cascades and draperies decorate the interior rooms," according to the cave's Web site.

Stalactites, which form from the ceiling down, are created by water dripping from the top of the cave. Droplets leave a mineral deposit each time they fall, creating a fascinating underground display.

These tiny droplets are only a small portion of the water that is vital to the cave.

"Eleven million gallons of water flow through the cave every 24 hours," Krebs said. It is this underground stream that allows visitors to view the stalactite displays via boat.

"It's interesting how some of them resemble other objects... the Statue of Liberty's flame and a lobster claw," Jessica Orsulak '05 said.

James Martin discovered the cave and all its formations in 1795. It was opened for tourism in 1885.

"They used push sticks and paddles to push the boats back then," Krebs said.

Despite this long-running history, not all areas of the cave have been explored. Visitors are told during the tour that there are still three rooms which only a few people have seen.

"There may be several rooms which are unexplored. One known room had only seven people.

This adds some mystery to the cave," Orsulak said.

In spite of this mystery, the cave's known past is nothing compared to its complete history of formation.

"Water dissolved the cave over 30 million years," Krebs said.

Pennsylvania limestone, common to this area, is soft and dissolves relatively easily.

It is because of this characteristic that caves are common in central Pa.—where you can also visit Indian Caverns, Woodward Cave and Lincoln Caverns.

The stalactite of Penn's Cave are said to resemble the Statue of Liberty's flame and Chiquita bananas as well as other distinctive objects. Penn's Cave offers a tour of these natural wonders in addition to a wildlife tour.

"There are also lots of other caves that farmers find on their land, but most of them are small and not tourable. A lot of farmers will blow the entrances to the caves shut so people can't get into them. You know how kids are," Krebs said.

Penn's Cave offers several attractions which make it stand out among these other caves. Not only is it a water cavern, but it also contains several other attractions on its premises to entertain visitors.

The Penn's Cave wildlife tour is home to a variety of animals.

"There are wild bison, longhorns and timber wolves that live with a kitty—a mountain lion," Krebs said.

This variety sets it apart and makes the experience well worth the 45-minute drive to the middle of Centre Hall, Pa.

What to do
in the middle
of NOWHERE

BIG Andy's BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials

Mon-Fri. 5-7 pm

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays—Monday Night Football on 50+ TVs $5 All You Can Eat Wings!

Tuesdays—All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm 8 pm Trivia Contest! Win $30 gift cert.!

Wednesdays—All You Can Eat Wings—$5!!! 10 pm-2 am—Live band in The Vault

Thursdays—All You Can Eat Steak—$12.99!!! 9 pm - 2 am—Karaoke Night!

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Fridays—All You Can Eat Crab - $18.99 Hip Hop DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am

Saturdays—Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm All Request DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am

Sundays—Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm 16+ Dance Club with Hip Hop DJ!

Now Hiring***

Wait Staff and Bartenders***

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.
Milton, PA
570-742-9211

Parties

Open Bowling

Mixers

Fundraisers

ROCK-N-BOWL

Hungry students stampede to the Bull Run Inn

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

RESTAURANT REVIEW

It's Thursday night, and you've got a desire for some sweet eats that the cafeteria simply cannot provide. McDonald's is not quite the dining experience you had in mind, and you just went to Bleu Plate last week. In such a situation, the Bull Run Inn, located on the corner of Market and Sixth Street's, may very well be the perfect establishment to satisfy your taste buds.

The environment of the Bull Run is semi-casual, entertaining guests interested in dining or those desiring a drink at the bar. The menu features a wide variety of dishes, including traditional burger and chicken sandwich selections to finer dining options like steak and salmon. A popular spot among University students, faculty and the local community, the Bull Run is a fun place to go on a date or with your favorite hallmates.

Though I've taken in the tastes of the Bull Run on multiple occasions, my most recent visit was Wednesday in the company of two of my favorite people. We were seated immediately and served by Andy, our friendly waiter, shortly afterward. The time we took deciding what to eat was long enough to irritate even the most patient of wait-staff, yet Andy remained pleasant while we scoured the extensive menu.

The Bull Run Inn offers a friendly atmosphere for dinner or a drink from the bar. With an extensive menu, it has become a favorite of University students and Lewisburg locals alike.

After much debate I decided to steer away from my normal selection of salmon in raspberry sauce, an absolutely delicious choice for anyone who fancies seafood, and opted for Steve's chicken sandwich. I'm not sure who Steve is, but his chicken sandwich, garnished with sundried tomatoes, mozzarella cheese, sautéed mushrooms and onions, hit the spot. It also helped meet my protein quota for the day, which so often gets neglected dining at the cafeteria. Complemented by some nice beer-battered French fries, it satiated my palate and filled my belly.

Merissa Levine '05, the most indecisive among us, decided on the barbecued chicken breasts accompanied by two sides—a dinner salad and the Pennsylvania Dutch favorite, sweet potato French fries.

"I think that the service was good, and the selection on the menu is extensive, but the quality of the food could be improved," Levine said.

The salad, complete with a healthy variety of vegetables, and French fries, were of a quality high enough for compliments, but the chicken breasts themselves left her longing for a little bit more.

The last member of our party, Erin Zimmerer '04, enjoyed one of her favorite Bull Run specialties, a chicken salad. This salad is unlike any other I've seen, as it comes topped with not only the obligatory vegetables, but also fried chicken strips and French fries. Topped with some delicious Italian dressing, it's like two meals in one. This certainly completed Zimmerer's night.

"I looooooove it," Zimmerer said.

The Bull Run offers more than just a good meal. Patrons of age can also enjoy a social drink at the bar, as many of the University's legal students often do.

"I think that the bar is a good place for people to go and have a good time, and it is very reasonably priced, and the service is good. It tends to be the one bar that people go to on Market Street the most," Levine said.

Next time you fancy a bite to eat, take a little stroll down Sixth Street and sample the menu at the Bull Run. There's something for everyone, and though satisfaction is not guaranteed, it's highly likely.

John Morgan dishes it out about caf and food quality

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Enter Bostwick Cafeteria on any given day and you're bound to see him. He'll be talking to students, scanning the room to make sure everything is running smoothly and directing his army of dining-service workers. Meet John Morgan. His official title is Dining Service team leader, and he'll do just about anything for you to improve your dining experience.

Morgan takes his job very seriously, but after talking with him it becomes apparent that he also genuinely enjoys his job and the relationships he forms with students.

"Bottom line, they are why we are here," Morgan said. He compares his job to an anthropological study where he gets to oversee the constantly changing culture and attitudes of students.

Recently, I sat down with Mr. Morgan to find out more about his job, the Bostwick Cafeteria and the students that frequent the "caf."

Bucknellian: What are your primary job responsibilities?

Morgan: Managing all aspects of the front of the house in the caf and interviewing and hiring high school and college students.

Bucknellian: What is the biggest challenge you have with your job?

Morgan: Providing good customer service at all times and trying to keep things running as smooth as possible during meal periods.

Bucknellian: The layout of the cafeteria has changed significantly in the last few years with the renovation, but do you believe the quality of food has also improved?

Morgan: Absolutely! Our culinary staff of chefs, cooks and preparatory workers go through great pains to consistently provide a quality product to our customer whether it be temperature readings at regular intervals or product appearance.

Bucknellian: What area do you feel the caf has improved the most upon since the renovation?

Morgan: I feel we've not only offered more options in the way of variety, but due to the renovation, we've opened things up. We don't seem to be experiencing the congestion during meal periods that we did in the old caf.

Bucknellian: How do you respond to students who complain that there isn't anything good to eat in the cafeteria?

Morgan: Without sounding facetious, I'd first like to know what planet they'd been dining on prior to coming to Bucknell. Frankly, if you can't find it here, you don't want it.

However, if there would truly be that faction out there that is not satisfied, I would strongly suggest our comment cards that are always available at the uphill and downhill registers. I would strongly encourage our students to fill these out. Their comments and concerns do not fall on deaf ears. I have not ever seen a legitimate request denied.

Bucknellian: What are the most significant issues or possible problems that you feel most students are unaware of when they walk through the doors of the cafeteria?

Morgan: There's a lot of hard work that goes on behind the scenes. If an employee makes their job look easy, they're doing a great job.

Bucknellian: What type of things surprise you that students don't know—things that they should probably know?

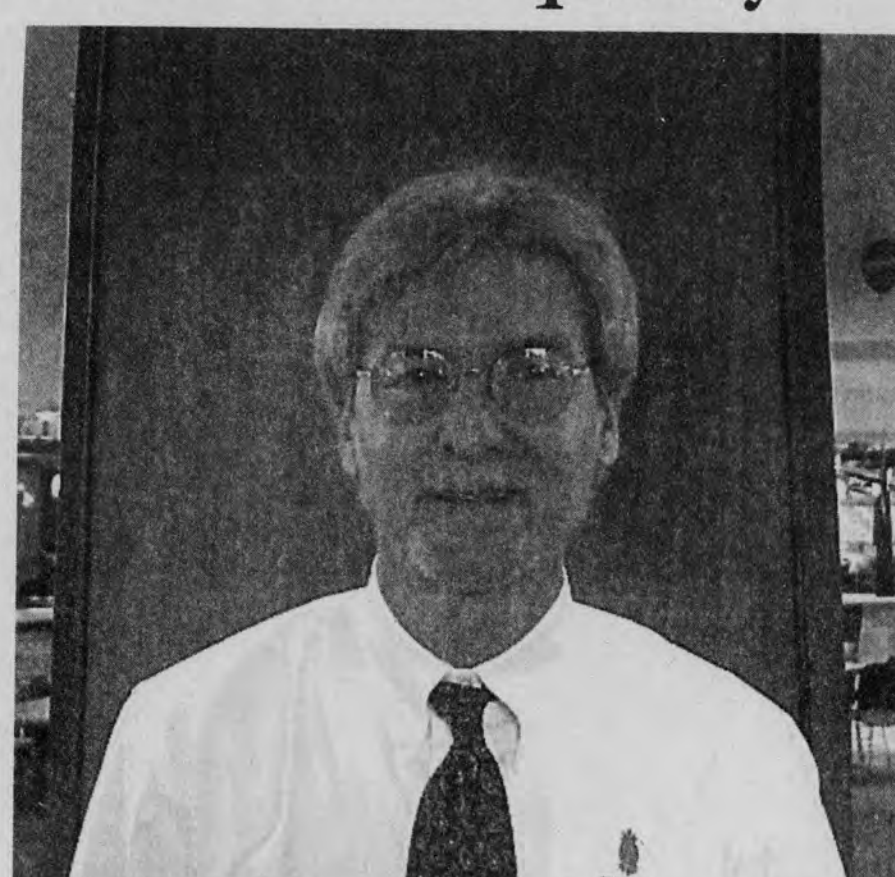

Morgan: Our closing times and what they can and cannot take with them when they leave.

Bucknellian: How, if in any way, has student cafeteria behavior changed as you've been at the University?

Morgan: I truly believe the behavior and attitude of the students has been positive. This was especially noticed with the upperclassmen after the renovation. [For] first-year students coming in, it was all new to them anyway. The real impact was on the students returning after experiencing what the old caf was like.

Bucknellian: What type of behavior characteristics have you noticed from your informal "anthropological study"?

Morgan: Freshmen get that deer-in-headlights look during the first time they enter the cafeteria every year. The typical student is a pasta person. This particular class is extremely nice and well-behaved, but they are latecomers; 6:15 is the hit time now, much later than previous years. One year we had a class that was extremely sloppy, food everywhere, and I mean everywhere. Four to five years ago, the class had a feeling of entitlement, "you owe me." One class wanted cheddar cheese soup everyday. They each have their own signature. This class is a genuine pleasure.

John Morgan, the Dining Service team leader, works hard to keep the appetites of University students satisfied. He is a face recognizable to most students who frequent the cafeteria.

Bucknellian: Finally, are you aware of the fact that students have dubbed you as "P-jacks" or "Phil Jackson" for your uncanny resemblance to the Lakers head coach Phil Jackson? What do you think of this?

Morgan: Since I've retired from coaching, this is what I do now for a living. GO BISON!!

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro

Come see what's new and exciting. Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts

August 24th
11:00 AM to 2:00 PM

412 Market St. Lewisburg
570-523-8088
www.elizabethsbistro.com

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions
by trauman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts

800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!

GOOD ON ANY APPAREL

ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

FREE BEER
is awesome, but did you know that...

COOL SHIRT, HANSEL
(a MGMT 101 Company)
We'll be selling these t-shirts:

Nov. 7-13

LC Mall or Library

BUCKNELL

TRULY REALLY RESEARCHABLE GOOD DRINKS

*no alcoholic beverages are actually available

FEATURES

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Deborah Wilson, secretary of the Women's Resource Center, and Gretchen Heuges, Craft Center coordinator, assist students in preparing the University's tribute panel. Panels from the NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt will be on display in celebration of World AIDS Day.

Stitching together memories

The NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt to be displayed in Samek Art Gallery

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

The NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt, conceived by gay-rights activist Cleve Jones in the wake of the 1978 Harvey Milk assassination, will be coming to the University Dec. 1-10. It gives people an opportunity to remember the more than 21.8 million people who have died of AIDS since documentation of the epidemic began.

"The quilt was originally designed to heal and open the eyes of people in San Francisco who were ignoring the [AIDS] problem," said Janece Shaffer, director of communications for the NAMES Project. "Cleave Jones hung posters bearing the names of victims on the old federal building and it reminded him of a quilt."

Seeing the quilt, which has grown from a few insignificant panels into more than 44,000 individual 3' by 6' squares in the 25 years since its beginning, can be one of the most powerful reminders of the AIDS virus's effect on society.

"Today there are around 23 NAMES Project chapters in the United States and 46 independent Quilt affiliates around the world. Since 1987, over 14 million people have visited the quilt at thousands of displays worldwide," according to the NAMES Project Web site.

Three years ago I was given the opportunity to see the quilt at Moravian College, and it was by far one of the most moving experiences of my life. All day, volunteers read names of those who have died of AIDS, creating a somber soundtrack as I walked up and down rows upon rows of squares telling the stories of lost loved ones. Tissue boxes—most already empty—were found at every corner, and almost every person you saw was crying, whether in memory of a lover or friend or from the immense loss represented in the squares.

"No matter who you are, you can see yourself somewhere in the quilt."

—Janece Shaffer, director of communications for the NAMES project

"I personally don't know anyone with AIDS, but seeing the parts of the quilt and how personal they are is really moving. Kids made patches for their moms and dads who died, which I think was the hardest thing for me to see," said Andrea Schumann, a student at George Washington University.

University students are offered even more than just the opportunity to see the quilt. Students and faculty were invited to create their own squares to be added to the quilt last weekend at the Craft Center. Whether in honor of a loved one or simply to show support in the quest for a cure, it was an opportunity to contribute to something huge. In addition, Gretchen Heuges, the Craft Center coordinator, and Deborah Wilson, the secretary of the Women's Resource Center, have begun a panel to represent the University.

"This will be ongoing for students to see, jump in and help," Heuges said. "There'll be work to be done for all different levels of talent. And if students wanted to design a panel specifically for someone they know, we'll help them lay it out."

When the quilt arrives at the University, returning for a second time after its first visit four years ago, it will not be in its entirety.

"We're like a lending library, bringing blocks of the quilt to different institutions at their request. The blocks brought are specially designed to touch the community they will be visiting," Shaffer said.

Of the 20 panels being shown, three or four will be hung in the Weis Center while the rest will be displayed in the Samek Art Gallery during its normal hours. Seven of the panels were specifically requested by University faculty and staff.

"When [the quilt] was here before, it was so somber, very overwhelming," Wilson said. As the quilt has grown, its size has become too staggering to bring all the panels together often. Several times Washington, D.C. has proudly welcomed the entire quilt to thousands of visitors.

"The Washington, D.C. displays of October 1987, 1988, 1989, 1992 and 1996 are the only ones to have featured the quilt in its entirety. The last display of the entire AIDS Memorial Quilt was in October of 1996. The quilt covered the entire National Mall in Washington, D.C.," according to the NAMES project Web site.

The quilt will arrive at the University on Dec. 1, World AIDS Day, and be on display until Dec. 10. Events will be taking place throughout the duration of the display. Names of AIDS victims will be read by student and faculty volunteers during all hours of the display. A few panels in disrepair will be brought to campus Nov. 21-22, and students will be given an opportunity to mend them.

Those involved hope that all University students and faculty will take some time to see the quilt and reflect on the pandemic that has and is continuing to disrupt the world.

"No matter who you are, you can see yourself somewhere in the quilt. The quilt was designed as a way to get people to recognize the AIDS epidemic, in hopes that it would eventually lead to a cure. In the absence of a cure, it is a tremendous tool of healing and education," Shaffer said.

Another titillating edition brought to you by ...

Ms.

Sex and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

Do you have any advice on how to tell if someone is cheating on you? I don't know why, but I just have this feeling that my boyfriend is not being entirely faithful to me, and it is driving me crazy. Any advice you could pass on to me would be much appreciated.

-L

Dear 'L,'

This is one of the more complicated questions that I have had to answer. It can be extremely difficult to tell for sure if someone is actually cheating on you unless you have caught them in the act. If it is proof that you are looking for, you may not be able to find any. I can however offer you some tips that might help you get to the bottom of this.

First of all, I wonder exactly what made you suspicious. Is what you are feeling simply instinctive, telling you that something is wrong, or are you just being swayed by idle rumors? Pinpointing the source of your uneasiness and distrust may be the best clue as to whether or not your boyfriend is a cheat. Ms. O is very much a proponent of listening to what your body and mind are telling you. If you really feel deep down for some unknown yet persistently strong reason that your boyfriend is cheating, then in Ms. O's opinion, there is only one thing to do. You must talk to your boyfriend, in a very non-confrontational way, and tell him how you are feeling. It is never wrong to listen to your instincts.

Approach your boyfriend very calmly and try to keep accusation out of your voice and body language before you hear what he has to say. You do not want to put him on the defensive or he will not feel that he can be honest and open with you. You also don't want to offend him if he is being faithful to you. Have a talk with him. Hear what he has to say. Based on what he says and how he reacts to the topic you are going to have to decide whether or not you trust him. If you feel that he is telling you the truth and that he is not cheating on you, then it is not wrong to stay together. If you still feel deep down that he may be lying or that he is cheating, then I would advise you to move on. If you don't have trust in a relationship, then you have none.

Without more information about your specific situation, it is difficult to tell you more, but I would definitely confront the situation by talking to your boyfriend about what you are feeling. Please feel free to send me another e-mail with either an update or with more specifics, and I will be able to give you some more information and advice. In the meantime, good luck and always remember to listen to what your instincts are telling you!

-Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What is the worst line to use during a breakup?

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Comedy Improv Troupe
"We Brake for Nobody"
performed in the Vaughan
Lit. Auditorium over
Parents Weekend. Both
shows featured new members who added to the group's hilarity.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

November 14, 2003

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Students give BSG an approval rating of 49%

Approval rating has increased by eight percent from last year's poll

By MICHELLE DOMBECK
Associate Editor

In a recent Bucknellian poll, the approval rating of Bucknell Student Government (BSG) was determined to be 49 percent. The approval rating is based on the impact students perceive BSG has had on their experience so far at the University.

This is an eight percent increase from last year's BSG approval rating of 41 percent.

Students involved in student organizations, excluding varsity sports, gave a very similar approval rating (50 percent) to the overall student body.

What's BSG?

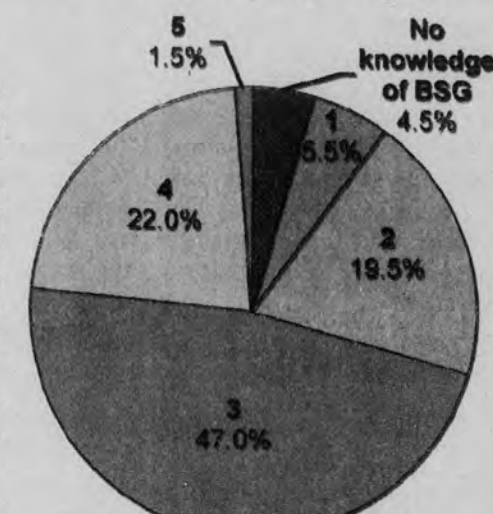

On a five-point scale, approximately 47 percent of students gave BSG a neutral rating of three. Six percent of the student body reported that it did not even know what BSG was.

"It'd be nice for [BSG] to have a more physical presence. Sometimes we'll get an e-mail [from them] all of a sudden, but other than that they're invisible," Edward Stonehill '07 said.

Class of 2005

President John Siwicki '05 expressed concern about the approval ratings.

"I am surprised that they remain below 50 percent, especially considering the substantial strides we have made this past year, though I think some students may not attribute the improvements directly to BSG," Siwicki said.

Students were asked: "On scale from 1 to 5, how would you rate would rate BSG's impact on your experience so far at Bucknell? 1 is worthless and a waste of time and 5 is very helpful and influential."

See BSG page A3

Search committee to process applications

By SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

The Presidential Search Committee announced the completion of the University's Institutional Profile on Monday. With the profile in place, the search committee will begin processing applications with the goal of selecting the sixteenth president of the University by March 2004.

"The profile describes the distinctive features of Bucknell, some leadership priorities for the University and a list of attributes that the search committee will be seeking in our next chief executive officer," said Jerry Rackoff, director of institutional research & assessment and on-campus coordinator for the Presidential Search committee.

According to Presidential

Search Committee Chair Norman E. Garrity '63 the profile is often mistaken for a strategic plan, but Garrity described it as a "matchmaking tool" for prospective applicants.

"The profile is a recruiting tool," Garrity said. "It is tries to be more persuasive with the candidates to help them decide if they fit the University."

The Board of Trustees commissioned the Presidential Search Committee after the retirement announcement of University President Steffen H. Rogers in May. Jamie Ferrare of the Academic Search Consultation Service (ASCS) was then hired by the committee to assist in the president recruitment process.

Ferrare and ASCS compiled and drafted the information for

See SEARCH page A5

Faculty pushes for decreased course-load

By KIM DUNLAP
Writer

The University faculty is attempting to decrease the courseloads of professors.

Instead of teaching three courses during the fall semester and three during spring semester, professors want to teach three courses one semester and two courses the other semester per school year.

This change has been a long-time faculty goal.

"A motion was put forth to do a faculty study," Associate Professor of Psychology David Evans said.

When a plan was presented by the administration to the faculty last December that outlined possible scenarios for the course load change, it received overwhelming support.

"The entire faculty voted to request a 3-2 teaching load," University president Steffen Rogers said. "The support was unanimous."

Members of the faculty said they emphasize that this switch is not being made to grant professors more leisure time.

"It's not about work-load," Faculty Chair and Professor of English Michael Payne said. "What the course load issue is about is the kind of teaching we can offer ... which comes down to student access to their teachers."

Lessening professors' course assignments would free up much of their time to meet one-on-one with students, making for a more enriching academic environment.

See COURSES page A3

LUNAR ECLIPSE WOWS CAMPUS

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

At approximately 8:05 p.m. Saturday night, a lunar eclipse was visible to most of North America. An eclipse of the moon can only occur at a full moon, and only if the moon passes through some portion of the Earth's shadow.

Bucknellian Editorials

BSG openings fail to attract many candidates, leaving students with few choices. Whom should they choose, and why are so few students interested in BSG?

See page A6

Patriot League Men's Soccer

The men's soccer team hosts the Patriot League Championship this weekend. Last week, the team tied Holy Cross to end the conference season undefeated.

See page B1

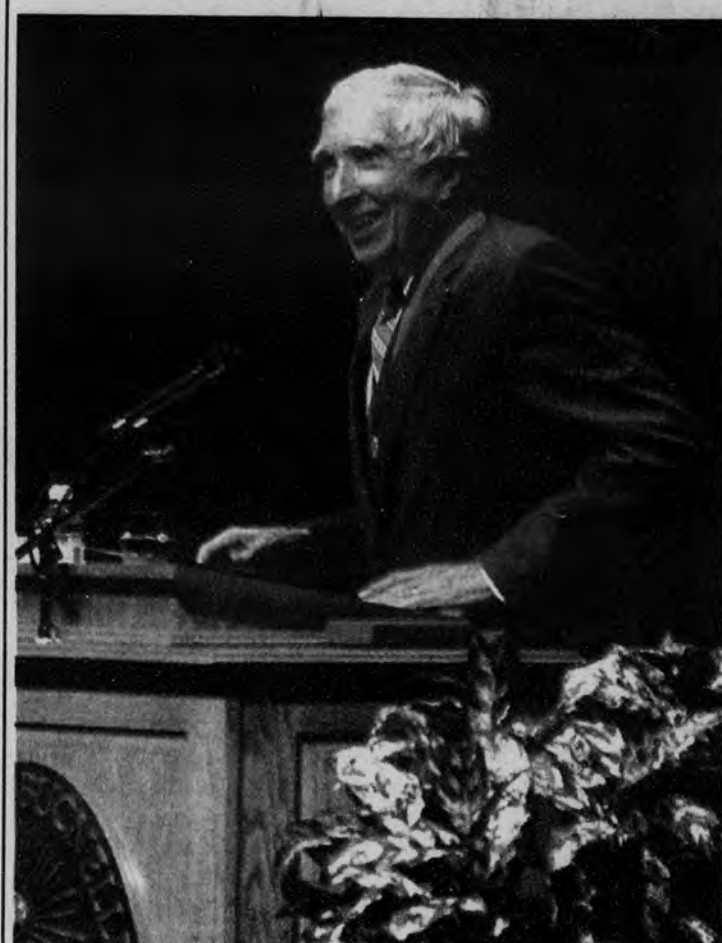

inside Volume 132, Number 10

Business & Politics:

BSG executive debates draw little interest.

See page B10

Updike honored as Weis Fellow

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

Pulitzer Prize winning-author John Updike received the Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters. Updike addressed the campus Tuesday in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

By BRIANNA EVANS
Writer

Two-time Pulitzer Prize-winning author John Updike received the Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters Award Tuesday. His speech focused on his fond memories of his childhood in Pennsylvania.

"John Updike is one of the greatest writers to come to Bucknell," Professor of English John Rickard said. "He is one of the leading American writers in all areas. I can't think of anyone who better embodies this award."

The award was established through a generous grant from the Degenstein Foundation in honor of Janet Weis. The Weis family has been a supporter of the University for many years and with the grant, chose to honor an important benefactor. Literature was chosen as the theme of the award because literature is a personal favorite of Janet Weis.

The award is made annually to recognize an individual of the very highest level of achievement in the craft of writing within the realms of fiction, non-fiction or biography. Each recipient of this fellowship will be, and has been, an author whose work has been accessible to a wide audience and has received broad public recognition and appreciation.

The main purpose of the award, aside from honoring a great writer, is to give the students and faculty of the University a chance to gain access to authors with whom they may never otherwise make contact.

Novelist Toni Morrison was the first recipient of the award in 2002.

Like Updike, she gave a lecture open to students, staff and the public.

See UPDIKE page A2

New student IDs to replace use of SSN

By JULIE LESKO
Writer

The University has begun a project to eliminate the use of Social Security numbers as the primary identification numbers used for all members of the campus community by fall 2004.

The use of Social Security numbers as primary identification can be problematic due to the sensitivity of the confidential information and the potential for identity theft. "In response to growing concerns about breach of confidentiality and potential identity theft, we have initiated a project that eventually will eliminate the use of Social Security numbers as the primary identification numbers used for faculty, staff and other constituencies," said Kurt Thiede, vice president for enrollment management.

The University Codes and Standards Team, which is currently addressing this issue, is responsible for research and implementation of the final conversion to the new eight-digit ID numbers. The team is looking at all areas that will be affected by the conversion.

Director of Financial Services Kathy Guyer said she believes Social Security numbers will continue to be used for the purposes of financial aid, taxation, retirement accounts and federal and state reporting.

See ID page A5

Restaurant Review: Arizona Cafe

Although Arizona Cafe's exterior may look unassuming, the inside presents a festive atmosphere and delicious Mexican Cuisine.

See page A10

FEATURES

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Deborah Wilson, secretary of the Women's Resource Center, and Gretchen Heuges, Craft Center coordinator, assist students in preparing the University's tribute panel. Panels from the NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt will be on display in celebration of World AIDS Day.

Stitching together memories

The NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt to be displayed in Samek Art Gallery

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

The NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt, conceived by gay-rights activist Cleve Jones in the wake of the 1978 Harvey Milk assassination, will be coming to the University Dec. 1-10. It gives people an opportunity to remember the more than 21.8 million people who have died of AIDS since documentation of the epidemic began.

"The quilt was originally designed to heal and open the eyes of people in San Francisco who were ignoring the [AIDS] problem," said Janice Shaffer, director of communications for the NAMES Project. "Cleve Jones hung posters bearing the names of victims on the old federal building and it reminded him of a quilt."

Seeing the quilt, which has grown from a few insignificant panels into more than 44,000 individual 3' by 6' squares in the 25 years since its beginning, can be one of the most powerful reminders of the AIDS virus's effect on society.

"Today there are around 23 NAMES Project chapters in the United States and 46 independent Quilt affiliates around the world. Since 1987, over 14 million people have visited the quilt at thousands of displays worldwide," according to the NAMES Project Web site.

Three years ago I was given the opportunity to see the quilt at Moravian College, and it was by far one of the most moving experiences of my life. All day, volunteers read names of those who have died of AIDS, creating a somber soundtrack as I walked up and down rows upon rows of squares telling the stories of lost loved ones. Tissue boxes—most already empty—were found at every corner, and almost every person you saw was crying, whether in memory of a lover or friend or from the immense loss represented in the squares.

In addition, Gretchen Heuges, the Craft Center coordinator, and Deborah Wilson, the secretary of the Women's Resource Center, have begun a panel to represent the University.

"This will be ongoing for students to see, jump in and help," Heuges said. "There'll be work to be done for all different levels of talent. And if students wanted to design a panel specifically for someone they know, we'll help them lay it out."

"No matter who you are, you can see yourself somewhere in the quilt."

—Janice Shaffer, director of communications for the NAMES project

"I personally don't know anyone with AIDS, but seeing the parts of the quilt and how personal they are is really moving. Kids made patches for their moms and dads who died, which I think was the hardest thing for me to see," said Andrea Schumann, a student at George Washington University.

University students are offered even more than just the opportunity to see the quilt. Students and faculty were invited to create their own squares to be added to the quilt last weekend at the Craft Center. Whether in honor of a loved one or simply to show support in the quest for a cure, it was an opportunity to contribute to something huge. In addition, Gretchen Heuges, the Craft Center coordinator, and Deborah Wilson, the secretary of the Women's Resource Center, have begun a panel to represent the University.

When the quilt arrives at the University, returning for a second time after its first visit four years ago, it will not be in its entirety.

"We're like a lending library, bringing blocks of the quilt to different institutions at their request. The blocks brought are specially designed to touch the community they will be visiting," Shaffer said.

Of the 20 panels being shown, three or four will be hung in the Weis Center while the rest will be displayed in the Samek Art Gallery during its normal hours. Seven of the panels were specifically requested by University faculty and staff.

"When [the quilt] was here before, it was so somber, very overwhelming," Wilson said. As the quilt has grown, its size has become too staggering to bring all the panels together often. Several times Washington, D.C. has proudly welcomed the entire quilt to thousands of visitors.

"The Washington, D.C. displays of October 1987, 1988, 1989, 1992 and 1996 are the only ones to have featured the quilt in its entirety. The last display of the entire AIDS Memorial Quilt was in October of 1996. The quilt covered the entire National Mall in Washington, D.C.," according to the NAMES Project Web site.

The quilt will arrive at the University on Dec. 1, World AIDS Day, and be on display until Dec. 10. Events will be taking place throughout the duration of the display. Names of AIDS victims will be read by student and faculty volunteers during all hours of the display. A few panels in disrepair will be brought to campus Nov. 21-22, and students will be given an opportunity to mend them.

Those involved hope that all University students and faculty will take some time to see the quilt and reflect on the pandemic that has and is continuing to disrupt the world.

"No matter who you are, you can see yourself somewhere in the quilt. The quilt was designed as a way to get people to recognize the AIDS epidemic, in hopes that it would eventually lead to a cure. In the absence of a cure, it is a tremendous tool of healing and education," Shaffer said.

Another titillating edition brought to you by ...

Ms.

Sex and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

Do you have any advice on how to tell if someone is cheating on you? I don't know why, but I just have this feeling that my boyfriend is not being entirely faithful to me, and it is driving me crazy. Any advice you could pass on to me would be much appreciated.

-L'

Dear 'L',

This is one of the more complicated questions that I have had to answer. It can be extremely difficult to tell for sure if someone is actually cheating on you unless you have caught them in the act. If it is proof that you are looking for, you may not be able to find any. I can however offer you some tips that might help you get to the bottom of this.

First of all, I wonder exactly what made you suspicious. Did you hear rumors? Did you find a note from someone else? I am wondering about the source of your suspicion. Is what you are feeling simply instinctive, telling you that something is wrong, or are you just being swayed by idle rumors? Pinpointing the source of your suspicion is important. If you really feel deep down for some unknown yet persistently strong reason that your boyfriend is cheating, then in Ms. O's opinion, there is only one thing to do. You must talk to your boyfriend, in a very non-confrontational way, and tell him how you are feeling. It is never wrong to listen to your instincts.

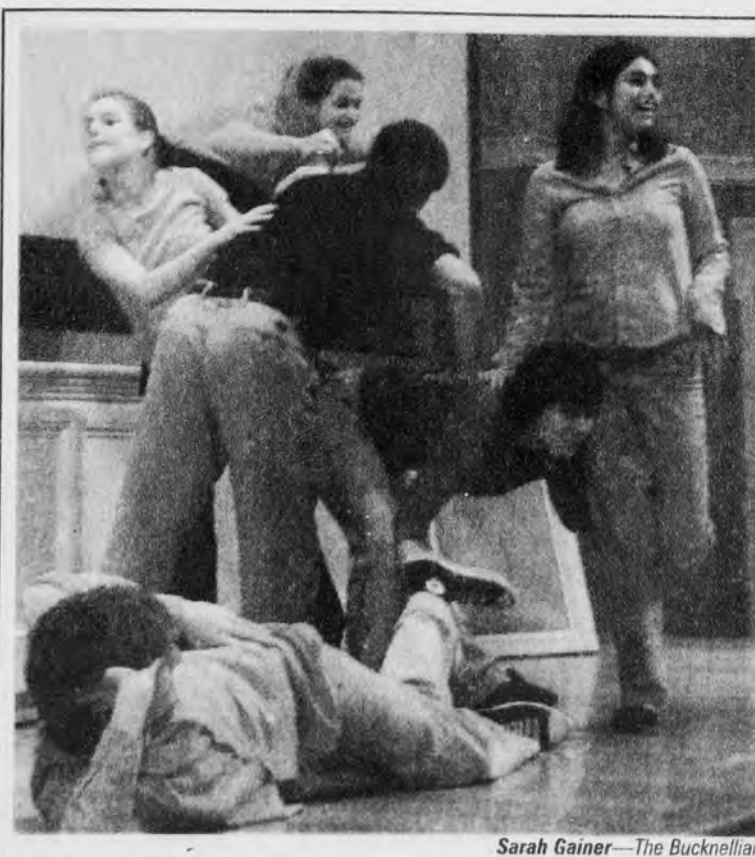

Approach your boyfriend very calmly and try to keep accusation out of your voice and body language before you hear what he has to say. You do not want to put him on the defensive or he will not feel that he can be honest and open with you. You also don't want to offend him if he is being faithful to you. Have a talk with him. Hear what he has to say. Based on what he says and how he reacts to the topic you are going to have to decide whether or not you trust him. If you still feel deep down that he is not cheating on you, then it is not wrong to stay together. If you still feel deep down that he may be lying or that he is cheating, then I would advise you to move on. If you don't have trust in a relationship, then you have nothing.

Without more information about your specific situation, it is difficult to tell you more, but I would definitely confront the situation by talking to your boyfriend about what you are feeling. Please feel free to send me another e-mail with either an update or with more specifics, and I will be able to give you some more information and advice. In the meantime, good luck and always remember to listen to what your instincts are telling you!

-Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!
What is the worst line to use during a breakup?

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Comedy Improv Troupe
"We Brake for Nobody"
performed in the Vaughan
Lit. Auditorium over
Parents Weekend. Both
shows featured new members who added to
the group's hilarity.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

November 14, 2003

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Students give BSG an approval rating of 49%

Approval rating has increased by eight percent from last year's poll

By MICHELLE DOMBECK
Associate Editor

In a recent Bucknellian poll, the approval rating of Bucknell Student Government (BSG) was determined to be 49 percent. The approval rating is based on the impact students perceive BSG has had on their experience so far at the University.

This is an eight percent increase from last year's BSG approval rating of 41 percent.

Students involved in student organizations, excluding varsity sports, gave a very similar approval rating (50 percent) to the overall student body.

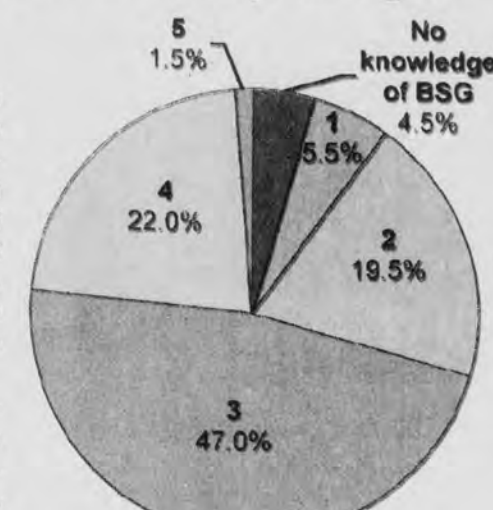

What's BSG?

On a five-point scale, approximately 47 percent of students gave BSG a neutral rating of three. Six percent of the student body reported that it did not even know what BSG was.

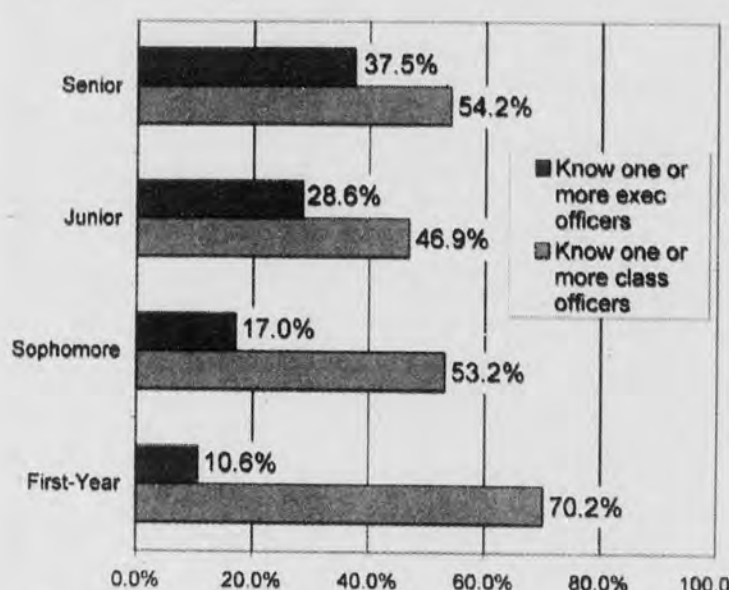

"It'd be nice for [BSG] to have a more physical presence. Sometimes we'll get an e-mail [from them] all of a sudden, but other than that they're invisible," Edward Stonehill '07 said.

Class of 2005 President John Siwicki '05 expressed concern about the approval ratings.

"I am surprised that they remain below 50 percent, especially considering the substantial strides we have made this past year, though I think some students may not attribute the improvements directly to BSG," Siwicki said.

Students were asked: "On scale from 1 to 5, how would you rate would rate BSG's impact on your experience so far at Bucknell? 1 is worthless and a waste of time and 5 is very helpful and influential."

See BSG page A3

Search committee to process applications

By SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

The Presidential Search Committee announced the completion of the University's Institutional Profile on Monday. With the profile in place, the search committee will begin processing applications with the goal of selecting the sixteenth president of the University by March 2004.

"The profile describes the distinctive features of Bucknell, some leadership priorities for the University and a list of attributes that the search committee will be seeking in our next chief executive officer," said Jerry Rackoff, director of institutional research & assessment and on-campus coordinator for the Presidential Search committee.

According to Presidential

Search Committee Chair Norman E. Garrity '63 the profile is often mistaken for a strategic plan, but Garrity described it as a "matchmaking tool" for prospective applicants.

"The profile is a recruiting tool," Garrity said. "It is tries to be more persuasive with the candidates to help them decide if they fit the University."

The Board of Trustees commissioned the Presidential Search Committee after the retirement announcement of University President Steffen H. Rogers in May. Jamie Ferrare of the Academic Search Consultation Service (ASCS) was then hired by the committee to assist in the president recruitment process.

Ferrare and ASCS compiled and drafted the information for

See SEARCH page A5

Faculty pushes for decreased course-load

By KIM DUNLAP
Writer

The University faculty is attempting to decrease the courseloads of professors. Instead of teaching three courses during the fall semester and three during spring semester, professors want to teach three courses one semester and two courses the other semester per school year.

This change has been a long-time faculty goal.

"A motion was put forth to do a faculty study," Associate Professor of Psychology David Evans said.

When a plan was presented by the administration to the faculty last December that outlined possible scenarios for the course load change, it received overwhelming support.

"The entire faculty voted to request a 3-2 teaching load," University president Steffen Rogers said. "The support was unanimous."

Members of the faculty said they emphasize that this switch is not being made to grant professors more leisure time.

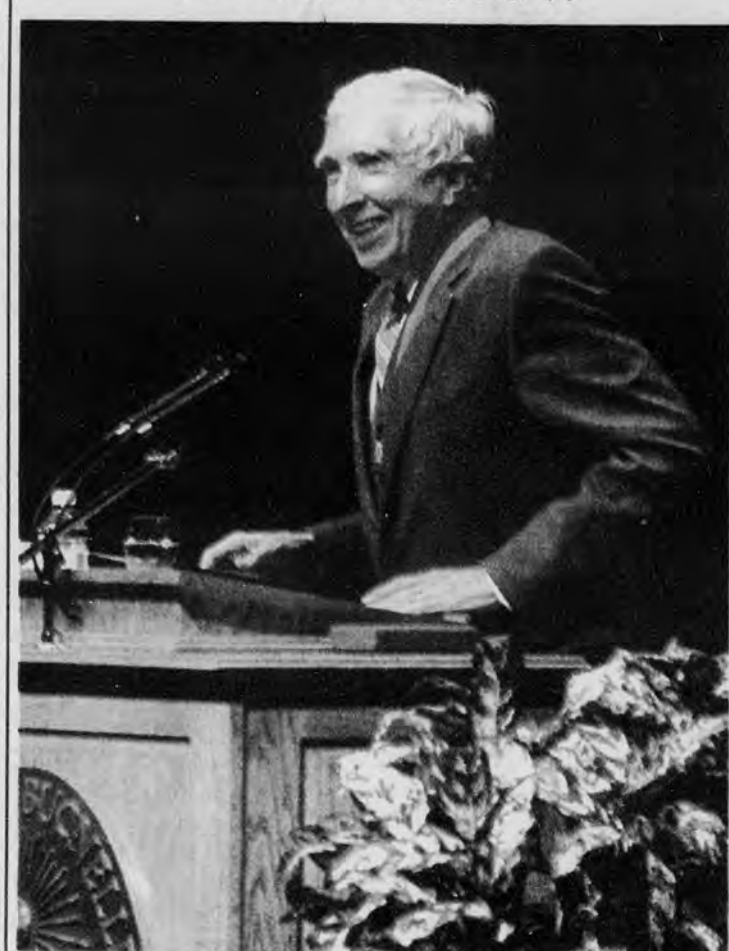

"It's not about work-load," Faculty Chair and Professor of English Michael Payne said. "What the course load issue is about is the kind of teaching we can offer ... which comes down to student access to their teachers."

Lessening professors' course assignments would free up much of their time to meet one-on-one with students, making for a more enriching academic environment.

See COURSES page A3

inside Volume 132, Number 10
Business & Politics:
BSG executive debates draw little interest.
See page B10

Updike honored as Weis Fellow

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

Pulitzer Prize-winning author John Updike received the Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters. Updike addressed the campus Tuesday in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

By BRIANNA EVANS
Writer

Two-time Pulitzer Prize-winning author John Updike received the Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters Award Tuesday. His speech focused on his fond memories of his childhood in Pennsylvania.

"John Updike is one of the greatest writers to come to Bucknell," Professor of English John Rickard said. "He is one of the leading American writers in all areas. I can't think of anyone who better embodies this award."

The award was established through a generous grant from the Degenstein Foundation in honor of Janet Weis. The Weis family has been a supporter of the University for many years and with the grant, chose to honor an important benefactor. Literature was chosen as the theme of the award because literature is a personal favorite of Janet Weis.

The award is made annually to recognize an individual of the very highest level of achievement in the craft of writing within the realms of fiction, non-fiction or biography. Each recipient of this fellowship will be, and has been, an author whose work has been accessible to a wide audience and has received broad public recognition and appreciation.

The main purpose of the award, aside from honoring a great writer, is to give the students and faculty of the University a chance to gain access to authors with whom they may never otherwise make contact.

Novelist Toni Morrison was the first recipient of the award in 2002. Like Updike, she gave a lecture open to students, staff and the public.

See UPDIKE page A2

New student IDs to replace use of SSN

By JULIE LESKO
Writer

The University has begun a project to eliminate the use of Social Security numbers as the primary identification numbers used for all members of the campus community by fall 2004.

The use of Social Security numbers as primary identification can be problematic due to the sensitivity of the confidential information and the potential for identity theft.

In response to growing concerns about breach of confidentiality and potential identity theft, we have initiated a project that eventually will eliminate the use of Social Security numbers as the primary identification numbers used for faculty, staff and other constituencies," said Kurt Thiede, vice president for enrollment management.

The University Codes and Standards Team, which is currently addressing this issue, is responsible for research and implementation of the final conversion to the new eight-digit ID numbers. The team is looking at all areas that will be affected by the conversion.

Director of Financial Services Kathy Guyer said she believes Social Security numbers will continue to be used for the purposes of financial aid, taxation, retirement accounts and federal and state reporting.

See ID page A5

LUNAR ECLIPSE WOWS CAMPUS

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

At approximately 8:05 p.m. Saturday night, a lunar eclipse was visible to most of North America. An eclipse of the moon can only occur at a full moon, and only if the moon passes through some portion of the Earth's shadow.

Bucknellian Editorial

BSG openings fail to attract many candidates, leaving students with few choices. Whom should they choose, and why are so few students interested in BSG?

See page A6

Patriot League Men's Soccer

See page B1

The men's soccer team hosts the Patriot League Championship this weekend. Last week, the team tied Holy Cross to end the conference season undefeated.

Restaurant Review: Arizona Cafe

Although Arizona Cafe's exterior may look unassuming, the inside presents a festive atmosphere and delicious Mexican Cuisine.

See page A10

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Nov. 2

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / FRATERNITY ALCOHOL VIOLATION—While conducting a party check at Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity, Public Safety observed a female consuming alcohol without a wristband. While getting positive identification at her Swartz Hall room, Public Safety found alcohol bottles. She was identified as being a student under the age of 21. She was cited for underage consumption and alcohol in the room of an underage person. The fraternity was cited for serving a minor.

TRESPASSING—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a suspicious male. Upon further investigation, the male was found to be a former student who was not allowed on campus. Lewisburg Police Department responded and transported the male off campus. Citations were issued for criminal trespass.

Monday, Nov. 3

FOUND PROPERTY—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed an unattended, unlocked bicycle on the walkway of Tustin Gym. The bicycle was returned to Public Safety for storage until it is claimed.

ASSIST POLICE / VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to South 6th & Street and George Street for the report of a motor vehicle accident. There were no injuries and only minor vehicle damage.

Tuesday, Nov. 4

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report that unknown person(s) had broken a window. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION—An employee reported to Public Safety that a third party had contacted her and advised her that a student had injured a roommate who was seeking medical treatment at the hospital. A University official was notified and will contact the students.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to McDonnell hall for the report of a student having difficulty breathing. The individual was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

Wednesday, Nov. 5

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a throat infection. A Student Health Services driver transported the student who later returned to campus.

INFORMATION / MISSING FIRE EXTINGUISHER—An employee reported to Public Safety that a fire extinguisher was missing from Dana Engineering building. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area.

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATIONS—A student reported to Public Safety that she had been receiving numerous harassing phone calls in her room at Carey House from an unknown person. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / HARASSMENT—A University official reported to Public Safety that a male student was harassing a female student by knocking on her door on a regular basis. The official witnessed the behavior and spoke with the male advising him to have no further contact with the female. The female requested that no charges be filed at this time.

ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION) / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While locking Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity exterior doors, Public Safety observed two males carrying beer cans. Upon further investigation, Public Safety found two other students with a drug pipe and part of a gravity bong, along with empty beer cans in the trash can and more beer in the refrigerator of a room. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. Citations were issued for possession of drug paraphernalia, underage consumption, possession of a controlled substance, presence of alcohol in the room of an underage person, possession of an open container of alcohol and possession of a candle.

ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION)—Public Safety responded to the report of four students smoking marijuana in Smith Hall. Upon further investigation, a witness told Public Safety that she observed the four students passing around what appeared to be a marijuana cigarette. Public Safety interviewed the four students and could smell a strong odor of marijuana coming from their clothing. Citations were issued for possession of a controlled substance.

Thursday, Nov. 6

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DISORDERLY CONDUCT / SIMPLE ASSAULT—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of an intoxicated male. Upon arrival, the male was identified as a student who refused to respond to questioning. An ambulance was dispatched. Upon further investigation, it was discovered that two students reported that they had been assaulted by the male. The male refused all medical treatment and was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room by Lewisburg Police Department where he was extremely uncooperative and physically threatened the Lewisburg Police Department. He was cited for underage consumption, public drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Vedder Hall caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station in the south west stairwell. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A Dining Service employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) smashed into the windshield in his vehicle while it was parked on Moore Avenue. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. The incident is under investigation.

Friday, Nov. 7

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—

Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a student with a head laceration. A Student Health Services driver responded and transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment. The individual later returned to campus.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to Moore Ave. for the report that an employee's mower had slid in the mud and struck a parked car. The vehicle damage was minor. The owner of the vehicle was notified.

Saturday, Nov. 8

ASSIST POLICE / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety met the Lewisburg Police Department at South 7th St. and Moore Ave. to assist with an intoxicated student who would not or could not provide his campus address. The male became disorderly and had to be restrained. The male refused the breathalyzer test and the Dean of Students was called. The male was verbally abusive to University officials. Lewisburg Police Department transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for evaluation where the individual required sedation to gain cooperation. Citations were issued for public drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window pane on the south west exterior door at Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window pane on the center exterior door at Roberts Hall. The incident is under investigation.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at the Hulley House caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station for no apparent reason. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

Udike addresses campus community

UPDIKE From page A1

"Anyone would agree that they [Morrison and Udike] represent the highest level of achievement in letters," said James Rice, vice president of academic affairs. Many students said they agree with Rice.

"Being in an isolated location such as Lewisburg, it is very beneficial that Bucknell is able to bring such famous authors for us to have access to," Shira Gasarch '07 said. "I wanted to hear him speak not only because I admire his work, but because I knew I probably wouldn't have another chance."

In the hours before the lecture, Udike held a news conference. During the conference he discussed his personal work and the act of writing in general. When questioned as to whether writing is a selfless or selfish act, he responded first by quoting a fellow American writer and alumnus of the University, Philip Roth '54.

"You begin with the personal, but it is not quite as simple as that," Udike said, quoting Roth. "Your self is what you have been given to share. You hope you can transform it into something that can be shared."

Udike said writing can be a selfish act because one must write from his or her own experience. He said it is hoped that works will be framed in such a way that they are relevant to others' lives and resonate with readers' experiences. In that way, writing can also be a selfless act because it seeks to connect with people.

"When writing, one must illuminate life for others. Writing must show us a way to see our own life."

—John Udike, Pulitzer Prize-winning author

My ambition [to get published in the magazine] was narrow. Sometimes it helps to have a narrow ambition, as opposed to a general one," Udike said.

In his case, his narrow ambition helped him get some of his earliest works published in "The New Yorker." In fact, he contributes much of his success as a young writer to such magazines. He said that today such venues are not as helpful to young writers.

"I came to manhood in a time when magazines still printed fiction, and today I am not sure how to give advice to today's writers," Udike said.

Udike said that because forms of entertainment have changed since he began writing, such as an increase in television, movies and the Internet, it is harder to reach people through novels or poetry.

"It is harder to find people who consider curling up with a book a good time," Udike said. "Therefore you must think about what you can tell them that they don't already know or can't already find in other forms of entertainment." Critics and admirers of Udike's work continue to have a high opinion of him.

"When writing, one must illuminate life for others. Writing must show us a way to see our own life."

—John Udike, Pulitzer Prize-winning author

"Your poetry and essays have deepened our understanding of the human condition," University President Steffen Rogers said as he introduced Udike.

"Resourceful, inventive, a masterful stylist ... he is a writer who on every page teaches us how to write," Professor of English Robert Taylor said.

Alex Penwill '07 said is evident that Udike has not only grasped the workings of human nature, but the author can communicate these ideas in ways that continue to touch the reader.

"It seems like his fiction has its basis in poetry. The imagery that he uses allows for imagination and thought on the part of the reader," Penwill said. "You can feel what he is talking about because his words seek to relate to the very simple actions of human nature. His attention to detail and use of metaphor bring his work to life. I am glad I got to experience such an amazing author."

Addressers wanted immediately!

No Experience necessary. Work at home. Call 405-447-6397

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme

Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Lawmakers push for drug coverage

WASHINGTON—With time running short, key lawmakers struggled Tuesday night to clear away the remaining obstacles to a compromise prescription drug bill including a GOP demand for direct competition between traditional Medicare and new private insurance plans for seniors.

Saudis reject dialogue with militants

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia—Saudi Arabia, rocked by a deadly suicide attack, ruled out any dialogue with violent Islamists and said it would only talk to them with the rifle and sword.

Muhammad defense makes its case

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va.—Sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad's attorneys opened their defense presentation Wednesday after the judge in the murder trial rejected defense motions that would have stricken the death penalty from the jury's consideration.

Senate preparing for judge's talkathon

WASHINGTON—The Senate readied cots and coffee for a talkathon set to last all Wednesday night on who is to blame for some of President George W. Bush's nominees not making it to the federal appeals bench.

Kerry train wreck easy to predict

WASHINGTON—The problem, perhaps the fatal problem, with John Kerry's presidential campaign is that from the start it's had two of everything: two sets of handlers, two centers of power and a candidate who often can't resist having two positions on an issue. Laser-like clarity and focus are crucial in a presidential campaign. To inspire voters, it must be a crusade, not a committee—a battle flag, not a position paper. Kerry's is all clutter.

CIA report: Iraqis losing faith in United States

WASHINGTON—A new top-secret intelligence report warns that Iraqis are losing faith in U.S.-led occupation forces, a development that is increasing support for the resistance, officials said Wednesday.

Hostage held in Dallas standoff

DALLAS—Three officers were shot and wounded early Wednesday during a standoff at an apartment. Officials said they feared two people were dead in a bedroom.

Hidden stress underlies heart attacks

ORLANDO, Fla.—Stress you didn't even know you had could kill you, U.S. researchers reported on Tuesday. They found people whose blood pressure rose during "mental stress" were six times more likely to have a heart attack or other severe heart problem within six years than people who handled the stress more calmly.

Drug may help people unlearn fears

NEW ORLEANS—Scientists say a pill may help people overcome their worst phobias. In a small study released Monday, a drug already on the market for tuberculosis helped people who were terrified of heights get over that fear with only two therapy sessions instead of the usual seven or eight.

Egyptian twins in good condition

DALLAS—Formerly conjoined twin Ahmed Ibrahim has been upgraded to good condition, joining his brother Mohamed Ibrahim at that level, according to a hospital statement.

News

Student opinion varies by class

Upperclassmen are ten times more likely (21 percent to 2 percent) than freshmen to know the name of BSG President Katy Timer

BSG From page A1

Students were aware of some things BSG had accomplished, citing improvements like The Bison accepting weekend meal credits, the fight for cable and online registration.

"BSG works hard for students, but I think it's often difficult for the student body to understand their overall message," Lee Cromwell '05 said.

Student Body President Katy Timer '04 said that BSG has been working to improve communication.

"BSG has made attempts to increase its publicity, not only for recognition of its efforts, but so students will hopefully use the organization and resources for other areas that they would like to see improved on campus," Timer said.

Even with this increased publicity, some students do not have an idea about what BSG's goals are.

"I don't know what they do, except for Senior Nights," Charles O'Connell '04 said. Class of 2007 President Flory Perez '07 attributes some of the blame of this lack of awareness to student apathy.

"BSG is doing a lot, but I don't know how much students know about it. I know they say BSG meetings are open to students, but not many students take advantage of that," Perez said. "I get the impression that they're not interested in going to the meeting. They're interested in the outcome, but not in the preliminary things before it."

Who are the officers?

Only two percent of first-year students knew the name of the student body president.

This is a marked decrease from the 12 percent of first-year students who knew last year.

"I think they should make BSG officers names known to everyone," Monica Grinage '07 said.

Students are more likely to know the name of the BSG president the longer they have been at the University. Thirteen percent of sophomores, 16 percent of juniors and 33 percent of seniors were able to identify Timer.

Overall, an average of 23 percent of students claimed to know some of the BSG executive officers; 56 percent of students claimed to know one or more of their class officers.

Timer said that name recognition is not that important.

"I think it's more important that students realize what BSG does and how it serves students as an organization rather than specific name recall," Timer said. "Basically, executive officers are going to change every year, but the purpose of BSG has remained consistent and I think it's more important for students to know that purpose."

"The importance of name recognition for BSG is solely for the purpose of letting students know that [we] are aware of their needs and wants and are doing something about it," Perez said.

The poll indicates that while students who have been at the University longer know more BSG executive officers, they become less likely to approach their class officers if they have a problem.

Only 48 percent of last year's first-year students claimed to know one or more of their class officers, but this year, 70 percent said they knew some of their officers.

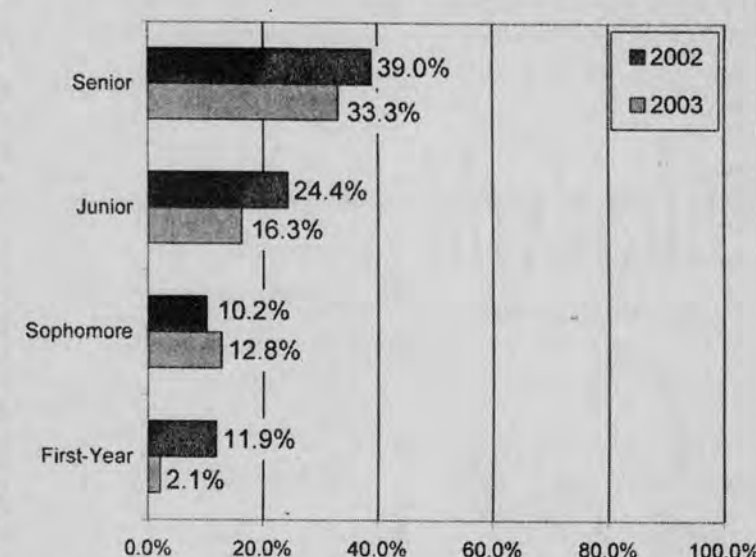

Perez believes this might be due to the campaigning efforts of the candidates.

"A lot more kids were going to dorms during the campaign. There was also a lot of information spread by word of mouth," Perez said.

Seventy-one percent of seniors last year claimed to know at least one of their class officers. This year, that number has decreased to 54 percent.

Information about Bucknellian polls

When providing polling results, The Bucknellian believes that it is necessary to provide the most accurate statistics as possible. As a result, polls are carefully planned to take into account sample sizes, confidence levels and intervals, random selections and bias. Polls are conducted over the telephone in order to

Of the students polled, the percentage of which could name the BSG president in 2002 (Amir Sadaghiani '03) and in 2003 (Katy Timer '04).

Approachable officers

Of students who claimed to know their class officers, 90 percent of first-year students said they would be comfortable approaching those officers if they had a problem.

Eighty-eight percent of sophomores, 82 percent of juniors and 77 percent of seniors were likely to approach their class officers.

Still, of those who knew their officers, only 15 percent said they would not feel comfortable approaching their officers.

prevent biases, which are prevalent in electronic and/or campus mail surveys, and thus The Bucknellian requires at least a 90 percent response rate to be considered valid.

Approximately six percent of the student body was surveyed for this poll, yielding a margin of error of plus or minus five percentage points, with a confidence level of 95 percent. The response rate was approximately 96 percent.

The approve/disapprove question was scored using a simplified, numerical-Likert scale, similar to an Ordinal scale.

Professors request reduced courseload

COURSES From page A1

University academically. In some cases, a decrease in course load would require a need for new faculty members, slightly larger class sizes and the cancellation of some smaller programs. The balance of these aspects and their effects are the focus of the issue at hand.

"We're trying to figure out a structural adjustment," Payne said. "There are people who are anxious about the imposition of some uniform thing over the whole University ... but that's not going to happen. It's going to be multi-faceted and nuanced."

Several students on campus aware of the planned change are said they are leery of this policy's effect on classes.

"I think it's good that it would create more opportunity [for professors to do research], but I do prefer smaller class size," Brian Darakjian '07 said.

Other students said they have faith in the faculty to produce a successful and productive plan.

"I think that if that's what the majority of teachers feel, I don't mind," Mara Wilcox '07 said.

The faculty is working hard to make sure that class sizes and other academic variables are not greatly upset by the course load alteration.

"There are several scenarios that are being looked at ... one of them being how a 3-2 course load could be accomplished without changing class sizes," Evans said. "My hunch is that many departments could go to a 3-2 course load with no perceptible impact."

As soon as a successful plan is agreed upon by the faculty, it will be presented to the Board of Trustees for its opinion and support.

"[The trustees] are just waiting for a plan that is financially plausible," said Rogers.

Although the approval of the trustees is preferable for the faculty, it is not necessary to implement the course load change on campus.

"Any major decisions regarding the financial integrity of the University would require the support of the trustees," said Evan. "[but] there's also a responsibility by the faculty to govern themselves."

Even if the trustees and faculty approve of a plan to alter the course load assignment for professors, it will still be some time before anything changes at the University.

"It couldn't be implemented immediately ... we wouldn't want to harm the curriculum," Rogers said.

Want to see your name in the paper? Write for news! Contact Liz: esalemme@

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

HARVEST HOUSE CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP
GO Vertical

310 Market St.
Downtown Lewisburg
Under CVS
Sunday 10:00 AM
Wednesday 7:00 PM

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL

Mondays - Monday Night Football on 50+ TVs
$5 All You Can Eat Wings!

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm
8 pm Trivia Contest! Win $30 gift cert.!

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings -- $5!!!
10 pm-2 am - Live band in The Vault

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak -- $12.99!!!
9 pm - 2 am -- Karaoke Night!!

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $18.99
Hip Hop DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm
All Request DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
16+ Dance Club with Hip Hop DJ!

Now Hiring
Wait Staff and Bartenders

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 2004/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester Starts Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg
T BRYNWOOD Rentals

Live. Learn. Play.

In one of over 30 summer programs throughout the world!

Syracuse University Division of International Programs Abroad

800-251-9674 • DIPa.su@syr.edu
<http://summerabroad.syr.edu>

Trofino Tri-Star Travel invites you to Bucknell SPRING BREAK in Cancun Rates Include Air Out of Philadelphia!
March 13-20, 2004

COST PER PERSON: $925 Double $899 Triple or Quad

TRIP INCLUDES:
7 Nights/8 Days 2-bedded rooms (Oceanfront, El Pueblo Resort) on a All-Inclusive program: All meals, drinks, non motorized water sports, tips, taxes included. * Rd trip air from Philly * Rd trip transfers * Tour Representative while in Cancun

THIS ALL INCLUSIVE TOUR IS OFFERED BY YOUR LICENSED, BONDED REPUTABLE PA AGENCY!

Call Mary at Trofino Tri-Star Travel at 800-611-3532 OR Call your Campus Contact, David Gibson at 570-577-4178 or email Dave at dagibson@bucknell.edu

Trofino Tri-Star Travel, Inc. (800) 611-3532
Email: Trofino@aol.com Website: www.trofino.com

News

Devra Davis discusses impact of pollution

By JULIE LESKO
Writer

World-renowned epidemiologist Devra Lee Davis discussed her new book about environmental health hazards, "When Smoke Ran Like Water: Tales of Environmental Deception and the Battle Against Pollution" on Nov. 6. Davis presented her case on changing current approaches to public health.

Davis said environmental toxins contribute to a broad spectrum of human diseases and how industrial and governmental interests have hidden the very high costs of "progress" from the public.

Among the topics addressed in her book and lecture were how cancers are linked to exposure with avoidable environmental contaminants as well as how environmental toxins play a role in the growing health problems men face, increased cases of sterility and testicular cancer. Davis also discussed how the health risks to children from exposure to the environment, such as birth defects and asthma, have remained in dispute and unresolved far longer than necessary.

Davis spoke about promising new technologies and business activities that are promoting cleaner, greener and more efficient ways of developing economies in the United States and abroad.

"I found Davis's lecture to be really informative," Lauren Koch '06 said. "It is disheartening to see the devastating effects pollution has on individuals and their health. However, there are people such as Devra Davis who are very dedicated to raising public awareness about these issues."

Davis also spoke about breast cancer, which is a disease of tremendous significance to women.

"It is the most common cancer among women in developed countries, and its incidence is rapidly increasing in the developing world," Davis said.

Known risk factors for the disease, such as family history and age at menstruation, explain fewer than one in three cases.

"While screening and diagnosis has improved in many regions, it cannot completely account for the rate increases," Davis said.

Much research funding has been devoted to treatment of breast cancer rather than its prevention. To date, potential environmental causes of breast cancer have received little attention, even though there is increasing evidence that such links exist.

Davis emphasized the need for public health to understand the externalities that are caused by progress.

"In understanding the causes of health and disease that can be controlled through public policy requires more than just a surface treatment of numbers; it requires studying patterns and undertaking meaningful analyses. While modern medicine treats individuals for specific diseases in localized organs, public health scholars understand that the patterns of these diseases reveal characteristics of the groups to which we belong and the ways in which we live."

According to Koch, Davis has set a precedent in her field.

"As a female environmental studies major, I think she makes a good role model for me in that she has been so successful in an industry where there is so much controversy," Koch said.

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro

Come see what's new and exciting. Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts August 24th

11:00 AM to 2:00 PM

Wednesday-Saturday Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2, Dinner 5-9

412 Market St. Lewisburg 570-523-8088

www.elizabethsbistro.com

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by traufman associates, inc.

promotional products - fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards - trophies - business gifts

800-528-8009

Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009

www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL

ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Market Street PHOTO

We like picky people!

We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.

523-1543

M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5; 24 hour drop box
120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

Lewisburg Area High School presents

AN EVENING OF ONE ACT PLAYS

THE BALD SOPRANO
by Eugene Ionesco

THE AMERICAN DREAM
by Edward Albee

TICKETS AVAILABLE AT THE DOOR

8:00 PM in Auditorium Admission: $4.00

Friday, November 14 and Saturday, November 15, 2003

"Produced by special arrangement with Samuel French, Inc."

News

STUDENT PULSE

If you could build anything on campus, what would it be?

"Underground tunnels because it is too cold outside."

—Megan Daley '04

"I would build a doghouse and have my dogs come live here."

—Mary Krakowski '06

"Escalators that take you all around campus."

—Ted Holzman '07

"A playground big enough for college students to play on."

—Kayla Halloran '06

ID From page A1

"We anticipate that the main identification number for use by and assigned to members of the University community will be randomly generated eight-digit numbers," Guyer said.

Many University professors said they see the necessity for the switch.

"The new ID numbers should not impact teaching or grading at all, and I support the switch to the new system. Social Security numbers should be held confidential. I could occasionally use a student's SSN to better ascertain where the student is from (the first three digits indicate the region of the country), and that could sometimes help me get to know a student better. Otherwise I see no problems with switching to the new system," Associate Professor of Economics T.C. Kinnaman said.

According to Guyer, the full implication of the project will be in effect at the beginning of the fall 2004 semester.

"Regulations are beginning to filter down in order to protect individuals' private information.

Bucknell University is taking a proactive response to these measures to protect the campus community and operate effectively," Guyer said.

Many other college campuses around the country are beginning to research their possible transition away from the use of Social Security numbers. Penn State University President Graham Spanier has approved a plan to replace the use of an individual's Social Security number with an ID number.

"An individual's Social Security number is now considered confidential information. Penn State's use of it as a main identifier is no longer practical and may be considered by some to compromise its confidential nature. Although the University will still be required to collect individuals' Social Security numbers for reporting and taxation purposes, Penn State [will be] assigning random, unique nine-digit numbers as the main identifier for members of the University community," Spanier said.

The committee will offer future updates and information as more details become available regarding the progress of the project.

"We anticipate that the main identification number for use by and assigned to members of the University community will be randomly generated eight-digit numbers,"

—Kathy Guyer, director of Financial Services

SEARCH From page A1

The Institutional Profile with the help of several advisory committees, including faculty, administration, staff, parents, alumni and students. The profile is available on the ASCS Web site and will be posted on the Presidential Search Committee Web site.

With the help of Ferrare and ASCS, the search committee is now in the process of reviewing applications to narrow down a pool of more than 50 applicants.

According to Ferrare, the quality and number of applicants are above average in comparison to other searches that ASCS has conducted, and both Garrity and Ferrare said they are very pleased with the outcome of the search so far.

"I think we are going to have our hands full making the final decision," Garrity said.

Less than 10 percent of searches conducted by ASCS have not resulted in the placement of a candidate, Ferrare said, and of the successful search-ments, 25 percent have been women and eight percent have been minorities. According to Garrity, several of the 50 applicants are women or minorities.

Garrity said the committee hopes to have chosen 10 to 12 prospective candidates by early December. Once these candidates have been chosen, the committee will perform intensive background checks and conduct major interviews. Three final candidates will be invited for on-campus interviews, and the search committee will present these candidates to the Board of Trustees for a final decision.

Although the Board of Trustees set July 1, 2004, as the target date for selecting the next president, the success of the search and the dedication of the committee has led Garrity to expect the final decision will be made by March 2004.

"The goal of the committee is to work together to find the best fit president for Bucknell, and I think we're doing exactly that," said Bucknell Student Government President and Presidential Search Committee member Katy Timer '04. "So far,

"The goal of the committee is to work together to find the best fit president for Bucknell, and I think we're doing exactly that."

—Katy Timer '04, BSG president and presidential search committee member

I have really enjoyed meeting with the other members and seeing their dedication to what is best for the institution as a whole."

Calendar of Events

November 14	November 15	November 16	November 17	November 18	November 19	November 20
Murder Mystery Larison Hall 100 4 p.m.	New York Chamber Soloists Bach Concert for 1, 2, 3, 4 Harpsichords Weis Center Auditorium 11 a.m.	Quaker Services Willard Smith Library Vaughan Lit 125 10 a.m.	"Reiki by Rickie" Langone Center 304 (Arches Lounge) 11:30 a.m.	Step Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Acrobatics Studio 8 & 11 a.m.	Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Acrobatics Studio 8 a.m. & 4 p.m.	RA Training/ Recruitment Committee Vedder Hall Living Room 10 a.m.
Shabbat Service Berelson Center for Jewish Life 104 5:30 p.m.	International Food Fair Larison Hall 100 1 p.m.	Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 11 a.m.	Red Cross Blood Drive LC 256 Center Room All Day	Spinning Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Acrobatics Studio Noon & 6 p.m.	High Intensity Aerobics Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Acrobatics Studio Noon	Bob Thomas Athletic Speaker Series Langone Center 213 (Walls Lounge) Noon
Bucknell vs. Big Apple Exhibition Game Sojka Pavilion 7 p.m.	"The Russian Ark" Hilltop Film Series Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 3 p.m.	Two Past Midnight Langone Center 276 (Terrace Room) 1 p.m.	Peace Lecture: Professor Liebs Carnegie 208 3 p.m.	Social Science Colloquium: Hal Saunders "Sustained Dialogue and the Public Peace Process" Langone Center (Forum) 7 p.m.	Cardio Kick Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Acrobatics Studio 5 p.m.	Freemont Seminar Taylor Hall 115 (Lounge) Noon
"The Russian Ark" Hilltop Film Series Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 8 p.m.	Fall Theater Performance Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 8 p.m.	Samek Art Gallery Exhibit "Inquiry: Tulu Bayar, William Lasansky, Dan Mills, Rosalyn Richards" "Shahzia Sikander: No Parking Anytime" Bucknell Art Gallery	Zen Meditation Rooke Chapel 113 (Meditation Chapel) 4 p.m.	"Different for Girls" LGBT Film Series Langone Center 301 (Gallery Theatre Lecture Hall) 7:30 p.m.	Cocktail Theatre Tustin Theatre 5 p.m.	Music Students Recital Sigfried Weis Music Building 100 (Recital Hall) Noon
New York Chamber Soloists Bach Concert for 1, 2, 3, 4 Harpsichords Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	Bucknell Orchestra Concert Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel Main Sanctuary 4 p.m.	Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Acrobatics Studio 5 p.m.	Lecture: Mitch Albom Rooke Chapel 8 & 9 p.m. (Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit) 8 p.m.	Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Acrobatics Studio 6 p.m.	"French Film" Vaughan Lit 101 6:30 p.m.
Manhunt Goldrush Bison 9 p.m.	Freestyle Contest Uptown 9:30 p.m.	Contemporary Worship Rooke Chapel 7 p.m.	Cocktail Theatre Tustin Theatre 5 p.m.	Faculty Recital: Barry Hannigan, piano Sigfried Weis Music Building 100 8 p.m.	Pilates Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Acrobatics Studio 7 p.m.	Poetry Reading: Rebecca Warner and Michael Waters Bucknell Hall 7 p.m.
Lock Stock and Two Smoking Barrels Langone Center Forum 10:30 p.m.	"Terminator 3: The Rise of the Machine" Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 10:30 p.m.	Senior Recital Sigfried Weis Music Building 100 (Recital Hall) 7:30 p.m.	"Born Free" Langone Center 301 Gallery Theatre 8 p.m.	"Rocky II" Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 10:30 p.m.	"Rocky III" Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 10:15 p.m.
Jennifer Daniels 7th Street Café 11 p.m.	BU After Dark Gerhard Fieldhouse Main Floor 11 p.m.	Catholic Mass Hunt Hall Living Room 10 p.m.

The information for these events is subject to change.

Send calendar submissions to bucknellian@bucknell.edu with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.

Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

Opinions

THE Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 132, Number 10
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief

Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor

Michelle Dombeck '05

Managing Editor

Alison Walker '04

Business Manager

Stephen Santulli '05

Director of Sales

Kristin Stangel '05

Senior Editors

Jason Rubinstein '04

Sandi Jo Galati '04

News Editors

Elisabeth Salemme '06

Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors

Aaron Hanlon '04

Keeley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors

Courtney Homan '05

Sports Editors

Cecily Cairns '04

Brent Butler '06

Features Editors

Ashley Maliken '06

Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors

Juliana Pietak '04

Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editor

Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout

Nick Kupenski '07

Chief Copy Editors

Stacey Greenberg '06

Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers

Joshua Mayer '04

Emory Strother '04

John Heekin '05

Davaish Malhotra '06

Marketing Directors

Joseph Giordano '05

Adviser

James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

No sound, no fury: Will BSG signify anything?

Katy Timer, Bucknell Student Government (BSG) president, walked onto the Bison stage this past Wednesday night to begin the annual executive candidate debate only to find that the microphones didn't work. She tried speaking into one microphone and then another. BSG Vice President of Finance John Gray tried to make the microphones work, but to no avail. BSG Advisor Kari Conrad ran off to find the volume controls for the speakers.

As the highest-ranking elected student, Timer, our spokesperson and leader, stood on the stage unable to get the attention of the couple hundred students sitting just a few feet away. Only the handful of BSG Congress members in attendance, the close friends of the candidates and one table of interested students even seemed to notice the seven students on stage. One cannot help but see this as a microcosm of the current state of BSG.

Regularly scheduled BSG executive elections take place this Thursday; among the few students that seem to know are fewer still that seem to care. If the almost complete lack of competition for the offices and the lackluster interest at the debate are any indication, students see little reason to pay any attention.

Congress members didn't even have a good showing—only about 10 of the 40+ elected representatives attended the debate. Most of the students in the Bison during the half-hour debate seemed more annoyed than interested by the discussion taking place. Not even the hot-button issues of parking, off-campus living and the alcohol policy could elicit much interest.

Heedless and indifferent, the vast majority of the student body has dismissed The Bucknellian.

Experience, priorities, personalities and the current state of BSG were considered in our choice for President.

Running for Student Body President, the only contested position, is John Siwicki, BSG Class of 2005 President and newcomer Chris Styers. The two candidates could hardly be more different, either in style or experience.

Siwicki is the consummate BSG insider.

Christophe Richard—The Bucknellian

er: he has been on BSG since the beginning of his first year at the University, serving as class president sophomore and junior year. Siwicki knows almost all of the current BSG Congress and has a clear understanding of the role of Student Body President; he is more recognizable as a BSG representative.

Understanding the common student, Styers is an outsider looking to shake up BSG; he views his lack of BSG experience as an advantage and he is realistic, promising only to find out if we will ever get cable or adequate parking instead of promising to make everything happen this year; he is quiet, but genuine and determined.

Keeping this disadvantage in mind, we believe it would not outweigh the advantage Styers would have in jolting the BSG congress from its comfortable and complacent stance.

So far, this past year has shown that despite the efforts of a likable and experienced president, the congress has failed to become well-known or engaged in the concerns of everyday students. Congressmembers routinely leave meetings promptly at the one-hour mark, despite the remaining items on the agenda.

Styers represents a chance to change the culture of BSG. He could encourage the involvement of other students who would like to make a difference but have no BSG experience.

Styers has worked for The Bucknellian as a writer and then an editor since his first year at the University. He has demonstrated his understanding of the media and we feel confident that he would be knowledgeable about publicizing the accomplishments of BSG.

BSG is in need of improvement. Siwicki may be able to lead this change based on his current personal relationships and experience, but he seems less concerned by the current state of the congress. Styers seems to be intent on shaking up BSG and bringing in new ideas and a new spirit, but he will need to earn the respect and trust of the BSG congress first.

With an overall approval rating of under 50 percent (according to our recent poll), BSG must realize that it has work to do. Scarcely more than half of the students know at least one of their class officers and only about one in four know a BSG executive officer. These numbers represent a clear challenge to the future leaders and the current congressmembers.

Considering the limited options, we feel that Styers has a better chance of leading BSG back to being the well-respected, influential voice of the students. Styers will need time to get to know the current congressmembers and develop the necessary relationships with University administrators.

Letters to the editor

University alumnus believes Nader is terrible choice for graduation speaker

To the Editor:

As a 1994 Bucknell alumnus, I would like to express my disappointment in the selection of Ralph Nader as Commencement speaker. Despite the Assistant Vice President of Academic Affairs and Development, Jim Rice's assertion that "Ralph Nader is a great choice," I believe most alumni would strongly disagree. In case the University has forgotten, most of the country is right of center in the political spectrum.

Republicans control the presidency, Congress, and most of the governorships. Ralph Nader is not only left of center, he is over the edge of rational is embarrassing. Pst, Jim!

Ralph Nader is a Communist! So why should my opinion as an alumnus count? If the University expects alumni to continue supporting the University financially, it must start respecting everyone's political views. I would never

To state Ralph Nader has broadened fundamental democratic values is embarrassing

I suspect most science and engineering majors (along with staff) will be equally disappointed thought. For Jim Rice to state Ralph Nader has broadened fundamental democratic values donations throughout our post-graduation years, we have never been able to support the University. Until the University stops promoting a radically left agenda, we simply cannot support the University.

Maybe no one cares whether or not I financially support the University. The administration should reconsider and rethink its strategy. Based on well-documented statistics, conservative Christians are the top donors in the nation. Most liberals just talk about caring and compassion. How much did Bill Clinton and Al Gore donate on a personal level? A few pair of old underwear to the Salvation Army, and a miserly $300 while making several hundred thousand dollars in one year!

I hope the current students are satisfied with the University's decision. I suspect most science and engineering majors (along with staff) will be equally disappointed. Ralph Nader may be an excellent choice to placate the radical left of the University, but he may be dangerous to its financial well-being.

Sincerely,
Tom Malinich '94

First-year meal plan benefits University

By KEELEY SIDOW
Opinions Editor

The first-year meal plan inevitably rips students off. There are very few first-year students, if any, who actually eat 19 meals per week in the cafeteria or The Bison.

The University might be forcing a meal plan on first year students in order to ease them away from the home-cooked meals they are used to. The meal plan might be the University's attempt to lessen the possibility of eating disorders when students arrive at college. But most likely, it is also another way for the University to make more money.

Between late nights studying and sleeping through the alarm, it is nearly impossible to get up every single morning and go to breakfast. It is simply not possible to get your money's worth on this meal plan. All students have those days when they only have time to snack on the food in their room while finishing their economics homework due at 1 p.m. That meal credit just disappears.

If students know that they will probably never get up for breakfast during the week and they are bound to miss at least one lunch or dinner, they would probably purchase a lesser meal plan. It does not make sense to force everyone into the same meal plan.

What do people with special diets, such as vegans or vegetarians, do? Many of them are so picky that they would prefer to make their own meals. With the first-year meal plan, the University forces them to be locked into a meal plan that they can't utilize.

The cafeteria seems to be great with its buffet and "variety," but after a while I needed to go to The Bison to invigorate my taste buds. If students choose to eat a decent-sized meal at The Bison, they will always spend more than the allotted meal credit amount.

It does not make sense to force everyone into the same meal plan

Many first-year students have already had to add more money to their declining balance because of this. I have already gone through the initial $75 and I am down to $1.45 after adding another $50. The main reason that students' declining balances get so low is because meal credits usually aren't accepted in The Bison on weekends. This doesn't make sense at all. What is so different about the weekends? A meal credit is a meal credit, and students should be allowed to use it in The Bison regardless of the day of the week.

The University should allow first-year students to choose their meal plan, whether it happens right when they get here or at the beginning of second semester. Although the University is probably concerned with the students' nutrition, it should trust them to know their own eating habits.

Living Wage campaign lacks drive

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

Yesterday I awoke, hell froze over, pigs soared by Rooke Chapel, Howard Zinn posters were banned from Coleman Hall and I found myself missing "The Catalyst." I had known for some time this year that part of my life was empty—there was a void I couldn't explain—until I realized that I had become entirely too acclimated to the free market in the absence of some sort of forced disruption in the name of "social justice."

Later that day, on my way out of the Gerhard Fieldhouse, I spoke with my good friend who works at the front desk. He said "Aaron, do you know what ever happened to that Living Wage newsletter?" Come to think of it, what ever did happen to "that Living Wage newsletter?"

Those behind "The Catalyst" have not necessarily abandoned their cause for no good reason

For those unaware, the Living Wage campaign is a movement that seeks to grant University wage-earning employees a minimum wage of $10 and change per hour. This figure, which likely fluctuates with time, is the product of a calculation of the minimum wage necessary to sustain (feed, clothe, house, etc. to a modest degree) an employee and his or her family in the surrounding area. The calculation takes the socioeconomic characteristics and demography of the area into account. The Living Wage campaign operates under the notion that United States and University minimum-wage policies are inadequate and fail to provide "livable" wages to employees.

Although I don't support the Living Wage campaign, there is a sizeable collection of people on our campus who do. The Living Wage debate is certainly a valid one, if for no other reason than the number of people who support it. That said, it is unfortunate that those behind the campaign have, for whatever reasons, neglected to raise awareness this year through a newsletter.

It is certainly understandable when school, work and other projects that fall under the umbrella of life get in the way of even our most passionately-held causes. Those behind "The Catalyst" have not necessarily abandoned their cause for no good reason.

In spite of this, the lack of publication and publicity of the Living Wage issue this year is disconcerting, and it leaves many students and faculty members wondering whether or not the issue is still alive.

While student and faculty activists might be disappointed, it seems as though the University wage-earning employees and support staff are being alienated most by the lack of Living Wage coverage.

As students, our "pet causes" are engaging and fun to discuss. Similarly, many professors' "pet causes" are engaging and fun to discuss in class in place of a meaningful and productive curriculum. Wage-earning employees, however, must be used to having substantially more than a handful of students and salary-earning University professionals in their corner when the topic of wages arises. Right now there is virtually zero dialogue on the issue and in spite of some raises in wages made last year that might have been the results of the Living Wage campaign's efforts, the University has not realized a true Living Wage for its wage-earning employees.

Right now there is virtually zero dialogue on the issue

For people like me, the lack of publication from the proponents of the Living Wage might be helpful, as it allows us to shed light on the benefits—and I do mean benefits (health insurance, etc.)—of the University taking a laissez-faire approach and allowing just compensation to continue as prescribed by the market and providing comprehensive benefits to wage-earning employees. For those who disagree, the lack of Living Wage discourse suggests complacency within the current system or perhaps even abandonment of the cause in the worst-case scenario. If you believe strongly in the Living Wage or even if you feel it's a valid debate that ought to be continued, get in contact with the Bucknell Caucus for Economic Justice and tell it to get its act together. Otherwise, the issue will have proven itself deflated in the absence of a whole lot of hot air.

Online registration not better for some

By ALYSON WALKER
Managing Editor

Online registration should come with a warning—could be dangerous to one's health—mental health, that is. Luckily, having two permission courses lined up for next semester, I was relieved of having the onerous burden of trying something new as a senior.

For the last six semesters I waited in line, as patiently as I could, to determine my fate for the next semester. Change at this point would have placed me under undue stress and pressure.

Why? Because I don't completely trust technology to always work properly, and I definitely don't trust my ability to always complete all the forms correctly. I want human interaction and the secure knowledge that I have successfully registered for all of my classes. I want a person, not a little pop-up box, to tell me that I've been well-listed.

I believe that technology is a great innovation, but given the option between turning in a paper to a professor or e-mailing it, I will choose to turn in a hard copy 99 percent of the time because I will have the confirmation that I did indeed hand it in. The same idea can be applied to online registration.

As a senior, I have more time to correct any online errors, but what about the underclassmen who are fighting to get into the last slots for a course? Is registration now akin to Darwin's survival of the fittest? Likewise, this new registration appears to benefit those with the quickest technology and the ability to upload Web sites more quickly.

And if a first-year student runs into a problem, by the time he or she gets to the Registrar's Office, there is a good chance that at least one of the courses has closed.

Another concern is the stability of the Internet server. If the network was to crash during the assigned times, would everyone get bumped back? Or would those who decided to register in person get the advantage and continue to register while others fumbled with their computers?

I also heard mixed reports from those who were able to register online regarding when they were allowed to begin registering. One friend was able to begin 15 minutes earlier than her assigned time, while another was not allowed to start until five minutes after her time slot.

This is of great concern to me, because I know that students who register at the Registrar's Office do not register until exactly the assigned time. Some students may have been unfairly disadvantaged—including those who camped out in Marts Hall hours prior to the registration time slots in order to be the first people to register, not just those with slow computers or error messages.

The major problem with online registration was the one that barred me from even attempting to try it—permission courses. Most students will take at least one permission course, if not more, during their time at the University. Since permission courses could not be registered online, a lot of students were forced to go in person who may have preferred to register online.

Permission signatures should either be accepted prior to the registration time slot, and then checked afterward, be accepted within a certain time after registering for the course or there should be P.I.N.s for each slot available in the course—professors could give out a specific number instead of a signature to each student. This would ensure that students were not passing out permission P.I.N.s because each number would be particular to that student, and it would allow for more students to register online if they so desired.

While online registration is currently problematic, it can be ultimately beneficial to the University once certain quirks are worked out. If the technology can be used to accurately regulate registration time slots, have a stable network, allow for permission courses and try to dispel the inconsistencies that have occurred, the process would be expedited—and I would have considered trying it.

The University was wise to phase this process in slowly and allow students to have choice in selecting a registration process, especially with the potential problems that existed. I would not have felt comfortable with the online process and having the choice did save me a few headaches.

I always felt that there was something special about our registration process. I actually enjoyed filling out the yellow or green forms and bringing them to Marts Hall. At times, it wasn't always convenient. But I always saw someone I hadn't seen in awhile and I enjoyed interacting with the Registrar's Office. I never had a bad experience and I'm appreciative of all of the workers who have helped me fill out the proper forms, created CRNs for my courses and answered any random questions I had. Students in the future will probably consider me simplistic and technologically inept, but at least I'm simplistic and technologically inept with the course schedule I wanted.

While online registration is currently problematic, it can be ultimately beneficial to the University once certain quirks are worked out. If the technology can

The decisions made by a few people affect the entire campus

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

For better or for worse, the "Matrix Revolutions" has not a lot, but a ton, of dialogue. It is for movies like those where the 256 ounce, $10 Coca-Cola bucket comes in handy, guaranteed to keep you awake through the cheesy one-liners and what has got to be one of the longest and most tedious death sequences ever. Trinity aside, the kings of kung-fu duke it out in an epic battle that epitomizes Armageddon, the world hanging on every punch thrown.

Of course, it turns out that Neo never really chose to fight the agent or chose to do anything of consequence because he never controlled his fate. He was presented with options, but all of them led to the same inevitable conclusion; he was presented with a false choice.

You can escape the high costs of the Bucknell bubble by breaking free of it

At the University, we too have a false choice. We have Coca-Cola brand drinks. Don't get me wrong, I can choose between Diet Coke, Coke, Sprite, Nestle and even brand name water called Dasani. But what if I want Pepsi? Or Pepper? Do I even get the chance to take the Pepsi Challenge? My fraternity house had a Pepsi machine, but then one day some Cokeheads came out to the house and told us to get rid of it. Then, and only then, could we get a fully Coca-Cola-certified Coca-Cola drink dispenser, Coca-Cola-brand carbonated gas and Coca-Cola-brand syrup.

At the University, we too have a false choice

The only thing more outrageous than being forced to drink Coca-Cola-brand soda is the price that we have to pay in order to do so. My fraternity alone goes through Powerade and other Coca-Cola products weekly at a cost of well over $100 a week.

That is outrageous. How can it possibly cost that much for the delivery of plastic bags that contain little more than processed sugar? How can the University sign a multi-million-dollar contract with Coca-Cola, make them its exclusive dealer, plaster the school with pro-Coca-Cola advertising and then make Bucknellians pick up the tab? This is not choice; this is extortion.

Want a clearer definition of extortion? Think Bucknell Bookstore, because those terms are synonymous at this school. In fact, The New York Times recently ran an article on overpriced textbooks that gouge students' and parents' pocketbooks alike. Just by typing in www.amazon.co.uk versus the American www.amazon.com Web site produces some amazing results—you can get the same unused text by the very same author but the British site sells the books at half cost. Yeah, that's British baby and it is a fifty percent savings. Even with shipping that is an amazing price, you beat the system and you can escape the high costs of the Bucknell bubble by breaking free of it. Now that is free choice.

Last comes the idea of free speech. Unless in excess, reckless or flagrantly violating libel, slander or other laws to that effect, say what you think and write what you will. Yet in a country that extols its own virtues of being the land of the free, CBS's mini-series detailing the Reagan presidency was derailed before it was even aired.

The New York Times reports that thanks to 80,000 angry e-mails bombarding CBS headquarters, the mini-series that was supposed to air on CBS was relegated to the cable channel Showtime. Potentially 110 million viewers could have chosen to watch the series if it had been aired on CBS. Instead, it took only 80,000 irate e-mails to decide that, unless you have cable, you will not be watching that program. Politics aside, and however flawed the mini-series is claimed to be, thousands, if not millions, will not be able to see that show

United States should take a different approach to ending terrorism

By KEVIN BROWN
Writer

Consider the mind-set of a suicide bomber when he decides that his situation in life is so degrading, horrible and hopeless, that his only avenue to express his grievances is to take his own life and the lives of others in hopes that some nation, person or group will notice the injustices he faces and see to it that they are redressed. In Israel, one of the more recent suicide bombers was a successful man with a wife and children. He felt that rather than live to see his children grow up in a land controlled by a foreign army, he would prefer to die and take others with him, in hopes of changing the course of world affairs.

By taking to violence, terrorists attempt to bring their cause to the forefront of the minds of those who can change the policies that created their despair.

Terrorists, people and sub-national groups who engage in irregular warfare like suicide bombings and guerrilla attacks to draw attention to their cause, are not "motivated ... by ideological, apocalyptic or religious fanaticism," as Paul Bremer III, the U.S. civilian commander in Iraq, said. These people are instead motivated and radicalized by a perceived injustice that they are unable to redress through the normal avenues of diplomacy in their own countries or through the United Nations. By resorting to violence, terrorists attempt to bring their cause to the forefront of the minds of those who can change the policies that created their despair.

The Middle East today is a hotbed for terrorism directed against the United States and its allies, like Israel. The United States has done much militarily in the region to ensure that groups like al-Qaeda are broken up and will not again have the power to achieve disastrous attacks like Sept. 11, 2001. But despite this commitment to the "War on Terrorism," the United States ignores the root causes of the attacks and fails to recognize that national security will not be improved by increasing U.S. military might in the region and interfering in the fate of other nations.

The United States will go a long way to improving its standing among Middle Eastern nations, therefore preventing the radicalization of an almost limitless pool of potential terrorists, if it can move toward adopting the following policies (This is not just my list—many scholars feel that policies similar to these will have a positive impact in the area).

The United States should first stop sending military aid to Israel

The United States needs to work harder and faster towards achieving energy independence and cease to mediate the Israeli-Palestinian dispute from a pro-Israel perspective. Instead, the United States should work with the United Nations to broker a legitimate and long-term peace between the two warring groups.

Secondly, the United States should stop supporting friendly autocratic regimes, like Saudi Arabia. At the same time, it should stop overstepping its bounds by invading and occupying countries strictly to remove an unfriendly autocratic regime, however awful Saddam's rule may have been.

Finally, and most importantly, the United States needs to work harder and faster toward achieving energy independence. We must research and implement alternative sources of energy, so that the Middle East will no longer be an economic interest and potential threat. While I certainly do not condone any violent actions taken by any terrorist, nor do I think that appeasing terrorists is a good idea, the above policies will go a long way in reducing the number of people who are desperate to the point of violence and will reduce the "size and scope" of terrorist acts taken against the United States and its allies in the future.

FEATURES

A South African viewpoint of Lewisburg, Pa.

By JULIET PAOLA
Contributing Writer

I have lived in Durban, South Africa, my whole life. Durban has a climate similar to that of California, which is ironically where my mother is from. My father's family moved from Lebanon to South Africa, allowing me to grow up in one of the most beautiful countries in the world.

I went to an all-girls' school for 12 years, and for five of those years, I went to a prison camp. Oh, my bad. Here it's referred to as "boarding school." Let me enlighten you as to why I refer to it as "hell."

South Africa is based on the British system of education, discipline and values. This means we wear uniforms. I had three. One dress was for everyday use, another for special occasions and for Fridays (when we were allowed to go home) and the third one was for winter because it got pretty cold, though admittedly nowhere near as cold as it gets here. But, you see, at home get boyfriends visiting, as that was only a matric privilege.

In a sense, teenagers in the United States have so much more freedom than South Africans. The majority of South African teenagers go to boarding school and are restricted to only having a social life on weekends or holidays. But most weekends are taken up by sport.

U.S. teenagers are allowed to drive when they are 16, so they have the ability to be more independent, not having to rely on their parents to go to movies, clubs, friends' houses or school.

We are allowed to drive once we are 18, so we are extremely dependent on our parents for a long period of time. But once we are 18, we are completely free to do as we like. We are able to drive, drink and take complete responsibility for our own lives.

One massive culture shock when coming to the United States is not being able to have a social drink. I am used to drinking with my friends and family place to live, especially if you want to have fun. The lights and the fast pace of London are what captivated me. The public transportation system is so amazing; you never needed a taxi or a car. It was buses, tubes or walks everywhere. You are constantly surrounded by beautiful historical buildings. Even though the accents are fun to listen to and the country is so much fun, it was wonderful to get back home and relax for three weeks before I had to pack up again and move to the United States.

There aren't really many major differences that I've noticed between South Africa and the United States. It is mainly my U.S. friends who notice all the differences. I think it is because I have had my mom's U.S. influences my whole life. Because of her we celebrated Halloween, the Fourth of July and Thanksgiving. The main differences between our cultures I'd have to say are the vocabulary, sports, accents (of course) more European. We don't really wear sweat pants or casual clothes that often. It is a lot more surfer dress during the day and formal at night. South Africans love to dress up, but no pearls or hair ribbons or pink shirts for guys either. That was one major shock, seeing guys on this campus wear a pink shirt. I think in South Africa a guy would be shot if he wore something like that. I am not insulting the guys here or anything, but was that a culture jolt. But it is growing on me, and I must admit that it does suit some of you.

Study hour at Paola's boarding school in South Africa. The rigid structure and staunch uniforms are reminiscent of the previous British rule over South Africa.

Sports in South Africa are just as big as the sports here in the United States. We have rugby and cricket, while the United States has lacrosse, football and baseball, sports to me that are as foreign as understanding the mechanics of men.

I know many girls and guys at the University play rugby, but coming from the home of rugby I cannot begin to describe to you all the elements that go into a rugby game. It is not just the game which makes the sport so popular in South Africa, it is the atmosphere that goes along with it.

The cooking of the borewors (a type of meat) on the braai (barbecue), with the Castle Lager (a South African beer), together have smells that linger in the air, with the sound of the crowd going wild as a player gets a try (touchdown). That, in essence, is what South Africa is all about. You ask any South African and the first few things that pop into his or her head aren't lions or monkeys. They are rugby, braais, Castle Lager and biltong. (Biltong is similar to beef jerky, but of course in my opinion biltong is far better.)

I have had plenty of those questions that refer to lions, black people, huts and crime. I would just like to clarify a few things for those of you who have no clue. Yes we have lions; they don't roam in our gardens and they are in nature reserves far away from the public. It is more northern Africa that has them roaming around, and still lions are far away from civilization. We never had slavery in South Africa; we had Apartheid, and yes, it was as dreadful and painful for our nation as slavery was for the United States.

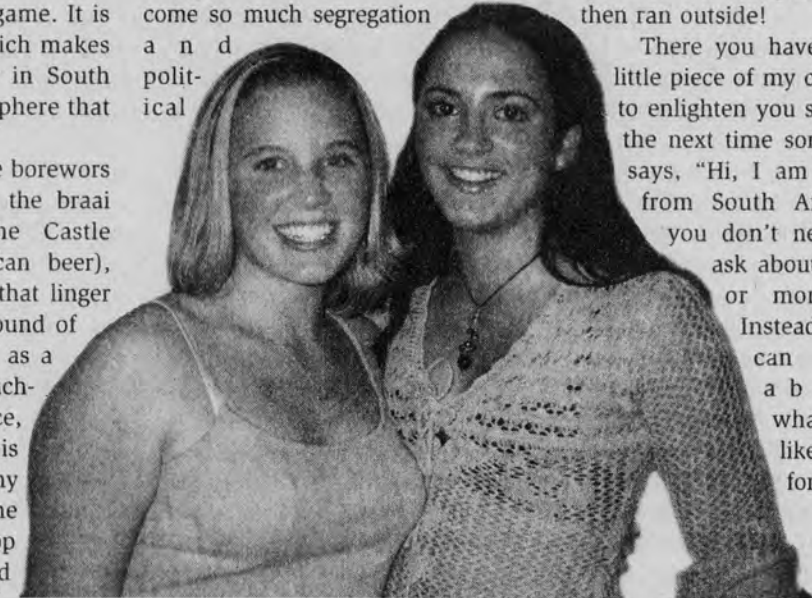

Some native tribes still live in huts but the majority of them have Westernized and live in houses with swimming pools and televisions. Some huts even have televisions. Yes, electricity, imagine that!

Sadly our country has crime, just like any country. Ours just struggles as it has had to overcome so much segregation and political turnout that it is taking it awhile to grow and prosper. Just like the United States is still suffering from the effects of slavery, so South African is dealing with the bad choices some people have made.

One thing that has made all my U.S. friends smile is my story about a monkey. Sometimes monkeys come into our houses and ransack everything. They jump into your house, thinking that they own everything. They will sit there peeling a banana (if you had one in your fruit bowl) right in front of you and make the biggest mess ever. When you try and chase them out of the house, they screech with laughter in your face. Not until you throw something at them will they budge and inch. When one entered our house a while ago, my mom threw half-eaten apples at it until she hit him. The cheeky monkey had been knocked to the ground, but he got up, turned around to look at her and laughed. I kid you not, he screeched with laughter and then ran outside!

There you have it, a little piece of my culture to enlighten you so that the next time someone says, "Hi, I am Juliet from South Africa," you don't need to ask about lions or monkeys. Instead, you can ask about what I like to do for fun.

Courtesy of Juliet Paola. Paola, right, with University friend Cinda Dautrich '06.

A picturesque shot of Paola's home in South Africa. Contrary to popular belief, there are no lions and elephants running about her back yard.

it seldom drops below 40 degrees Fahrenheit.

As if the term 'all girls' isn't painful enough, we were not allowed to grow our nails, dye our hair, have bangs that were below our eyebrows or wear jewelry or nail polish! Only seniors, or "matrics" as we call them, get these privileges.

Our school year runs from January to December with one month breaks in June and December. As for "boarding," it was reminiscent of a military camp. Our day consisted of early rising at 6:00 a.m., a homework session from 6:30 a.m. until 7 a.m. and then breakfast until 7:20 a.m. Every day, all day we had a set routine to follow. No visitors without 24-hour notice, not even parents. And girls, for as I please, and the U.S. law is so strict about alcohol consumption. It was like being granted adulthood and then coming to the United States and having it taken away. It's a slap in the face, especially when you have waited 18 years at home to receive all these privileges.

One thing I did as an 18-year-old was move to London and live there until it was time for me to come to the United States and go to the University. London is similar to home, but it is a lot tougher and moves at a much faster pace. This for me was the perfect opportunity to see whether I could cope by myself in the "real" world. It was one continuous party, but I worked long hours to survive.

London is one expensive and fashion sense.

The difference in vocabulary is mainly the spelling of certain words like labor, color and neighbor. We add a "u" into each of these words. Plus we pronounce certain words so differently. Americans, for example, will say "half" where we say "haalif." When I introduce myself as Juliet, so many people don't understand the accent that you should hear the alternative names they come up with. I have begun introducing myself like this, "Juliet, as in Romeo and Juliet... Yes, Juliet!" "Romeo" people hear fine; don't ask me why they get stuck on the "Juliet" part!

With regard to the different dressing style, we just dress

SPRING BREAK
Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489!
Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More!
Organize Small Group: Earn Free Trips plus Commissions!
Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Earn $250-$350 a week
Working Part-time
Evenings and weekends.
B&D DELPHIN
742-1642

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST
SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for
2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

Leisure Tours
"Act Now!" Book 11 people, get 12th trip free. Visit the official website for spring break '04. The Best deals to date!
Hottest destinations. Group discounts for 6+ www.springbreakdiscounts.com or 800-838-8202

Buffalo Bill's
TEX-MEX GRILLE & SALOON
Monday 5-9
Jumbo Hamburger & Fries
& Large Soda---$3.99
Tuesday 5-9
12 Jumbo Wings & Fries
& Soda---$3.99
Wednesday 5-9
Vegetarian Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price
Thursday 5-9
Mexican Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price
Lewisburg • 523-8900

MEMPHIS BBQ RIBS
Ain't nothing but $12.99
FIT FOR A KING
Meaty St. Louis cut ribs, dry-rubbed with our special seasonings, basted with our own bold flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce, and pit smoked right here with Applewood. Served with hickory smoked baked beans, BJ's skillet potato cakes, freshly baked sourdough bread, and cornbread with honey butter. Plus... a FREE non-alcoholic beverage.
Served all day Monday thru Wednesday, 11am until closing.
BY Steak & Rib House
17 North Market Street
Lewisburg
201 Mill Street, Danville
Sun-Thurs 11am-2am
Fri-Sat 11am-3am
www.bysteak.com

FEATURES

University women giving back to the community

Sororities contribute a generous time and effort by organizing campus-wide fund-raising events

By CARRIE TODD
Contributing Writer

The philanthropic and community service activities of a sorority can be compared to the chewy, chocolate center of a Tootsie Roll pop. Though these activities are prevalent among all University sororities, they are hidden beneath the hard shell of stereotypical partying and socializing. The misconception is that sororities spend the majority of their time having fun and minimal time planning philanthropic and community service activities. But in the core of a sorority are the hearts of young women striving to make the world a better place.

Though a potential sorority member may only be looking for the well-endowed social life, when she rushes she will soon become aware that she needs to have a generous heart and be willing to give valuable time to improve the lives of other people. One of the goals of a sorority is to prepare women to become a well-rounded member of society.

Each sorority is known for an annual event, such as Delta Gamma's Anchor Splash, Pi Beta Phi's Phi-esta, Kappa Alpha Theta's Pancake Brunch, Kappa Kappa Gamma's Sibling Breakfast, Chi Omega's Walk-for-a-Wish—being held next weekend—and Delta Delta Delta's Cuisine for a Cure. These events are a significant part of the fund-raising that goes into supporting sororities' selected charities, with all of the profits going directly to these major philanthropies.

Pi Beta Phi was able to raise $1,085 from last year's "Phi-esta" for its two major philanthropies, Links to Literacy and the Arrowmont School for the Arts and Crafts. Chi Omega raised $2,000 from its Walk-for-a-Wish event.

All of these events would not be as successful without help from the fraternity and sorority community as a whole. Every sorority is willing to help the others, allowing each philanthropic event to be successful and to provide a greater benefit for the charities they support.

The Million Penny Project integrates individual sorority's philanthropic events. This year's fund-raiser is being used to raise money for Bethesda Day Treatment Center and the Donald L. Heiter Community Center in Lewisburg, both non-profit organizations. Members outside of the fraternity and sorority system on campus can become a part of this effort as well by attending publicized events on and around campus.

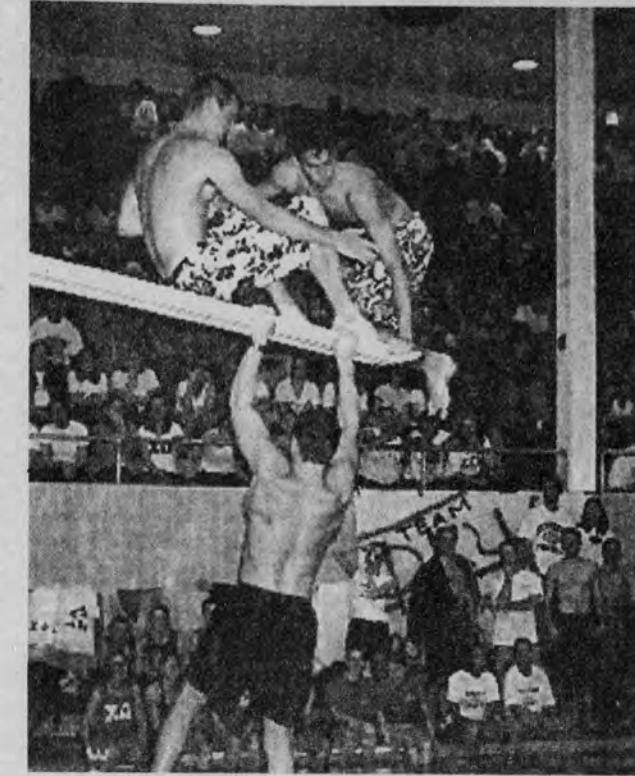

"The Greek system is integrated and we are all interested in supporting each other and each other's philanthropies," said Sydney Levine '05, a member of Pi Beta Phi. "I feel as though people only see what they want to see and ignore the fact that even though joining a sorority is great socially, the social scene extends out into the community as well."

In addition to national philanthropy, sororities hold events that support the local community. Many of the sororities devote their time to programs that benefit the Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition, "Big Brothers/Big Sisters," nursing homes and schools in the surrounding communities. These service projects represent the generosity of college students who donate their time to those in need. The events show that students are more than willing to take time out of their busy schedules to improve the community.

"Sororities do provide a social outlet, however they are also so much more than that. We really stress the importance of coming together as a sisterhood to give back to the community and serve those around us. That's what people need to realize—service is an integral part of a sorority, social life is just a benefit," said Alison Stinson '05, a member of Chi Omega. It is clear that sororities at the

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Courtesy of Delta Gamma

Delta Gamma and Pi Beta Phi's Wing Eating Contest, top left and right, which took place on Wed. night at the Lewisburg Hotel, was both a monetary and messy success. Bottom left, students are shown monkeying around at last year's Anchor Splash, also sponsored by Delta Gamma.

University are nothing like those represented on MTV's "Sorority Life." What they're really about—the betterment of society, increasing social awareness and the aptitude of the girls involved—lies beneath the social façade and is one of the best reasons that fraternity and sorority life has been thriving for so many years.

Active students in Admissions

By CAROLYN WAKULCHIK
Writer

It knows you. It has seen all of your records. It was tracking you pretty heavily right up until your first year as a college student. No, it's not any form of secret agency or even Public Safety—it's the Office of Admissions.

But the admissions process is far from scary. Even though the semi-secretive system of evaluating students is over for all of us on campus, it is not the case for everyone who visits the dents see more of a complete picture. It gives them a chance to make a more informed decision. By coming and spending a morning here, it puts them in a better position to make the best choice."

In an effort to help students make the right choice in selecting a college, specific parts of the Open House are emphasized. Essman said that if a student was pressed for time, he would urge him or her to take a tour. Tours are given regularly 33 times per week by about 50 different tour guides. Tour Guide Student Coordinator and tour by current students, prospective also found that the tour guides played a large role in making an impact on visiting students.

Stephanie Larkin from Canton, Ohio, visited the University for the recent Open House and found that her tour guide's personal touch made all of the difference. She attributed his success in making her feel comfortable to his efforts to connect with each student while on the tour.

"My tour guide was hilarious and enhanced the beautiful campus even more. He made it seem

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

T. Patrick Halley III '05 gives a tour to prospective students during Open House. He is one of many students who enjoys working for the Office of Admissions.

University. The Office of Admissions provides a variety of services for prospective students. Located at the center of campus in Freas Hall, it routinely provides tours, information sessions, interviews and print information.

For special events, such as the Open House held Saturday, extra preparation is needed. "The job of the admissions process is to represent the Bucknell and all of the different facets of the school to the best of our abilities," said Matt Essman, assistant director of Admissions. "With an Open House, it lets student Julie Schmidt '05 sees the value in taking a campus tour as well.

"For the prospective student, a tour gives them a chance to connect with someone at Bucknell that they probably wouldn't have had the chance to otherwise," Schmidt said. "Most students don't randomly stop students and ask how they like Bucknell, so this gives them a comfort zone to open up and ask them questions, to find out if Bucknell would be a community that they would want to be a part of."

With tours being conducted like the school was a really fun place to be," Larkin said. "I wasn't even expecting to look at any rural campuses, but his input and the way he presented the school in an informal manner made me reconsider looking at a small school."

Students are not always aware of the preparation and involvement of the Office of Admissions in current students' lives. Tour guides provide the most visible example of the commitment of Admissions to the development and affirmation of the current student body as well as to the prospective students.

Applications are taken each year to fill a limited number of new openings available. This year, Essman cited an overwhelming interest from students in the position. He believes this sends a positive message to the student body and the prospective students and separates Bucknell from other universities.

"I've never seen so many students involved in the admissions process. This is great because it is the students getting involved with the process—that interaction—that really strengthens the whole process here," Essman said. "Current students are really the ones that sell the school."

Some first-year students that worked during the Open House felt that being involved with the process made them appreciate the work that went on behind the scenes. Ben Hatch '07 felt this way.

"I don't think that the people in Admissions get enough credit for all that they do on campus. They contact departments and individual students for the Open House and train tour guides as well," Hatch said. "They have it down to a system now because they are so organized, but they still need student volunteers to make things go smoothly. My advice is that more students should definitely get involved."

First-year students are not the only ones who see the value of being a part of the work that goes on behind the scenes. Schmidt realized that being involved with the Office of Admissions has shown her something about herself. She found that as a current student, Admissions not only provided her with a job on campus, but taught her a lesson as well.

"The most important thing I learned while working on this side [of Admissions] is figuring out that Bucknell isn't for everyone," Schmidt said. "You are so biased about the fact that you love Bucknell that it's hard to understand that people wouldn't have the same connection that you have with the school."

welcomes you to
BUCKNELL STUDENT APPRECIATION DAY
NOVEMBER 20TH

Receive a
"45% DISCOUNT"
and FREE gift wrapping on your total purchases.

A great time to start your holiday shopping!!
Light refreshments will be available midday for your enjoyment.

Sign up for the PRIZE drawings held at 4:30 p.m.

$15.00 OFF YOUR Therapeutic Massage
by
Norm Showers
Certified Massage Therapist

By Appointment
Phone: (570) 742-9189
78 Jones Road
Milton, PA 17847
FIRST MASSAGE

FEATURES

The Roller Mills Antique Mall, located on St. Mary's Street in Lewisburg, has over 20,000 people visit per month. All antiques being sold in the store must have been made before 1975.

Come find a unique antique

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The largest retail business in Lewisburg is not the University Bookstore, a restaurant or a Market Street store—it's an antique shop. The antique business is and thriving in the borough of Lewisburg, offering a surplus of shops and antique malls to select from.

"The types of people who are drawn to Lewisburg tend to have that nostalgic mindset," said Craig Bennett, owner of the Roller Mills Antique Mall and Street of Shops facility. "It's your picture-perfect small town America."

Perhaps it is this appeal that has led to the success of the many antique establishments in Lewisburg.

"We have over 20,000 people come here a month," Bennett said, referring to his Roller Mills facility. "In fact, we are the largest retail establishment in the borough." While the largest, this facility is not Lewisburg's only location for antique hunting. There are several, including Street of Shops and Silver Moon. Each offers visitors its own unique charm.

Roller Mills is located on St. Mary's Street in Lewisburg. "We have about 400 antique dealers. It is the largest continually open facility in the state," Bennett said.

The vendors and items in Roller Mills must adhere to fairly tight guidelines. Everything in the store must have been made before 1975. The history of the building predates that regulation by almost a hundred years.

"The St. Mary's Street facility was built around 1883," Bennett said. "It operated as a flour mill. At one time it put out over 350 barrels a day of Oriole brand flour."

The setting provides an air of history, accented by its large collection of antiques.

Heirlooms are not the only attraction at Roller Mills.

"There's always the food issue," Bennett said. "I don't know where you can get a better original gourmet sandwich than at The Little Red Hen."

Up Route 15 you can find the Silver Moon Antique Mall. This mall, while smaller, features a more eclectic selection not limited to a strict time period. Due to this range, even college students can find familiar childhood items.

"There's something here for everybody," said Susan Miller, an employee of the mall.

This facility features the collections of 65 to 70 vendors, and since it is on Route 15, it receives a lot of thru-traffic from New York and Canada.

"Something will sit on the shelf here forever, and then one day the right person will come along, and it will be just what they were looking for," Miller said. "It's fun to hunt and it's fun to shop."

Visitors hunt for these items in clean, organized booths—most of which contain items specific to one antique category.

"There are people who just live for going to these things," said Silver Moon vendor, Lorraine Witner.

There is also a Street of Shops on Front Street in Lewisburg. The

Another titillating edition brought to you by ...

Sex and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I'm a first-year and recently have been spending a lot (and I mean a good portion) of time with a friend who is an upperclassman. When we're together we usually just relax, talk and watch television. And of course when watching television, we cuddle like crazy and act like we're a couple. I finally addressed the situation because I had no idea where it was going, and it was a little confusing. In simplest terms, I was told that he wanted something more to happen, but pretty much couldn't let it because he "knows" that it wouldn't work out in the end, and he'd wind up hurting me. What he didn't realize was that he had been leading me on, and ouch! It did hurt! The thing is, it's impossible to remain mad at him. I love hanging out and would rather have him in my life as a friend than not at all, but that would lead to cuddling. I do like him and I know I'd be fine just hanging out and cuddling, knowing it wouldn't go anywhere. It's just frustrating that he won't give me a chance. Why won't he try something that he said he wanted to happen? I don't know what to do! Do I tell him that I truly fell for him and attempt to get him to pull his head out of his butt or do I just forget him? Thanks.

—Extremely Frustrated & Confused

Dear Frustrated,

At this point, I would not worry about the future too much. You need to decide what is going to be best for you to do right now. The way I see it, you have a couple of options. You can continue on as things are now and remain "friends who cuddle." You need to really ask yourself if this is something that you are going to be able to handle emotionally. This guy has pretty much come out and told you that he does not want anything to happen between the two of you right now. It sounds as though he means it... at least for now. To continue on like this might end up being difficult and even painful for you. You need to ask yourself if you are willing to risk getting hurt. It sounds as if this guy really cares for you, but you have to realize that he may never care for you in the way that you want him to. Although he may eventually change his mind, you should be prepared to deal with the fact that he may not.

All that being said, I would advise you to continue hanging out with him and maintaining a friendship. However, I would definitely suggest that you do some real thinking about whether or not the cuddling is going to complicate things more for you. It sounds as though he views the cuddling as something more platonic, while you are reading more into it. Ask yourself, can the cuddling be something more unemotional for you? If you answered "no" to that question, then I would say that you should probably not do it anymore when you guys hang out. Continue to spend time with this guy, but don't make him your sole priority. Definitely don't sit around waiting for him, keep your options open and see other people. If this guy comes around, great, but if not, there will be someone else for you!

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to The Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What is the worst pet name you have ever heard?

A well-organized vendor's booth at Silver Moon Antique Mall.

Arizona's Café: exotic food and a festive atmosphere

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Because a person only celebrates his or her 19th birthday once, it is proper to honor that day. For my special day a few months ago, my fabulous friends treated me to a night out on the town. To start the night off right, we took a leisurely drive a few miles down the road to Danville to enjoy some tasty Mexican food at Arizona's Café.

Arizona's offers the perfect blend of food, fun and aesthetically pleasing décor. The environment, heightened by Mexican accessories and a bright color scheme, is casual and fun, the perfect setting for a birthday party. The food, varying from plentiful portions of traditional tacos to some more exotic enchilada and burrito treats, was delicious.

For my dining delight, I chose an exotic portabella mushroom, cheese and roasted red pepper burrito. Hidden somewhere beneath a mound of cheese, they were artery-clogging in the worst way, which only made them that much more of a pleasure to eat. Served with some tasty refried beans and a colorful rice medley, I was both stuffed and satisfied.

Ashley Maliken and friends enjoyed delicious Mexican food at Arizona's Café.

Less of a fan of Mexican food, Faizal Asumda '06 opted for a more traditional steak. Grilled well-done with a hint of Cajun spice to titillate the taste-buds, Asumda and his hearty appetite were both satiated with this choice.

"For a Mexican restaurant I was pleasantly surprised. I loved it; it was quite good," Asumda said.

My party weren't the only people to enjoy dinner—Adam Yukeison '05 finds both the atmosphere and quality of food reason enough to return to Arizona's soon. "Last week was my first trip to Arizona's, and I definitely plan on going again soon. I loved the atmosphere and I love how it's in the middle of nowhere. You can enjoy some Mexican in the country; a burrito on the farm," Yukeison said.

More important than the quality of the food was the experience to be had. Arizona's offered us a chance to get together in a warm environment while enjoying delicious food and each other's company. I recommend it to anyone who is in the mood for plane ticket-free ride to Mexico, complete with burritos.

The exterior of Arizona's deceives patrons as to what lies within.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

November 14, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 10 Sports:

What is seven minutes of pain in the grand scheme of things? Bucknell mens crew intends to find out. See page B2

Bison remain undefeated in Patriot League

With a scoreless tie against league foe Holy Cross, the Bison end their season 5-0-2 in Patriot League play

By CHRISTA SAWKO
Writer

It was Senior day for the men's soccer team as it played its final game of the regular season against Holy Cross this past Saturday in Lewisburg. The cold 40 °F weather and the fatigue that the team still faced from its victory last weekend over Maryland were not on its side. The Orange and Blue could not give their top effort, but still upheld another playoff team and ended the game in a tie. This is the first time in the University's soccer history that the team has ended a season without a single Patriot League loss.

"The team could not muster up any energy following the Maryland effort. Both physically and mentally the UMD game took its toll on us," said Head Coach Brendan Nash.

The Crusaders came out in ruthless pursuit of a place in the post season tournament while the Bison had already earned a playoff spot. The Crusaders were able to get two shots on goal within the first 10 minutes of the game. Kevin Clifford '04, Bucknell's start-

The Bison were scoreless in their last Patriot League match of the season. The Orange and Blue were able to outshoot Holy Cross 22-18 and maintained an 8-2 advantage in corner kicks. With the tie Bucknell has now moved to 11-6-2 overall and 5-0-2 in Patriot League play.

ing goalkeeper for the game, saved both. The Bison retaliated with two shots as well, but both were stopped by Holy Cross' keeper Richard Whipple. Half time ended with 0-0 on the board.

The Crusaders returned to the field after halftime with even more intensity than they started the game with. They had three shots on goal within the first six minutes, but the Bison defense would not give the Crusaders a chance to break its undefeated record.

The Bison woke up in the final minutes of the game and kept the ball on the offensive side of the field. They took an impressive six shots in the final six minutes. The team came close to scoring the winning goal, but the Holy Cross defense refused to quit and made a team save on the goal line.

The game then entered two rounds of overtime that would be a battle to end the deadlock. The Bison drilled the Crusaders offensively and made three shots, but could not convert. Holy Cross made three shots as well, but could not get the ball to hit the net. When the game ended

"This weekend is what it all comes down to, and I have confidence we will get it done."

—Head Coach
Brendan Nash

Whipple had made nine saves, while Bison goalkeepers Clifford and Adam Edwards '06 made two saves apiece. This was the ninth Bison shutout of the year. Bucknell outshot the Crusaders, 22-18.

The Bison ended the regular season with an 11-6-2 record overall and 5-0-2 in Patriot League play. Bucknell holds the No. 1 position in the Patriot League regular season standings. For this reason the Bison will host the conference tournament today and Sunday at the mod fields. The Orange and Blue will defend their number one rank starting today at 1:30 p.m. for a chance to advance to the championship game on Sunday.

"I feel that the team is anxious to compete for the Patriot League title. This has been our primary goal all season, and now that the Patriot League tournament is here, I believe the team is ready to show everyone that we deserve to be Patriot League Champions," Assistant Coach Brian Suskiewicz said. If the team wins the Patriot League Championship, it will earn a trip to the NCAA Tournament. It has a large advantage because it will be playing on its home field. If the team uses the talent it used to defeat the number two team in the nation, the title will be at its finger tips. "We feel that we are the team to be beat and as long as we play our game we cannot be stopped," Eric Brunton '06 said. The team has to be prepared for the other league teams that are ready to kick it up a notch with the desire for the league title in their heads as well.

"All season long I have told our guys if they bring their best effort we can accomplish quite a bit. This weekend is what it all comes down to, and I have confidence we will get it done," Nash said.

Volleyball suffers second loss of season

By TERI SCHLANG
Writer

The Bucknell Bison and American Eagles, the top two women's volleyball teams in the Patriot League, competed in an all out battle in Davis Gym on Saturday night. American was victorious with a 3-1 win over the Bison. This was the last regular season game for both the Bison and American, and the deciding game for who would host the Patriot League Tournament.

Brandi Trapasso '04 and Breean Trapasso's '04 competed in their final home contest and Bucknell honored them with the "Rock the House" senior night.

"Brandi Trapasso and Bree Trapasso have established a work ethic in Davis Gym unmatched by any other athlete in my 14 years coaching at Bucknell," said head volleyball Coach Cindy Opalski. "They make people around them better each and every day in practice. They care about their teammates very deeply and have left little doubt about how they want to end their career at Bucknell."

Both teams played an impressive four sets. The Bison took the early lead by winning the first set. After being down 28-25 the Bison won the next five points straight to start the evening off right on three American hitting errors and a block from Sarah Groman '07 and Jessica Bissett '05.

In game two, American was not going to tolerate another loss. American broke the 10-10 tie shooting ahead to 18-11. Bucknell moved in to make the kill but could get no closer than 23-19. American won the set 30-23. American dominated through the third set winning 30-20.

The Bison put up a good fight during the fourth and final set. It looked as though they were going to extend the match to a fifth set. But the Bison couldn't hold American off.

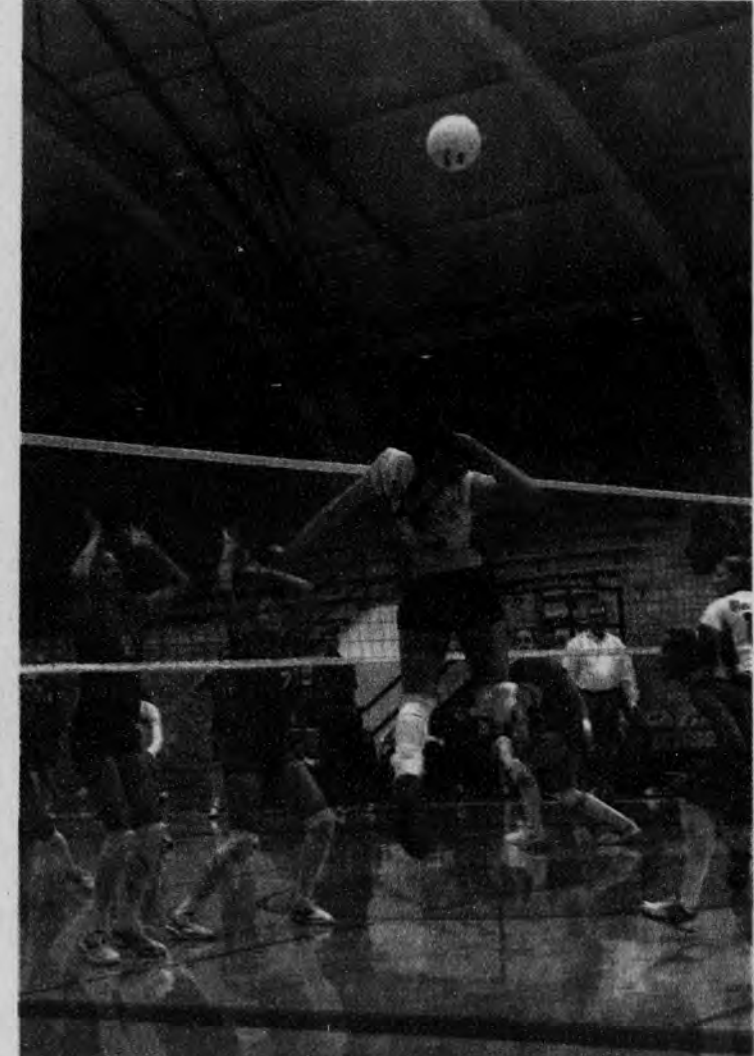

The Bison took a seven-point lead of 15-8 after Jackie Leahy's '05 kill from the back of the court. Trailing by seven points, American made a comeback scoring six points in a row. Brandi Trapasso had three straight kills bringing the Bison up 22-20. American proceeded to score seven straight points, en route to its final victory of the regular season.

"I thought the American game was one of the most energetic and intense games I've played here at Bucknell," Trapasso said. "I thought everyone on the court, the sidelines, and in the stands were cheering with more heart than I've ever seen. We did what we came out to do, which was to show American that it's not going to be easy to win the Patriot League tournament."

Leahy led the Bison with 19 kills. Trapasso followed Leahy up with 18 kills and 12

See VOLLEYBALL, page B6

Brandi Trapasso '04 spikes the ball in a recent game against American University. Recently Trapasso was named the Patriot League Player of the Week after a number of strong performances.

Bucknell falls to Lafayette

By JOSH HERWITT
Writer

It was the sight the Bison were hoping never to see—fumbles, missed tackles and snaps flying over the punter's head: the memories that plagued the team last season.

From the opening drive of the game, the Bucknell football team found itself slowly losing grip on its Patriot League title hopes as it fell 35-17 to Lafayette in a disappointing loss Saturday at Fisher Field.

Bucknell (5-5 overall, 3-2 in the Patriot League) fell to third place in the league, tied with Fordham, as undefeated Colgate grew closer to the league title after its 17-10 win over Lehigh.

It started and ended with the Bison defense, which couldn't find a way to stop the prolific Lafayette rushing attack. Lafayette junior tailback Joe McCourt opened the game with a 2-yard score that capped off a 10-play, 67-yard drive for the Leopards.

McCourt rushed 34 times for a career-high 209 yards and career-best four touchdowns as the Leopards earned their first league win in front of a Senior Day crowd.

"Lafayette did a tremendous job of running the football. They dominated the line of scrimmage and put us on our heels early," Bucknell Head Coach Tim Landis said.

The Lafayette offense was run under quarterback Marko Glavic, who completed 16 of 23 passes for 203, often finding his favorite target John Weyrauch downfield.

Falling behind early to a 14-3 lead, the Bucknell offense had to play catch-up for the rest of the game, playing away from its traditional spread option attack that has created problems for opposing defenses all season. With up-and-coming backup quarterback John Jackson '05 out with a hip pointer, the offense struggled under backup quarterback Cole Ciesnolevich '05. Ciesnolevich threw for only 146 yards on 8 of 14 passes in his first start of the season.

Lafayette (4-5 overall, 1-4 in the Patriot League) went to the locker room with their 11-point lead and never looked back.

First-string quarterback Daris Wilson '05, still recovering

See FOOTBALL, page B5

Sports Ops

BISON CREW

CALM LIKE A BOMB

By BRENT BUTLER
Sports Editor

In order to understand rowing, you must first understand pain. Racing without pain is like not racing at all. In every race a rower is confronted with one simple fact: no matter what hurts at the beginning, by the end of the race something else will hurt worse.

"What is seven minutes of pain in the grand scheme of things," Garrett Samuels '06 said. "The pain you feel during the race is nothing compared to the glory of seeing all of your competitors finish behind you. When you cross that finish line, all of the pain, the extra hours of training, the early morning practices ... It's all worth it."

Rowing inflicts a level of pain associated with few other sports. In other sports, the possibility of pain and suffering is there: the head-on collision in football, the body check against the boards in hockey. In rowing, however, there is no possibility of pain; it is inevitable.

"Marathon runners talk about hitting 'the wall' at the 23rd mile of the race. What rowers confront isn't a wall; it's a hole—an abyss of pain, which opens up in the second minute of the race. Large needles are being driven into your thigh muscles, while your forearms seem to be splitting. Then the pain becomes confused and disorganized, not like the windedness of the runner or the leg burn of the biker but an all-over, savage unpleasantness," elite rower Ashleigh Teitel said. "As you pass the 500-meter mark, with three-quarters of the race still to row, you realize with dread that you are not going to make it to the finish, but at the same time the idea of letting your teammates down by not rowing your hardest is unthinkable."

The oldest collegiate sport in the United States is all about determination, pain, stamina and sweat. Theoretically, rowing is an extremely simple sport; pick up the oar, place it in the water, pull your hardest and repeat. Ninety percent of the technique of the stroke can be taught within 10 minutes; the last 10 percent can take a lifetime.

For Bucknell men's crew, the team is working to perfect that last 10 percent.

"Each practice we have is making us stronger, whether it is on the water at 5:30 in the morning or on the ergs at night. We know that we are getting better," Dan Schenk '06 said. "I don't really mind the morning practices, because it doesn't matter what time our training is. Each practice the boat is getting faster."

The Bucknell squad has placed its focus on the heavyweight eight competition. This race is comprised of two to six 60-foot shells, each with eight rowers and their coxswain. Each boat strives to move as one as it races down the 2,000-meter course. The race consists of approximately 230 strokes of explosive drives and controlled rowing until the finish line is crossed.

"Calm like a bomb. That's what rowing is for our team," Samuels said. "Each recovery has to be controlled and calm, but each stroke through the water is like an explosion of power."

For most people the anaerobic threshold, which is the point at which the body's muscles have exhausted their oxygen supply and start burning other fuel, is where they throw in the towel. Anaerobic work is 19 times harder than aerobic work.

"Rowing is all about working harder than the other guy," Matthew Fornataro '05 said. "Crew is a sport that demands skill but places a great importance on hard work and persistence."

Courtesy of Anthony Fornataro '03
The Bucknell novice crew shoves off the dock at a recent regatta in Philadelphia. Novice rowers are just learning the pain associated with crew.

At the elite level, rowers fire off the start at their sprint speed—53 strokes per minute. With each stroke exerting 95 pounds of force on the blade end, rowers cross their anaerobic threshold within the first couple of strokes. Then there are over 200 more to the finish line.

Races are not won on the water; they are won on the day of the race. Instead the race is to show what has been accomplished in practice. During winter training, the Bucknell team is not able to row and therefore must rely on alternate forms of training in order to prepare for the upcoming season.

Aside from running or biking, the other main method of training for rowers is called "erging". The ergometer simulates the movements, pain, and overall unpleasantness of crew with none of the enjoyable parts of the rowing experience.

"Think of aerobics plus weight lifting minus the enjoyment derived from either of them. Combine endurance with explosiveness and precise form. Think of agony; that's the erg," Samuels said.

"Waking up at 5:30 in the morning and walking through the snow to go erg isn't something that most people would ever want to do," Schenk said. "There are days when you hate it, but when it finally comes down to the day of the race, all of the training you have done in the winter makes it all worth it."

The key to rowing is to come off the water regretting nothing. All of the work, dedication and loyalty to the team is something that will never be forgotten. In other sports, an absent player can be replaced without a great loss. In crew, however, a boat with a missing rower is like a bird with a broken wing; the team cannot function. You dare not miss a practice for fear of letting your teammates down. Every time a rower thinks of getting back into bed in the morning, he knows that he would have to face the anger and disappointment of his closest friends. For the Bucknell men's crew the training will never be complete, for the race of life will never be finished. There will always be improvements to be made and new challenges to face.

Courtesy of Anthony Fornataro '03
The heavyweight eight competes in the Froshite regatta last weekend. Every stroke they pull has to be controlled and calm, but still maintain explosiveness.

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

A life lost too soon

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

It wasn't that long ago that the Red Sox organization was buzzing with anticipation about a stocky, soft-spoken young leftfielder who had been turning heads with the team's AA affiliate in Trenton.

It was sometime beyond the end of the 1998 season, and the franchise was still wincing from the pangs of having let walk its most prolific hitter in late November. They'd need a heck of a player to replace Mo Vaughn, who had thwacked out 40 dingers and batted .337 before he thundered off to Anaheim as a free agent.

What the Red Sox needed, most desperately, was for some player to be in the right place at the right time, for someone to arise from the depths of the organization and alleviate the loss.

And Darnell Stenson, in 1999, was the right guy in the right place at the right time.

Big Mo was gone, but the Sox had this kid down at AA who looked like he would soon be ready to fill Vaughn's void—almost all 230 pounds of it.

Twenty-year-old Stenson was an imposing presence at the plate, a mighty left-handed hitter who could jolt the ball out of the Pawtucket Red Sox' newly refurbished McCoy Stadium with impressive regularity.

In baseball, perhaps more than any other sport, it isn't very wise to get ahead of oneself when considering prospects. But everybody does it. It's tempting. With any imagination, it's quite pleasant to imagine where a young man's potential will land him in the fast-approaching future.

With Stenson, the Red Sox saw great possibility. He just needed a little time, a little experience, a little polish—then he could be plugged right into the heart of the order.

The Sox thought enough of Stenson to simultaneously promote him to AAA and pull his defensive specialty in from left field to first base as part of the effort to meld him into a cast of Vaughn. It was a lot to ask, but it was what the organization needed.

Stenson wasn't one to complain about that sort of thing. By all accounts, he wasn't one to complain about much of anything. Despite all that he was capable of at the plate, he retained a commendably mature level of humility.

By the end of '99, he had begun to outgrow his initial ungainliness at the new position. As his apprehensions faded, so too did his awkwardness.

He was hitting to right, to left, to center—and he was doing it with power and timeliness. Those who watched him were sure it wouldn't be long before he was doing the same in Boston.

like an aberration when he continued his stagnancy at the plate in 2002.

And just like that, the buzz had faded into disappointment, into impatience and into a change of heart for the Red Sox organization. At the dawn of 2003, they dropped him completely. That's just how it happens sometimes. It didn't work out.

Courtesy of Reuters
Darnell Stenson is congratulated after a successful play by teammate Wily Mo Peña. Unfortunately, Stenson's life came to an abrupt end last week after being brutally murdered.

He finally got the call in early July of 2000. He was there for a week. Never saw a pitch. Never left the bench.

The big Sox sent him back to Pawtucket, but figured they'd see him again quite soon.

As it turned out, they didn't. Somehow, for some reason, the bottom just fell out. Stenson began to slump and did right on into 2001. His .237 average from that season stopped looking Stenson, rather than wasting time on bitterness, dug right in with his new organization, the Cincinnati Reds. He didn't care that they sent him back to AA; he just appreciated the opportunity to mend whatever had gone wrong in the past two years.

After all he was only 25. There was a lot of time left to right ship.

Sure enough, the Reds called him up on August 15 and he made his first start two days later, punching out three of the team's five hits. This was the Stenson everyone was waiting for—maybe a little later than they had expected and with a different team, but still in a fitting place for a once-shining prospect.

On Sept. 28, the last day of the season, Stenson rapped out a home run, a solo shot, that would be the last run the team scored in a long 2003 season.

That was vindication. That was the spark everyone had expected they would see, now five years removed from his brilliant '98 season with Trenton.

What no one ever expected, or imagined, was that less than three months after his major-league debut, the gentle and reserved Stenson would be found dead on a roadside in Arizona, a victim of a nonsensical and inhuman crime.

It was an act of cruelty difficult to fathom. The sturdy Reds outfielder, honing his skills in the Arizona Fall League at the time, was kidnapped, shot execution-style and run over with his own car last week.

It is as sad—and disturbing—an ending as any career can possibly have.

And there is nothing that can be said to make it any less sickening, unsettling or frightening.

What might be most respectful, though, is to remember Stenson's potential, his work ethic; his quiet determination—instead of his demise at the hands of those soulless criminals.

Maybe he wasn't Mo Vaughn. But in Stenson, baseball lost a good man last week.

This loss is not, and will never be, at all comprehensible.

There was a time back in 2000, when Stenson was still a beaming first baseman for the PawSox, when everyone knew he was on the verge of erupting into the major leagues, and the press, as it tends to do, had begun to postulate an exact date for his deliverance with the big league team. He was, after all, so close.

Stenson was bright enough, even at the young age of 21, to know how fickle the affairs of fate can be.

"Some guys," he had explained to the Providence Journal-Bulletin, "are close for a long time."

Right now we just wish it could have been for a little bit longer.

Week 10: the weekend of upsets and underdogs

By MIKE ORTA
Writer

I guess we can refer to Week 10 of the NFL season as "Upset weekend." Three teams that had only one win and seven losses upended their opponents on Sunday. This was the weekend where the underdogs bit back; three of the best teams in the NFL lost in "trap" games.

The Vick-less Falcons winning in the Meadowlands? The fizzling Chargers beating the Vikings? The toothless Jaguars chomping on the Colts? Believe it baby. It's the mere possibility of wins like these that keep fans coming to games when their teams are well out of the playoff hunt.

The Falcons went into the Meadowlands with nobody outside the team on their side. The Giants get hot this time of year. It's too cold and windy for Atlanta to play well. Atlanta recently benched its whole starting secondary. Lastly and most importantly, Kurt Kitner, not Mike Vick, was starting as quarterback.

So, the Giants win in an easy game and warm up for the rest of the schedule right? Wrong. Dan Reeves gets magical win number 200, and Fassel gets to listen to rumors of his impending dismissal again. Who would have thought that Atlanta's quarterback could only complete nine passes, and the team would still win? You can count me out.

The Giants got "well Dunn," as in Warrick Dunn. The little man romped and stomped all over Strahan & Co. It was a spoiler game. Atlanta can't really salvage this season, but they can go out there on Sundays and play some ball for fun and profit. That's what they did. That's all it took too. Well, that and Tiki putting the ball on the ground in the red zone a couple of times.

Have you seen replays of when Flutie threw the Hail Mary pass in the final seconds to beat the Hurricanes in '84? I have. It's considered one of the greatest plays in college football history. It's plays like that which define football players. It's moments like that which make the rest of the game seem easy. That's how Flutie wins. He knows the hard moments and the impossible moments. Not that Minnesota for Randy and his cronies. Problem is, there is a very feisty, very competitive little man standing in their way, and he wants to scrap.

The Vikings watched in awe as Flutie danced, hopped, ran and passed all over, around and through quite as pleasant for them as it was before this past weekend.

Peyton Manning was looking to have a nice big day passing Sunday, as his Colts traveled to the First Coast to face the Jaguars. Well, Manning got his numbers, but he didn't get the proverbial "axe" to its opponents Sunday, and got the team to stop chopping itself in the foot with turnovers. Fred Taylor backed up his trash talk to Mike Doss by running right over him on his game-winning 30-plus yard romp to the end zone in the final minutes of the fourth quarter.

Our favorite Leftwich didn't commit a turnover, and the defense held Indy to less than 50 total yards rushing. Looks like a stout running defense finally helped the Jags win. Del Rio is laying his foundation, and it might actually start paying off. Now if they could just do something about that pass defense.

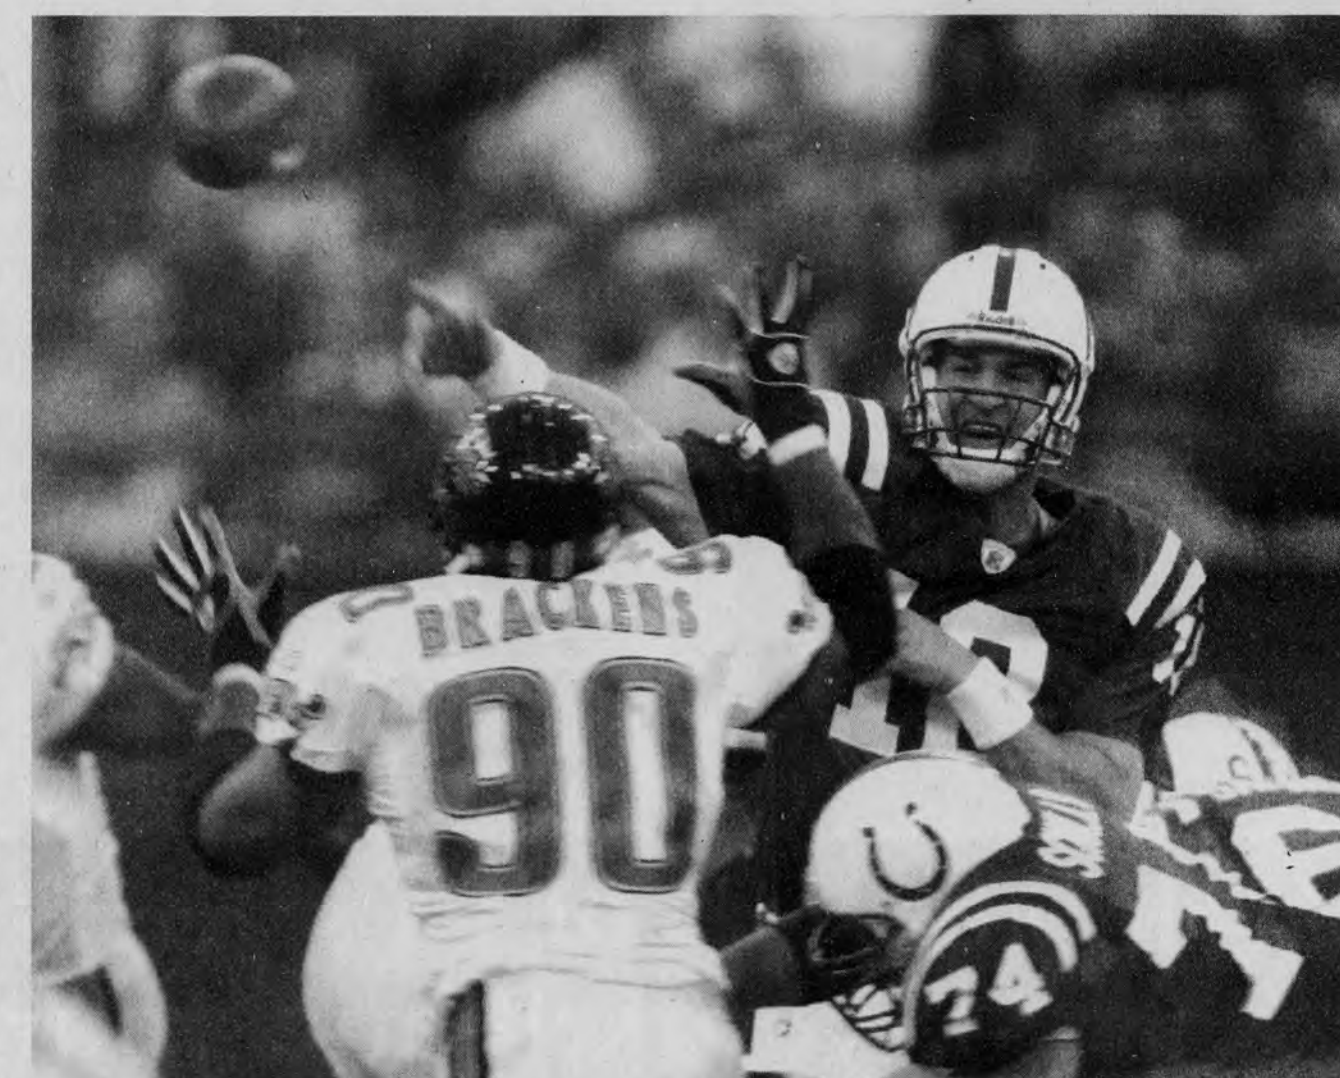

The point here is that none of these three one-and-seven teams seemed to have much of a chance going into Sunday's games. They were facing opponents who had more talent, more confidence and a few more wins. Last weekend showed that all of that doesn't mean jack if you don't show up to play every single Sunday.

The NFL season is a marathon, not a sprint, or a series of sprints. The Colts, Vikings and Giants may have been hot or getting hot, but what they need more than streaks is consistency.

The teams that consistently play well are the teams that go the farthest. Sure, Fassel may be able to get his team hot in November and get his team into the playoffs, but the team that you see in September is still basically the team you see in November and December.

Kansas City has been playing the same football all year long. Carolina has stuck with the same formula and starters as well. Tennessee hasn't changed its approach or game play for quite awhile. These also happen to be the best teams in football right now.

They don't wait until November to start playing. They start playing in training camp and continue to do it all season. We just don't start to notice it until the streaky teams start to slide.

Courtesy of Reuters
Peyton Manning passes in a recent game against the Jaguars. Manning passed for over 340 yards and had a pair of touchdowns. Despite Manning's impressive stats the Colts were unable to pull out the victory.

everything else is a cakewalk, it's just a shame that only a handful of coaches ever saw the potential the now 41-year-old man had to offer.

So the Vikings are in town, and it figures to be a nice vacation from them. Two passing touchdowns, two rushing touchdowns. Who would have thought a guy in the fourth decade of his life could play like that? The Vikings didn't, and let's just say that sunny San Diego will never be win. Peyton passed for over 340 yards and a pair of touchdowns. Stats like that would seem to indicate why another Colts' win, but that's why they play the game folks.

Del Rio got his team to take the

These shoes were found 46 yards from the crash caused by a drunk driver. Carissa Deason was thrown 30 yards and not even her father, a doctor, could save her.

Friends Don't Let Friends Drive Drunk.

Help keep all of us safe :
Please take care of yourself and your friends
this weekend.
— from the writers, photographers and editors of The Bucknellian

Bucknell's Predictions

By JOHN HENNING & ASHWIN RAMAKRISHNA
Contributing Writers

We kept track of our picks and after going 4-2 last week, Schwin is at the .500 mark with a 5-5 record. Papa is acting his age, paying too much attention to detail and falling behind at a 3-7 record (2-4 last week). Enough talk—on to our picks.

Giants @ Eagles (1 p.m.)

PAPA: The New York Giants could be the most frustrating football team to predict from week to week. They manhandle the undefeated Vikings, struggle to beat the hapless Jets in overtime and then get dominated by the absolutely horrible Atlanta Falcons with Kurt Kinner at quarterback. Well, at least this week they don't have to face such an imposing figure at quarterback.

Giants win 41-3

SCHWIN: All I have to say is McNabb plays better with the Afro. The Giants will show up this week much like Oklahoma did last weekend. The Eagles aren't Texas A&M, but ... Giants win 77-0

Packers @ Buccaneers (4 p.m.)

PAPA: The Bucs are sailing in the same ship as the Giants. One week they play like the Super Bowl champions, the next they are playing like they did prior to the Tony Dungy era. Green Bay's playoff hopes are looking brighter due to Minnesota's recent three-game swoon. The Cheeseheads will be smiling after Brett Favre and Ahman Green take this one over.

Packers win 24-10

SCHWIN: Every time I go against the Packers, they win; when I choose them, they lose. Since I like Favre and know they will hand the ball to Ahman Green, I think they will win. Therefore Bucs win 27-21

Cowboys @ Patriots (8:30 p.m.)

PAPA: This game is my least favorite to predict this week. I truly dislike both these teams. The Cowboys were thugs in the mid '90s and I will never be able to forgive them. The Patriots are one of the most boring football teams to watch in the history of football, yet they win games because of Bill Belichick's coaching. Well, for those of you that didn't know, Parcells taught Belichick everything he knows.

This one is painful; Cowboys win 3-2

SCHWIN: This one will come down to the wire. Then the choices become Tom Brady vs. Quincy Carter and the Tuna vs. well, Mini-tuna. I think Tom Brady and his smart decision-making makes the difference. Look for that last minute drive to become a factor. Patriots win 7-0

Steelers @ 49ers (9 p.m.)

PAPA: "20, 15, 10, 5, touchdown!" What's that, you ask? It's the announcer after Chad Scott gets beat deep once again. However, the Steelers' offense got going after dominating the Cardinals last week, which began Pittsburgh's improbable march into the playoffs. This week, it continues.

Steelers win 35-7

SCHWIN: As I said last weekend to my dad, the Steelers will make the playoffs and win 10 straight. Well, last week was win one of 10. Tim Rattay is expected to start again for the 49ers, but the Blitzburgh defense has been resurrected. Look for two certainties, Hines Ward will catch a touchdown pass, and Papa's favorite Chad Scott getting beat deep once more. Steelers win 31-10.

Football tries to rebound after Lafayette loss from a severely sprained ankle during the Towson game, came off the bench in the second half to complete seven of nine throws for 91 yards, including a 9-yard touchdown pass to Nisan Trotter '05 that finished off an 8-play, 80-yard drive with 9:03 left in the third period.

FOOTBALL from page B1

After Bucknell failed to capitalize on a Lafayette fumble, the ensuing punt was snapped over the head of punter Ryan Berry '05, setting up Glavic's 2-yard pass to David Nelson that put the Leopards up 21-3 with 12:32 left in the third quarter.

After being pinned at the 5-yard line by a Bucknell punt, Lafayette clinched the game when McCourt took the ball 54 yards to spark a 6 play, 95-yard drive that led to his fourth touchdown with 13:47 left in the game.

Ciesnolewicz came back into the game and found Frank Lazio '05 out of the backfield for a 43-yard touchdown pass. He then connected with Albert Marquardt '04 on the 2-point conversion with 2:22 left in the game, but it was too little, too late for the Bison. "I think it's safe to say that we are all disappointed in our performance against Lafayette," Landis said. "We made too many mistakes, which prevented us from getting back into the game."

But Landis and the rest of the Bucknell football team are still looking optimistically toward the conclusion of the season and their upcoming contest against Lehigh tomorrow.

"After being picked last in preseason league polls, I think our players have really responded well this year," Landis said. "Our focus will be trying to finish with a winning record in our league. We're only concerned with what our job is and that's playing well," Landis said.

"We will be considerable underdogs this weekend, thus we will have to play really well. I am hopeful that our players will respond with a great effort."

Bucknell will host Lehigh tomorrow at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium. Kickoff is set for 1 p.m.

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.
Milton, PA
570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

ROCK-N-BOWL

St. George Student Rentals

2004-2005 School Year
&
Second Semester '03-'04
2&3 BedRoom Units

Includes: Off Campus Parking Stove,
Refrigerator, DishWasher, Refuse Removal,
WaterSewer

Call Brad or Wanda
922-1205 or 898-8530

Vennari's

Large Cheese
Pizza only
$5.50!
Dine in Only
Monday-
Thursday

Vennari's Pizza
610 Market St.
524-0444

WANTED: LEADERS/PILOTS
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER IN OUR COMPANY,
THIS COULD BE YOUR OFFICE.

Now people will never see you in an office like this. But those few people have what it takes to be a Marine Officer. Officer Candidates School (OCS) is the first step towards preparing you for a future beyond anything you could imagine.

-Attend a PAID INTERNSHIP during the summer in Quantico, VA
NO OBLIGATION
Unparalleled LEADERSHIP TRAINING
-TUITION ASSISTANCE is available

For more information contact us @:
1-800-544-2259
or osowh@aol.com

www.MarineOfficer.com

NOW OFFERING
ONE MONTH'S FREE RENT
FOR ALL REMAINING
'04-'05 UNITS!

BISON PROPERTIES

- Professionally Managed and Maintained
- High Speed Internet Available
- Two to Eight Bedrooms
- Now Accepting Applications for '05-'06

Call or E-mail Scott Bank '91
for more information

610-506-6676

bison.properties@comcast.net

CALL NOW TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF
LIMITED REMAINING INVENTORY.

YOUR PARENTS WILL THANK YOU!

Sports

Field hockey falls in semifinals

Women suffer heartbreaking 2-1 overtime loss to league foe Holy Cross

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell field hockey team suffered another overtime loss last Friday, losing a 2-1 heartbreaker at Holy Cross in the Patriot League Tournament semifinals. The loss eliminated the Bison from the tournament, bringing their season to an end.

It was the third loss in four overtime games for the Bison this year and was also the second time that the team lost a 2-1 game to Holy Cross.

The final score was not necessarily indicative of the the course of the season.

"I told the team on the bus ride home that I had a lot of fun this year," Lewis said. "This was a special group for me—it was our first year on Graham Field, and I thought the improvement in their play has been outstanding."

The teams were well-matched throughout the contest as both defenses played strongly and the offenses had similar shot tallies. The Bison managed 12 shots, while the Crusaders fired off nine.

What ultimately made the difference was the Bison's inability to finish shots, seconds into the first half.

With four minutes left in the half, the Bison retaliated when Callista Costopoulos '07 drilled one into the goal off penalty corner assists from Meiko Boynton '05 and Lindsey Gentel '04.

It was the third goal of the year for Costopoulos in her first season as a Bison.

The teams entered the second half at a 1-1 stalemate and remained that way for the final 35 minutes of regulation. The Crusaders did not make any shots during the half. The Bison took four, but Holy Cross goalie Jennifer Costilli

Friday, and they were," Lewis said. "Obviously, we're very disappointed in the outcome ... perhaps 'devastated' is a more appropriate word."

Holy Cross advances to the final round of the tournament, where they will face American for the league title.

Even though the Bison won't advance in the tournament as they would have liked, the team still discovered many positives about the year.

"We have learned that Bucknell field hockey can be the team everyone else wants to beat," Lewis said. "When we play together and play 'Bucknell Hockey,' we were pretty good this year."

For two Bison, co-captains Kate Ruda '04 and Gentel, this was the last game they will play with the team. Both were excellent team leaders for the squad and were an integral part of the Bison's success.

"I was pleased that Lindsey and Kate, along with their teammates, left it all out on the field," Lewis said. "Those two have been exceptional leaders for us all season long and they did everything in their power to advance us. I have to say it may have been one of Kate's strongest games and Lindsey, as she has been all year long, was her normal steady self."

Although the Bison are finished for the year, Gentel will have the opportunity to play another game when she represents Bucknell in the NFCA Senior All-Star Game later this month.

Four Bison were also named to the All-Patriot League squad. Gentel was named to the first team, while Ruda, Kelly O'Brien '06, and Liz Jordan '06 were named to the second team.

Overall, the season left the Bison with many things to be positive about and much to look forward to.

"Slowly, we are building a confidence level that a championship program needs," Lewis said. "As a few of my colleagues told me recently, 'you're so very close,' and I honestly believe that."

Lewis knows she is fortunate to have spent the season with this group of players, and is also excited about seasons down the road.

"Personally, I'm excited about the future of Bucknell field hockey and very proud to be the mentor and head coach of such a tremendous group of young women," Lewis said. "I'm the lucky one who gets to spend every day with them."

Bison end league season 11-2

VOLLEYBALL from page B1

digs. Chelsea Anderson '06 led both the Bison and American with 19 digs.

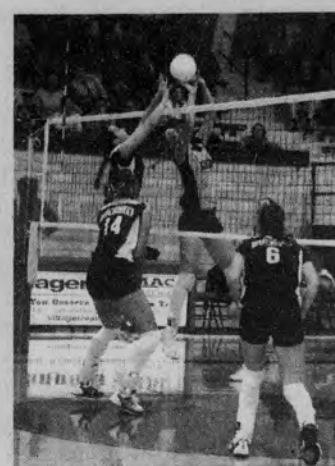

Statistically speaking the match was very close. Although American did lead in all aspects of the game, it was by a minuscule amount. American had 60 kills compared to Bucknell's 58. American had 77 digs compared to Bucknell's 74. American did not hit the Bison by a pretty large amount, .229 to .138. American also controlled the service part of the game leading nine aces to two.

"American is a very good team, but clearly, Brandi Trapasso was the best defensive player in the gym," Opalski said. "There were times that their hitters could not find the floor and we're talking about statistically, the best offensive team in the Patriot League."

Prior to Bucknell's loss to American, it had won three matches in a row including the match against Navy played on Friday night in Davis Gym. After its impressive season, Bucknell is ranked second for the Patriot League tournament, while American is ranked first.

The tournament will be played in two weeks in Washington, D.C. The first game that American dropped to the Bison was only their fifth game lost this season. American's League record is 13-0 and their all-time record since joining the League in 2001 is 41-0.

"Within the next two weeks, I am confident that

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
The Bison block American in an attempt to keep them from scoring.

we will be able to fix the few weaknesses that showed up in our game on Saturday," Bissett said. "Regardless of skill level, I know in my heart that we have the better work ethic and team unity. And in the end, I think that those factors will be key to earning the Patriot League championship."

American brought Bucknell's seven game winning streak to an end. The Bison suffered their only two losses of the season in league play to American. The Bison ended the season 11-2 in the league and 15-10 overall.

"Our team has gone through a very special transformation this past season," Opalski said. "I know in my heart, our players believe they deserve a piece of the championship. There are no secrets and few doubts; we know what we need to do to beat American. We will be successful next time out."

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Jenni Turner '05 works the ball towards the goal at an earlier game at Graham Field. The Orange and Blue outshot the Crusaders 12-9 and led in penalty corners 14-5.

quality of play, as the Bison put forth a superb effort.

Head Coach Heather Lewis felt that the Bison were really the best team on the field Friday despite the discouraging outcome.

"I told my team after the game, 'I thought we were the better team; I thought Holy Cross was the luckier team,' and sometimes you need a bit of luck to advance on in tournament play," Lewis said.

The team can also still be proud of what it achieved over despite coming very close and holding Holy Cross at bay during most of the game.

"We were very solid defensively; anytime you can hold a team without a shot—as we did in the second half—you put yourself in a position to win," Lewis said. "Unfortunately, we didn't capitalize on the other end and that was the difference."

It was the Crusaders who initiated the scoring when Jillian LeClair broke up a 0-0 tie with a goal 18 minutes, 51 kept her team alive with three saves in the period.

The game entered overtime, where the Crusaders slammed the door with an unassisted goal by Jenna Cook at 8:05.

The loss ended the Bison's season with a 9-8 overall record and 3-3 record in the league.

It was a disheartening outcome for the team after such a strong effort.

"We asked our team to be the best team out there on

Cool story
Hansel...

Write some cool stories for
sports...
e-mail ccarins@
or bbutler@

Cinema Center
Sollinsgrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall • 374-2849
Play Dates: November 13-20, 2003
Elf (PG)	1:30, 3:45, 8:45	Master & Commander (PG-13)	1:45, 7:40
Elf (PG)	12:15, 2:30, 4:50, 7:15	Looney Tunes (PG)	12:45, 3, 5, 7, 9
Run Away Jury (R)	1:15, 6:45	Scary Movie 3 (PG-13)	1:30, 5:20, 7:30, 9:40
Brother Bear (G)	12, 2:15, 4:30, 6:40, 8:45	School of Rock (PG-13)	4, 9:30
Matrix Revolutions (R)	1:45, 7:40	Texas Chainsaw (R)	12:40, 2:40, 5, 7:20, 9:20
Love Actually (G)	12:50, 3:45, 6:30, 9:10	Matrix Revolutions (R)	12:30, 3:30, 6:30, 9:20
Radio (PG)	1:15, 3:50, 6:20, 8:40
Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

Who Says You Can't Have It All?

53.2 cu. ft. of cargo space

Available with 4-wheel anti-lock brake system

Up to 130 lbs./ft. torque, 180 horsepower

30 MPG City 35 MPG Highway*

GET THE FEELING TOYOTA

You're lord and master of quite possibly the most versatile automobile on the planet. Matrix is an entirely new breed of vehicle-cutting edge styling, standard air conditioning, and up to 180 horsepower with available 6-speed. Matrix is designed to be whatever you want, including affordable.

Visit www.buyatoyota.com for details.

*Based on EPA estimates for 2003 5-speed manual.

you come home late at night in need of a snack. you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do?

ask the question, compare your opinions with others, explore what matters at work and elsewhere

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Arts & Entertainment

Belle's satire rings true

"For Whom the Southern Belle Tolls" parodies The Theatre and Dance Department's recent production of "The Glass Menagerie."

BY KRISTEN HABACHT
Staff Writer

THEATRE REVIEW

The Tustin Studio Black Box Theatre was filled with the sound of laughter as Durang's "For Whom the Southern Belle Tolls," a parody on the Theatre and Dance Department's production of "The Glass Menagerie," opened a weekend after the Theatre and Dance Department's production of "The Glass Menagerie."

"When this show was proposed to be done a week after 'The Glass Menagerie,' I jumped on the chance to direct it," Director Hollie Barattolo '04 said. "I loved the script. Not only is it wonderfully hysterical, but Durang hits on all the important points. Are Laura's ailments in her head? Why does Amanda cling to her children so desperately? What does Tom really do when he leaves the house? It's crass and thought-provoking. Go figure."

The play, produced by Cap and Dagger and the

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Cap and Dagger and the Department of Theatre and Dance Durang's "For Whom the Southern Belle Tolls," a parody on their production of Williams' "The Glass Menagerie." The play, directed by Hollie Barattolo '04, posed a satirical view on the classic play.

Department of Theatre and Dance, used many pieces of the set from "The Glass Menagerie" production, adding to the humor of the piece.

"You don't often have this situation when you're doing a show. We were faced with 'The Glass Menagerie' performance being done in such close proximity to our show. We had a basis for our show. We used the same set, some of the same blocking, similar costumes, etc," Barattolo said. "While we tried to make the two shows coincide, we had to make it our own. My cast and I worked very hard on making these characters and show our own, while still reminding the audience of 'The Glass Menagerie.'"

The cast of "Belle" included Kate Frederickson '07 as Amanda, Rob Glassman '06 as Tom, Mike Mellas '05 as Lawrence and Paola Grande '05 as "the feminine caller."

Durang takes the characters of "The Glass Menagerie" and tweaks them a bit. The crippled, shy daughter Laura, becomes the hypochondriac, swizzle stick-collecting son Lawrence. The gentleman caller becomes the female caller. The mother and the son, Amanda and Tom, remain most true to the original script characters, though they have less patience and curse more.

The parody mocks the script of "The Glass Menagerie," but the director and cast also mocked some of the University actors' mannerisms, such as the gentlemen caller's laugh and Laura's facial expressions.

"I think putting a parody in

"My cast and I worked very hard on making these characters and show our own, while still reminding the audience of 'The Glass Menagerie.'"
—Hollie Barattolo '04

this year's season was interesting for both the students involved and the audience. Durang is a playwright that makes sure theater doesn't take itself too seriously," said Lacy Gonzalez '04 stage manager of the production.

If imitation is the most sincere form of flattery, then I would say the cast of "For Whom the Southern Belle Tolls" definitely flattered Tennessee Williams and the cast of "The Glass Menagerie" with a little attitude.

Symphonic Band entertains with diverse concert

BY JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

CONCERT REVIEW

The University Symphonic Band entertained listeners with a wide range of demanding selections at its concert Saturday night. The program spanned styles from opera transcriptions to traditional band marches.

Of particular interest was a modern piece performed during the second half, "Gloriosa: Symphonic Poem for Band." The Japanese composer Yasuhide Ito wrote this three-movement selection in 1990 to chronicle the introduction and banishment of Christianity in Japan.

The piece employed many methods that helped achieve both a Christian and a Japanese mood. All movements incorporated old-fashioned modal harmonies, which were used in many types of church and Eastern music. Combined with the sound of chimes and other types of percussion, both sounds were achieved.

A solo in the second movement highlighted Elsbeth Fager '04 on piccolo. Fager performed a simple, lilting melody that also made use of Eastern harmonies.

"I liked the 'Gloriosa' one, it had a whole Japanese feel," Juli White '04 said.

Perhaps the piece's most uncommon trait was the use of singing. Male members of the band chanted in Latin at its beginning.

Percy Grainger's "Lincolnshire Posy," entertained listeners in the first half of the program with a different musical mood. An introduction given by William Kenny, Associate Professor of Music and the band's conductor, informed listeners that at the time this piece was composed there were very few pieces of this scope written specifically for the band. Grainger composed this six-movement piece inspired by the artistic idea to paint musical portraits of people who sang folk songs to him.

Each movement had its own distinct tone, but all captured the personal sentiment Grainger intended. The second movement, entitled "Horkstow Grange (The Miser and his Man - a local Tragedy)," featured slow strains in the low brass section of the band. Even when the full band eventually joined in, they maintained these rich, long phrases—giving the movement a tragic, sorrowful feel.

To achieve these contrasting moods, various elements of the band were featured during different movements.

"I liked the way every group got highlighted, including the bassoon," Janet Forney '04 said.

After "Lincolnshire Posy," the band performed a transcription of "Elsa's Procession to the Cathedral" from Wagner's opera "Lohengrin." The melody built over the course of the piece, beginning with a nostalgic melody and then growing to a dramatic, but not overwhelming, climax.

The second half of the concert contained a set of pieces with a sound more familiar to the band concert scene. One of these was John Philip Sousa's steady march, "The Thunderer."

"Symphony on Themes of John Philip Sousa" by Ira Hearsen followed the original that preceded it. This adaptation subdued the melody with darker sonorities and slowed down the tempo for a lyrical sound.

Sandwiching the diverse selections listed above were two pieces more reminiscent of traditional band repertoire. The band opened the concert with David Holsinger's "To Tame the Perilous Skies." This majestic selection was written in tribute to those fighting the Persian Gulf War and depicts two colliding forces to achieve this.

The final selection played was "The Girl I Left Behind Me" by Leroy Anderson. This lively piece had a brassy band sound, but also featured the flutes, playing a pastoral, dance-like melody.

The scope of the music contributed to what was an enjoyable evening with the band. Whether familiar or unusual, the University Symphonic Band treated each piece with a distinctiveness that was both entertaining and impressive.

please university students. Their differing musical styles complement each other in a unique matter.

The Ataris have a pop-punk style similar to that of Blink-182 and Green Day.

Mraz incorporates folk, rock and the blues, among other genres, into his music to create a blend of various styles popular in music today. Both play with such energy that this unusual combination actually makes sense.

Mraz and the Ataris also present a good contrast in lyrical themes. The Ataris generally deal with high school feelings of angst and confusion, while Mraz tends to focus on lighter subjects, and even broaches more serious topics with trademark abandon.

The Ataris and Jason Mraz command the charts separately, but the combination of these relatively new forces in the musical world seems to Tague '06 said.

The Ataris and Jason Mraz command the charts separately, but the combination of these relatively new forces in the musical world seems to

Jason Mraz's lyrics are very fun, especially in "Too Much Food," Carrie Nugent '06 said.

Courtesy of Columbia

The Ataris will be accompanying Jason Mraz during the group's visit to campus November 21st. The much awaited concert is expected to be one of the best University concerts in years.

Jason Mraz and Ataris fans just can't wait

BY RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

Students are buzzing with excitement around campus about the upcoming concert featuring Jason Mraz and the Ataris. The fall concert will arguably be the biggest musical event this semester, as Mraz and the Ataris are two of the most prominent rising stars on the Top 40 Charts.

The fall concert will arguably be the biggest musical event this semester, as Mraz and the Ataris are two of the most prominent rising stars on the Top 40 Charts.

The general consensus of the student body is extremely positive. Ticket-holders anxiously await Friday's concert featuring the most popular lineup the University has hosted in recent history.

"I think Jason Mraz and the Ataris have gotten a better reaction from the campus than any other concert since I've been here," Jenna

"Matrix Revolutions"—a true disappointment

BY DAVID ALLEN
Senior Writer

MOVIE REVIEW

Those familiar columns of weird-looking green computer code are flashing across the screen—it must be time for the third installment of "The Matrix." The second film, "Reloaded," left audiences hanging with Neo (Keanu Reeves) exhibiting superhuman powers outside of the Matrix before falling into a coma while Agent Smith (Hugo Weaving) takes human form and causes chaos in the human world. Meanwhile, the machine army is digging closer to Zion, threatening to bring an end to the existence of human life of Earth.

Neo's coma turns out to be a sort of Purgatory between the human world and the machine world. This plot digression allows the Wachowski brothers to introduce several inconsequential extras such as an Indian family including a little girl, Sati (Tanveer Atwal) and a disheveled hobo, Trainman (Bruce Spence). They also re-introduce the powerful, cruel (and irritating) Frenchman from "Reloaded," Morvengian (Lambert Wilson).

"Revolutions" makes the mistake of bringing too many characters into the plot, keeping the audience from connecting with them or even learning anything about them. When they disappear or are killed (and it happens a lot in "Revolutions") it doesn't seem to matter much.

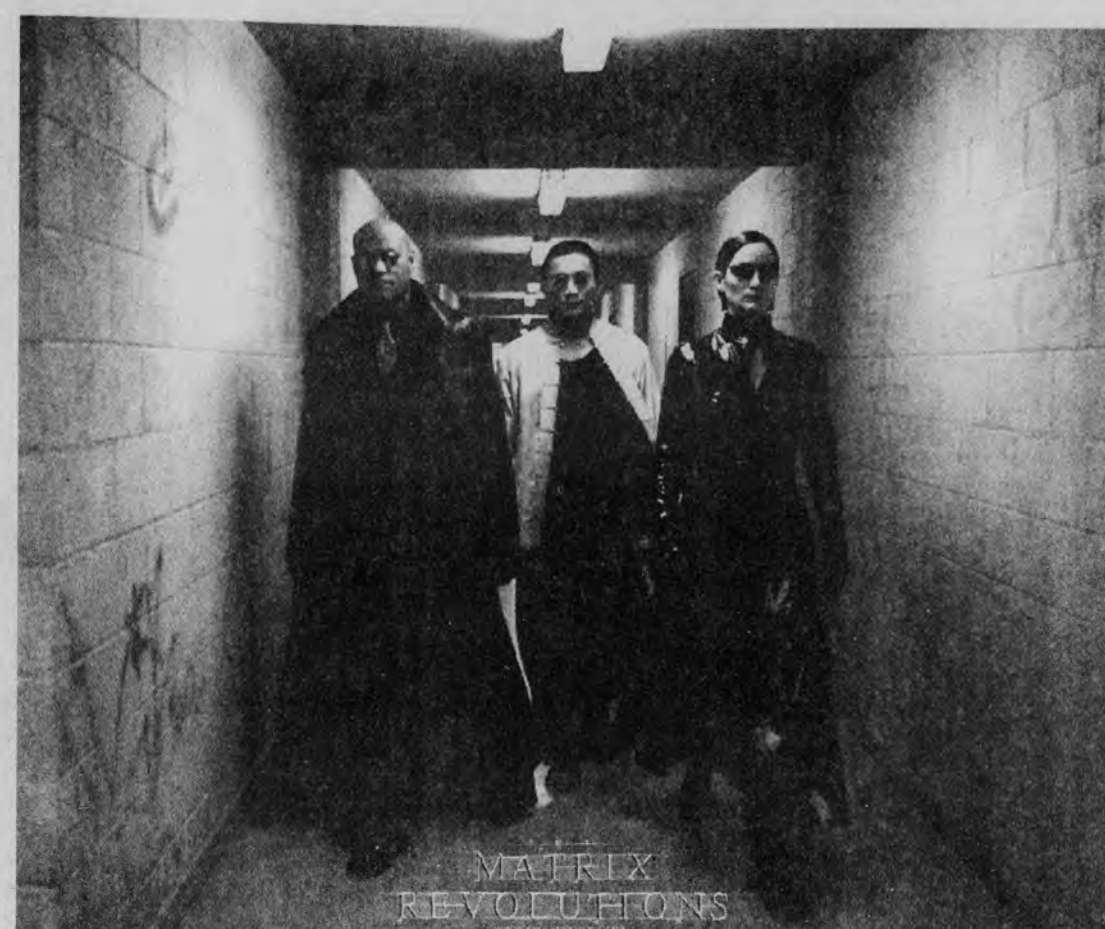

The plot hinges on the final defense of Zion from the machine assault. Morpheus (Lawrence Fishburne), Niobe (Jada Pinkett-Smith), Link (Harold Perrineau) and several forgettable extras pilot a treacherous access tunnel back to Zion to help defend the city from the mechanical Sentinels and their great digging machines. Neo and Trinity (Carrie-Anne Moss) are strangely absent for much of the movie, as they pilot one of the airships on a perilous trip to the Machine City on the Earth's surface.

The movie owes a great deal to more traditional war movies like "The Longest Day" or "All Quiet on the Western Front," as battle scenes are intercut with scenes of strategy-making and appeals to Zion's council of elders. The city's final stand, featuring mechanized battle suits called APUs and swarming cascades of robotic metal, is impressive despite dragging on for nearly half an hour. In that time, we see Zee (Nona Gaye) and "The Kid" (Clayton Watson) emerge as unlikely heroes and hear nameless extras yell "Incoming!" way too many times.

Dialogue has never been the strongest feature of the Matrix films. Morpheus' pronouncements and Neo's expressions of uncertainty were often stiff, sometimes even wooden. "Revolutions," the dialogue is almost other silly nicknames and Niobe saying that an air ship has a "big ass" try hard to earn laughs but just fall flat.

With the battle to save Zion as the movie's central event, the emphasis

Courtesy of www.TheMatrix.com

The third installment of the Matrix trilogy, "Matrix: Revolutions" hit local theatres last week. "Revolutions" presents nail-biting action despite its cliché dialogue and excessively long scenes.

float through the movie like debris from a shipwreck.

The speech also includes some of the most tired clichés in moviemaking, like Agent Smith's statement to Sati, "I'm not so bad once you get to know me." Far from laughable, however, are lines that attempt to introduce humor. Characters calling each other silly nicknames and Niobe saying that an air ship has a "big ass" try hard to earn laughs but just fall flat.

With the battle to save Zion as the movie's central event, the emphasis has shifted from the hand-to-hand combat central to the first two movies to big, explosive battle scenes. The elaborately choreographed scenes and martial arts moves are reduced to a rain-soaked final standoff between Neo and Agent Smith, surrounded by thousands of Smith's clones. This scene also drags on too long, with numerous opportunities to end the fight passed up, allowing Smith more time to pummel Neo and talk trash about the human race.

The movie benefits from a frenetic ic pacing. Moviegoers that are strictly fans of the series' action scenes will not be disappointed. Bullets fly, things crash, and explode and flying ships fit through tight spaces. "Revolutions" has arguably the highest body count of the three Matrix films. The on-screen action was never boring; I was tapping my feet in nervous anticipation throughout much of the movie.

The movie seems to have become aware of its existence as a film. Gloria Foster, who portrayed the Oracle during the first two movies, passed away before "Revolutions" was filmed. Mary Alice plays her in this movie and there are veiled references to the change in actor. "You look different," Neo says upon greeting her near the beginning of the movie. Also, ads for Powerade and Tasee Wheat (referenced in the first movie) are visible on the walls of the subway.

"The Matrix Revolutions" is still entertaining, however, it is packed with action and scored with driving, propulsive music. Fundamentally, it is still about good versus evil, free will and the inevitability of death. As with any movie that tries to provide clear answers about such broad topics, it's hard to swallow. With further philosophical and technical explanations being provided, the ending and the events leading up to it made more sense to me, but my initial reaction to the movie still holds true: "Matrix: Revolutions" is the worst film in the trilogy and left me feeling disappointed.

Wheat grows up with the release of "Per Second..."

Courtesy of www.amazon.com

Wheat tries to break into the mainstream with their third album "Per Second..." The songs featured on the album reveal a matured musical style and themed lyrics about lost love.

BY CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

Take a mediocre live band, throw in a dash of Columbia Records' help and watch it grow into a solid studio act that conceivably could be great in concert using the tactics learned in the process.

This was my experience with Wheat and its third full-length record "Per Second, Per Second, Per Second..." Every Second." Having seen the band open on last year's Toad the Wet Sprocket reunion tour, I was less than impressed. Most songs sounded the same, and its stage show was sub-par at best. On "Second," however, the band has let its sound grow, resulting in a pretty good album.

Literally, expect to hear similar themes from other indie-turned-pop acts in music today (see Howie Day, etc.). For the most part, the songs are about lost love, pondering life and occasionally telling a story that, of course, has an obvious but necessary point. The album's first track, "I Met a Girl," tells the tale of an already romantically-attached man who meets someone that he'd like to get to know better. Simple enough, but in the context of the language and upbeat feel to the tune, you can simultaneously feel the joy inherent in the new experience and the anguish over the fact that he cannot pursue it further. It takes a pretty strong band to do that, but Wheat pulls it off quite nicely.

For those looking more for instrumentation, Wheat's album delivers well-structured guitar riffs and bass lines that complement the straightforward but effective drum beats throughout. Breaking away from the three-piece sound, the band uses a wide range of effects and added parts including piano, synthesizer and orchestral arrangements that help to expand the more basic sound of which the album might have been comprised. This can be heard most directly on "World United Already," a buoyant piece that works so well with added sounds that it does not even resemble any of the songs I had heard the band play in concert.

Ultimately, Wheat will probably never become superstars, but with "Second," it shows that it is willing to try. In a time when acoustic rock is so popular, it takes something different to really break into the mainstream. Artists like John Mayer may have failed in their attempts to do so (at least in this writer's opinion), but there is just something I like about this album. Maybe it's the fact that I feel I could do something similar to what Wheat does in writing basic, likable songs or because I have so much respect for what it's trying to do. I think I'm just happy to let a band that I previously had little respect for change my mind by proving that it can record a very solid album.

ORCHESTRA TO HOLD SECOND CONCERT

Melissa Pauling—The Bucknellian

The University Orchestra's second concert of the year will be held tomorrow night at 8:00 p.m. in the Weis Center. The Orchestra will be performing a piece by Samuel Barber, known for "Adagio for Strings," an elegant symphony by Camille Saint-Saens and Jose Moncayo's Mexican dance, "Huapango for Orchestra." The performance is free and open to the public.

FOR SALE!

1999 Honda Prelude Black, 5 Speed, 85000 miles, 200 hp, cd/mp3, 17 in Custom wheels. asking $12,495
Call: 523-9613- Scott

USA SPRING BREAK.com
Cancun, Bahamas, Acapulco, Jamaica & More!
Don't be fooled! Go with Quality and Experience!
28 years in business!
Largest Student Tour Operator
(Division of USA Student Travel)
Call Toll Free: 1-877-460-6077
Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $$

DOR-DAY'S
Great Subs!
Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Ignite the white!
whiter brighter faster
Whiten your teeth in one hour or one weekend!
Take your first step to feeling good, looking great and making a memorable impression every time you smile. You won't believe it! Find out more about Zuper Professional Teeth Whitening. Call today!

JAMAICA
Spring Break 2004 - The Ultimate Experience
Last night 14,000,000 of us
Call 1-800-733-8329 $529
Call Today!!
www.BeachLifeJamaica.com 1-800-733-8329

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Study shows students are dangerous drivers

By MATT HINSON
Senior Writer

Students were determined to be in the category of most dangerous drivers, according to a study published Oct. 31. The study was conducted by the Quality Planning Corporation, a company which helps insurance companies in San Francisco determine driver risk. It compared individuals in 40 professions ranging from physician to farmer.

Students are likely to be considered dangerous due to inexperience and feelings of freedom and invincibility overriding the caution older drivers are likely to possess. Students are about 3.5 times as likely to be involved in an accident as farmers, who rated least likely to be involved in accidents. Some 15 percent of students in the study published on Oct. 30 had been in an accident, a figure comparing to only four percent of farmers.

Surprisingly rounding out the top-five most dangerous drivers were doctors, lawyers, architects and real estate agents.

"There's plenty of evidence that shows that cell phone use is a big contributor to accidents," said a spokesperson for the American Medical Association to CNN.

Cell phone use might explain the rate of incidence among these professions, whose members are frequent cell phone users.

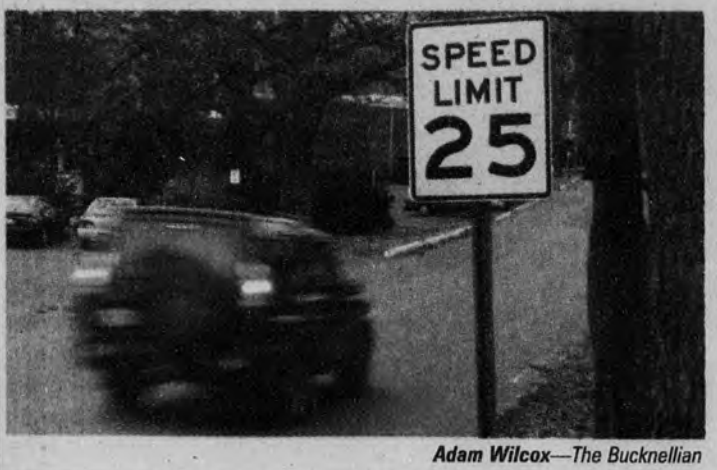

"The numbers blow big holes in the conventional wisdom about which professions are accident-prone or dangerous drivers. Interestingly, it appears that it is educated professionals who are most likely to be involved in accidents. Fortunately for those unlucky enough to be involved in an accident, individuals from two professions which are most helpful after such an incident—doctors and lawyers—are the most likely to be on the scene," said Dr. Daniel Finnegan, president of the Quality Planning Corporation, according to its Web site.

What the study did not mention is how it dealt with the ratio of individuals in its study. In the 2000 Census, there were 4,144,065 individuals working in health diagnosing and treating practitioners and technical occupations, but only 951,810 individuals employed in farming, fishing and forestry industries in the United States. These numbers, though not showing the exact number of doctors and farmers, suggest that doctors outnumber farmers by a wide margin and, by sheer weight of numbers, will be involved in accidents more frequently, unless this is otherwise factored into the study.

Students and faculty at the University tend to be a bit skeptical about the findings of this report.

"I think that the lack of driving experience, being self-centered (not as aware of other people around) and a general feeling of being invincible and of course lacking experience in drinking leads to more driving under the influence of alcohol," Assistant Professor of East Asian Studies Anne Pusey said.

"The survey for the car accident should not merely be based on people's occupation. Also, whenever there is a car accident, there must be at least two cars to cause this disaster. Therefore, I think that students cannot always be blamed as being high risk for car accidents. We need to investigate whether the accident is caused by the students or by the other car owners. But I agree with the author that the more pressure one is under, the higher risk one runs of getting in an accident," Yi-Ting Chen '04 said.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Higher education costs continue to rise

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

Books for one semester: $531
Room and Board: $6,052
Computer: $1,400
Mini Fridge, Microwave, Television: $350
The cost of graduating from college: Incalculable... and rising.

With average tuition costs rising about 5.7 percent every year for private colleges and public school tuition jumping to 9.8 percent in the past year, people around the country are left wondering how and when this increase will slow down.

The College Board released the following statement on Oct. 21: "At four-year private institutions, tuition and fees average $579 more, and at four-year priate institutions, tuition and fees average $1,114 more than last year."

The statement also mentioned that after considering inflation, this increase in tuition for public universities was the highest in three decades. The 13 percent increase follows an eight percent increase from the year before. This combined escalation in prices represents a growth rate that has not been seen for at least 20 years.

The increase has government officials outraged. Rep. Howard P. McKeon (R-Calif.), told washingtonpost.com that he has proposed legislation for government control over tuition hikes in public universities.

"College tuition and fees are getting out of control, and we need to do something about it," McKeon said.

One of the speculations on the cause of this inflation reported by washingtonpost.com is the fact that in the Midwestern and Mid-Atlantic states, universities are trying to overcome the deficits caused by a decline in state funding.

This decline is a combination of a lack of funding and an increase in costs at schools and an increase in faculty compensation due to health insurance and pension costs. Universities also have been scrambling to keep up with the ever-changing world of technology. Reutersnews.com emphasizes the competition with other schools to have the best athletic facilities.

One positive occurrence is that in order to help students deal with the rising costs, colleges and universities have increased budgeting for financial aid. Last year, cnn.com reports that approximately 60 percent of undergraduates received some form of aid, defined as grants, loans, work-study and tax credits.

David Ward, president of the American Council of Education, notes this increase in aid. He brings to attention the fact that student aid levels have raised to a record $105 billion.

"The problem with the expense of college being so high is its impact on the

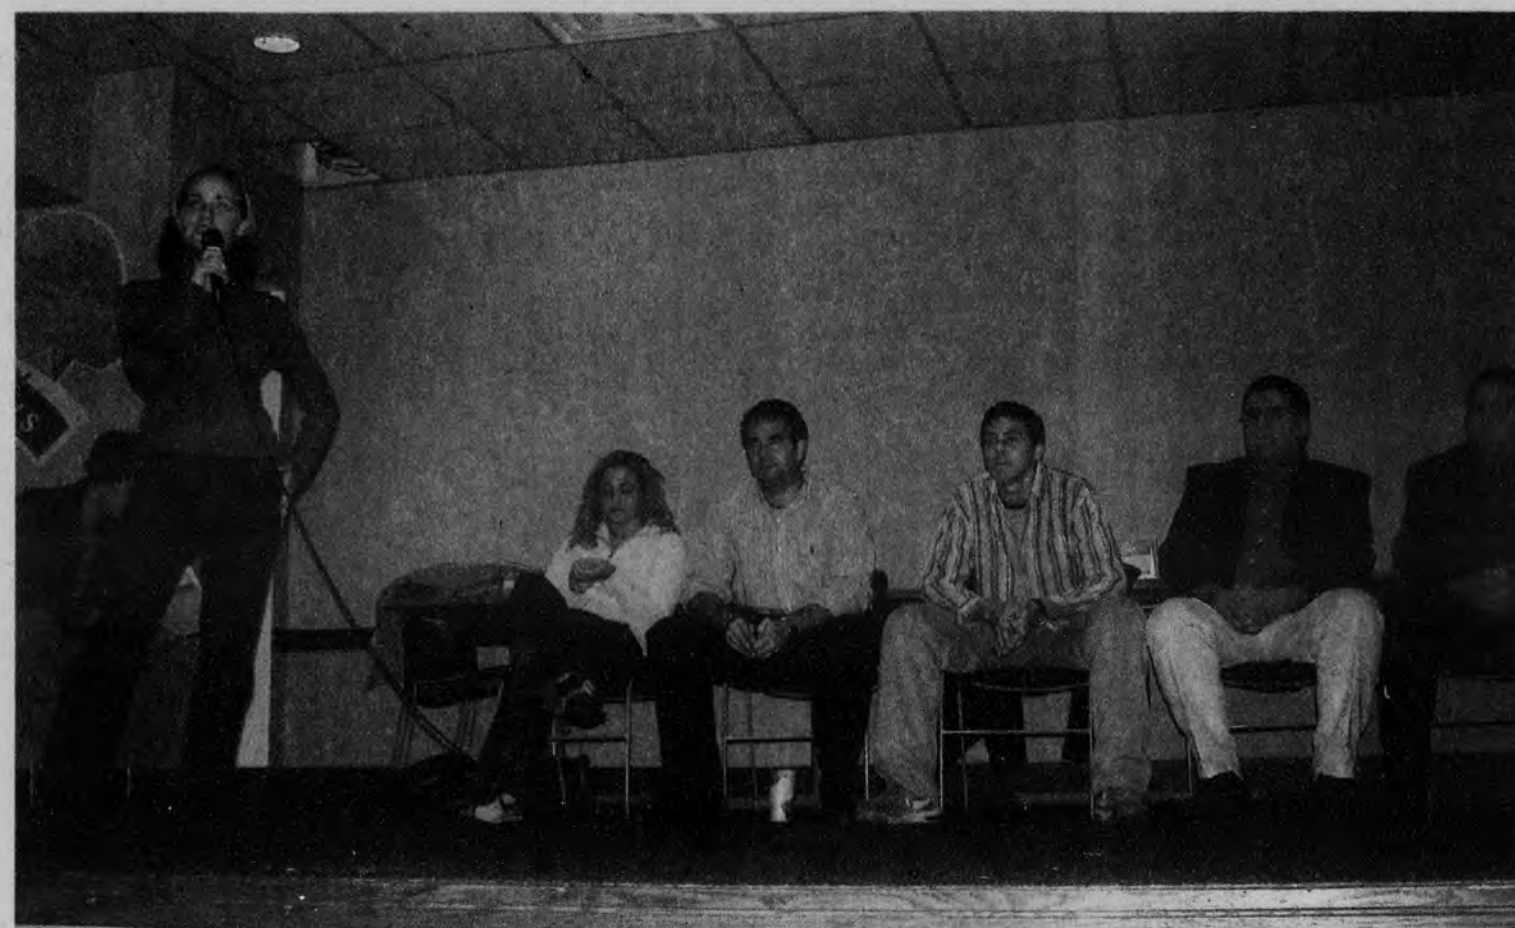

"Higher education was meant to open doors, not to close them, and it must remain a conduit to the American dream."

—Gaston Caperton, College Board president diversity of the school. It seems as though what might end up happening is that at an expensive school such as Bucknell, it would become more and more stratified as the wealthy people are able to afford the full tuition, and the students coming from lower income families would be given the majority of the need-based aid," said Lauren Kopit '07.

Families that appear on paper to be able to handle a $35,000 a year education can be left in a financial bind.

An Oct. 12 article on cnn.com comments on this concern regarding who

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
BSG President Katy Tiner '04 introduces candidates running for BSG executive positions. The candidates are (left to right) Lily Williamson '06, Rich Karcher '05, Duff Weber '05, Chris Styers '05 and John Siwicki '05. Only the office of president is contested.

Competition scarce in BSG

By COURTNEY HOMAN
B&P Editor

Bucknell Student Government (BSG) campaigns are in full swing, with candidates voicing their credentials and intentions before students in the annual BSG debate Wednesday night. Little debate took place because the office of president is the only contested election, with five candidates lining the stage competing for four positions.

The only competition during the debate was between Chris Styers '05 and John Siwicki '06 who are vying for president of BSG. Each proposes to bring a different dynamic to the presidency.

Styers went first in the debate and began expressing the plight of the common University student.

"I am that guy. I am that guy who drives around parking lots looking for a place to park. I am that guy who wants to watch a show but can't because there is only one cable TV. I want to be your voice," said Styers.

Siwicki followed by stressing his commitment to solving University problems.

"I will be the representative voice of the students. I will open up lines of communication about issues like cable and the alcohol policy. That's my job," said Siwicki.

Lily Williamson '06, an economics major, is running for vice president of administration.

Her goal is to live up to the expectations of the position. She emphasized the importance of publicity for BSG and the need for awareness of the student population about BSG activities.

"BSG is not a big presence right now. We need to increase awareness and understanding," said Williamson answering a question about how she proposed to motivate students to become involved in student government.

Rich Karcher '05, a management major, is a candidate for vice president of finance. Karcher emphasized the difficulty of the position and his plans to make this office more widely understood by the student body.

"I plan to get students involved financially. Do they understand why tuition goes up each year? New facilities are built; tuition is used to fund buildings like the geology building and the rec-center. But then there are five students in a mod—the ideals of the students are sacrificed," said Karcher.

Duff Weber '05, an accounting major,

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
John Siwicki '05 gestures to the audience while in debate for the presidency.

receives the grants as opposed to loans.

"The neediest students are getting a smaller piece of the grant pie... less of the grant money is earmarked for need-based recipients and more is set aside for merit-based awards, which tend to go disproportionately to middle- and upper-income students," stated the cnn.com article.

In addition, Reutersnews.com also mentions that while college costs consume about five to six percent of wealthy families' incomes, poorer families are left paying up to 71 percent of their income.

College Board President Gaston Caperton discussed the importance of a higher education in relation to the relative decline in need-based aid in the College Board's statement on tuition inflation.

"Higher education was meant to open doors, not to close them, and it must remain a conduit to the American dream," Caperton said. "We must take this opportunity to renew a national commitment to need-based aid. The upcoming re-authorization of the Higher Education Amendments gives us the opportunity to work toward removing financial barriers to higher education for lower-income students."

Caperton also mentioned the true importance of working toward making the dream of higher education more accessible as it relates to the future of the United States.

"What all of us have to remember and tell others is that America's future and quality of life are tied to the benefits of higher learning, to what transpires in the lecture halls and labs across the country," Caperton said.

November 21, 2003

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

inside Volume 132, Number 11

Business & Politics:

John Siwicki '05 defeats Chris Styers '05 for the Bucknell Student Government presidential election in a competitive race.

See page A10

ACTING ON ALCOHOL

Administration implements emergency alcohol policy

By Elisabeth Salemme
News Editor

Before senior Emily Thede, 22, had a chance to check her e-mail Tuesday afternoon, her roommate, senior Meghann Peace, 21, walked into the room and slammed down four bottles of hard alcohol.

"Guess which of these we can no longer drink?" Peace said. "All of them."

An emergency alcohol policy, which will remain in effect until Sept. 2004, was implemented by the administration Tuesday in light of the recent significant increase in alcohol-related infractions by University students. There are three significant changes to the current alcohol policy: Hard alcohol is banned on campus, the penalties for major infractions have been increased to suspension or expulsion and the penalties for minor infractions have been decreased.

The Board of Trustees, as well as top University administrators, met last weekend to discuss potential solutions to the current alcohol problem both on and off campus. Students were informed of the policy change through an e-mail and a letter sent to all students by University President Steffen Rogers.

"The Board of Trustees has an obligation to make sure they're protecting the University. They need to make sure it's running well and that it's not incurring things that are dangerous to us as an institution. The Board has been concerned about the events that took place this fall. During this weekend, they expressed their concern," Dean of Students Richard Ferraro said.

Twenty-four students have been hospitalized this year for alcohol-related reasons and nine students have been found to be driving under the influence (DUI). There were 22 alcohol-related hospitalizations for all of last year.

"We've had some close calls. I just felt like I couldn't stand by and do nothing," Rogers said. "I certainly do not want to attend a Bucknell student's funeral."

According to Ferraro, one student almost killed an alumnus, one student almost killed a police officer and one student crashed into three cars—all were driving under the influence.

"I couldn't stand by and do nothing. I certainly do not want to attend a Bucknell student's funeral."

—University President Steffen Rogers

"Several DUIs have been very, very borderline in terms of collisions and the possibility of people being run over. I think we have been very, very lucky to date," Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 said. "We resisted as long as we could, but we had to move with this plan, and hopefully things will correct themselves."

Continued on page A4

Students erupt at forum

By Elisabeth Salemme
News Editor

More than 500 students gathered in the Langone Center Forum and the halls leading into the room Wednesday night to protest an emergency alcohol policy implemented by the University administration Tuesday afternoon. The emergency plan was implemented due to an increase in serious alcohol infractions on and off campus this semester.

"In my mind, we were in a crisis... I could not fathom how there would not be a death in the year," University President Steffen Rogers said. "Right now, my fear is that one of you or one of your friends is going to die."

Students were primarily concerned with the ban on hard liquor on campus, which they said takes away the rights of responsible-of-age students.

Two hours after the conclusion of the forum, Dean of Students Richard Ferraro sent an e-mail to students that addressed many student concerns, especially that of the hard alcohol ban.

"Several students talked about liking to have a cocktail, such as a gin and tonic, at night. So that is something that will be looked at. I am not sure of the ultimate decision, but President Rogers and members of his staff will consider that carefully," Ferraro said in the e-mail.

The majority of conversation at the forum revolved around the hard alcohol ban.

"This is a drastic time that requires drastic measures, but will result in drastic consequences," Kerry O'Donnell '04 said. "[Banning hard alcohol] is not going to increase the safety factor. Students have been blindsided by this, and we have worked so hard for moderate alcohol use. This sounds like prohibition, but prohibition does not work."

Ferraro said there has been a lot of hard data that this semester has been "crazy."

"When it comes to hard alcohol, a lot of people use it wisely," Ferraro said. "But when we have a serious problem, hard alcohol is always involved."

Numerous-of-age students who attended the forum said they are insulted by the ban on alcohol.

"Seniors and juniors who are 21 can't drink hard alcohol on campus, and if they do, that will go on their permanent records, when U.S. law says we can drink," Panhellenic President Jennifer Mellon '04 said.

Bucknell Student Government (BSG) Vice President of Operations Jack Phillips '04 is also a member of the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA), which is currently working on revising the points system.

"CCA is voting on their points system [soon]. Why couldn't this emergency plan wait

Continued on page A5

Steve Young—The Bucknellian
Frees Hall, home of the Admissions Office, welcomes prospective students, most of whom will be affected by increasing tuition prices around the nation.

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Nov. 9

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to South 7th Street to assist Lewisburg Police Department with a vehicle stop of a vehicle driving without headlights. The passenger was identified as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. A citation was issued for underage consumption. A warning was issued to the driver for driving without headlights.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of two broken window panes in an exterior door. A witness observed two males in the area at the time the windows were broken but did not see anyone breaking the windows. The incident is under investigation.

FALSE ALARM—Public Safety responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of a discharged fire extinguisher. A witness observed a male in the area at the time of the discharge. The incident is under investigation.

Monday, Nov. 10

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to Lit Road for the report of a vehicle that was scratched while parked near Rooke Chemistry. A witness provided some information about a vehicle that may have struck the parked truck. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity for the report of unknown person(s) driving by the house and firing a paint ball at one male and the building. There were no injuries or property damage.

Tuesday, Nov. 11

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) vandalized her car and also a friend's car by placing ketchup and mustard on the hood and windshield of the vehicles while they were parked near Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity. The incident is under investigation.

Wednesday, Nov. 12

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Public Safety responded to Bertrand Library for the report of a suspicious male visitor who made an employee feel uncomfortable when he spoke with her. The employee requested to file a report with East Buffalo Township Police Department, which then responded. Upon investigation, East Buffalo Township Police Department determined that the visitor had provided accurate ID to the employee and agreed not to return to campus.

ASSIST POLICE / HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATION—Boston College Public Safety contacted Public Safety and requested assistance with the investigation of harassment by communication with threats of violence that originated from a student's computer in Vedder Hall. Public Safety spoke with the student who stated that his computer was used to send these messages by unknown person(s) while his room was unlocked. The incident is under investigation.

Thursday, Nov. 13

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATION—A student reported to Public Safety that she and her roommate have been receiving numerous harassing phone calls and multiple "Instant Messages" on her computer in their room at Swartz Hall. Also, unknown person(s) have on numerous occasions placed a garbage can full of water against the outside of their room door. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of an ill student. Upon arrival, Public Safety observed that the female was unable to stand and suffering flu-like symptoms. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

Friday, Nov. 14

FALSE INFORMATION—While speaking with Public Safety in the Public Safety building lobby, a male told an officer that he was on campus visiting his brother who is a student. Upon further investigation, the male was found to be a student who was banned from having a vehicle on campus, and driving a vehicle with an illegal Florida HP placard. Student was cited for false information, forgery, failure to comply with a sanction and federal/state/municipal law violations.

BU PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Roberts Hall for the report of a window screen that was cut. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

ALLEGED ASSAULT—A Lehigh University soccer fan reported to Public Safety that a student had assaulted another Lehigh fan by throwing a T-shirt at him. Upon investigation, the student admitted to throwing the shirt. The visitor then decided not to press charges.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety to request transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of an illness. Student Health Services driver transported the male who later returned to campus.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A BEST member contacted Public Safety and requested transportation for another student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a finger laceration. Student Health Services driver transported the female who later returned to campus.

Saturday, Nov. 15

POSSIBLE ASSAULT (OFF CAMPUS)—Public Safety responded to the Gateway parking lot to locate a student who was alleged to have assaulted another student at a St. Catherine Street residence. No one was located. Upon investigation, Public Safety spoke with the person who had been allegedly pushed and not struck. The student did not want to file charges.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male walking with a staggered gait up the steps of Gateway Malesard. Upon further investigation, the male was found to be a University of Pittsburgh student. He admitted to drinking alcohol although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

ASSIST POLICE / RECKLESS OPERATION—Public Safety responded to South 7th Street at the entrance to the Lewisburg Cemetery to assist Lewisburg Police Department to stop a vehicle that was driving recklessly, at a high rate of speed, and almost hit three individuals. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the male was a student who failed the field sobriety test and refused a breathalyzer test. Lewisburg Police Department transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for a BAC test. Citations will be issued pending the results of the Blood Alcohol Content test.

FALSE ALARM—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm activation at Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station for no apparent reason. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

Presidential salaries increase

By BRIANNA EVANS
Writer

Four presidents of private universities earned more than $800,000 in the 2002 fiscal year, according to the most recent issue of "The Chronicle of Higher Education." As presidential salaries continue to increase, presidents may soon reach millions. University President Steffen Rogers does not receive a salary nearly as high.

The highest-paid university president last year was Shirley Ann Jackson of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy N.Y., whose annual salary and benefits totaled $891,400. This does not include her compensation for serving on corporate boards, which adds an additional $591,000 to her annual salary, "The Chronicle" reported.

Rogers makes only about a fourth of that with an annual salary of $201,400 and $34,276 in benefits.

The number of public university presidents earning $500,000 or more annually has doubled this year, according to "The Chronicle." Twenty-seven presidents of private universities earned over $500,000 in the 2001-2002 fiscal year.

One problem with presidents being paid such a high salary is the price students have to pay for it. While this is not the case at the University, many students are being hit with tuition increases topping 10 percent in order to raise the salaries of presidents.

As colleges have faced the effects of an economic recession by raising tuition, reducing academic programs and cutting faculty, the increasing salaries of college presidents has drawn scrutiny and criticism, according to "The Chronicle."

"It's not going to be good for higher education if it becomes seen at a time when tuition is going up, that college presidents have become a new route to being a millionaire," Patrick M. Callan, president of the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education said in a report for "The Chronicle."

Rogers recognizes the situation on a national level but states that it is not the case at the University. He believes that such high salaries are unnecessary.

"I don't think that they're reasonable when they start approaching $1 million plus benefits," Rogers said. "But in the university community, you also have to understand what is happening with coaches; they are also being paid way too much. In my mind the most highly paid official should be the president. Fortunately, this is the case at Bucknell."

One reason college presidents are being paid such high salaries is to attract them to universities. Trustees and search-firm consultants attribute the high pay to supply and demand and say that the pool of people qualified and willing to be presidents of such complex institutions remains small, "The Chronicle" reported.

Rogers only partially agrees. "I wouldn't say it [salary increase] is due to a lack of qualified presidents; I think there is a lack of experienced presidents," Rogers said. "There is a significant difference between qualified and experienced. It is much more risky for a prestigious university to hire someone into their first presidency than it is to hire them into their second or third presidency."

He continued by citing President Gordon Lee of Vanderbilt University, the second highest-paid president in the nation with a salary plus benefits totaling $852,023, as an example. Rogers claims that experienced presidents such as Lee can command larger salaries simply because they have the wealth of experience that trustees are looking for.

This still does not necessarily justify salaries close to $1 million. "Salaries of $800,000 for a university president is excessive in the same way I feel stock holders in a public corporation should not be responsible for million dollar salaries of corporate executives," Rogers said.

While it is clear that presidential salaries are on the rise, it is not clear why or whether or not such high salaries actually make presidents do a better job.

"I don't think the community really understands what a president does. They really have no life of their own," Rogers said. "They spend innumerable days raising money, sometimes changing hotel rooms every night while remaining perky, alert and happy, among other things. These issues are not evident. An understanding of presidential salaries and what they do needs to be explained."

Katy Timer '04, Bucknell Student Government president and student member on the Presidential Search Committee, said she does not see the point in raising salaries unless it is for the right reasons.

"I would not be in favor of that [a tuition increase to raise a president's salary]," Timer said.

Both she and Rogers said that a high salary should not be the only reason a person is a college president.

"I would hope that university presidents are not driven by coins and instead are driven by a commitment to education and scholarship," Rogers said.

"There is no way everyone is ever going to understand everything a president does. Part of you [as president] has to want to do it because no amount of money will make you do everything you have to do to be a good president," Timer said. "You will only be successful if you love your job and love what you do."

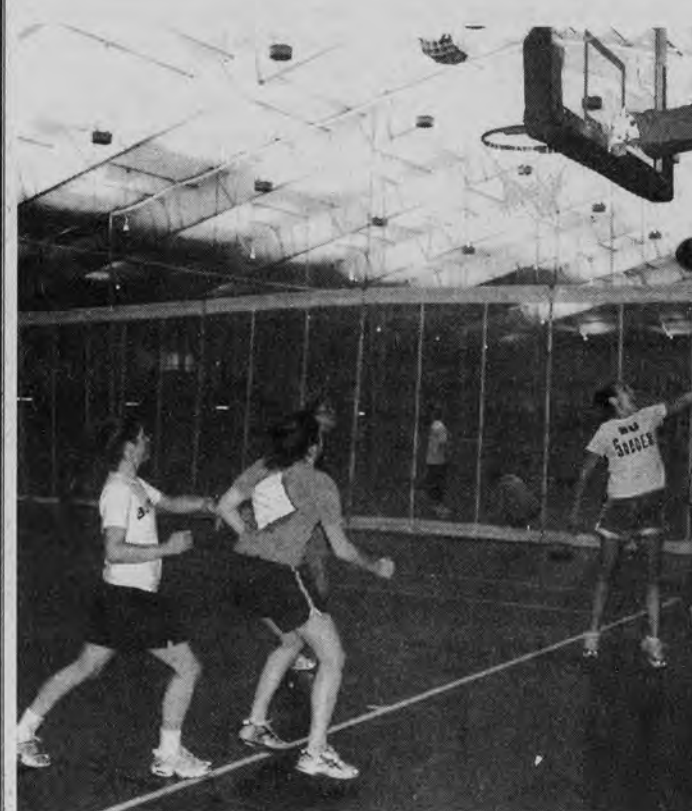

SERV MOCK VEHICLE ACCIDENT

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The Student Emergency Response Volunteers demonstrated on Nov. 14 the potential effects of driving while under the influence.

HOOPS FOR HOPE

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority sponsored "Hoops for Hope," a basketball contest to support the Million Penny Project.

DOR-DAY'S GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961! Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

Viruses affect campus e-mail

By JULIE LESKO
Staff Writer

Unprotected computers have brought down the University's mail server several times since Nov. 13. These infected computers lack essential security devices like Norton AntiVirus and updated virus definitions, have an operating system lacking security patches, or are protected by vulnerable passwords.

According to Gene Spencer, Associate Vice President for Information Services and Resources (ISR), four unprotected systems were attacked by a spam worm that generated millions of bogus mass e-mails.

"Our system is designed to handle 200,000 messages a day. This past weekend, four computers handled 1.5 million messages in a single 24-hour period," Spencer said.

This traffic shut down e-mail service to the entire campus periodically last weekend. "As of late, a number of computers have gotten attacked and a virus has been installed on them. Most likely, this originated from someone off campus. The virus is generating all sorts of mail to Bucknell's e-mail server and to servers off campus. So much traffic is taking down our e-mail server regularly," Spencer said.

This particular worm not only affects the campus community, but is affecting e-mails providers everywhere.

"This matter is frustrating servers worldwide. Two major ISPs no longer trust mail originating from Bucknell and are currently not accepting any e-mails from Bucknell," Spencer said.

ISR insists this serious matter be handled quickly.

"We have to get more serious about forcing students to do the right thing," Spencer said.

At the beginning of the semester, ISR Tech

Support attempted to have the majority of students use Norton AntiVirus. This software is offered complimentary to the entire campus community and has regular updates to keep the campus computers up-to-date with latest anti-virus tactics.

According to Spencer, punishment will begin for students not complying to the requirement.

"We are going to be very aggressive about solving this problem and forcing students to run the Norton Anti-Virus system," Spencer said.

Ryan Kuhns '07 is frustrated with his peers decision to not comply with ISR.

"It's ridiculous some people refuse to protect their systems. It is their investment they are defending as well as the network for the entire campus," Kuhns said.

By accepting the "Appropriate Use Policy" which says users must use Norton Anti-Virus, students can be held accountable for not following this requirement.

"We can protect Bucknell owned computers because we own them so we check them to make sure they are running the appropriate software. Unfortunately we don't have the ability to peek into your computers. If we let this to continue we will continue to waste thousands of dollars of staff time," Spencer said.

According to Spencer, this weekend's costly procedure has frustrated many.

"Over the weekend we spent over $50,000 of staff time over this problem. This causes the stakes to be raised from our standpoint," Spencer said.

In early September, similar disturbances in the system occurred.

"Many students' computers caught the computer viruses at home. When they got to school, these viruses found enough computers and enough critical mass to start taking our entire system down."

Spencer said the entire campus is affected when the network endures problems.

"We need to find ways to educate Bucknell students to adopt good behaviors. We've done a lot of reasonable things to try to get people to take this matter seriously. We are going to have to get tough. If you refuse to do the right thing, it doesn't just affect you, it affects the whole campus."

—Gene Spencer, Associate Vice President for ISR

Spencer emphasizes the effect on campus in huge ways.

Prospective students no longer have reliable contact with the admissions office. Even regular business transactions cannot occur as efficiently.

"My goal is by next Monday every computer on campus is running the anti-virus system. We provide Norton AntiVirus free of charge, but you have to be committed to be sure it is running on your computer and that you are not part of the problem. Students need to take responsibility and need to protect your system now," Spencer said.

Jeanne Zappe, Director of Service said assistance is available for those who need it. Norton AntiVirus, update virus definitions, or Windows computer patches are available from ISR.

JAMAICA

Spring Break 2004—The Ultimate Experience

Packages from Philly or BW starting at:

CALL 1.800.733.6347 $529 Call Today!!

Sell Hips, earn cash, travel free!!

Book before Dec. 15th and save!!

Group Discounts

Bucknell...Life like the Beach life Way!

www.BeachLifeVacations.com - 1.800.733.6347

Ignite the white!

Zoom!

whiter brighter faster

whiten your teeth in one hour or one weekend!

Take your first step to feeling good, looking great and making a memorable impression everytime you smile. You owe it to yourself! Find out more about Zoom! Professional Teeth whitening. Call today!

253-3207
David R. Robinson, D.M.D., P.C.
339 Market St.
Lewisburg, Pa.
(Downtown)

Bring this ad in & receive 15% off any whitening procedure

Tri-Delta and DU under investigation

By ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

There are confirmed reports that Delta Upsilon Fraternity and Delta Delta Sorority are under investigation for various reasons.

"The members of the Tau Chapter of Tri Delta are working closely with the Executive Office and Fraternity volunteers with an ongoing investigation," Delta Delta Delta President Katie Michaels '04 said.

Delta Upsilon brothers who were contacted said they were unable to comment at the present time.

"The investigation is nowhere near over," said Delta Upsilon President Herb Lohmann '04, who refused to comment further on the situation.

If Delta Upsilon is removed as a fraternity from the University, the brothers will not be allowed to live in their house, which is located on University property.

According to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, if Delta Upsilon is removed, there are rooms available on campus in which the brothers will live.

"We want the Greek system to be successful and healthy," Ferraro said. "The problem is excesses. If we have serious alcohol violations or hazing charges, that jeopardizes the system."

Totem Tattoo

Area's Finest Custom Tattoo and Body Piercing Studio Unique Designs to choose from —State of the Art Body Jewelry—

-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

Extreme Auto Works
49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Wash Tubs Laundry

—Linen Supply Service—
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
—Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services—
Call to start your service now!
(570) 524-9839

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Travel Operator

CANCUN
ACAPULCO
JAMAICA
BAHAMAS
FLORIDA

Sell Hips, Earn Cash,
Go Travel Now Hiring
Call for group discounts
1-800-648-4847 / www.ststravel.com

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.

Milton, PA

570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

ROCK-N-BOWL

HOW TO BE AN ANGEL...

You or your organization can support the Bookstore's Literacy Tree now through December 5th

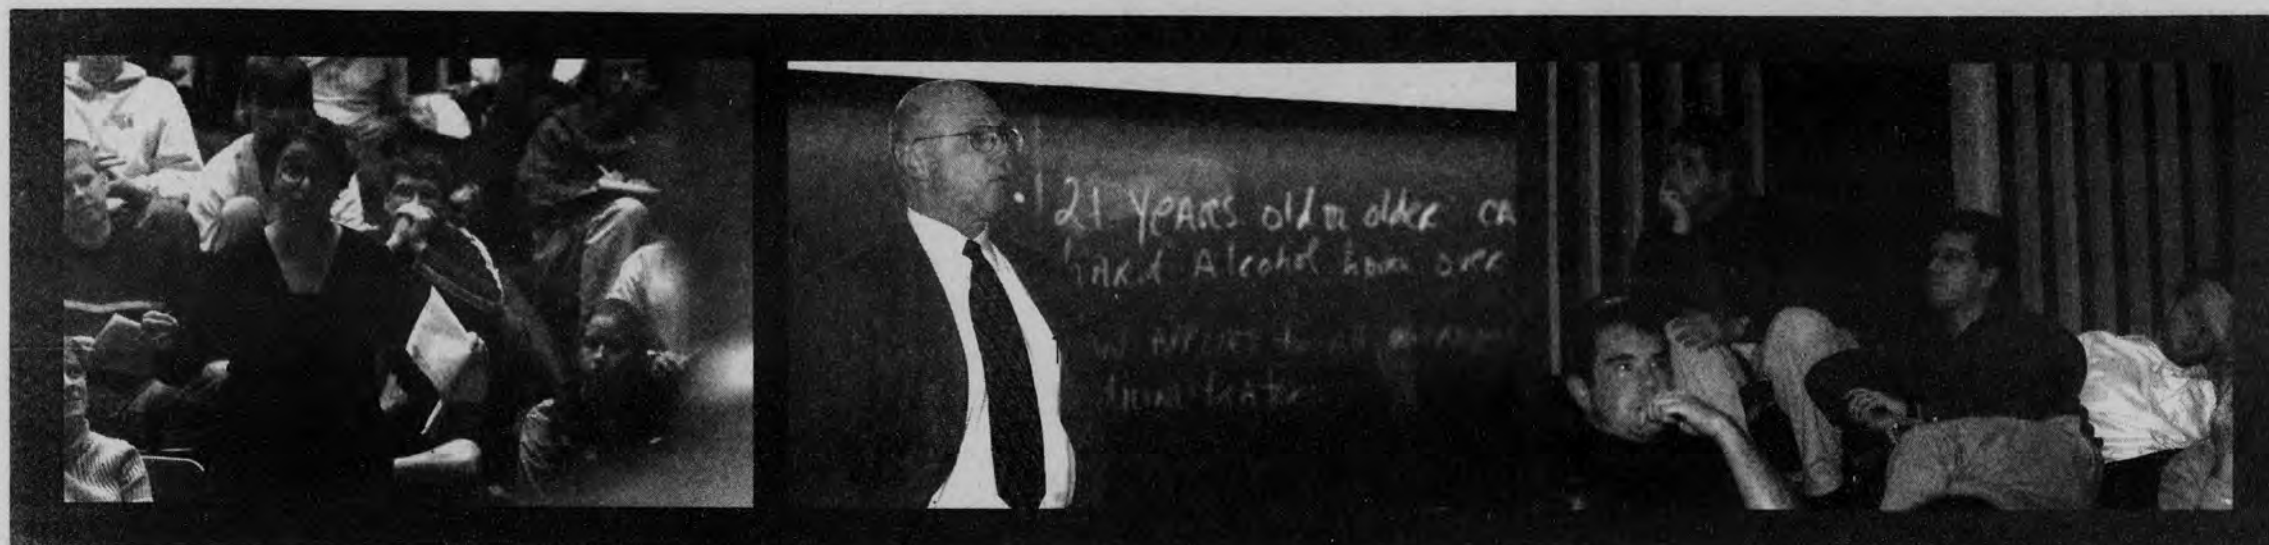

- PICK A ★ representing a local Head Start Child
- BUY an age appropriate children's
- WRITE YOUR NAME on the
- The Bookstore Staff will wrap your book and deliver you

Thanks for your generosity!

News

A change in policy,

Continued from page A1

The Board met this weekend after another student was found to be driving under the influence of alcohol.

"This weekend ... we had another DUI, we had another student hospitalized for alcohol poisoning and we had students who were given alcohol downtown at private houses from another school going into Hunt Hall, cursing outside, running down the hallways, frightening people to death," Ferraro said. "So again, it wasn't just this one weekend. This has been going on all this semester, and there is a real concern about it."

According to Ferraro, there have been more than 200 alcohol infractions so far this semester.

"Part of what happens is the sensitization," Ferraro said. "For example, I have had people say to me, 'It's only [been] 24 [hospitalizations]. We're a school of 3,500. That's not that bad.' But it's been less than three months, and all of last year we had 22 in the hospital, which is less than the number so far this year."

Ferraro said another significant problem this year is the frequent abandonment of intoxicated people.

"People who are drunk have been left on the side of the road, and that's a real concern," Ferraro said. "We've usually said the philosophy here is, 'live and let live,' but we're getting close to, 'live and let die.'"

THE HARD ALCOHOL BAN

"All hard liquor (defined as beverages with an alcohol content of 15 percent or greater) is canned on campus. The points assigned to any violation of the University Alcohol Policy will be doubled when hard liquor is involved, so that the required leave given for eight points is reached twice as fast," Rogers wrote in his letter to students.

Pollock said the temporary ban of hard alcohol is currently necessary.

"It is important to ban hard alcohol because from the evidence we have, there seems to be much more abuse with hard alcohol than with beer or wine. Hard liquor has been the fuel of the risky behaviors, and while we're sorting out long-term solutions, there's a good reason to simply try to make that unavailable or undesired to students," Pollock said.

Many students disagree with the ban on hard alcohol, especially for 21-year-olds who are permitted to drink hard alcohol under the law.

"For people who are 21, banning hard alcohol is ridiculous," Lindsay Shamberger '06 said. "People who aren't 21 technically aren't supposed to be drinking it anyway."

Pollock said he is not sure of the penalties that will incur for off-age students who are found drinking hard alcohol responsibly.

"I would tell [off-age students] to stay tuned for a message in the future. We will have to clarify the hard liquor ban. The presumption is that we will add something to the policy [about off-age students consuming hard alcohol] but that will be determined."

Rogers said he is very much aware that there are students on campus who drink responsibly.

"The problem is, we can't sort out who does and who doesn't so we have to do something across the board to try to eliminate the presence of hard alcohol because that seems to be the area that has been the trigger mechanism of dangerous behaviors," Rogers said.

Rogers said that since his house is on campus, he will not keep any hard liquor in his home.

"I don't want to be hypocritical about it, so I'm going to be drinking beer and wine myself, and so are my guests," Rogers said.

Rogers, Ferraro and Pollock agree that they do not want the hard alcohol ban to be permanent.

"It is my fervent hope that we can get back to where we were last year and the year before and get rid of the more difficult parts of this policy," Rogers said.

SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES

As per the emergency alcohol policy, acts that will trigger suspension or expulsion include participation in "dangerous" drinking games on or off campus, drinking accompanied by an act of physical violence that causes injury, any DUI incident, any involvement with alcohol-related hazing, consumption of alcohol to a "dangerous" level of intoxication and hosting off-campus parties at which students become highly intoxicated or involved in any of the preceding activities.

Rogers said there are still a number of clarifications that need to be made with regard to the emergency policy.

"[Dangerous drinking games] is one of the issues the Student Affairs folks are in the process of trying to define. Right now we are primarily concerned about the ones that involve hard liquor and shots that lead to a very high blood alcohol level very quickly," Rogers said.

Eli Peterson '04 said he thinks education about alcohol is of utmost importance.

"Instead of trying to institute draconian punishments such as one-year suspensions for kids who throw a ping pong ball at a solo cup in the privacy of their own fraternity houses or their dorms," Rogers said.

"The problem is, we can't sort out who does and who doesn't so we have to do something across the board to try to eliminate the presence of hard alcohol because that seems to be the area that has been the trigger mechanism of dangerous behaviors," Rogers said.

Rogers said that since his house is on campus, he will not keep any hard liquor in his home.

"I don't want to be hypocritical about it, so I'm going to be drinking beer and wine myself, and so are my guests," Rogers said.

Rogers, Ferraro and Pollock agree that they do not want the hard alcohol ban to be permanent.

"It is my fervent hope that we can get back to where we were last year and the year before and get rid of the more difficult parts of this policy," Rogers said.

SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES

As per the emergency alcohol policy, acts that will trigger suspension or expulsion include participation in "dangerous" drinking games on or off campus, drinking accompanied by an act of physical violence that causes injury, any DUI incident, any involvement with alcohol-related hazing, consumption of alcohol to a "dangerous" level of intoxication and hosting off-campus parties at which students become highly intoxicated or involved in any of the preceding activities.

would like to do, to what is dictated by cards, or ping pong balls, or dice or rhythmic word games."

Under the current system, supplying alcohol to underage students is a five-point offense. Ferraro said in the past this penalty was difficult to inflict, and he said it will continue to be difficult to inflict in the future.

"It's not been utilized much, to be honest, because it is a very hard case to make, and I'm not sure how easy the case will be to make in this situation either," Ferraro said.

REDUCED PENALTIES

Lesser sanctions for lesser infractions have been implemented.

"Given these measures are consistent with what we've been hearing from students, I think we will have some support from students. The degree separating the most dangerous and least dangerous offenses may not have been realized," Pollock said.

Students who have four or fewer points by Oct. 1 of their senior year will have those points removed from their permanent records. The previous policy only allowed for students with two or fewer points to have those points removed from their permanent records.

"I want this to be retroactive, so the seniors for this year will be able to erase their four points," Rogers said.

Many students have been upset with the old alcohol policy regarding these issues and are happy that the penalties for these minor infractions have been reduced.

"I definitely think it is good that people who are in a room but aren't actually drinking shouldn't get in trouble," Kristen Reichardt '06 said.

The Gold Star Standing, the Silver Star Standing and the Good Standing allowed violations for the Plan for Prominence have been increased.

The penalty for the first offense for underage possession or consumption of beer, wine or any alcoholic beverage with less than a 15 percent alcohol content is one point, and two points after the first offense. The same penalty applies for the attempt to purchase beer, wine or any alcoholic beverage that contains less than 15 percent alcohol.

Pollock said while he knows there will be a spectrum of reactions from students, he said this system should please students who desired stricter penalties for greater offenses and lesser penalties for lesser offenses.

"Given these measures are consistent with what we've been hearing from students, I think we will have some support from students. The degree separating the most dangerous and least dangerous offenses may not have been realized," Pollock said.

Students who have four or fewer points by Oct. 1 of their senior year will have those points removed from their permanent records. The previous policy only allowed for students with two or fewer points to have those points removed from their permanent records.

"I want this to be retroactive, so the seniors for this year will be able to erase their four points," Rogers said.

Many students have been upset with the old alcohol policy regarding these issues and are happy that the penalties for these minor infractions have been reduced.

"I definitely think it is good that people who are in a room but aren't actually drinking shouldn't get in trouble," Kristen Reichardt '06 said.

The Gold Star Standing, the Silver Star Standing and the Good Standing allowed violations for the Plan for Prominence have been increased.

"I believe the increases this semester are a result of the increases in the movement of social functions to off-campus locations by many organizations or individuals in order to avoid the strict risk management rules that come with registered events. I don't believe the students are as 'out of control' as the administration might believe than the previous semesters; there just are much greater opportunities and incentives for a student to commit DUIs and abuse the use of alcohol," Joe Yoon '06 said.

Ferraro does not think increased enforcement uphill is the cause in the increased alcohol infractions this year.

"People will say to me that Public Safety has gotten very, very strict, and they haven't. They're not more strict than they were last year. Public Safety visits the house, the police pull up, they walk up slowly to the door ... They walk down and they usually hand out one ticket or two tickets or something like that. That's about it. That's the night. The theory is that there's been a crackdown on campus, but I don't think that's really true," Ferraro said.

While Ferraro said he believes the increase in alcohol infractions on campus is due to a "tipping point," Rogers said he could not think of any cause.

"I wish I knew. I think that if we had a better idea of why, we may have been able to use more of a targeted approach, but we don't know," Rogers said. "I know there is a theory out there that there has been enhanced enforcement, but that doesn't explain self-inflicted problems like hospitalizations and DUIs."

The Committee on Complementary Activities (CCA) is drafting a revision to the current points system. The University administration has also worked with student groups including Bucknell Student Government (BSG) concerning the revision of the alcohol points system.

"We've been considering longer-term measures for over a month since my original e-mail and President Rogers' letter in The Bucknellian. CCA and BSG have been in many discussions about long-term solutions," Pollock said.

University officials said they do not know if this emergency policy will prove effective.

"I have fervent hope that we will have an impact on the dangerous practices," Rogers said. "We may never know if it works. If we save one student because of the increase in penalties for certain acts, we may never know."

Continued from page A1

two more days?" Phillips said. "Banning hard alcohol was never even brought up at a CCA meeting. [The ban of hard alcohol] needs to be repealed for 21-year-olds."

Ferraro said at the forum that off-age students may bring their hard alcohol home with them for Thanksgiving break. One student pointed out that arrests could incur for the possession of open alcohol containers in motor vehicle.

"I spoke to President Rogers about this, and he indicated that following: that students who are 21 or older do not need to turn in the hard alcohol by Friday at noon. Instead they can bring the alcohol home over Thanksgiving and therefore it will not go to waste. This way the students of age can use it at another time," Ferraro said in his e-mail.

Ferraro also addressed in his e-mail students' concerns about arrests for transporting open containers of alcohol.

"Presumably if [alcohol] is placed in a closed suitcase, and is not sitting in open view, there should not be a major problem. But do be aware of this caution as you are deciding if you want to take the alcohol home or dispose of it," Ferraro said in his e-mail.

One student said that 21-year-old students who live on campus signed a housing contract believing they would be able to drink hard alcohol in their rooms. He suggested that these students should be afforded the opportunity to live off campus next semester.

"I have to admit you caught me off-guard with that," Rogers said. "I will have to think about that one."

Associate Dean of Students Gerald Commerford said he does not think students will be allowed to move off campus.

"From my conversation with the trustees, that won't happen," Commerford said.

Members of CALVIN & HOBBS, an organization that promotes substance-free living, attended the forum to support students' views.

"I do not drink, but I agree with students that hard alcohol should not be banned," CALVIN & HOBBS member John Gallagher '06 said.

According to Ferraro, the largest group of students going to the hospital this year has been first-year students, but the second largest group of students going to the hospital has been seniors.

Many students said they were upset that the only people involved in the implementation of the policy were the members of the Board of Trustees and the administration. Students said they were angry that organizations such as BSG were not asked to be involved.

Rogers responded that there were immediate concerns that had to be addressed this weekend, which is why students were not involved in the decision.

"I honestly was not put in this presidency to make your lives miserable," Rogers said. "It's not like I haven't been talking to students."

Students responded to Rogers' statement with laughter and booing.

"This is a Board of Trustees' policy, not an administrative policy," Sean student said.

"I was just thinking that myself," Rogers said.

Many other students agreed at this time that their concerns about being ignored were confirmed by the lack of note-taking by any administrators during the forum.

Another concern students said they have is that there are not enough places to host parties on campus.

even find a party, so I know a freshman can't," Chuck O'Connell '04 said. Students also said fraternities brothers do not want to host parties uphill because they are always fined.

Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Chip Marrara said that fraternities have only been fined $450 total by the Interfraternity Council (IFC) this semester.

"There was a lot of concern voiced about a policy that would cause students placed on suspension for alcohol offenses to lose Bucknell scholarships when they returned," Ferraro said in his e-mail. "There were many thoughtful comments made about that matter, and President Rogers has indicated that he will look at this policy very closely."

Nikolas Keramidas '04 said that the job of the Resident Assistant (RA) will become much harder. Each time students deny that they have been drinking, Public Safety will have to be called to administer a breathalyzer test.

"Now we're also put into a position where if our friends have hard alcohol who live in our building, we have to support the policy. We are the ones on the halls every day—we're dealing with it every minute we are on the halls," Keramidas said.

Many students agreed that the emergency policy will not solve any alcohol problems on campus.

"No one is going to stop drinking, no one is going to stop having hard alcohol. Prohibiting these things makes people want to do them more," Christina Pellicci '04 said.

Rogers and Ferraro reiterated throughout the meeting that the reason for the emergency policy is a result of the increase in alcohol infractions as compared to the previous two years.

"Bucknell students did a good job with alcohol in the past two years. But this fall has been extremely troubled. Even when one accounts for possible increased enforcement, the figures both overall and for serious events are off the charts. Whether one agrees or not with the emergency measures, you should know that they were prompted by real causes of concern, not by a wish to micro-manage," Ferraro said in his e-mail.

CCA Chair Gary Thaniel '04 took the microphone toward the end of the forum and would not comment on whether he supports the emergency policy or not.

"For now, just be responsible for yourself and your friends," Thaniel said.

Ferraro said in his e-mail that students should be aware that CCA will continue to work on the improvement of the University alcohol plan, which will take effect when we move out of the Emergency period.

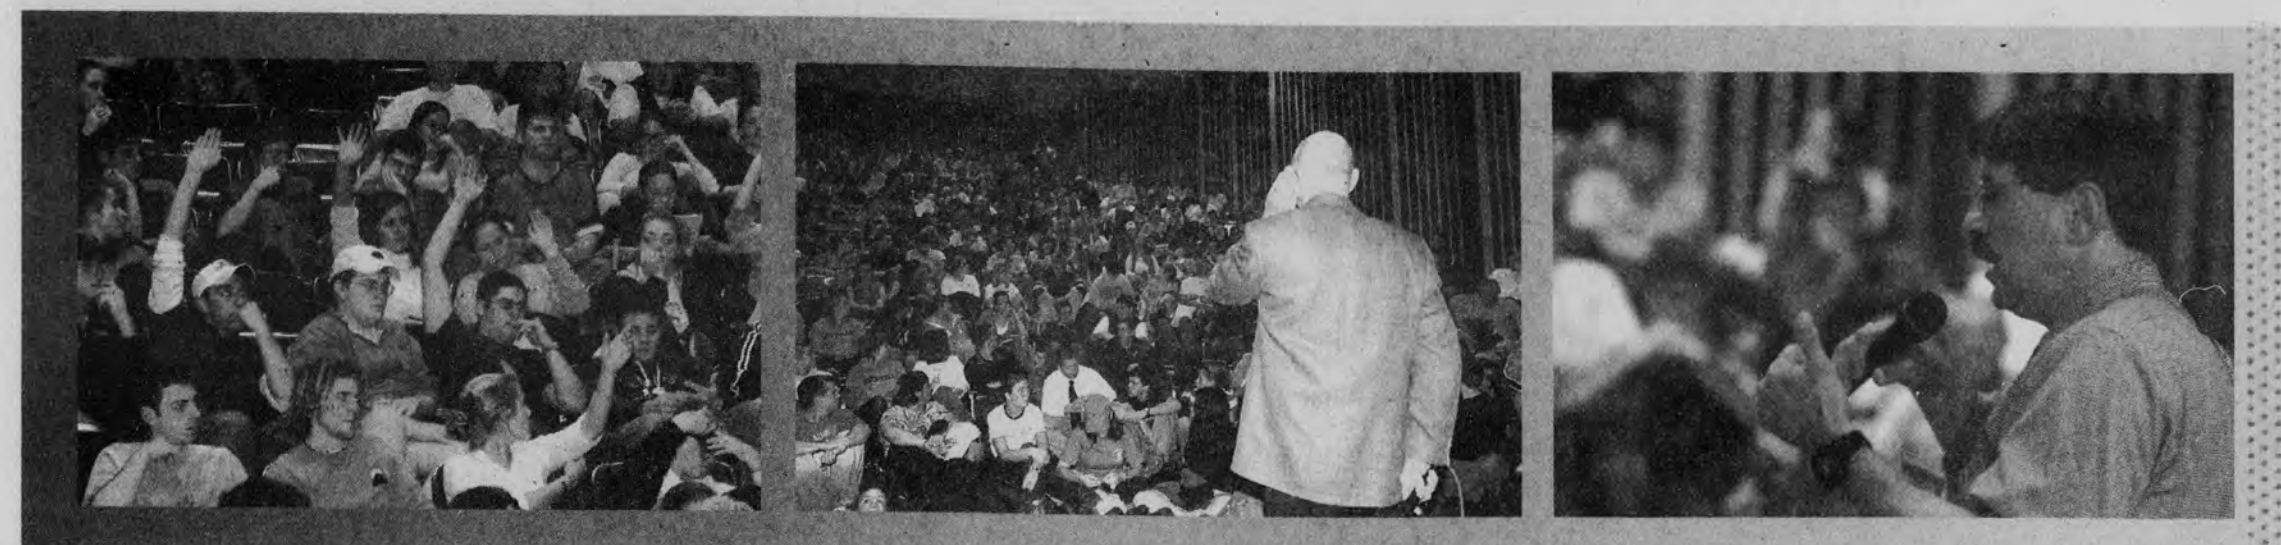

Ferraro also said students will be informed about future forums.

"We believe we will have a plan that allows us to focus on moderation, preventative education, and thoughtful and corrective sanctions. As the Committee does its work, it will share information and solicit comments from BSG, IFC, Panhellenic, and other groups," Ferraro said in his e-mail.

Photography by Adam Wilcox and Eric Graham.

News

a change in lifestyle?

Continued from page A1

two more days?" Phillips said. "Banning hard alcohol was never even brought up at a CCA meeting. [The ban of hard alcohol] needs to be repealed for 21-year-olds."

Ferraro said at the forum that off-age students may bring their hard alcohol home with them for Thanksgiving break. One student pointed out that arrests could incur for the possession of open alcohol containers in motor vehicle.

"I spoke to President Rogers about this, and he indicated that following: that students who are 21 or older do not need to turn in the hard alcohol by Friday at noon. Instead they can bring the alcohol home over Thanksgiving and therefore it will not go to waste. This way the students of age can use it at another time," Ferraro said in his e-mail.

Ferraro also addressed in his e-mail students' concerns about arrests for transporting open containers of alcohol.

"Presumably if [alcohol] is placed in a closed suitcase, and is not sitting in open view, there should not be a major problem. But do be aware of this caution as you are deciding if you want to take the alcohol home or dispose of it," Ferraro said in his e-mail.

One student said that 21-year-old students who live on campus signed a housing contract believing they would be able to drink hard alcohol in their rooms. He suggested that these students should be afforded the opportunity to live off campus next semester.

"I have to admit you caught me off-guard with that," Rogers said. "I will have to think about that one."

Associate Dean of Students Gerald Commerford said he does not think students will be allowed to move off campus.

"From my conversation with the trustees, that won't happen," Commerford said.

Members of CALVIN & HOBBS, an organization that promotes substance-free living, attended the forum to support students' views.

"I do not drink, but I agree with students that hard alcohol should not be banned," CALVIN & HOBBS member John Gallagher '06 said.

According to Ferraro, the largest group of students going to the hospital this year has been first-year students, but the second largest group of students going to the hospital has been seniors.

Many students said they were upset that the only people involved in the implementation of the policy were the members of the Board of Trustees and the administration. Students said they were angry that organizations such as BSG were not asked to be involved.

Rogers responded that there were immediate concerns that had to be addressed this weekend, which is why students were not involved in the decision.

"I honestly was not put in this presidency to make your lives miserable," Rogers said. "It's not like I haven't been talking to students."

Students responded to Rogers' statement with laughter and booing.

"This is a Board of Trustees' policy, not an administrative policy," Sean student said.

"I was just thinking that myself," Rogers said.

Many other students agreed at this time that their concerns about being ignored were confirmed by the lack of note-taking by any administrators during the forum.

Another concern students said they have is that there are not enough places to host parties on campus.

even find a party, so I know a freshman can't," Chuck O'Connell '04 said. Students also said fraternities brothers do not want to host parties uphill because they are always fined.

Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Chip Marrara said that fraternities have only been fined $450 total by the Interfraternity Council (IFC) this semester.

"There was a lot of concern voiced about a policy that would cause students placed on suspension for alcohol offenses to lose Bucknell scholarships when they returned," Ferraro said in his e-mail. "There were many thoughtful comments made about that matter, and President Rogers has indicated that he will look at this policy very closely."

Nikolas Keramidas '04 said that the job of the Resident Assistant (RA) will become much harder. Each time students deny that they have been drinking, Public Safety will have to be called to administer a breathalyzer test.

"Now we're also put into a position where if our friends have hard alcohol who live in our building, we have to support the policy. We are the ones on the halls every day—we're dealing with it every minute we are on the halls," Keramidas said.

Many students agreed that the emergency policy will not solve any alcohol problems on campus.

"No one is going to stop drinking, no one is going to stop having hard alcohol. Prohibiting these things makes people want to do them more," Christina Pellicci '04 said.

Rogers and Ferraro reiterated throughout the meeting that the reason for the emergency policy is a result of the increase in alcohol infractions as compared to the previous two years.

"Bucknell students did a good job with alcohol in the past two years. But this fall has been extremely troubled. Even when one accounts for possible increased enforcement, the figures both overall and for serious events are off the charts. Whether one agrees or not with the emergency measures, you should know that they were prompted by real causes of concern, not by a wish to micro-manage," Ferraro said in his e-mail.

CCA Chair Gary Thaniel '04 took the microphone toward the end of the forum and would not comment on whether he supports the emergency policy or not.

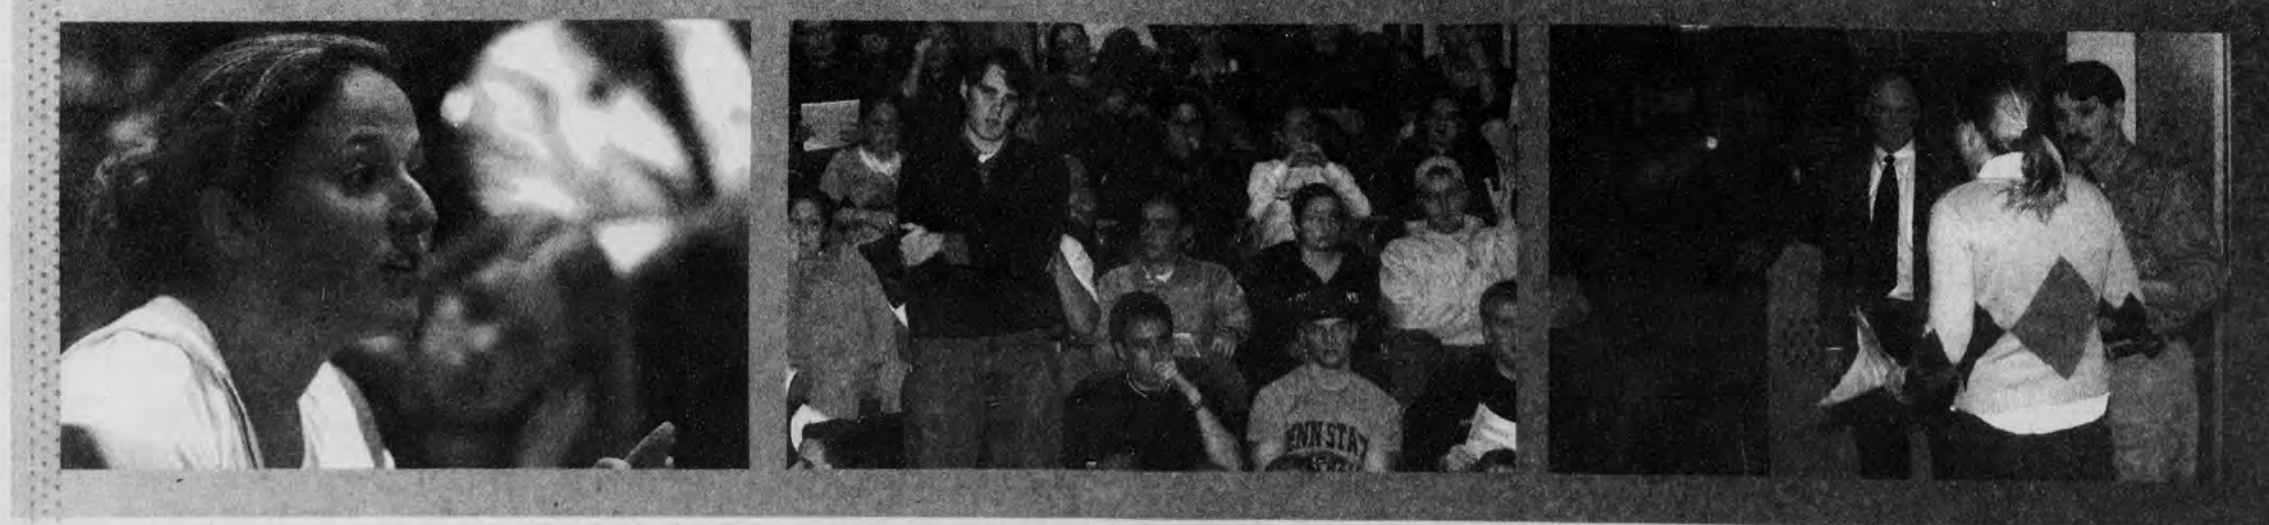

"For now, just be responsible for yourself and your friends," Thaniel said.

Ferraro said in his e-mail that students should be aware that CCA will continue to work on the improvement of the University alcohol plan, which will take effect when we move out of the Emergency period.

Ferraro also said students will be informed about future forums.

"We believe we will have a plan that allows us to focus on moderation, preventative education, and thoughtful and corrective sanctions. As the Committee does its work, it will share information and solicit comments from BSG, IFC, Panhellenic, and other groups," Ferraro said in his e-mail.

Photography by Adam Wilcox and Eric Graham.

News

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemmme
Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Jackson surrenders to authorities

SANTA BARBARA, Calif.—A handcuffed Michael Jackson walked into the Santa Barbara jail on Thursday to face child molestation charges that could send the pop superstar to prison for years if he is convicted.

At least 27 killed in Turkey blasts

ISTANBUL, Turkey—Trucks packed with explosives blew up at a London-based bank and the British Consulate on Thursday, killing at least 27 people and wounding nearly 450. The worst terrorist bombing in Turkey's history coincided with President Bush's trip to Britain and was blamed on al Qaeda.

Miami police clash with protesters

MIAMI—Officers and a group of demonstrators clashed Thursday near the site of talks to create a free trade zone for North and South America. Police blanketed downtown, remembering trade-related riots in other cities.

Anti-Bush groups march in London

LONDON—Amid chants, the blast of foghorns and the beat of drums, tens of thousands of anti-war activists marched peacefully in London Thursday to let President Bush know of their opposition to U.S.-British policies in Iraq.

Flooding raises storm death toll to seven

BALTIMORE—Rescuers searched a rain-swollen stream Thursday for a missing construction worker who was swept away with two colleagues as storms flooded roads and overflowed creeks across Appalachia and the Eastern Seaboard.

Cybercrime crackdown nets 125

WASHINGTON—A federal crackdown on a wide range of Internet fraud schemes costing victims an estimated $100 million has resulted in the arrest or conviction of 125 individuals, law enforcement officials said Thursday.

ANGRY CHALK TALK

Unknown person(s) wrote aggressive phrases around campus on Nov. 14.
Above: "Public Safety is a joke."
Below: "There are no rules."

CHRISTMAS

Beautiful Pottery by Mike Yoder
Pottery by Adrian

AT RUTH'S SHOP

Gift Certificates Free Layaway
RT 45 West
Lewisburg, PA 17837

BASKETS JEWELRY
HOME DECOR

(570) 523-0655

Hrs: Mon-Fri 10-5 Sat 10-4

McGuire '07 applying for school board vacancy in Lewisburg

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Writer

Michael McGuire '07 is applying for a recently vacated position on the Lewisburg School Board. McGuire, a Lewisburg High School graduate, ran for School Board for the Nov. 4 election and lost.

"I think I have a good chance of winning, since I got so many votes in the last election," McGuire said.

McGuire received 1,144 votes in the last election, which supporter and volunteer Chad North '06 said was a great write-in campaign. North said he believes that McGuire's age played a big part in his not getting the position. Both McGuire and North hope that McGuire's age and perspective would benefit the board.

"[McGuire] is very capable of fulfilling the position being a student to the board for three years, and I think he will add a great deal to the Board," North said. "Being an alum of Lewisburg myself, I know that the school system needs a lot of work, and Michael, having gone through it also, could add a whole new perspective and dimension that the folks on the Board would have little to no clue about."

When a Board member resigns, the public is not involved in the appointment of the new member. McGuire submitted his letter of interest to the Board and now must attend an interview with the Board in December.

Those interested in running for the seat on the Board have until Dec. 5 to submit their letter of interest, so the other candidates will not be known until that date.

"I don't know who else will apply, as no one else ran in the election, so it's difficult to predict," McGuire said. "The votes I got in the [previous] election will definitely help though."

As McGuire continues to strive to win, his support continues also. Those who helped McGuire with the election are still vocally support their candidate.

"I think what Michael did was very courageous and generous," North said. "Even though he has gone through the Lewisburg school system and

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Michael McGuire '07 is running for a vacant spot on the Lewisburg School Board. McGuire ran for school board on Nov. 4 as a write-in candidate and lost.

Flory Perez agrees with North's opinion of McGuire.

"Mike is humble and relentless; he won't give up," Perez said. "He is a hard-working, genuine guy, and I'm really proud of him for taking a chance and giving it his best."

Class of 2007 President

November	November	November	November	November
FRI 21	SAT 22	SUN 23	MON 24	WED 26
BUCC Rootbeer Kegger UHLIC Noon	Football vs. Georgetown University Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium 1 p.m.	Quaker Services Willard Smith Library Vaughan Lit. 125 10 a.m.	Yoga Class Gerhard Fieldhouse Aerobics Studio 5 p.m.	Episcopal Services Rooke Chapel Noon
Cocktail Theatre Tustin Theatre 5 p.m.	"Life and Debt" Hilltop Film Series Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit 3 p.m.	Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 11 a.m.	Cocktail Theatre Tustin Theatre 5 p.m.	Men's Basketball vs. Yale Sojka Pavilion 7 p.m.
Jason Mraz & The Ataris Sojka Pavilion 8 p.m.	Fashion Show Langone Center Bison 7 p.m.	Two Past Midnight Langone Center Terrace Room 1 p.m.	November TUE 25	November THU 27
Crash Uptown 9:30 p.m.	Bucknell Opera Concert Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel Main Sanctuary 4 p.m.	Bucknell vs. Loyola Women's Basketball Sojka Pavilion 7 p.m.	Thanksgiving
"Rocky IV" Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit 10:15 p.m.	Mr. Bucknell Larson Hall Cafeteria 9 p.m.	Catholic Mass Hunt Hall Living Room 101 10 p.m.
Open Mic Night 7th Street Cafe 11 p.m.	"Rocky V" Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit 10:30 p.m.

The information for these events is subject to change.
Some events are only open to members of an organization.

Sent calendar submissions to bucknellian@bucknell.edu with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject.
Edited and compiled by Nick Kugensky.

Why just read about the news when you could be reporting it instead?
E-mail Liz — esalemmme@

you come home late at night in need of a snack. you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2003 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. PricewaterhouseCoopers refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, a Delaware limited liability partnership or, as the context requires, the network of member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Opinions

THE Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 132, Number 11
 C-3952 Bucknell University
 Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
 (570) 577-1520
 bucknellian@bucknell.edu
 http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
 Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor
 Michelle Dombeck '05

Managing Editor
 Alyson Walker '04

Business Manager
 Kristin Santilli '05

Director of Sales
 Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
 Jason Rubenstein '04
 Sandi-Jo Galati '04

News Editors
 Elisabeth Salame '06
 Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
 Aaron Hanlon '04
 Keeley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors
 Courtney Homan '05

Sports Editors
 Cecily Cairns '04
 Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
 Ashley Maliken '06
 Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
 Julianna Pritak '04
 Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editor
 Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout
 Nick Kupenski '07

Chief Copy Editors
 Stacey Greenberg '06
 Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers
 Joshua Mayer '04
 Emory Strother '04
 Davisha Malhotra '06

Marketing Director
 Joseph Giordano '05

Circulation Manager
 Jes Trinitis '07

Advisor
 James F. Lee

OP-ED POLICY

The editorial of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board. Its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian, Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Rushed alcohol policy lacks student input

The University has taken drastic measures in an attempt to correct the perceived alcohol problem, implementing a new, emergency policy. The policy's only redeeming characteristic is its emphasis on stronger punishments for serious infractions and lesser penalties for more minor offenses—otherwise, the policy is inherently flawed and will not produce the administration's intended outcome—the safety of University students.

The new plan does not seem to be well thought out and has an alarming number of gray areas. One of these gray areas is the ambiguous term used to determine a student's fate at the University: "dangerous." Students face suspension or even expulsion for participating in "dangerous" drinking games or if they become intoxicated to a "dangerous" level.

Whom is the University empowering to make this judgment call? Is the RA who finds a group of card-playing, beer-drinking students expected to decide if this violation crosses the line? Will Public Safety have to be dispatched to test the blood alcohol level of every inebriated student to determine if he or she will be forced to leave the University? In addition, the ban of hard alcohol on campus has numerous problems. The administration's rationale behind the ban probably lies in the fact that eliminating hard alcohol might make drinking safer. In theory, it is harder to become intoxicated from an alcoholic drink like beer that has a low alcohol content than it would be with hard alcohol.

The University needs to re-think its new emergency policy.

This is only a theory, however. In reality, many students over the age of 21 are able to safely and responsibly possess and consume hard alcohol. These individuals should not be punished for the irresponsible actions of some immature students.

Others could theorize that if students lack access to hard alcohol, they will merely consume other types of alcohol such as beer or wine in higher amounts, or resort to "recreational" drugs in order to get the high they previously got from hard alcohol. While the University can prohibit hard alcohol, it cannot stop students' desire to drink.

Here is another theory—a ban of hard alcohol on campus might encourage students to go off campus to consume it. As we wrote in our editorial on Oct. 3, the trend of increasing off-campus parties will most likely lead to an increase in DUIs. When students party off campus, they also may have more serious alcohol-related problems because students are farther away from immediate sources of help. The new emergency policy does not eliminate this problem—instead, it fosters and perpetuates it.

One speculation is that DUIs have increased because more people have been partying off campus and then attempting to drive back to their dorms. Another is that the number of alcohol-related incidents has increased because Public Safety is enforcing regulations more strictly. Maybe students are becoming more likely to seek help and take advantage of the partial amnesty clause—11 of the 24 students who visited the hospital did. Perhaps this semester is not indicative of a trend, and next semester normalcy will return. Simple speculations will not lead to an answer. Until the University ferrets out the source of the problem, the problem's attempts to curb the dangerous effects of its results will continue to fail. Without identifying the cause, this problem may always be latent and will resurface.

The University needs to re-think its new emergency policy. This fact was visibly illustrated on Wednesday, when over 400 students flooded the LC Forum for hours to express their concerns about the ban on hard alcohol and criticize the University for not consulting students about the policy.

By not receiving enough input from the student body on the new policy before it was implemented, it seems as though the University is treating us like children with automatic suspensions and expulsions is not in line with the University's current stance on disciplinary measures.

While a few students are acting like children, the mature majority should have input on the policy changes. Its voice should not only be heard, but be influential in the decision-making process. By not considering the students' opinions and ignoring groups with student representation such as Bucknell Student Government and the Committee on Complementary Activities, the University is blatantly refusing to acknowledge that the students matter.

We do commend the University for adjusting the number of points students receive for offenses. Minor offenses, such as sober minors being in the presence of alcohol or possessing alcohol, have very minor consequences. Major offenses, like driving under the influence, can now lead to expulsion.

These adjustments show that the University has the ability to listen to students and can respond to our needs and desires. We can only hope that the University will do the same in response to our concerns about the new policy.

The 200 alcohol-related incidents, nine DUIs and 24 visits to the hospital, do indeed add up to an alarming reality. Something seems terribly wrong with the way students consume alcohol at the University, and the University needs to take steps to remedy this situation. While the University is taking steps, perhaps these steps need more direction.

Alcohol policy elicits excessive response from students

By JOSH FISHER
 Senior Writer

Get a grip, people.

I unknowingly wandered by the Langone Center Forum this evening. "What are all those people in there for?" I asked myself. Only a required review session would draw that sort of crowd.

But if you understand anything about the University, you understand that no academic endeavor would ever draw that many students.

Never before have I seen the student body so politically charged, so emotional about any issue—not the presidential election or the war in Iraq or a guest lecture on Martin Heidegger's "Ontology: the Hermeneutics of Facticity."

This one was about liquor. It has been nearly 12 hours since that ominous letter arrived in our mailboxes. And I walk down the street hearing fragments of the same conversation from different people—"So basically the policy is saying that if you do have liquor ... and the worst part is that it affects those who are of age too! ... so is that 15 percent by molarity or by volume? ... I mean, they are infringing on our civil liberties ... our right to drink."

I never once heard an ambulatory conversation about how the Patriot Act curtailed civil liberties—unless it was about the drink. 'The Patriot Act' (two parts Jagermeister, one part Goldschlager).

Well here's a hint: if you think that the student body has no voice it is not because we have been silenced. It is because we have failed to speak up until this point in time.

It hasn't even been 12 hours, and I'm already sick of this conversation. I left the Langone Center Forum depressed, not because of the shortsightedness of this policy, but because of the student body's reaction to it. People were yelling and screaming. One girl was bordering on tears!

Obviously, when you attack liquor at the University, you know you are making it personal.

Writing for this newspaper last year, I drew one response from the University community; ironically, it was when I dared to disparage House Party Weekend.

The student wrote me a letter: "Man, you have to be the biggest loser on this campus. Have fun sitting at home."

After I stopped hitting my head on my desk out of frustration, I realized that that truly is the assumption: if you aren't out imbibing to a dangerous degree, then you must be sitting at home, all by your lonesome.

The University has an "in loco parentis" (in place of the parents) policy with regards to the students because—yes—we are children! There's no other explanation for how we behave when we are left alone at home. And if 24 students hadn't been hospitalized, nine students hadn't been involved in driving under the influence cases and a number of other ridiculous incidents hadn't occurred ad nauseum, there wouldn't have been a need for this sort of radical action.

The new alcohol policy is the only option that remains for the administration.

Try as you might, you cannot legislate responsibility. But since so many students have not shown the ability to exercise social action, let alone responsible action-taking friends home when they've had too much, not drinking and driving—the new alcohol policy is the only option that remains for the administration.

So I am left with my initial reaction to this whole situation—get a grip, people. Though so many have made this out to be a catastrophic event, banning hard liquor on campus will not be the end of life as we know it.

And still, we are an institution that has a drinking problem.

Students should not tolerate hatred toward any organization

By AARON HANLON
 Opinions Editor

Even if every right-of-center college activist in the entire country kicked the bucket tomorrow, rational mainstream society would still ostracize the bitter derelicts who write such things as "Die BUCC" around campus, regardless of political views.

I can't exactly recall which year of my primary education it was when I learned about extremist groups like the Nazis, who wished death upon people simply for cultural and ideological differences, but I am sure that most have learned sometime by their first year of college that calling upon another group to die just because you disagree with what they believe in is, to say the least, frowned upon in our society.

For those unaware, some brave soul anonymously wrote "Die BUCC" in chalk outside of the Langone Center a few days ago. That person or group of people was undoubtedly referring to the Bucknell University Conservatives Club. After a barrage of Bush-bashing to the tune of "Bush is dangerous," "Bush is the real terrorist" and "Bush is Hitler" from the likes of left-of-center radicals, it seems slightly ironic that these terroristic messages are being disseminated by those outside of the Bush/conservative camp. I thought conservatives were supposed to be the fascists? This doesn't make sense!

Actually, it makes plenty of sense. Where virtually all other groups and sub-cultures are strictly protected via speech codes and harassment protocols at the University, the BUCC is not. This leaves the club wide open and vulnerable to such epithets as "Nazis!" and "Die!"

Fortunately, many members of the club do not feel as though speech ought to be limited by the University. Thus the University's hands-off approach to this incident so far is in some odd way commendable.

Many do, however, believe that differences should be discussed and/or reconciled with civility instead of death threats.

In light of the "Die BUCC" message, among others in the recent past, I suggest that there are in fact tolerance problems on campus. Because we seem to be looking for tolerance inadequacies in all the wrong places, our situation is particularly difficult.

The typical "disadvantaged" campus groups are guarded by policy to the extent that being intolerant toward them is a figurative death sentence. The last time a conservative group attempted to logically and civilly discuss issues of race on our campus, people were slandered at a forum, and the deans had to call Public Safety to secure the area.

If someone wrote "Die homosexuals" or an equally disturbing message outside of the Langone Center, the campus would be in a fit of fear and rage, and rightfully so. Conversely, when someone writes "Die BUCC," the chalk message doesn't even get erased.

There is a clear discrepancy between how members of the campus community view threats to some groups versus others. In reality, all of these threats are equally disgusting and inappropriate.

It should not require University action to improve or alleviate our tolerance problems.

It should not require University action to improve or alleviate our tolerance problem. Rather, we should recognize the problems that arise from all expressions of intolerance as a community of civilized, intelligent and educated people and encourage better means of venting frustration or understanding the unfamiliar.

We should make it known to people whose speech is truly a product of hatred that we are in the business of productive discourse and not bitter abuse.

Regardless of whether or not the BUCC is effectively civil in its arguments and challenges, suggesting that they or any other group ought to die goes against the very principles that all of us on campus hold dear: violence and threatening messages are in most cases not the correct avenues toward conflict resolution. It is extremely sad that some people are incapable of expressing themselves constructively, resorting instead to fanaticism.

While the University is up in arms about "excessive" drinking, there are far more insidious social ills within our campus community.

If tolerance and diversity, beneficial in their truest, non-politicized forms, are honest concerns among administrators and students, it would be beneficial for all of us to examine the origins of such vile messages as "Die BUCC." The fact that this message is a lucid example of intolerance and prejudice is perhaps its only benefit.

Keeping this in mind, I hope the campus community is able to reflect on the meaning of this incident and recognize that messages of this nature ought to be discouraged not by mandate but by simple human decency.

Letters to the editor

BSG responds to new alcohol policy

To the Editor:

This letter is written in response to the "urgent" alcohol policy modifications recently implemented by President Steffen Rogers. We have several pressing concerns related to this policy.

First, this plan was imposed upon all students abruptly and without student input during any stage of the drafting of the final plan. Given that the alcohol policy primarily affects students, it is inappropriate and shortsighted to implement such drastic changes to the alcohol policy without any student input.

Second, the main and most egregious concern with this plan is the banning of hard liquor on campus for all students, even those who are of legal age. This ban will cause more problems by increasing the attractiveness of parties downtown, where hard liquor is allowed. If the purpose of this policy change was to move parties on campus where it is safer, it accomplishes the exact opposite, encouraging more dangerous drinking in a less supervised location.

Furthermore, everyone agrees that a small minority of students creates most of the alcohol-related problems on and off campus. Yet the ban on hard liquor punishes only students who live on campus, including those who drink responsibly and are of legal age.

Third, we believe that any shift in the alcohol policy should focus on student safety and safe consumption of alcohol. The new alcohol policy is punitive and authoritative, inspiring fear rather than encouraging safe drinking through education and moderation. The increase in automatic suspensions and expulsions is particularly overbearing and will send too many valuable students home unnecessarily.

Finally, we regret that a semester of dialogue between Bucknell Student Government, Committee on Complementary Activities, the administration, the Dean of Students, Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, Public Safety and other groups led to a unilateral plan that treats the symptoms, but not the causes, of the alcohol-related issues at Bucknell. We recognize that the old alcohol policy needed revising, but this policy is a step in the wrong direction. A first step in the right direction would begin with the immediate removal of the ban on hard liquor. As members of the 2003 BSG Executive Board, we feel it is unfortunate that we must leave this demeaning and combative alcohol policy for the 2004 Executive Board to fight. We hope that its ideas and opinions will not be ignored.

Sincerely,

Katy Timer, '04 President of BSG
 Jack Phillips, '04 BSG Vice-President
 John Gray, '04 BSG Vice-President of Finance

Sirens thankful for student support

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter to provide some clarification and insight as to the purposes and goals of the campus group Sirens, for which the University community has recently shown a great deal of support in a number of activities.

We are a group focused on eradicating patriarchy. Similar to the mythical sirens, we serve as a voice and an open forum for discussion and action around gender issues, as well as an avenue for women's experiences and voices to be heard.

Unlike the mythical sirens, we believe that men, women and all people play an integral and necessary role in the support of women's issues and the abolition of patriarchy. Our group has included men in the past and will in the future, as we believe that the oppressive veil with which patriarchy blankets women leaves all of us blind to freedom. Gender and sexuality discrimination, violence and oppression are offensive (and if they aren't, they should be) to everyone.

We arose out of the Women's and Gender Studies program in 1999, responding to an overwhelming concern about the current and historical role of women at the University and in society at large. While many of our members and arguably many of our goals identify with feminist thinking and "leftist" ideology, Sirens is not a group concerned with politics or labels. We are issue-based and prefer to let our actions and events reflect our beliefs, rather than an unfortunately misunderstood label.

We would like to extend our thanks to the Bucknell community for their support in helping us come closer to achieving our goals. The success of the Inner Beauty Pageant and all the events of Love Your Body Week would not have been possible without the help of so many—ACE, Laura Kamienski, BSG, MCOP, FLAG & BT, the Women's Resource Center and all those who recognized that the false standard of beauty to which we hold all women cannot compare to the astounding natural beauty that is found inward and comes in all forms. Thank you, Bucknell, for helping us raise awareness about the oppression of women and getting us another step closer to the liberation of all genders.

Sincerely,

Emily Park '04

Times headline, "Bush asks lands in Mideast to try democratic ways," a joke

By JAKE PALLEY
 Writer

This New York Times headline should be found in the Times' backroom pages under the subsection of "black humor"—no joke. This headline is hilarious, but nobody is laughing. In fact, U.S. President George W. Bush actually said this with a straight face and a dead serious demeanor, obviously dismissing a pressing and painfully obvious question: Why on earth would anyone seriously consider democratizing the Middle East?

The dynamics of this question are easy to understand. The Middle East is a hotbed of instability. Israelis and Palestinians perpetuate violence and hatred like it's their job. The United States has never taken a balanced view toward this problem, making itself a lightning rod for Zionist conspiracy theories and unbridled hatred. The Middle East views the United States as an imperialistic power that crushes Afghanistan, Iraq and Islam in general.

Adding to the mix the insensitive if not fanatical American general that reduced Islam's Allah to an icon while elevating that the Christian God is not good for anyone.

The Middle East is a place with little democratic grassroots experience—a history of dictators and a general lack of Western ideals assures this. In more recent times, the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq conducted under the ceaseless mantra of the "War on Terror" have encouraged these perceptions of U.S. insensitivity and imperialism. In Afghanistan, the U.S.-appointed Karzai runs the capital city, Kabul, and little else.

The Guardian reports that the Iraqi council in Iraq is composed of expatriate Iraqis appointed to the council by Washington. Further, the council members hardly even attend their own meetings and lack serious public legitimacy. The semblance of democracy does not yet exist in Iraq.

Meanwhile, the security situation is getting out of hand. The CIA estimates that up to 50,000 Muslims in Iraq alone are insurgents. Missile attacks on helicopters and car bombs on "soft" targets like U.N. buildings in Iraq are reprehensible, undermine peace and breed Vietnam-style chaos.

In Saudi Arabia, 17 were killed when al Qaeda militants attacked a Western-style neighborhood. Even if attacking fellow Muslims does in fact weaken al Qaeda's popularity, it does prove that organized resistance is growing and that no target anywhere is spared.

Regardless of ideological orientation and perception, the facts are not going to change. So why instill democracy at all? History tells us that a German democracy elected Adolf Hitler. Are we really so naïve to believe that history cannot repeat itself?

Are we ready to believe that democracy turns humanity into a fun-loving race without wars or worry? If Saudi Arabia is really home to 17 of the 19 Sept. 11 terrorists and if Saudi Arabia is bottled up with jihadist sentiment, then how in the world will democracy solve any of this?

Instead, democracy will empower terror. Democracy will allow Saudis to elect an anti-American madman as their legitimate president, placing the United States in a rather peculiar position. If a democratic transition is to take place in Iraq, it too shall fail for the simple reason that the democratic foundations of peace, Western justice and freedom, cannot be laid in a matter of months while

Nader chosen for good reasons

To the Editor:

As an eventual 2004 University graduate, I would like to express my support in the selection of Ralph Nader as Commencement speaker.

Contrary to the beliefs of an alumnus, who did not check his facts before he wrote a letter to the editor, the decision for this year's Commencement speaker was made by a committee composed of three student representatives, three faculty members, three members of the administration and, yes, Jim Rice. Commencement is not a political statement made by the University.

We do not select our Commencement speakers based on the political makeup of our nation's capital, as it was inferred we should by an alumnus, Mr. Malinich. Rather, the University listened to the students and not the alumni, as it is our graduation.

You see, Mr. McCarthy—I'm sorry, Mr. Malinich—the graduation speaker this year was chosen with student input. However, we are not planning on joining the Communist Party, as you may well fear. In fact, the selection committee was well aware of Nader's speech topic, civic engagement, before the contract was signed.

With the publication of "Unsafe at Any Speed" in 1965, Nader started his civic career at the young age of 32. Since then, he has been responsible for at least eight major federal consumer protection laws such as the Motor Vehicle Safety Laws and the Safe Drinking Water Act, the launching of federal regulatory agencies such as the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the Environment Protection Agency and the Consumer Product Safety Administration, the recall of millions of defective motor vehicles, the access to the government through the Freedom of Information Act of 1974 and the saving of many lives (www.nader.org—check it out).

This man has done more than any other American in the past 40 years to protect you and me as consumers. If an alumnus would like to base his financial giving to University students, solely on his political views, that's fine. I'd rather leave politics aside next May and listen to what Nader has to say about civic engagement.

In the years to come, I hope University faculty and administration will continue to seek the students' input regarding the commencement speaker, as it will be the students' ceremony and not mine as an alumnus. This is our graduation, Mr. Malinich, and though the majority of University students may join your conservative ranks someday, please don't select my Commencement speaker.

Sincerely,

Sean Elliott '04

Student government actions defended

To the Editor:

As a senior class representative and member of Bucknell Student Government (BSG), I take exception to the Nov. 14 issue of The Bucknellian. I have been an active member of student government since the first semester of my freshman year. Based on my experience, I find the tone of the article about BSG to be misleading and derogatory.

Although I do not believe that the student body is as apathetic as The Bucknellian claims, to deduce that apathy and uncontested elections are somehow the fault of student government is not a fair or rational conclusion.

I don't know how the survey featured on the front page was conducted, but the attention grabbing headline seemed a bit alarming since the next line stated that approval has actually increased significantly: the pie chart would indicate that two-thirds of the student body believe BSG has impacted their experience at the University positively with a "3," "4," or "5" rating.

Far more concerning to me, however, was the editorial. The blatant bias was unfair and inappropriate. The editorial board made it clear that it had personal connections with one candidate for student body president and would, therefore, endorse him seemingly without even interviewing the other. The damaging partiality of the editorial board was unprofessional and disingenuous.

Perhaps BSG's biggest flaw is that not enough energy has been devoted to publicizing its achievements and accomplishments.

You claim that BSG must be "brought back to being the well respected influential voice of the students." If you attended our meetings regularly, you would be surprised by how influential our voice is despite bureaucratic challenges that we face on virtually every issue. You would also know that our current executive board, led by Katy Timer '04 with unwavering and extremely proactive resolve, has been the most effective executive board in my four years at the University.

Perhaps BSG's biggest flaw is that not enough energy has been devoted to publicizing its achievements and accomplishments. There is always room for improvement, but I would encourage those critical of BSG's efforts to at least attend the open meetings every Sunday and to sit in on sub-committee or class meetings before writing inflammatory articles and editorials. They might realize that BSG is not, and has never been, an apathetic institution.

On the contrary, we have accomplished more for the students at the University than any other group on campus. It's easy to criticize; it's much more difficult to actively and positively initiate progress. My only request is that The Bucknellian at least criticizes fairly.

Your Nov. 14 issue was an attack without merit. The executive board and the leadership and devotion of extraordinary leaders such as John Siwicki '05 have made the University a better place for students, and we all owe them an enormous debt of gratitude for the time and energy that they devote to BSG and for the frustrations that they endure on behalf of bettering the University.

Sincerely,

Meredith Atkinson '04

From the Editor's Desk

BUSINESS & POLITICS

PSU strikes deal with Napster

By DAVID LAROSS

Senior Writer

University students received an e-mail reminding them of laws against downloading and sharing copyrighted music last week while Penn State University students received permission.

Contrary to some first impressions, Penn State University hasn't officially turned a blind eye to file-sharing. What it has done, however, was once unthinkable—it struck a deal with Napster.

"It is unusual," said Penn State President Graham Spanier to The New York Times. "But today's college students have told us how important this is to them, and with the record industry's new enforcement efforts, we think they'll be very excited to participate."

Once a pioneer of questionable legal file-sharing programs, Napster was shut down by court order in 2001. It was restarted this October under the ownership of Roxio Inc. as a completely legal online music store where members can purchase music by the song, as digital files. Penn State's agreement with the new service will give all students living on campus a limited membership starting this January, allowing them to listen to any song in Napster's library, a selection of more than one-half million, according to its Web site.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

The agreement represents a new way to deter college students—who typically have the most time and bandwidth to spend downloading media—from breaking copyright laws.

"This deal encourages a new generation to try a legitimate service, enjoy and adopt it and later, when they have more time and money, continue it," Napster President Mike Bebel said to The New York Times.

"It would be a very good reason [for students] to stop using file-sharing," Eric Brunton '06 said.

Even with Penn State's sponsored memberships, students will not be able to permanently download songs or burn them onto CDs without paying an additional fee of 99 cents per song or $9.99 for a full album—approximately the "going rate" at other online music stores. Under the current plan, students must purchase their own memberships after leaving Penn State, although the school-sponsored program may be extended to alumni in the future.

Some students feel a similar program should be implemented at the University.

"It would make students much happier while they're at Bucknell, even if they didn't keep the songs," Michelle Noecker '04 said.

"The question is, are students going to accept the limitations?" said Gene Spencer, the University's associate vice president for Information Services and Resources.

The arrangement is the first of its kind, but it probably won't remain unique for long. Multiple reports cite the agreement as a model for things to come, and if the program is popular in its test cases, other colleges will find it much easier to "sell" it (music) to their students. Besides its legal protection, the program offers a significant technical advantage to just about any school.

"They'll be installing a server on campus [to hold all the songs], which means that the traffic will be within the campus server," Spencer said.

"I can see a lot of universities subscribing to this model," Spencer said.

Students' membership charges will come out of the school's annual $160 information-technology fee, although how much each membership costs is unknown. Penn State has not disclosed whether the total fee will rise to accommodate the payments, or whether the overall budget will simply adapt to include them.

"I think it's a good idea; that's money that the students are paying, and it's being used so they get some benefit from it," said Brunton.

Siwicki wins BSG election

By COURTNEY HOMAN
B&P Editor

In a close race, insider John Siwicki '05 defeated outsider candidate Chris Styers '05 for the 2004 Bucknell Student Government (BSG) presidency. The contest was competitive; however, there was a clear verdict when the votes were tallied.

Siwicki is excited to take on this new challenge entrusted to him by the student body.

"BSG will not disappoint the student body in the upcoming year. I plan to explore communication channels that have never been conceived before. A closer relationship between the student and the representative will generate new ideas and certainly improve Bucknell for the better," Siwicki said.

Siwicki applauded his competitor for his ability to run a considerable campaign.

"I thought Chris came out with a lot of good stuff. His flyers were bright and bold, and he came out with an e-mail to every student, and I respect that," Siwicki said.

Styers returned the compliment in the face of defeat.

"I would like to express my congratulations to John and wish

Peter Hackman—The Bucknellian

John Siwicki '05, the newly-elected student body president, celebrates with friends as he hears the news. Siwicki is excited to take on the challenges of the office and the expectations of students.

him the best in accomplishing his goals. John's experience will serve him well, and I wish him the best of luck in continuing the progress of BSG," Styers said.

Siwicki is determined to represent the student well in the upcoming year.

"I think I went out and campaigned quite a bit and let them know what I'm going to do. I am glad students chose me," Siwicki said.

"I am very excited and relieved. Chris was excellent competitor, but I'm definitely thrilled to be the next president."

"First I have to meet with the executive committee. I definitely want to tackle the alcohol policy first—it's ridiculous. That's my first task on hand," Siwicki said.

Apart from the presidential position, there were three other uncontested offices that were awarded Thursday night.

Duff Weber '05 assumes the position of VP of operations.

"I ran for my position because it will give me an opportunity to ensure that the things I have enjoyed about Bucknell will remain on this campus and that the things I feel this campus lacks can be incorporated into it," Duff Weber '05 said.

Rich Karcher '05 will begin his senior year as VP of finance.

"Vice president of finance is the most rigorous and time demanding job on the exec board. In the past, students in this position would do the bare minimum. I tend to take my position to the next level," Karcher said.

Lily Williamson '06 could not be reached for comment in regards to her new position of VP of administration.

Same-sex marriage constitutional

Massachusetts Supreme Court hands down ruling, giving the legislature 180 days to change state marriage laws or law will be reinterpreted

By DAVID LAROSS
Senior Writer

An eight-month-old court case renewed the national debate over same-sex marriage on Tuesday, when the Massachusetts Supreme Court handed down a ruling that will make Massachusetts the second state in the nation to allow homosexual unions. The suit, Goodridge v. Department of Public Health, was brought to the high court in February by seven homosexual couples who were rejected when they applied for marriage licenses. It challenged the constitutionality of a law forbidding same-sex couples from marrying.

"The Massachusetts Constitution affirms the dignity and equality of all individuals. It forbids the creation of second-class citizens," wrote Chief Justice Margaret Marshall in the majority opinion. "[The Commonwealth] has failed to identify any constitutionally adequate reason to deny civil marriage to same-sex couples."

According to The Associated Press, legal experts say that the language of the ruling, which specifically mentions same-sex marriage, will rule out the institution of "civil unions" as a substitute, as instituted in Vermont after a similar ruling.

"I don't think that two people who love each other, regardless of gender, should be discriminated against ... I don't necessarily think that it should be called marriage. I think if it's about having the same rights, you can do that with a civil union," said Charles Mitchell '05, president of the Bucknell University Conservatives Club.

The ruling gives the Massachusetts legislature exactly 180 days to change the state marriage laws to fit with the ruling. If they take no action in that time, the state law will be automatically reinterpreted to include same-sex marriage.

This leaves the state legislature with no choice but to comply with the court's ruling. The decision could be overruled by a constitutional amendment redefining marriage, but passing the amendment would require a successful vote in two, two-year legislative sessions in a row—if the first vote passed today, the second could not come until 2006.

Governor Mitt Romney said to CNN that he said to Reuters.

U.S. President George W. Bush issued a public reaction to the ruling Tuesday afternoon through his Web site.

"Marriage is a sacred institution between a man and a woman," it reads. "Today's decision of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court violates this important principle. I will work with congressional leaders and others to do what is legally necessary to defend the sanctity of marriage."

Other conservative leaders are following suit, and many are focusing on renewing the campaign for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution that would ban gay marriage.

"We must amend the Constitution if we are to stop a tyrannical judiciary from redefining marriage to the point of extinction," said Tony Perkins, president of the conservative Family Research Council, to The New York Times.

With this ruling following the U.S. Supreme Court's sweeping removal of anti-sodomy laws in June, gay rights could become one of the high-profile issues of next year's election. As of late October, a CNN poll showed that 61 percent of Americans oppose the legalization of homosexual unions, and only 35 percent support it. Democratic frontrunner Howard Dean is already permanently tied to the issue as the Vermont governor who signed civil unions into law. Time will tell what the rest of his party makes of this verdict.

"Any time that gays and lesbians are seen as equals in civil responsibilities, that's a huge stride for us," said Alyssa Schneebaum '06, vice president of Friends of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered students (FLAG&B). "I know there will be a big push back, but this is still a step forward."

Courtesy of Reuters

Men hug at a gay-rights rally after the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled that the state constitution gives same-sex couples the rights of marriage.

will encourage compliance with the ruling, although he supports a ban on gay marriages.

"We must provide basic civil rights and appropriate benefits to non-traditional couples, but marriage is a special institution that should be reserved for a man and a woman," Romney

FACT proposes a student honor code

By ELLIE STEWART

Writer

"As a student and citizen of the Bucknell University community:

I will not lie, cheat or steal in my academic endeavors.

I will forthrightly oppose each and every instance of academic dishonesty.

I will communicate directly and promptly with any person or persons I believe to be dishonest in academic work.

I will let my conscience guide my decision on reporting breaches of academic integrity to the appropriate faculty or deans."

In an effort to encourage students to be responsible adults, the Faculty Advising Committee on Teaching (FACT) has been making huge efforts to develop an honor code at the University.

This honor code entails everything listed above, which is nothing more and nothing less than a simple moral commitment. FACT has no desire to become involved with the judicial system by any means, nor do they hope that this contract will involve consequences for any breaches of the code.

Professor of Civil Environmental Engineering Arne Vesilind is a member of FACT and is very involved with the implementation of this statement.

He says that while 1,000 honor codes will not change true a cheater from cheating, it will at least make someone think about what he or she is doing.

Vesilind expressed his concern that the University is letting the students down by not having an academic honor code. The fact that there isn't an honor code at all means honorable students are not being supported.

"Honor codes are important for universities, especially competitive ones such as Bucknell, because it holds students to a certain level of academic honesty"

—Brianna Evans,
BSG Class of 2007
secretary/treasurer

ed in the ways that they should, according to Vesilind.

Research has shown that universities with an active honor commitment can drastically reduce cheating because all students through the years of their education are respecting and learning upstanding behavior.

What FACT is proposing is not a statement that would get people in trouble, nor one that will place other people in moral dilemmas with their peers. Other higher institutions, such as the University of Virginia, have codes that employ a guilt-by-association type of approach. This means that if a person were to catch his or her roommate cheating and didn't report it, he or she would be equally guilty and would suffer the same consequences.

Instead, FACT simply wants to put the moral strain on individual values without the pressure of consequence or obligation to report your best friend. They are hoping that by recalling the promise made to the University and themselves, students will have the confidence to speak out against cheating when they see it occur.

One of the largest criticisms of the development of the honor code is the issue of trust. If the University has gone for years without any sort of a contract, it seems to be a criticism of current students to suggest that such an agreement is needed.

In response to this concern, Vesilind says that there really is no attempt to criticize the students or their actions. Instead, it is providing the students with a visible commitment with the University for the times when students are placed in compromising situations.

In addition to helping students with their relationships with their peers and their teachers, Todd Lives '07 thinks the honor code would benefit students.

"Most people, by the time they are in college, know that they are here to better themselves. If they still want to cheat and not better themselves then it should be up to them and ... in cheating they are only hurting themselves," Lives said.

Brianna Evans '07, BSG Class of 2007 secretary/treasurer, is concerned with helping the school adhere to maintaining the level of high academic standards.

"I think that honor codes are important for universities, especially competitive ones such as Bucknell, because it holds students to a certain level of academic honesty. Without these sorts of standards the credibility of the University's academic standards are skewed. At the University, such standards are especially important because of the University's high level of academics," Evans said.

Vesilind and the rest of the FACT committee are very hopeful of not only the implementation of this code, but also the effects that it can encourage the blossoming and expansion of the honor system.

The important thing to realize is that having an honor code would not only impact academic honesty but would also have a huge effect on the level of honesty with which members of the University community would act at all times. An honor code would literally "transform the school."

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

November 21, 2003

inside

Volume 132, Number 11

Sports:

Doping in sports: A look at the use of performance enhancing drugs in professional athletics.

See page B10

Football routed by Lehigh 45-9

By JOSH HERWITT

Staff Writer

With hopes of turning around the season after a disappointing loss to Lafayette, the Bucknell football team returned home only to be greeted by a 45-9 rout by Lehigh Saturday at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium.

Lehigh improved to 7-3 overall and 5-1 in the Patriot League, remaining in second place behind unbeaten Colgate. Bucknell (5-6, 3-3 in the Patriot League) dropped below .500 for the first time this season.

On their opening drive, the Bison converted two gutsy fourth-down calls as they drove into Lehigh territory. After erasing seven minutes off the clock, the Bison settled for Ryan Korn's '07 30-yard field goal. It was Korn's 13th of the season and tied a University record.

The Mountain Hawks charged back quickly as quarterback Kyle Keating found Gerran Walker for a 52-yard touchdown pass just 45 seconds later to give Lehigh a 7-3 advantage in the first period.

The Lehigh offense was led by Keating, who picked apart the Bucknell secondary for 332 yards and three touchdowns. In the rushing department, Lehigh running back Jermaine Pugh gained 94 yards on 17 carries.

Bison quarterback Daris Wilson '05 returned to the starting lineup, his first start since suffering a severely sprained ankle at Fordham earlier in the season, but he struggled in the first half. Having previously thrown only one interception all season, Wilson threw two in the first half, leading to short scoring drives for Lehigh.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Quarterback Daris Wilson '05 gets stripped by a Lehigh defensive lineman in Bucknell's disappointing 45-9 loss at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium Saturday. The Bison fell below .500 for the first time this year, losing their second straight game.

With 3:16 left in the first quarter, Kaloma Cardwell's interception and return to the Bison 35 set up Keating's five-yard pass to Aaron Argenta, yard pass to Aaron Argenta, yard pass to Aaron Argenta.

Then it was Lawrence Williams picking off Wilson's pass and taking it to the Bison 22 midway through the second quarter. The interception led to the first of two short touchdown runs for fullback Gregory Fay.

With a 21-3 halftime lead, Lehigh extended its lead on the Bison with a 38-yard field goal by Matt Douglas on Lehigh's first drive of the second half. Adam Kovac's 39-yard touchdown catch from Keating was the nail in the coffin as the Mountain Hawks went up 31-3 with 8:03 left in the third.

The Bison defense struggled to stop Lehigh's balanced offensive attack as the Mountain Hawks racked up 490 yards of total offense while Bucknell had a total of 308.

The victory was Lehigh's sixth straight over the Orange and Blue, and it was the first time all season that the Bison have lost at home.

Both teams will finish the regular season in their next games as Lehigh battles against cross-town rival Lafayette and Bucknell hosts Georgetown. Kickoff is set for 1 p.m.

Fay scored his second touchdown from three yards out, and Pierre Bowers scored on a four-yard touchdown run, putting Bucknell in a hole of 45-3.

Bison running back Blamah Sarnor '06 was a bright spot for Bucknell, rushing for a career-high 148 yards and the Bison's lone touchdown from four yards out with 19 seconds remaining in the game.

The Bison defense struggled to stop Lehigh's balanced offensive attack as the Basketball captures first preseason victory

By PIERRE HERNANDO

Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's basketball team played its only exhibition game of the upcoming season by defeating Big Apple Basketball 79-64 last Friday at Sojka Pavilion. Roughly 400 fans watched the Bison average last year's 97-95 loss to Big Apple Basketball.

Kevin Bettencourt '06 led the Bison in scoring as he poured in a game-high 17 points on seven-of-17 shooting. The sophomore guard, last year's Patriot League Rookie of the Year, also dished out three assists.

Bettencourt's outside game was complemented very well by the inside game of center Chris McNaughton '07, who played for the German Under-20 National Team last year. The 6'11" McNaughton was a perfect five-of-five from the field and four-of-four from the foul line en route to a 14-point outing. McNaughton was also tied for a game-high eight rebounds.

The Orange and Blue trailed 10-4 in the early going after a jumper by Big Apple Basketball guard Nate Brown before rallying to take the lead. They went ahead 11-10 around the 10 minute mark of the first-half after a layup by Antonio Glover '06.

The Bison pulled away for good after Bettencourt broke a 14-14 tie by hitting an outside jumper. Donald Brown '07 hit a jumper, and Charles Lee '06 and John Clark '07 both hit free throws before Bettencourt's breakaway dunk put the Bison ahead 25-14.

The squad led by as many as 15 points in the opening frame before settling for a 34-24 lead at halftime.

In the second half, the Bison seized control. Brown hit a three-pointer to put the squad ahead 50-35. The lead stretched to 67-47 after McNaughton tipped in a basket with 7 minutes, 43 seconds remaining in the ballgame. The Bison held at least a 14-point lead for the rest of the night.

Chris Niesz '05 snatched eight rebounds while Brown and Davorin Skornik '04 grabbed seven rebounds apiece. Lee led the Bison in the assists department with four dimes. He also scored in double-figures, finishing with 10 points. Co-captain Matt Quinn '04 finished with 11 points on four-of-seven shooting, going two-for-three from beyond the arc.

The Orange and Blue played tight defense, as seen by Big Apple Basketball's 30.6 percent overall shooting percentage (From behind the three-point line, the opponents also only shot 19 percent).

The Bison finished with a 47 percent shooting percentage, and hit six threes en route to a 32 percent shooting percentage from the three-point range.

Big Apple Basketball was led by forward Jaja Bey, who finished with 17 points, and hit three three-pointers. Llewellyn Cole and Brown finished with 13 and 11 points, respectively, and guard Tim Winn contributed with six points and a game-high six assists.

The Bison, coming off a 14-15 overall record and 7-7 Patriot League record last year, welcomed back 11 players, including

Swimmers win first dual meet of the season

Women beat Navy and American while men fall short in Annapolis

By TERI SCHLANG

Writer

The Bison swimming and diving teams competed in their second event of the season last Friday night at Navy in Annapolis, Md. The Bucknell women's swimming team defeated Navy 156-144 and beat American 220.5-72.5. The men didn't perform quite as well as the women. Navy beat the Bison 222-78 and American won 174-114.

The Orange and Blue started the night off right winning the first event of the evening, the women's 200-meter medley relay. The team finished with a time of 2:00.35—almost two seconds ahead of its nearest competitors.

The team was composed of Lettie Altman '04, Jamie Flick '05, Mary Krakowski '06, and Meghan Freese '04.

The Bison men's team of Mark Kretzer '06, William Schilling '06, Peter Garvin '04 and Micheal Willits '04 also opened with a strong performance placing third in the men's 200-meter medley relay with a time of 1:49.66.

In the women's 800-meter free, Daniella Faas '04 medaled in her first event of the night, placing third with a time of 9:18.17. She finished just in front of fellow Bison Jackie Feintheil '05, Robin Gibson '05 and Amanda Dunlap '07. Faas medaled again in her following event, the 200-meter freestyle, coming in second with a time of 2:10.97. Carolyn Donley '07 and Laura Goeller '07 finished third and fourth in that race.

Altman finished second in the next women's event of the night, the 100-meter backstroke, with a time of 1:06.08. Flick followed up with another second-place finish in the 100-meter breaststroke with a time of 1:14.54. Nikkie Woodward '07 also brought home a second-place finish with a time of 2:28.24 in the 200-meter fly.

Just before the halfway

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

A Bison backstroke swimmer glides along in the Blue and Orange meet at Kinney Natatorium. Last Friday the team had its first dual meet.

point Freese took two more medals for the Orange and Blue, winning the 50 meter free and the 100-meter free with times of 26.79 and 58.98, respectively. The Bison scored another win when Flick finished the 200-meter backstroke in 2:21.26, just ahead of Goeller who came in second.

Flick followed up by winning yet another event taking the 200-meter breast with a time of 2:43.18. Faas and Altman both medaled again in the 400-meter free taking second and third. Krakowski and Lauren Reed '06 took second and third, respectively, in the 100-meter fly.

The Orange and Blue had yet another second- and third-place finish by Goeller and Woodman in the 200-meter individual medley. The women won the last relay of the night, the 200-meter free relay, with the team of Scheffter, Krakowski, Goeller and Freese finishing in 1:49.25.

Freese, a senior, was selected as the Lewisburg Hotel Athlete of the Week and Patriot League Women's Swimmer of the Week after her performance at Bucknell's opening event and this week's meet at Navy.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

A Bison swimmer cruises through the water during a butterfly event. The team competed in its first dual meet of the season last Friday, with the women defeating both American and Navy.

See BBALL, page B5

See SWIMMING, page B5

Sports Feature

AT ALL COSTS

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

They avoided the questions, they've looked reporters and fans in the eyes and denied the allegations, and now they're going down. Recent breakthroughs in performance enhancing drug testing have been rocking the sporting world. The tests have been proving many athletes to be nothing but cheats and liars, while leaving many other athletes and fans unsure of whom they can trust.

While performance enhancing drugs in athletics is nothing new, the number of top athletes who have failed drug tests this summer and fall is quite unnerving.

First in August, Bernard Lagat of Kenya, a silver medalist in the 1500m run at the Sydney Olympics, had an "A" sample turn up positive for synthetic erythropoietin (EPO) (EPO is naturally occurring in the human body). Lagat's results were the first blow to the Track and Field community. Lagat, who trains in the United States and has appeared in Nike television commercials for the past few months, is extremely popular among track fans. Even though Lagat lists reads like an invitation list to an all-star party: Kevin Toth, Dwain Chambers, Regina Jacobs, Barry Bonds and many more.

But do fans really care whether or not the big names in sports are jacked up on drugs? Answers vary, but it is markedly leaner and more muscular. Nearing the age of 40 and setting American records and even world records did seem quite extraordinary, but she had been training "so hard" and much "smarter" lately.

It's no shock that her defenders were as ashamed of themselves as they were of her while her accusers shouted a yell for joy and a sigh of relief when her positive tests results of THG were released.

But when deciding athletes' punishment for doping, where does the blame really fall? Who should be held responsible? Should the athletes shoulder the entire burden or should the coaches and doctors who administer the drugs also be punished?

The controlled administration of EPO by doctors has undoubtedly prevented many from dying at their own hands, yet in the majority of cases the doctors are knowingly aiding the athletes in cheating.

So, should we punish the doctors for this service? And should coaches, who train the athletes with knowledge and even encouragement of doping, be given bans along with the participation bans the athletes receive for positive drug tests?

With so much societal pressure to succeed, who are the real victims in these crimes?

Much debate has risen on this topic from questions like these. Undoubtedly, societal pressure added to personal dreams creates a synergistic desire to cheat in some. As reported by Cycling-News, Belgium Johan Verhaegen had this to say about his second and final positive test for nandrolone.

"Until my 25th birthday I rode clean," Verhaegen said. "Then I won about 10 races per season. After that not only me but also my supporters always wanted more. Without that you have to look for other means. And then you come naturally to doping. And I am certainly not the only one in the peloton who does. The world is sick. But I find that this hypocrisy must be broken down."

This hypocrisy indeed needs attention. The long term physiological effects that many of these athletes will suffer from striving to satisfy both their ego and the crowds by drug use is largely unknown.

"Harsher penalties for drug cheats are definitely in order."

media groups begins to show.

On the flip side, fans in the "pure" sports, such as track and field, cross country skiing, and swimming, seem to be taking many of the drug busts personally. These sports not only lead athletes in testing for the latest illegal substances but also in punishing offenders.

Fan's disgust seems to come mainly from the fact that many big names in these sports have openly lied or avoided responding to allegations.

For years, Regina Jacobs has created a stir, with many track and field fans defending her vehemently, while others booed her every time she toed the line. Yet, anyone who has ever seen Jacobs in person can attest that she is hardly the person she was 10 years ago. Besides the horrific Michael Jacksonesque nose job, she was exonerated when his "B" sample turned up negative, the results left many people shaking their heads and wondering whether the "A" sample was just over while the "B" sample was under the limit.

The wonder stimulant, Mondafil, created the next ruckus when Kelli White, a World Champion sprinter on the track, claimed she took the drug because of her narcolepsy. Apparently, an unusually high number of sprinters also suffer from sleeping disorders, as the likes of Calvin Harrison, Sandra Glover, Eric Thompson and other Olympians have also tested positive.

White and her sleepless compatriots were nearly lost in the news when Victor Conte started making headlines. Conte's BALCO laboratory leads the pack in supplying athletes with at least one designer steroid that until recently have been undetectable through standard drug testing. Track and Field has felt the pain most severely as many big names have recently tested positive, yet many more athletes in sports like football and baseball could turn out to be dirty as well.

The breakthrough in the BALCO case came when Dr. Don Catlin, director of the UCLA Olympic Analytical Laboratory in Los Angeles, received a partially used syringe from an anonymous world class track coach in June. The syringe contained tetrahydrogestrinone (THG), a steroid specifically designed to slide through the latest drug tests. After Catlin determined a method to identify the drug in urine samples, Catlin's lab retested hundreds of urine samples. The results were shocking.

Already many of the "A" samples have turned up positive, with the majority of those athletes' "B" samples testing positive as well. Because Conte's BALCO lab was raided as part of an Internal Revenue Service raid, many names of Conte's client have been leaked, including the names of a number of the positives testers. The

The Who and What to the Latest Performance Enhancing Drugs

COMPILED BY EVAN HONEYFIELD
SENIOR WRITER

THG (tetrahydrogestrinone): The latest and greatest anabolic steroid. Until August, it was not testable.

Major athletes who've tested positive: Regina Jacobs (Track and Field: World Record Holder Indoor 1500m, 15-time U.S. Champion at 800m, 1500m and 5000m); Kevin Toth (Track and Field: two-time U.S. Indoor Shot Put Champion, one-time U.S. Outdoor Shot Put Champion, Farthest Throw in World since 1990); John McEwan (Track and Field: two-time U.S. Indoor Weight Throw Champion); Bill Romanowski (Football: All Pro Linebacker, Played in five Super Bowls, four Super Bowl Rings, over 1,000 career tackles); Dwain Chambers of Great Britain (Track and Field: Tied British record in 100m of 9.87 — tied ninth best all time world)

EPO (erythropoietin): A naturally occurring hormone secreted by kidney to increase red blood cell production. Synthetic version was developed to aid kidney, cancer and AIDS patients. Can reportedly produce 10 percent boost of performance in endurance sports.

Major athletes who've tested positive: Brahim Boulami of Morocco (Track and Field: World Record Holder 3,000m Steeple Chase); Olga Yegorova of Russia (Track and Field: second Fastest Women's 5,000m All Time); Tour de France Scandal (too many top riders to list.)

Darbepoetin: Drug very similar to EPO that was developed to have longer lasting effects than EPO.

Major athletes who've tested positive: Johan Muehleleg of Spain (Cross Country Skiing: three-time Olympic Champion); Larissa Lazutina of Russia (Cross Country Skiing: Olympic Champion, 10-time medalist); Olga Danilova (Cross Country Skiing: two-time Olympic Medalist)

Mondafil: A mild stimulant created to treat narcolepsy. Mondafil produces similar effects on the human body as caffeine, except the effects are longer lasting.

Major athletes who've tested positive: Kelli White (Track and Field: World Champion 100m and 200m); Calvin Harrison (Track and Field: Olympic and World Champion 4x400m relay); Sandra Glover (Track and Field: four-time US Champion 400m Hurdles)

Nandrolone: An anabolic steroid that is similar to testosterone, but without many of the negative effects. Because Nandrolone is naturally occurring in humans in minute amounts, the drug has created significant controversy on whether or not the testing procedure is flawed.

Major athletes who've tested positive: Linford Christie of Great Britain (Track and Field: four-time Olympic Medalist, '92 Olympic Champion in 100m, tied British record in 100m 9.87); Dieter Bauman of Germany (Track and Field: Fastest non-African at 5,000m ever) hGH (Human Growth Hormone): Naturally occurring in the human body that stimulates hormone production. Is said to produce similar results as anabolic steroids. Reported to reduce aging by increasing lean muscle mass, repairing damaged cells, and helping to retain fluid (relieving joint pain).

Major athletes who've tested positive: No tests are currently available. The joke among athletes at Sydney Olympics was that they were competing in the hGH Olympics.

For the most in-depth and latest news on performance enhancing drugs and the athletes who are testing positive, check out Web sites:

For track and field: (<http://www.letsrun.com/2003/thg-drugscap.php>)
For swimming: (<http://www-rohan.sdsu.edu/dept/coach-sci/swimming/drugs/table.htm>)
(http://www.fina.org/DopingControl_SanctionList.html)

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

The pen is mightier ... at least in November

Writers Association of America Awards. Oh yes, the writers.

After spending week upon week during the season smiting readers of the sports page with carefully composed amassments of nugatory amusement, the knights of newsprint get to call all the shots when it comes to the annual decoration of baseball's most accomplished players.

And we can thank a fellow named Hugh Chalmers for that. Or maybe Ty Cobb. Or Jack O'Conner. Like so many facets of history, the origin of the sportswriter's role in the postseason awards is a bit patchy. But it goes something like this.

In 1910, Chalmers, president of the Chalmers Motor Company, decided it would be a clever promotion to bestow one of the manufacturers vehicles upon whatever ballplayer could bang out the best batting average over the season. Simple enough, right?

Setting the standard for a time-honored tradition of torrid controversy, the Chalmers Award made itself problematic from the get-go.

As the season approached its final game, Nap Lajoie and lovable rascalion Ty Cobb were locked in a batting-title showdown. Cobb, sporting a healthy .383 to .376 lead over his less-hateable counterpart, decided to sit out the last game. Lajoie, meanwhile, played both ends of a doubleheader.

As it turned out, Nap went eight-for-eight on the day, swiping the title from the Georgia Peach in the process. That wasn't the end of it, though. Someone noticed that Lajoie's deep-stretch outburst seemed due to a little more than the usual kismet that drives the baseball world.

Opposing manager Jack O'Conner—who, like any human being in that era, harbored an intense dislike for Cobb—had ordered his third basemen to play Lajoie deep during that last twinbill. Hence, Nap collected seven bunt singles.

In an effort to counter the injustice, one scorer tweaked a few stats, claiming he'd made a mistake on an earlier ruling, and declared Cobb the batting champion. After more shuffling, Lajoie was renamed the champion.

Chalmers just gave up and awarded both players with an automobile. In the wake of that disaster, he served up a slightly revamped concept in 1911. Cars were still the item of interest, but this time, instead of finicky batting averages, sportswriters would decide who got the keys.

The player declared "most useful" to his team, a judgment based strictly on the sentiments of a panel of baseball writers, would be named the winner.

The Chalmers prize was somewhat short-lived—it kicked the bucket in 1914—and the American League soon established its own award, which was decided by sportswriters from all cities that played host to AL teams. The NL arranged its own award two years later. Both traditions were defunct by 1929.

The reign of the BBWAA, gallant foot soldiers of the nation's print media, began in 1931, when it was decided that the awards ought to be hashed out by a specially selected legion of sportswriters from around each league.

And the BBWAA, a corps of writers inaugurated in 1908 to defend the rights of baseball journalists across the country, was at the reins of the whole ordeal.

In 1947, the writers became puppeteers to another award, the Rookie of the Year honor. Heck, they even got to define for themselves what exactly constituted a "rookie" until 1957.

The empire of typewriter titans expanded further still in the mid-50s when then-commissioner Ford Frick decided that pitchers were somehow getting the shaft in the MVP voting. Frick instituted a separate award for his fireballing friends in 1956, also to be decided by the occult world of the BBWAA.

As it happened, a fellow named Denton True Young had just passed away the year before, and Frick thought it fitting to look to him as a namesake. And so went the birth of the Cy Young Memorial Award.

Ironically enough, the first man to win it, Don Newcombe, swept the MVP honor that year as well, expunging a bit of the momentum from Frick's claim that the BBWAA had some sort of seething vendetta against the guys on the mound.

All three of the awards are still dished out by the writers every year, and all with the same sort of tumult that one would expect from a bunch of guys who make a living creating, well ... tumult.

And even if the voters wanted to sidestep controversy, they'd still be a little hampered by the fact the criterion for these awards is akin to a giant playground for subjective interpretation. How much consistency can one expect from a ballot that instructs voters as follows:

"Dear voter: There is no clear-cut definition of what Most Valuable means. It is up to the individual voter to decide."

Of course, there are a few suggestions. Think about statistics. Pick a guy who helps his team. Consider leadership. Something like that.

But really, creative liberties are abound—it's like a giant Montessori school, and anyone who works in print journalism (or worked in print journalism) is and is willing to cough up the $50 annual BBWAA membership fee is eligible to join in the merry-making.

Sure, some people will rant on about the injustice and the wretched subjectivity of it all, but for baseball writers, it's two weeks of sweet and glorious power over the athletes of whom we're all secretly jealous. Writers deserve a little of that.

We don't ask for that much. Although McFarlane figures wouldn't hurt.

NFL teams gear up for postseason

By MIKE ORTA
Writer

The playoff picture is coming into focus as the winners and losers begin to separate themselves from the pack. The Bengals get back to 500. The Vikings slide even further down the hill and the Bucs throw in the towel.

This weekend really helped to show which teams can go deep in the playoffs and which teams will be working on their golf swings come January. Without further ado, I give you my playoff predictions.

From the AFC North, I see the Bengals squeezing into the playoffs. This is the weakest division in the league, and Cincinnati is getting hot at the right time of year. Baltimore can't overcome horrible QB play, and Cleveland just does not have the talent or coaching. Pittsburgh doesn't have a running game and its secondary is weak.

From the AFC South we get two playoff teams, the Colts and the Titans. The Titans can win the ugly games, and they have the ability to put up big points. The Colts defense is slowing teams down, and the offense is still explosive. The Texans don't have enough offense, and it's the same story with the Jaguars.

From the AFC East we get the Patriots. New England has been able to win without key players, who are getting healthy now. Miami fades in the second half and they did not have much room for error to begin with. The Jets are in too deep of a hole, and Buffalo is tanking.

In the AFC West, the Chiefs and Broncos look to make the playoffs. Kansas City will try to get back on track after the Bengal debacle and Denver is getting Jake the Snake back. The Oakland "Raiders" are in the midst of a media frenzy again and aren't talent. The NFC playoff picture is pretty much in writing if you ask me. In the North the in the loins every time they step on the field. The Bears are simply unbearable, though they put up a good effort the division. The Falcons are nothing without Vick. The Saints don't look they'll have enough wins to gain a wild offer two playoff teams in the Eagles and the Cowboys. Philly just wins games; they throw in the occasional pretty win, but most are ugly. Dallas is playing great defense and has Bill Parcells on its side. The Redskins don't seem to be able to put it together, and the Giants string of late-season comebacks seems to have come to an end.

The West is another division looking to offer up two teams—the Rams and the Seahawks. Seattle is playing good offense and solid defense, and is going to sneak up on some teams. The Rams are doing what the Rams have done for the past few years—put up points. San Francisco is too far behind to work into the playoffs, and the Cardinals are simply horrible.

The teams that look to make early exits from the postseason would appear to be the Packers, Broncos, Bengals and Panthers. For Carolina and Cincinnati, playoff inexperience will be the culprit. For the Broncos it looks like they won't have the Mile High Advantage, and that is a lot more important than most are willing to acknowledge. The Packers also look to be playing on the road, and their passing game is a little too erratic to put a lot of trust in.

There you have it: my playoff picks. It looks like parity still reigns in the NFL, as a number of the best teams from last year aren't even going to catch a whiff of the playoffs. It makes you scratch your head sometimes, when you wonder how some teams can win it and then lose it so quickly, but then it makes you smile when a team like the Bengals finally makes it back to the playoffs ... unless of course they are still the "Bungles" after all.

Bengal fans rejoice after a touchdown, something that didn't happen a lot last season. Cincinnati is poised for a playoff run this year.

looking to do anything but assure themselves a high draft choice this off-season. San Diego is leaning on a 40 plus year old QB, and its defense is too inexperienced and lacks Packers are beginning to run over teams and they look to catch Minnesota and win the division. The Vikes are fading faster than Carrot Top's acting career. The Lions get kicked against the Rams. In the South we have the Panthers who are following the time-tested model of running the ball and playing defense, which will win them card slot. The Bucs are simply not playing anywhere near their potential and have virtually zero chance of making the postseason.

The NFC East seems to

Arts & Entertainment

Bach in concert

By JOSH HERWITT
Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

The New York Chamber Soloists and Orchestra performed Johann Sebastian Bach's "Concerti for One, Two, Three and Four Harpsichords" on Nov. 14 as one of several acts in this year's Weis Center Performance Series.

The soloists and orchestra played a series of concertos, including C Minor, F Minor, D Minor, C Major and A Minor. Various harpsichords played by Kenneth Cooper, Edward Brewer, Arthur Haas and Elizabeth Metcalfe accompanied the orchestral sounds of violins, cellos and double bass.

While some pieces, such as the Concerto in F Minor, only required one harpsichord, other pieces such as Concerto in D Minor and Concerto in C Minor included two or three harpsichords playing simultaneously.

Most of the concertos had three movements in a fast-slow-fast sequence, which was an important element that encompassed Bach's style. The rapid pace was rich in its texture and vigorous in rhythm while the slow sections were usually soothing and light.

The performance concluded with the final piece, Concerto in A Minor, when all four harpsichordists played together to bring a lively dancing movement that captivated the audience.

Other members of the New York Chamber Soloists performed a special family matinee on Nov. 15 as a Weis Center Special Event, which included works from Mozart, Bach and Vivaldi.

The New York Chamber Soloists have been recognized for over three decades as an exceptional ensemble of virtuosi, and particularly noted for its creatively programmed concerts.

With the unusual combinations of instruments—strings, winds and keyboard—the New York Chamber Soloists have the capability to play uncommon works. The ensemble has over 250 works in its repertoire as its audience continues to grow with appreciation.

The chamber has toured throughout the United States and abroad, including eleven European tours, six Latin American tours and several tours of the Far East and South Pacific.

The New York Chamber Soloists have also been featured at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, the Library of Congress in Washington and at the Mostly Mozart, Sun Valley and Caramoor festivals. Major universities across the country have also hosted the ensemble.

A Tuesday with Mitch Albom

By RACHEL GOLD
Senior Writer

Laughter. Tears. Smiles. Anticipation. People of all ages filled the pews of Rooke Chapel Tuesday night waiting to be inspired. The crowd sat in awe as Mitch Albom, author, editor, and songwriter, filled the chapel with words of wisdom and hope.

Albom is the author of "Tuesdays with Morrie," a four year New York Times bestseller. He currently hosts two nationally syndicated radio talk shows for ABC and is a panelist on ESPN's "Sports Reporters."

"Tonight I will tell you about two people who are forever embedded in my head and in my heart," Albom said. "Morrie Schwartz, whom Tuesdays with Morrie was written for, was my old professor at Brandeis University. Morrie made

